

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., JANUARY 6th, 1916

NUMBER 1

Looking Inward

The President General's Letter to the Churches emphasizes the Seriousness of the present Situation, and points out the essential Need for Meeting it Adequately

"I will not let thee go, except Thou bless me," Gen. 32: 26.

The gross darkness that enveloped the gateway of 1915 has not yet been dispersed. The sky is still stormy and the same threatening sultriness prevails. Tho our eyes have become accustomed to the black and threatening clouds, and our ears to war and the rumours of war, the anxious questionings, What will be the outcome? Where will it end? have not yet ceased. No one who is at all serious and sincere can help observing the events of the day with concern. They have seen calamity and distress break in upon the world and take its devastating course with an almost divine inevitableness, and they ask fearfully, "Shall war and bloodshed never cease among the peoples? Has God left mankind to itself to perish in its mad ambition and self-conceit? Is He making the test now of their vaunted wisdom and cunning, their much-exploited human neighborliness and brotherhood? Has another crisis in world-affairs come when Jehovah-God must, with the finger of eternal justice, again inscribe upon the book of history the fateful words, "My Spirit shall not strive with man for ever, for that he also is flesh!"?

The great war in Europe is still raging. Every day of the past year has been traced by blood and iron into the annals of human history. Not only is there an intense yearning for peace, the most awful curses and maledictions upon the alleged and the real instigators of the terrible catastrophe, and upon the leaders and rulers of the peoples, who might have made an end of the devilish murdering of men, have been made the "prayers" of thousands.

The fierce fratricidal conflict casts its spell far over the ocean into our own country. Wherever one goes there is wrangling and judging, distrust and suspicion, racial preferences and racial prejudices. The basest espionage and unscrupulous plotting and unwarranted harrassings distort and confuse the usually quiet racial aspect of our people. It is under these signs of the times that we cross the threshold of the new year. If we were anxious and fearful as to the answer last year to the question, "What will 1915 bring?" we are rather more than less so now.

It has long been evident that the two demons, mammonism and political self-interest, would be restrained in their aims neither by the fair reputation of the country nor by the principles of justice. Mammon is king, and Ruthlessness is queen, Egotism is Prime Minister, and Hatred and Envy, Sensuality, Licentiousness and Vanity are their ill-mannered and vicious children.

Not only the civil and political conditions are unsatisfactory and discouraging and afford ample reason for facing the future with anxiety, but the religious conditions are also depressing. Is it the delusion of mammonism, or is it the spirit of servility, or is it both of these combined, that makes the clergy of the country blind for the wrongs that exist in the nation and silences their voice of protest? Hypocritical indignation over the alleged conquest of smaller nations and the atrocities committed against rebellious Turkish subjects are frequently met with, but not a word is said in regard to the sins of our own people. There is a zealous propaganda for converting the heathen according to self-selected plans, while at the same time the serpent of sensuality and mammonism is sheltered and nurtured beneath our own bosom. Schools and colleges for China and Africa, but no adequate religious education at home. There are vast business organizations for the Church, the Sunday-school and all sorts of societies, but the old and essential stories of the Bible and the fundamental teachings of Christianity, these powerful agencies for the formation of character, are far too often an unknown quantity. The pulpit is degraded into a lecture-platform for the discussion of socio-political problems or denominational and interdenominational propaganda. Christianity is measured by dollars and cents, while the fact that love gives in proportion to the greatness of the love, is overlooked. The chapter seems well-nigh endless.

Of course we know very well that there is a brighter side. In all denominations and in all parts of the country there are large numbers of sincere and serious Christian people, many times seven thousand, the knees of whom have not bowed unto Baal, who are deeply concerned at the things they are obliged to witness, and are greatly dissatisfied with the turn events are taking. They realize the need of a religious, a social and a political regeneration of the nation, and tho they are in the minority, and without

THOUGHT FOR THE YEAR

To be good and to do good; to forget self and to remember others; to face forward and to look upward; to plant roses and to break the thorns; to smooth another's path and to reflect the light of heaven upon it; to see stars thru every cloud and to keep a smile behind every tear, to push the ideal farther on and to press life toward it; to make your own friends and to keep them; to be as pure as the sun's rays and to see God; to illustrate fidelity and to be the soul of sincerity; to welcome the light; to be sweet in disposition and holy in purpose; to make character the goal of life and heaven its destiny; to know the Christ and to help others to know Him. This is life.

—Cortland Myers.

means of making themselves adequately felt, they are bravely pushing forward in spite of the discouragements of the hour, firmly convinced that in the end the kingdom of the world must become the kingdom of our Lord and His Christ; and that He shall reign for ever and ever. But many a fierce and trying conflict and many a painful and toilsome struggle will be required ere that day shall be at hand.

Verily, it is no time for self-glorification, but for an inward look with a sincere desire to know the open sores of the present age. A look into our own life will be most wholesome. Jacob's quiet hours at the ford of the Jabbok were real hours of blessing. Not until he had, in the early morning hours after a night of struggle, learned to say, "I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me," had he actually learned to know himself in all his nakedness and poverty. It was then that he realized that he could accomplish nothing with his own shrewdness. Yes, it had secured for him the birthright, had given him wives and children, a multitude of servants and great riches, but it had not brought him the blessing of God. And it is this that he needs, the life of the eternal and living God, forgiveness and adoption, the divine grace and good-will. Blessedness, O what a wealth of meaning does the word possess! It is the gift of God without which even the most gifted and fortunate human life is but a whitened wall, a piece of fortune that escapes as the sand runs from the hand. Not a mere outward righteousness will help Jacob with his brother, he needs a new life. And it is only this new, regenerated life that commands Esau's respect; it is not the three large herds of cattle, nor the 300 servants, not the wives and the children, and least of all the limping, humiliated Jacob, but the new personality that now speaks from that frail and weakened body, that makes Esau acknowledge Jacob's supremacy.

The time is at hand, my dear brethren in the ministry and in the churches, and all you friends and adherents of our Synod, to whom I have been privileged to speak during the Jubilee season of the great blessings of God bestowed upon our fathers and upon ourselves, the time has come in which we must turn our eyes inward and gaze upon our own inner life and that of our people. This great training period into which God has led us shall not pass by without teaching us to say for ourselves, our churches, the Synod and all her fields of labor, "Lord, I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me!" Our people have largely lost the personal God with whom Jacob wrestled. People have their own Ideas about a "Supreme Being," but it is not that of a God who requires holiness, who requires holiness of us. At the most this indefinite higher Being is regarded as an emanation of the idea of social justice and a sort of providential, paternal goodness. Unhappily there is lacking in the hearts of far too many of the people to which you and I belong the real consciousness of God and of human responsibility toward Him.

Let the year 1916 find us ready to take this inward look. Shall the great age in which we live, and the new period into which we are entering, find us otherwise than in a sincere seeking for God? Either the Lord is God and blesses us, or Mammon is god and curses us. Is not just this the great-lesson which all the nations of the world, especially those of Europe and America, now need to learn? The great text for our day is this: "Repent ye and return unto the living of God!"

The nation that will let the living God lead it into a childhood-relationship with Him, that will call God its Father rather than its war-God or industrial God, and which acknowledges Jesus Christ as its Saviour—this nation will emerge out of these stirring and trying times as God's nation, entrusted with great tasks and fully equipped to accomplish them. That nation will say: "I will not let Thee go except Thou bless me!" And God will bless that nation.

So let it be, my beloved Evangelical Christians, that not only the first Sunday in the year, which has been set aside as the day of penitence and prayer, but every day of the new year may find us ready to see ourselves and our time as God sees them. If better things are to be brought about, the improvement must begin with ourselves, not with our neighbor. If every pastor and every church officer will make it his serious prayer, "I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me," many others in the church will soon follow the good example.

May all the officers, boards and committees in the Synod, the pastors, Sunday-school teachers and society workers, and all others to whom God has entrusted a special feature of the work for His Kingdom in our midst, especially the faculties of our educational institutions, the students, the missionaries in India and at home, and all who love the Lord Jesus and His appearing, richly experience the blessings of God in the new year, so that all hearts may be well prepared and the tasks that await us may be done right.—"I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me!"

John Baltzer, President General.

In Newness of Life

"Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into His death? We were buried therefore with Him thru baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead thru the glory for the Father, so so we might walk in newness of life," Rom. 6: 3, 4.

In the first five chapters of his letter Paul has been setting forth the grounds of the Christian's justification thru faith. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation because it proclaims a righteousness furnished by God, and therefore satisfactory to God, and which man has not to earn but only to receive. All alike are guilty, and Gentile and Jew alike must accept God's favor as a gift, or go without. Thus was even Abraham himself justified. In Christ this undeserved love and grace has been revealed "for, as thru the one man's disobedience the many were made sinners, even so thru the obedience of the one shall the many be made righteous,".... that where sin abounded, grace did abound more exceedingly," 5: 19, 20.

It is in this manner that those who have been slaves of sin were set free from bondage. The chains of the prince of darkness have been struck off, and they are masters of their own fate and fortune. Everything now depends upon the use they will make of the new freedom. It can be used to do as they please, or to do as God pleases. Shall they continue in sin that grace may abound? Doubtless many a sincere or subtle objector to the Apostle's message had made objection that if it was that easy to secure freedom from sin, one might just as well keep right on sinning. If God is so merciful as to bestow freedom from the bondage of sin in so generous a fashion, then evil does not matter, and God cannot be really angry with His weak and sinful children just because they sin. And even if He is, it is a simple manner to get new forgiveness for new sins.

But hear the answer which the great Apostle has to this objection. "Continue in sin?" he cries, "Never! How can we who died to sin any longer live therein?" Is it possible that you are not aware of the one fundamental fact that all we who are baptized into Christ Jesus was baptized into His death? If your baptism has been a sign of your acceptance of Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour, you have accepted His death for your sins just as much as His holy life in which He perfectly fulfilled the law of God in your stead. If your life has been united with His thru the simple faith in the forgiveness of sins which He preached, you have also become united with Him in the likeness of His death. If your baptism means anything at all it is the beginning of a dying process which cannot end otherwise than in the crucifixion of the old man, that the body of sin might be done away, that so we should no longer be in bondage to sin. To be baptized, i. e., immersed into Jesus Christ and all that He stands for, means to be buried with Him into death, to have all that is natural, old and sinful put out of sight, so that a new creature, cleansed and sanctified may be raised from the dead and walk in newness of life. It is this newness of life that is the important thing about the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and it is only as the sacrament of Holy Baptism ministers to it that it has any value whatever.

As the earth cannot bring forth fruit unless the seed has been sown, so man cannot be born anew and bring forth the fruits of a new life unless God has planted the seed of a new life into the heart, which is done in baptism. And as the seed that has been sown cannot grow and bear fruit without sunshine and rain, the spiritual life of those who have been baptized cannot bring forth its fruit except the new life thus given by God is nourished thru a faithful use of the Word of God and its conscious acceptance as the rule of life. Where such a nourishing and fostering of the new life is neglected it must finally perish. Luther says very aptly, "Such baptizing with water signifies that the old Adam in us should, by daily contrition and repentance, be drowned, and die with all sins and evil lusts, and again, a new man daily come forth and arise, who shall live before God in righteousness and purity forever."

That we are baptized into the death of Christ means that not only is the old Adam, our sinful nature with all its lusts and desires, to be cast aside and conquered, with the aim of beginning a new and better life, it also means that the death of Christ for us becomes the death of the sinful man in us. Christ died and was buried for our sins, and they who are Christ's own will conquer the sin in the strength of His death. Jesus Christ has conquered sin, but it must be conquered and done to death in the life of every individual. Holy Baptism typifies this and gives the strength with which it is to be accomplished. Col. 3: 5-10. Those who have been baptized must continue the work of their cleansing sanctification. In this passage the old man is compared with an unclean and tattered garment that must be put away and exchanged for one that is new and clean if the wearer is to appear decent and respectable. Holy Baptism spurs us on to constant efforts in putting aside evil desires and habits, so that we may conduct ourselves as children of God.

This is a matter of daily concern and effort. Sin lifts its head every day and must be conquered anew every day. To stand still means to lose ground. A Christian is never perfect as long as he lives. A careful housewife dusts her furniture every day, so that the dust may have no chance to accumulate and destroy the polished surface. A wise gardner looks after his plants every day in order to destroy the insects that may attack them, and to keep the soil in the proper condition. Those who desire to keep their lives clean must pay daily attention to the evil that is constantly gathering, and which, if allowed to accumulate, will at last bring shame and disgrace.

Let us get a firm hold on the conviction that by becoming united with Christ we have become united with Him in the likeness of His resurrection. For all who are really one with Him in faith, the old man, that is, that part of the old human nature that is of the earth, selfish and opposed to God, has been crucified and is dead and buried, "done away," or "cancelled," as the Greek work originally means, and for no other purpose than that of arising in newness of life. That is the test. If there is no newness of life because of baptism, then there is no connection with Christ and the baptism has been merely an empty form.

Nor are we thrown on our own resources in bringing about this newness of life, for "it is God who worketh in you both to will and to work, for His good pleasure." Phil. 2: 13. A complete surrender to the leading of His Holy Spirit will inevitably make all things new.

Her Special Messenger

BY ISABEL GRAHAM BUSH

I

Mrs. Thurlow was engaged in a most pleasing occupation, a fact that one might have guessed by the smiles creasing the corners of her lips, but now and then her thoughts for very gladness bubbled into speech as she rocked and sewed in the sunshine streaming thru her south window.

"There's the custard pie, that's four. Tillie Ames knows there isn't anything I like better, and that I can't afford to make 'em with eggs so high. The pink geranium I would call very special." Mrs. Thurlow paused and lifted her spectacles to better view the mass of rosy blossoms which seemed to smile back at her. Aren't they a picture, now! I can see Polly Gay's pretty face every time I look at 'em, and—" Her voice broke off suddenly at a brisk tapping on the door.

"There, I'm coming right in," said Mrs. Dale, the next door neighbor, as she stepped across the threshold. "I saw you at the window—now don't you stir a foot, for I can't stop. Rebecca's just 'phoned over to know if it will be agreeable for Grandma Burch to come down for all day to-morrow if it's pleasant? Joe has some business to attend to, and he can bring her as well as not. She's been counting on seeing you for ever so long, Rebecca says."

Mrs. Thurlow nodded gaily. "Why of course, tell Cynthia to come right along. I'll be glad—" and then the smile faded. Why it was strange that Cynthia Burch didn't remember that to-morrow was the missionary meeting. How queer! But perhaps it wasn't to be wondered at after all; she hadn't been to one in so long she'd probably lost count—"

"Well, then I'll 'phone Rebecca that she—Grandma Burch, I mean—is to come?" inquired Mrs. Dale somewhat puzzled at the sudden silence.

Mrs. Thurlow forced a reply. "Yes, yes, tell her to come," she repeated, but without a trace of her former enthusiasm.

The neighbor departed hurriedly. Mrs. Thurlow sitting very straight in her rocking-chair, saw vaguely a blue-checked gingham whisk thru the gateway. "It's strange," she soliloquized, "how I had that missionary meeting on my tongue's end when she knocked. I'd been saving it for the most special of them all, like a grand climax, and now I can't go," with a long sigh of disappointment. "I'm so anxious to hear that letter Mrs. Doty's going to read about the mountain folks in Kentucky, and Crissy Bell's going to sing—Dear, dear, I just wish I'd told Cynthia not to come. A few days wouldn't have made any difference; Joe'll be down again before long. It seems queer how the Lord let's us be hindered when it's His work— But there, I'm blaming Him when He's given me common sense and a tongue. I'd better be blaming myself for not speaking right up, but somehow I couldn't. If it had been anybody but Cynthia—she's been pindling so long."

Mrs. Thurlow raked over the coals in her little stove and put on the tea kettle for supper, disappointment still visible in her face. "I wasn't thinking of the custard pie," she admonished her conscience as she cut a piece sparingly because of her guest on the morrow, "altho it isn't often I get a taste of one." She sat down at the table and drew her cup of tea nearer with an unusual absent-mindedness. Somehow her thoughts could not get away from the missionary meeting she was obliged to miss.

As Mrs. Thurlow took up her sewing again, half-unconsciously her lips voiced the old-time refrain of her choir-singing days:

"We're traveling thru the wilderness, Traveling, traveling—"

The dreary monotonous repetition quavered dolefully out on the soft breezes. A young girl passing by paused and looked toward the cottage in surprise, then she turned, ran up the walk and peered in at the window.

"Why, Auntie Thurlow, what are you singing? It isn't a wilderness."

The song came to an abrupt end. "Polly Gay, if you didn't give me such a start! What was that you said?"

"This world isn't a wilderness, it's just the loveliest place! I supposed you thought so, too, Auntie." The flower-like face was reproachful.

Mrs. Thurlow flushed with a sense of guilt. "Of course it is," she assented apologetically. "I guess my thoughts got to running away with me, Polly, that's a fact. I don't know when I've thought of that tune before."

"Don't think of it ever again, will you?" pleaded Polly. "It makes me creepy— You aren't sick, are you?" she asked with a sudden misgiving.

"Goodness no, I don't believe I ever felt better in my life except when I was a young thing."

With a relieved little laugh Polly turned away. Mrs. Thurlow went on with her fine sewing, but her lips were pressed tightly together with the determination that they should not again transgress.

The early morning light found Mrs. Thurlow whisking the last speck of dust from the already tidy house. Long before her guest arrived, arrayed in a clean print gown and best white apron, she was sewing in her old place by the front window.

"Land sakes, but Cynthia does look peaked!" she mentally ejaculated as she watched Joe carefully assist his grand-mother from the low surrey. In a sudden rush of sympathy, two warm friendly hands took the cold, thin ones in a hearty grasp of welcome. "I'm really glad to see you, Cynthia!" There was no pretense in Mrs. Thurlow's voice.

"Are you now, really?" queried Grand-mother Burch anxiously. "Why, do you know, I never once thought of it bein' Missionary Day until I got 'most here, and then I remembered all of a sudden. I told Joe you must have forgotten, too, when Rebecca 'phoned you. Honest now, Mary, didn't you?"

"Of course not," her hostess smiled back. "I never forgot Missionary Day in my life. Don't you remember how I used to mark it out on my calendar a whole year ahead?"

"Yes, yes," Cynthia Burch laughed, and then sighed. "That was twenty yeas ago, Mary. Just think of it, and you've fathered and mothered that society all this time and made a good job of it, too. I wouldn't think of keeping you home. We'll visit real hard until its time for you to go, then I'll lie on the couch and rest until Joe comes. I'd like to go, too, as well as anybody, but the ride's sort of tuckered me. I can't stand's much as I used to." The tired head dropped wearily back against the chair cushion.

Loyalty to Christ

BY J. R. MILLER, D. D.

Loyalty to Christ begins in the heart. We must love Him supremely. "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me." Nothing makes worthy discipleship if love be lacking. In these days Christian activity is emphasized and required. Never was the Church of Christ as active as it is now. This is beautiful. But with all our activity we may fear lest we are not loving Christ as we should.

We are in danger of being so busy in the Lord's work that we cannot be enough with the Lord in love's fellowship. He may say to us: "I like your works, your toils, your service, but I miss the love you gave me at first." There is real danger that we get so busy in striving to be active Christians, so absorbed in our tasks and duties, our efforts to bring others into the Church, that Christ Himself shall be less loved, and shall miss our communing with Him. Loyalty means first of all heart devotion. Has Christ really the highest place in your heart? It is not your work He wants most; it is you. It is beautiful to do things for Him; it is still more beautiful to make a home for Him in your heart. A young man at great cost has brought from many countries the most beautiful materials he could find, and has built as a memorial to his dead wife an exquisite little chapel. Only a few men could do anything so rare, so lovely. But the poorest of us can enthrone our loved ones in our hearts, and the poorest of us can please Christ even more by making a little sanctuary in our hearts for Him.

Then, there must be loyalty of life. If there be true, supreme love in the heart, there should be a shining character. Here again we need to guard against devotion to the work and service of Christ while the impression is not to the honor of Christ. He is very patient with our infirmities and our stumbling; if He were not, who of us ever could hope to please Him? We are inexperienced, mere learners, at first. We misspell our words. We blunder in our grammar. We sing out of tune. Some of us are just beginning our Christian life, and are discouraged already because we have failed to be what we meant to be, and to live as beautifully as we were sure we would live.

Christ does not want us ever to give up. Tho we stumble when we are learning to walk, He wants us to get up and try again. Tho we are defeated in our battle to-morrow, He wants us to rise at once, and keep on fighting. A true soldier may be wounded, may be beaten in many battles, but he never is a deserter, never a traitor. He is always loyal. It is only when we desert Christ, turn away from Him, become false to Him, that we really fail. You never can fail, if you are true, if you are faithful.

There must be loyalty also in character. Here is a man, for example, who bears the name of a Christian. But he is not loving; he is hard to live with, suspicious, jealous, resentful. He has not joy; he is morose, gloomy, a sad man. He has not peace; he is fretful, anxious, restless, full of fear and foreboding. He has not meekness; he is impatient, irascible, unmerciful. Lacking the qualities of love, joy, peace, meekness, can you call such a man a loyal follower of Christ? He may be a strenuous Christian so far as activities are concerned, a prominent church member, a zealous church officer, foremost in the organization of the church; yet he is not a man you would call a beautiful Christian. Loyalty must be Christlike in character, in disposition, in spirit, in the shining of the face, in the lovingness of the heart.

A good woman deplored her lack of usefulness. Yet many knew that her daily life was a constant benediction. She sweetened a home, blessed a household of children and young people, and manifested the love of Christ among her neighbors. Was not that being an active Christian? There is an activity of being as well as of doing.

Loyalty to Christ demands of us the uttermost of sincerity and truth in all our living. God desires "truth in the inward parts." Yet are there not men who claim to be Christians, and are living a lie? There are lives which are honey-combed by all manner of unfaithfulnesses, dishonesties, injustices and injuries to others, and by many secret sins. What does the lesson of loyalty to Christ have to teach us about these things? Are covered sins safely hidden? Are

Concluded on Page 8

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

Happy New Year

BY Z. I. DAVIS

Out of the old year
Into the new,
Leaving the rubbish,
The false and untrue,
Putting behind us
Shadows of night,
Facing the sunrise,
Welcoming light.

Out of the old rut,
Into the way,
Leading us upward
In Heaven's Day.
Vows that were broken,
Now we renew,
Trusting for strength
To our God, who is true.

Up from low levels
Into the plane,
Near to the Father,
Till the refrain
Of Heaven's music
Over us rolls,
Turning our hearts
To the Saviour of souls.

Emptied of self,
Vain glory and pride,
Learning the Word
That shall ever abide.
Turning our eyes
Away from the sod,
Filled with Christ's love
And the Spirit of God.

Let Us Take Time

Let us take time in this new year for the good-bye kiss. We shall go to the day's work with a sweeter spirit for it.

Let us take time for the evening prayer. Our sleep will be more restful if we have claimed the guardianship of God.

Let us take time to speak sweet words of affection to those we love. By-and-by, when they can no longer hear us, our "foolishness" will seem more wise than our best wisdom.

Let us take time to read the Bible. Its treasures shall last when we shall have ceased to care for the war or political parties, the rise and fall of stocks, or the petty happenings of the day.

Let us take time to be pleasant. The small courtesies, which we often omit because they are small, will some day look larger to us than the wealth which we covet or the fame for which we struggle.

Let us take time to get acquainted with our families. The wealth you are accumulating, burdened father, may be a doubtful blessing to the son who is a stranger to you. Your beautifully kept house, busy mother, can never be a home to the daughter whom you have no time to caress.

Let us take time to get acquainted with Christ. The hour is coming swiftly for us all when one touch of His hand in the darkness will mean more than all that is written in the day-book and ledger or in the records of our little social world.

Since we must all take time to die, why should we not take time to live—to live in the large sense of a life begun here for eternity.—Selected.

A Unique Home Sunday-School

BY J. MERVIN HULL

For years a gifted Christian woman in Boston has conducted a remarkable Sunday-school in her own home; a Sunday-school peculiar to itself, but having many features similar to the Home Department.

This Sunday-school, like many other noble efforts, had its origin in a great sorrow. The only boy of the family, little Kendall, five years of age, was taken very sick. As he lay on his mother's lap, she sang to him,

"Jesus loves me this I know,
For the Bible tells me so;
Little ones to Him belong,
They are weak, but He is strong."

As the song continued the sweet, faint little voice interrupted, "Mamma, that means me."

And so indeed it did. Very soon the little one went to be with the Strong One in whom he trusted. The wound went deep into the mother's heart, and yet her sorrow did not make her selfish. In remembering the little one whom she had lost, she did not forget other little ones who still remained about her and who were never taught about the "Strong One," who had taken little Kendall to Himself. In memory of her dear little boy she undertook a work for the little ones of her own neighborhood, especially those who had no Christian privileges, such as were so precious to her.

She began to invite these children to her own home for a Sunday-school. She knew that it would be useless to invite them to her own church and Sunday-school, because the parents of so many of them were prejudiced against the Christian Church. So she went out upon the street and began to invite them at their play. The first Sunday twenty-four children from five to thirteen years of age gathered in the two parlors.

From this beginning the school grew rapidly, so that for the past five years the house has been crowded each Sunday. The feeling of the children about coming is illustrated by their punctuality. The session begins at three o'clock in the afternoon, but many of the children arrive before half-past one. "This," said the lady, "was encouraging to the spirit, but perhaps not quite so much to the body, for if the children were left alone, they would bang on the piano, slide on the carpets, thump each other on the head with the hymn books, not to speak of more objectionable performances."

As time went on, the Sunday-school overflowed the parlors, sitting-room, and other rooms of the house, even taking possession of the kitchen for a Primary Department. There thirty or forty little ones have assembled every Sunday. Set tubs became a table, the real table being consigned to the pantry. And still the little ones came, and the question was how to provide for them except by sending the kitchen range to keep company with the table.

It would seem as if this task in time would become burdensome, but always in the superintendent's heart was the memory of the dear little one who had passed away and of the loving Master who had called him home. So that we can understand how this woman wrote the following words in declining an invitation to take charge of a department of two hundred and fifty children in another Sunday-school.

"I realize that my task is a difficult one—it takes my life, but it is well worth it. Only one thing can keep me here, and that is the Master's will. If I leave here to take a class, to whom, whether I go or not, the Gospel will be preached, who will point to Christ these boys and girls? Who will open a house for a Sunday-school?"

And so during all these years the work has constantly grown. Some of its results are visible. A number have openly confessed Christ as a result of the teaching which they have received there. But many of the results will not be fully developed for generations, and only in the light of eternity will the blessed influence of this Home Sunday-school be fully realized.

Discouragements

If you are looking for discouragements, you will find plenty of them. There were enough of them in existence at the time of Christ and the apostles to cause them to stop their labors, but they didn't. They went right ahead. There were enough of them in the centuries of persecutions which followed, to cause the defenders of the faith to give up in despair before they faced a martyr's death, but they didn't. They went right ahead. Now while the Gospel has gone on in its conquering power, and is being preached in almost every nation, these discouragements are still here. Shall we yield? No. We have the same faith, the same promises. What we look upon as discouragements are but the elements of opposition which every true soldier of the Cross must fight against to win the crown. The only difference between our discouragements and those which our fathers encountered is this: We feel our discouragements, we read about theirs. It makes all the difference in the world whether we are brave at long range, or in the face of immediate opposition. God will give us grace to overcome if we are faithful to our trust. "He that overcometh shall inherit all things."

Denominational

Installations

In accordance with the instructions of the respective District presidents, the pastors named below have recently been installed in their various new charges:

On November 7, 1915, Pastor M. Kurschat at Tulare, S. D., by Pastor K. Zeyher.

On November 14, 1915, Pastor E. H. Eilers at Remsen, Iowa, by Pastor M. J. Dammann.

November 21, 1915

Pastor G. A. Niedergesaess at Harvey, Ill. (hereafter secondary charge with Blue Island, Ill.), by Pastor John Goebel.

Pastor R. Niebuhr at Dertoit, Mich. (Bethel Church), by Pastor O. C. Haass.

November 28, 1915

Pastor R. C. Lucke at Staunton, Ill., by Pastor W. Riemeier.

Pastor C. T. Rasche at West Burlington, Iowa (St. Paul's Church), by Pastor J. Erdmann.

Pastor W. F. Hetzel at Germania, Mich., by Pastor E. W. Pusch.

Pastor F. C. Schmidt at Moorehead-Barnesville parish, Minn., by Pastor K. Zeyher.

December 5, 1915

Pastor Theodore Merten at Lorain, Ohio, by Pastor W. L. Bretz.

Pastor J. Goffeney at Johnson Tp. parish, Ind., by Pastor J. Overbeck.

Pastor Theodore Wobus at Henderson, Ky., by Pastor H. J. Schiek.

On December 12, 1915, Pastor J. Soell at Metropolis, Ill., by Pastor G. Plassmann.

Dismissal

At his own request Pastor E. Rall, at present sojourning in Switzerland, has, with the consent of the honorable President General, been granted an honorable dismissal from membership in the German Evangelical Synod of N. A.

J. Ernst Birkner, President Iowa District

North Illinois District

Pursuant to a resolution of the District conference the officers of the North Illinois District have appointed the following District Commission on the Common Welfare:—Pastors: D. Bierbaum, Freeport, Ill.; G. Bohn, Bensenville, Ill.; and F. Bosold, Mokena, Ill.; with the representatives of St. Matthew's Church, Chicago, and St. Paul's Church, Elgin, Ill.

Geo. W. Goebel, Pres. N. Ill. Dist.

Called Higher

On December 11 last, Pastor emeritus J. J. Fink, for several years an invalid, was suddenly and unexpectedly called to his reward at St. Louis, Mo.

On December 15 last, Pastor emeritus Caspar Ruegg, South Germantown, Wis., was delivered from the body of this death. Obituaries will follow.

The First $75,000 of the Jubilee Offering

Yes, we have them, thru the cheerful co-operation of our churches, the faithful labor of our pastors, and the tireless efforts of the committee-members. It is hardly probable that the full $150,000, which we had set as a goal for our efforts, will be reached. A very much closer approach to this figure could have been made if the business depression in many sections of the country had not limited the earning capacity of our people; if the needs of the sufferers in Europe had not claimed a large share of our contributions; if many pastors had shown more love and earnestness in their activity, and if a large number of our churches had shown a better appreciation of the work and the problems of the Church. Our aim was not too high for our ability, and still less so for the actual needs of our work. If all the outstanding offerings of individuals and churches shall have been sent in we may consider the offering as closed, and it may be that the total amount after all will reach the sum of $90,000, which would, however, be only a little more than half of the proposed amount.

But this substantial financial result is by no means the only gain we have derived from the Jubilee Offering. Have we not passed thru a great and thrilling period? Have we not obtained a clearer view of the great principles and ideals of our Evangelical

Continued on Page 5

"I will make you Fishers of Men"

In the many and varied Phases of its Country-wide Work, the Home Mission Activity of the Church represents the Mind of the Master—anxious only to seek out and to save

A Request

The undersigned would be grateful for addresses of people of the Evangelical faith located in Stockton, California, as he expects to visit that locality as soon as possible for the purpose of founding a mission there. Thanking you in advance,

Edwin A. Ahrends, No. 12 Hitchins St., Lodi, Cal.

The Evangelical Academy at Fort Collins, Colorado

Our school is again in full swing. While it was not possible to begin the school year on Nov. 15, as was originally planned, because most of our pupils were still busily at work on the sugar-beet farms, we did make the beginning on November 22. In the opening service Director Jans spoke on Prov. 23: 26, "My son, give me thine heart, and let thine eyes delight in my ways." This was followed by reading of the rules. Pastor P. Jueling, chairman of the board of control, was also present and greeted the students. We have seventeen students this year and every place is taken. One of our pupils has been sent to Paul, Idaho, to help out in general and to give catechetical instructions. (Near Paul, Rev. Leesmann has his field; the people come from the Russo-German congregation near Sugar City, Idaho. They all live on homestead land.) Many of our students often go to LaSalle, Colo., to preach there. For our unmarried students we have now rented a separate building, so that they are no longer compelled to live with families, and have more time and opportunity to study. Our eight beds are all supplied. With reference to the lectures, Pastor G. Tillmanns instructs in the Old Testament and Church history. The Director instructs in Christian morals, religion, religion, Latin, German, and also in Botany and Physiology, the latter two in English. Mr. Sargent teaches English and algebra. Instructions begin at eight thirty and close at four. Our pupils come from Manitoba, Canada, Lincoln, Neb., Greeley, LaSalle, Windsor and Ft. Collins, Colo., and with few exceptions, from our Evangelical congregations. One of them is a Canadian refugee as the English government took him for a spy, altho he was born in Russia. Another has a sister and brother-in-law in Bessarabia, (South Russia); the latter, who was an Austrian subject, was transported to Siberia, and the sister was taken to some other place. We are particularly affected by the war as it robs us of the opportunity to obtain the necessary books from Germany, and as a result the Director's typewriter has to reproduce much of the necessary lesson material for the students. Many friends have thought of us in the past—may God reward them—but we need many more to help us build up and strengthen our institution for its important work. Who will help? Wishing all the readers of the Herald a most blessed and happy New Year,

J. Jans, Dir. GES. Tr.

This and That

While out West last summer I had an opportunity to preach in Salt Lake City, the Zion of the Mormons. Only a few of the many Germans who live there showed up on this occasion, and for this reason I have a better recollection of the few who did attend. Now I am in receipt of a letter from our missionary worker there in which he says: "Do you recall the two young ladies who attended your services: Miss B. from Pastor Y's congregation in Ohio, and Miss Q. from U? The latter had to undergo an operation and the former has married a Mormon. I met her on the street-car while on my way to the hospital to visit Miss Q. and she told me that it was their intention to travel to San Francisco, but as Miss Q. had taken sick, she had changed her plans and expected to go to Ohio. On the following Sunday she attended church and told me she would leave on Wednesday. The following Sunday Mr. S. said to me: 'Do you know that Miss B. married a Mormon last Wednesday and is now on her wedding trip?' I had not expected this as she had repeatedly spoken against the Mormons. From day to day it is becoming more and more clear to me how many girls from the East meet their downfall in this unholy Zion.

Oh, how often, dear reader, do we have to experience such backslidings. People who have been baptized, confirmed and raised in the Evangelical Church come to the West, forget their church affiliation, or, after attending for a short time, finally succumb to temptation and drift away from the Church altogether, no matter how much we warn and caution them regarding the methods of the Mormons, who are never satisfied with the little finger but must have the whole hand, yea, body and soul. Most of our Evangelical Christians out here must have met with the Mormon missionaries as they travel in couples thru-out the western States distributing tracts. Even my own wife was delayed in her work for an hour recently when two such Mormon missionaries called on her and tried to prove to her that the Bible is insufficient for eternal salvation without the later revelations as received by the prophet Joseph Smith. Exercise your authority in your home. Keep them out. Burn their tracts. Or would you save samples of poisonous pills if they were brought into your house? If you did, you alone would be to blame if accidents occurred thru them. If new revelations and truths are offered you, such as Joseph Smith (of the Mormons) or Mrs. White (of the Adventists) have to offer, decline to receive them. Both of these sects are very active in the West, and I would therefore warn you. Instead you should strengthen the hands of our missionary workers so as to enable them to distribute our Friedensbrote and the Evangelical Herald in place of such tracts and pamphlets, which contain nothing but lies. Our postal laws will not permit that sample papers be sent to one address for any length of time. Where can we find an Evangelical Christian who would be willing to pay for one or more of these papers so that our missionary workers must not be deprived of their main stand-by? How would it be if some of our societies would purchase twenty-five, fifty or 100 copies of the Kalender or Year Book and place them at the disposal of the home mission boards to be sent to the various workers free of charge? If a merchant wants his business to expand he advertises it to the best of his ability—Our Evangelical Church has goods far more valuable than they. Help us to advertise them and to bring and to keep our Church and our work before the people. That will be real mission work.

J. Jans. GES. Tr.

The Immigrant Mission, Baltimore, Md.

In writing this I am still influenced by the impression received at the Jubilee celebration in the Hippodrome. There I had the opportunity to see people. The thought came to me: If only the German ships would again bring us such hordes of immigrants, who seek their relatives or who wish to improve their condition, and to whom we might bring the Gospel which was neglected, or perhaps despised by them in the old country. Our opportunities at the present time are much better than they were seventy-five years ago, but we do not take advantage of them. Such a multitude I could observe here every week, and now they have to bare their breasts before the enemy in order to protect their homes and families.

To-day we had a most welcome visit. Pastor Locher brought the Rev. Digel, chairman of the Board for Educational Institutions, who wanted to see our Home and hear something about our mission. I showed him two steamers from Bremen which are moored at our docks, and explained the detail, which brought me into empty and forsaken quarters where I had been very much at home in days gone by. The outer appearance of these ships is on the same order, they seem to shirk from inspection. The rooms and gang-ways which formerly buzzed with activity, where seamen, sailors, stokers, stewards and officers busily swept back and forth, are now quiet and empty; hardly any of the crew are visible as only a few men are on duty, the others are busy at some other occupation on shore. I dread the winter, when they may return—a few forerunners have already put in their appearance. It is then that shoes, clothing, meals and lodging will have to be supplied. Who can and will send me the most necessary articles? Shoes are very much in demand—who can supply me with some? Large sizes, please; Thank you.

Continued on Page 8

Denominational

Continued from Page 4

Church? Have we not been aroused to a better conception and understanding of the problems of our Church? Have not our hearts been warmed and inspired by the general celebration of the anniversary? Have we not learned to take a greater interest in our Church, is she not worth more to us after we have gone down into our pockets for her needs and done something for her? Shall the soil thus plowed up not be capable of bringing further fruit?

That the soil has been thus plowed up is a distinct gain, and surely ought to produce new and better crops. What we might expect is:

1. More systematic giving. To his church at Corinth St. Paul proposes, 1 Cor. 16: 2, that "upon the first day of the week each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper, that no collection be made when I come." How many of the 270,000 Evangelical communicants is willing to undertake doing this during 1916? If all would lay by only two cents per week or one dollar per year, as an extra offering that would mean $270,000 by the end of 1916, or nearly four times the outstanding balance of the Jubilee Offering.

2. Scholarships for our educational institutions. The Committee on Benevolences has adopted this idea as a part of its program and herewith proposes it to our churches and their members. The time has come when our educational institutions can no longer live from hand to mouth, but must be placed upon a sound and permanent financial basis. The present indebtedness amounts to $75,000. Thirty-five per cent of the Jubilee Offering is to be set aside for their use, which will not even pay one-half of the debt. Board and tuition for one student at Elmhurst costs $150. The interest on a scholarship for $2,500 at six per cent would keep one student, and many an earnest young man, unable to procure the means for studying for the ministry, would be willing to go to college if such a scholarship were available. What a blessed career such a scholarship would open to many a faithful, earnest young man in our churches! We put this matter up to our well-to-do members and churches, and the various Districts, with the urgent request: Give us scholarships, so that the institutions where our ministers are being trained may be placed upon a firm financial footing.

Is it expecting too much when we look forward to such a fruitage of our Evangelical Jubilee? Let us not be satisfied with the joyful prelude to the seventy-fifth anniversary of our Church, nor with the uplifting and inspiring celebration; let us rather see to it that its echoes may continue to awaken our people to a new and higher conception of their duty.

Wishing all our readers a blessed and prosperous New Year, and the Church as a whole a new increase of faith and love that will express itself in deeds and service.

H. Bode, General Treasurer.

Missouri District

St. Louis

On November 14 last St. Luke's Church observed in a fitting manner the forty-fifth anniversary of its organization. A feature of the occasion was the sermon by the venerable Dr. Haerberle, who, as pastor of St. John's Church, had taken a lively interest in the organization and development of the congregation. With accustomed vigor he struck the keynote of the occasion with his discourse on Phil. 4: 4, encouraging the members of the church to rejoice in the Lord, and portraying the everlasting joys of the redeemed in heaven that awaits the faithful Christian. The writer spoke in English on 1 Cor. 15: 58, showing how St. Paul encourages us to cultivate the steadfastness of faith, the growth in love and the certainty of our hope. Pastor H. Walser, who has served the congregation for the past thirty-four years, read a brief history of the congregation.

The first beginnings of St. Luke's date back to 1869, and were undertaken by Pastor Rehsteiner at the instance of Pastor Roeder of St. Peter's. His successful labor was interrupted after a few months by his visit to Europe from which he did not return. To prevent the scattering of the little flock, Mr. H. Maul, a colporteur, ministered to the members as best he could until a new pastor could take charge. In October, 1870 sixteen families organized themselves into St. Luke's Evangelical Church and boldly purchased a building site at Jefferson Ave. and Scott St. A few

Concluded on Page 6

THE EVANGELICAL CHURCH IN THE YEAR OF HER JUBILEE

With the Roots of her Teachings and Principles deeply imbedded in the rich Soil of a Great Past the Evangelical Church in America looks toward a greater Future for a fuller Realization of her high Ideals PAPER READ BEFORE THE CONFERENCE OF THE PACIFIC DISTRICT BY PASTOR J. KROEHNKE, SAN FRANCISCO.

FROM THE GERMAN BY PASTOR J. J. BRAUN.

II

The committee on the judiciary disposed of this extremely important matter by silently allowing the execrable document to glide into the waste basket. A similar proceeding in other cases would have saved committees and conferences not a few unpleasant hours, while at the same time yielding good results. In other words: in some cases we had rather too much than too little discipline. There was too little discipline, usually, when congregations came into consideration. Timid brethren were wont to call attention to the fact that a congregation might withdraw her membership from the Synod, if being party to a suit she did not receive sufficient consideration. To be sure, one must admit that it would be most unfortunate for us if we could not find a hearing for all reasonable opinions and were subject to papal dictates.

Present Tendencies

The fact that there are fewer cases of discipline to-day than formerly is not due so much to the new rules of our court proceedings, which the majority of us have read perhaps once out of curiosity, and that hastily; but rather to the fact that at present we are able to fill more vacancies with men educated in our seminaries than was formerly the case. The situation would be critical indeed if a five or seven years' course in our own seminaries could not produce pastors who are much more in harmony with our spirit and institutions than those who come from other institutions or denominations. The writer well remembers how the pioneers of our Synod guarded against an inconsiderate, rigid church polity, and we may well be grateful to them for counteracting any undue centripetal force in our Church. As it is, it will be a long time before anything like a bureaucracy develops in our midst. It seems strange that in spite of the prevailing fraternal-republican spirit the conventional phrase: "ehrwuerdig" (honorable) has with all meekness won such prominence. (The custom is probably not as prevalent as was the case formerly and can hardly be said to exist where the English language is used. Ed.) The brotherly spirit of tolerance, forbearance, friendliness and goodness is not a dubious diplomacy or of weakness; this has been abundantly proven in the course of these seventy-five years. Every assault upon our position has been repulsed with all firmness. The desire to insert the Lutheran wording of the Ten Commandments into our Catechism sprang largely from motives of utility and fortunately met with no response. Nor was it due to denominational obstinacy that the suggestion to add the term "Lutheran" to our official name was repeatedly rejected, but rather to a sense of honor that revolts at even the appearance of denying one's real character.

The Language Question

How the spirit of the fathers will hold its ground when the English language becomes dominant among the younger church-going generation is the object of a not uninteresting speculation. One would not expect that a policy of accommodation in the language question would bring about a different spirit as long as the way of thinking remains German Evangelical, (using the word German to denote a state of mind rather than the language) and the appreciation of the deep, true sentiment which is characteristic of the German type of religion be not dulled but carefully cultivated in church and home. But if widespread imitation of the ways of American churches sets in, because the latter seems to have greater power of attraction, it would not be long before a new character would have developed, and our Synod would no longer be Evangelical in the present sense, but actually a new church body alongside of many other denominations with old names. (It may not be out of place to add in this connection that there seems to be no danger of the imitation above referred to as far as the official representatives of English Evangelical work at Eden Seminary and Eden Publishing House are concerned. The one compelling reason for the introduction and extension of this work has been the imperative need of making our English-speaking children and children's children in Evangelical churches familiar with the true Evangelical spirit and attitude which is inseparable from the German state of mind. There is no better and safer way of guarding against the mere imitation of other churches than by promoting the circulation of English Evangelical literature. Ed.)

Our Educational Institutions

In these a work is being done that attracts as little attention as the activity of the heart of our body which, always active, sends the blood thru our arteries invisibly, inaudibly. Marthasville, Cincinnati, Elmhurst, St. Louis—what changes in the progress! In Elmhurst we boys and young men began to conjugate amo, there we tried our all-wise boyish criticism on the professors and received in return on our reports the marks "poor," "unsatisfactory," "satisfactory," "good," "very good"—according to the conscience (or the mood) of the worthy gentlemen that wielded the scepter. We of the older generations who with historical accuracy date their Elmhurst college existence back into the seventies of the last century, remember with undying devotion the charitable Seminary bakers and Seminary maids who occasionally assisted a bankrupt stomach to an honorable estate, by surreptitiously distributing extra rations. May they receive the mundane reward, the little plot of ground in which milk and honey flows, as it was promised those Israelites that had left Egypt under twenty years of age, and of whom it is written Exodus 12: 36: "And they despoiled the Egyptians." At the time we did not understand the amo at all, but it dawned upon us in the "Old Seminary" when we proclaimed to the rocks: kat'ab, kat'ba, katab'ta, and these then sent back the reverberating echo: katab'nu! We did not profanely cut the amo into the sycamore and the linden trees, at the worst, we scribbled it into our exercise books; but not until later did we appreciate its significance and its ramifications. In spirit we see our Alma Mater in silver-haired glory—it is the old Seminary. Thru weal and woe she served faithfully and can look benignly and with a mother's pride upon the host of her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. That which aging she could herself no longer accomplish, she committed to the hands of her daughter at Eden, St. Louis. True, we did not love our Alma then as we did later on, or as we do now. Sometimes, and especially when seated at the table in the dining room, we thought she treated us like a step-mother. Cornbread, bacon, molasses, bread,—this was the regular bill of fare with two changes during the week and three changes as a special favor on Sunday. From the viewpoint of art, this was masterful, for do not the motives of some artists recur frequently?—Let everyone that is acquainted with the faithful, motherly work of the younger institution at St. Louis and her governess at Elmhurst (This surely ought to include every member of the Synod), let him present a birthday gift that will raise her above all cares. These institutions are, if a slight change of figure be permitted, our mothers and without them we would be orphans. So also are we devoted to the memory of our teachers and the officers of our seminaries,—their names are most closely interwoven with the history of our Synod. To ward off any suspicion of wilful and criminal neglect, the writer desires this anniversary year to rear a memorial to one of the staid and sturdy characters of the "Old Seminary," the Seminary mule, "John." John has attained fame. During the Civil War, when rebel hordes had secretly led him away into their awful camps, he returned to his Union master with the same secrecy that attended his departure. Later the hired man in a fit of anger proposed to him the insidious question, who was really the mule, he, the hired man, or John. Whereupon the latter maintained a discreet and philosophic silence. Merely for the sake of her kinship with John the name of his sister "Kit" should be mentioned. She was the express type of a British suffragette—self-conscious, obstinate, full of destructive tendencies, especially in her hind legs.

The Denominational Periodicals

There are beautiful "leaves" on the tree of our Synod. The first, a product of the denominational spring-time, is the "Friedensbote." Other leaves soon followed in the form of periodicals and books. Thousands have hearkened understandingly to their rustling and whispering, when storms have swept over Church or State, or when in times of ominous calm or oppressive eat of tribulation scarcely another vitalizing breath could be felt. According to the need they provided incentive or refreshing shade. The oldest of our papers has maintained its youthfulness. Everyone that loves justice and truth is delighted with its fine virile attitude and its candor, especially in these hypocritical times. The younger brother, "The Herald" can well stand a comparison with the older messenger. Both are closely related and come from a good family.

Conclusion

We can face the future hopefully, for the cause of our Synod is God's cause. Up on the Russian River at the base of Fitch Mountain, there stands a Sequoia gigantea sempervirens—a California giant cedar. Her crown has been swept away by storm or lightning. Her trunk is deeply wounded with ax and fire by the ruthless hand of man. But she continues growing, stands firm and straight as tho she had never suffered injury. She holds her strength because her roots go deep into the soil. Her trunk is hollow and affords a cool retreat for the weary traveler. Let her be an example.

Our Synod has passed thru many good and evil days. She has suffered injury, but the sun of God's grace as also shone upon her. She has remained and will remain sempervirens—evergreen—inviting the plodding wayfarer to a season of rest and refreshing, for her roots go deep into the soil of Scripture. "We regard," so says our creed, "the Scriptures as the sole and unerring guide of our faith and conduct." Following the first Psalm, this is our wish and prayer for the Synod on her seventy-fifth birthday: "May you always be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that brings forth its fruit in its season and whose leaves also shall not wither, 'sempervirens.'"

The Federal Council and the Rural Church

The rural Church that would really succeed Today needs to study its Task from every Angle, the Economic and Social Aspect as well as the religious, and to show intelligent Interest and Sympathy for every rural Need

II

WHAT IS TO BE DONE TO CHANGE THE SITUATION?

Naturally there is just as much difference between communities as there is between individuals, therefore the suggestions as exploited at this conference are not applicable in every particular to every country church. It is imperative, however, that both, the country parish and its minister, receive the new vision of the country church. Here is given in brief the outline of the function of an ideal country church.

a) The function of the country church is to create, to maintain, and to enlarge both individual and community ideals, under the inspiration and guidance of the Christian motive and teaching, and to help rural people to incarnate these ideals in personal and family life, in industrial effort, in political development, and in all social relationships.

To give church leaders, both preachers and laymen, a clear view of the fundamental aspects of the rural problem it is suggested, that a survey of the field be made, to discover neglected individuals and families, to ascertain the conditions which determine its work, and to learn what movements are entitled to its guidance, interest and support.

b) Each country church is entitled to have preaching every Sunday in every field. Topics and texts should be selected with rural setting. Just as Jesus adapted his message to his hearers, by using illustrations taken from the life of the farmer and the fisherman, the housewife and the home, so the country minister should endeavor to make the truths of the Bible plain in terms that will be understood by his hearers.

Religious use should be made of special days, like Harvest Home, Thanksgiving etc. with special references to rural environment.

Clubs can well be organized within the church for community service projects, to discuss community work, such as temperance, public health and sanitation, good roads, consolidated schools, better farming and better farm homes.

The church should co-operate with the extension work, as carried on by the agricultural colleges of the State.

It was even suggested, that the church should help to promote co-operation among farmers in their production, buying and selling.

c) To prevent the overlapping of many little organizations, it was seriously urged that groups of country churches, with natural and social affiliation, should unite for the study of their special field and for more efficient use of their resources in meeting its needs, thus forming a church federation, just as the city churches are federated for promoting common interests. Churches should consolidate where only one church is needed in the community. Even where organic unity is not procurable, a federated church, each society preserving corporate identity, but all uniting in worship and work, should be formed.

This will undoubtedly be the most difficult part of the program to carry out. It may take years before the churches and their officials will realize that the Kingdom of God must absolutely go ahead of private or even denominational interests.

The Pastor's Part

d) One great task in the work of the rural pastor of to-morrow will be to preach contentment with rural life and adequacy of the country as a life investment, to encourage the ownership of the farm, not merely as a means to make a living by renting it to others, but as a permanent residence which, when properly equipped and improved, makes the most desirable place of living.

e) To make all this possible an essential thing is the proper training of students for the ministry for this particular work. The country church, to be efficient, does not want a one-year man, nor a two- or three-year man, but one, who is willing and glad to make the country pastorate a life work. It was recommended that every seminary should give special opportunities to students who show a distinct aptitude and inclination for work in rural churches. This could be done, by adding to the general course elective courses in "The Country Church as a Community Center," "Rural Sociology," and other similar subjects. This does not require the country minister to be trained in agriculture, but merely does it require of him, that he should be sympathetically and intelligently interested in the work of the farm, not only for the purpose of making himself agreeable, but especially that he might be able to promote the religious interests and develop the religious life of his community more intelligently.

For country pastors who are in the work, special reading along these lines was commended to prevent spiritual stagnation, and to enrich and stimulate his mental and spiritual life.

To be able to accomplish the best and to find pleasure in his position every country pastor should be provided with an adequate salary, which gives him an added inducement to put forth his best efforts.

To what extent all these recommendations and suggestions found the official sanction and approval of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ, I was unable to learn. But there is no need to wait until we are morally urged or compelled to take these steps in improving the efficiency of the rural churches in our Synod. I hope that there will be Evangelical pastors and churches, who will be in the front rank of those who seek to remedy the faults and mistakes as evidenced by the decline of the rural church and its influence upon the city and the nation.

Extracts from some of the Addresses

"The most vitalizing thing in the world is Christianity. When I think of the rural church I wonder how far it is going to vitalize the lives of the community in which it exists. I believe that where the school house is inadequate, and even where it is adequate, the most vital social center should be the church itself. It seems to me the country pastor has an unparalleled opportunity to be a country leader. . . . In a farming community one of the things that the Department of Agriculture at Washington is trying to do is to show the farmers of the country the easiest and best methods of co-operation with regard to marketing their crops. The church ought to lend its hand to that."—President Wilson.

"The time has come when denominational co-operation in rural church life is practically essential to any great social and religious movement."—Rev. John M. Moore, Nashville.

"Country churches should co-operate with agricultural experiment stations, or colleges, to help secure federal funds for these thru the Smith-Lever act."—President W. O. Thompson, Ohio State University.

"Longer land leases, to make the tenant a reasonably permanent citizen in the community, and co-operation instead of competition, are necessary for a prosperous country church."—Henry Wallace, Des Moines.

"The country church that opens the door for the biggest and best chances to its girls will find added life for the present and future years."—Miss Jessie Field, New York.

"The church ought to be strongest in the rural places. It is proverbially and horribly weak there. The aloof denominational attempt at this problem has proved a flat, ridiculous failure."—Fred B. Smith, New York.

"The earth is the Lord's, but not the landlord's. Unless the tenant system is remedied, the end is either an inferior, subservient peasant class, as in England, or a rebellious group of agricultural workers with class hatred growing among them."—Rev. Harry F. Ward, Boston.

"The church must be built around needs, not around creeds."—Ralph A. Felton.

Missouri District

Continued from Page 5

months later a small church building was erected, which is still standing and was last used for a school building and for society purposes.

Pastor A Reusch was the first regular pastor of the church and labored diligently and faithfully on this his first charge. After he had accepted a call to another field, Dr. W. T. Jungk, now editor of the "Friedensbote" was chosen pastor. During his pastorate the second and larger church was built and the work extended and developed. After his resignation the present pastor was called. Under his direction the parsonage at Jefferson Ave. was erected, and, when it became clear that the old location was no longer suitable for church purposes, a new site was purchased in a quiet residence section of the city and a neat and substantial church and parsonage built thereon. The old property was sold on favorable terms and the church now enjoys a well-equipped and beautiful new home.

The anniversary service, which was well attended, was beautified by fitting decorations, by uplifting songs and anthems and well-rendered organ selections. May the festive occasion not only be long remembered, but also serve as an encouragement and a new impulse to remain steadfast and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as pastor and people know their labor is not in vain in the Lord.

S. Kruse.

Salem Church, St. Louis, celebrated its thirtieth anniversary in two services on Sunday, Nov. 28th. Tho the weather was inclement strong audiences gathered in the beautiful church in both services. The morning service was opened by the pastor in charge, the Rev. Hermann Walz. Rev. L. Haeblerle, D. D., delivered the first address in German and very fittingly sounded forth the great Advent message of Zechariah 9, 9 interweaving it with the expression of joy and gratitude for all the blessings the Lord has bestowed on Salem Church during the period of thirty years. The venerable speaker, being in his 78th year,

Concluded on Page 8

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

January 16, 1916. Second Sunday after Epiphany

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

HOW TO WORK WITH OTHERS

- M. Jan. 10. Co-operative Offerings. Exod. 25: 1-9.
T. Jan. 11. Building Together. Neh. 4: 1-18.
W. Jan. 12. Effect of Envy. Num. 12: 1-10.
T. Jan. 13. Strong Humility. Rom. 15: 1-7.
F. Jan. 14. Mutual Respect. 1 Pet. 5: 1-7.
S. Jan. 15. Use your Gift. Rom. 12: 1-8.

Sun., Jan. 16. Topic—How to Work with Others. Isa. 41: 1-7.

Suggestions to the Leader

Give a practical demonstration of co-operation by asking all the committees and officers to assist in the making of the program. Assign every committee some definite place, call on every officer to do something, insist on the superintendent of the Sunday-school and the pastor assuming some responsibility,—and above all, plan to have the members take part in the meeting. This meeting is to show how all the agencies of the Church, the congregation, the pastor, the Sunday-school, the young people's society and all other organizations must work together for the accomplishment of the one aim, the development of a Christian personality in the members of the church, old and young. It must also demonstrate that this cannot be effectively accomplished unless all join hands, working together towards this one aim.

The old fable of the clock, the father who asked his sons to break the bundle of sticks, the motto of our country, "In Union there is strength," will illustrate the topic. Jesus called twelve disciples of different temperaments and abilities, who thru their union could overcome the world. But standing alone, the world would overcome them, as the fate of Judas, and the sin of Peter proved.

The Topic Presented

Read in connection with the Scripture Lesson assigned Psalm 133; John 17: 20-23; John 15: 1-11; 1 Cor. 12: 12, 13, 27.

The present war has demonstrated the effectiveness of thoro organization. Confronted by enemies whose total resources are far superior to hers, Germany has nevertheless not only held her own, but has encroached far upon her opponents' territory, and has neutralized the effectiveness of England's great navy. To-day the world appreciates the values of organization, and realizes that the thoroughness with which Germany's resources and men were organized has given her the advantage in the present conflict. What is organization?

1. A careful invoice of our resources. It is an honest statement of our strength in numbers and ability. In our work we must know who are our dependable members, we must be familiar with their ability.

2. A careful investigation of the work to be done. Organization will provide for the possibilities, and will furnish the men to meet the opportunities. Many societies and organizations meet their Waterloo when the impossible and unnecessary is attempted. Defeat weakens the enthusiasm of a society, and makes aggressive work impossible. Be careful in determining the things that are possible.

3. A careful assigning of work to the proper individuals. Select the right persons for the right job. In a clock even the dead weights have an important duty. In a society the dead weights ought not kill interest, but arouse interest in others. Their lack of enthusiasm must serve to urge others to action, if these have recognized the great opportunity for helpfulness that is presented to them.

4. Organization implies true, consecrated leadership, such as will march a little bit ahead of the company, and whose voice of urging and good-cheer can be heard to all who follow. The leader must time the action, direct the campaign.

How can we work with others?

1. We must arouse interest by high ideals and aims. Bring home to each one the truth that it is his work we are endeavoring to do. The great ideal of service is to bring men into contact with their Saviour, Jesus Christ, and His saving power. Every member must be shown that he is responsible for a certain part of this work. I know of one Sunday-school where the adult class was organized in this manner. The first meeting of the class consisted of only four men. But the leader of the class closed the door against further increase. Then he set himself to work to instruct and enthuse these four men, giving them a vision of the great things to be accomplished, and arousing in them a burning enthusiasm to do just this one thing. In a month the pastor set them to work winning others. This time eight others were won. Again the doors were closed to further accessions. But the new members were instructed as faithfully as the old ones had been. After a month these too were sent out to win others. In this way leaders were developed, and the class was taught how to co-operate. To-day this church has the largest Sunday-school and possibly the largest men's class in this country. Was this not the Master's plan? We are too anxious to have immediate results, and do not sufficiently emphasize the need of preparation for service.

2. We must support each other in the work. The tenth Commandment forbids our subtracting even in thought from our neighbor's possession. But the Golden Rule commands that we add to our neighbor's welfare and strength and happiness. Neighborliness is the charm of a community, the assurance of character. Selfishness subtracts from one another, neighborliness adds to the good spirit of the community. The least we can do is to encourage others, (V. 6). The carpenter, goldsmith, blacksmith, tinner (V. 7), smooth the path for one another. They represent efficiency thru co-operation based on love for each other. We must realize that we are our brother's keeper in more ways than one. There is need of doing first those tasks that fit into the tasks of others, that no one need wait on us.

Let us begin our work in the spirit of the Master, and continue it in the spirit of love and fellowship. Our aim must be to win others for Christ and the Church, but this aim can be realized only when we all work together.

Some Questions on the Topic

1. Illustrate the need of co-operation thru the example of erecting a building.
2. What kind of a worker makes work easy?
3. What kind of a fellow-worker makes work hard?
4. Why ought a Christian be the best kind of a fellow-workman?
5. How can your society be thoroly organized?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Psalm 133: 1; Isaiah 52: 81; Matt. 23: 8; Acts 4: 32; Rom. 12: 16; Rom. 14: 19; 1 Cor. 1: 10; 2 Cor. 13: 11; Eph. 4: 3; Phil. 1: 27, 2: 2; 1 Peter 3: 8.

A Prayer

We pray for the mind of Jesus Christ to guide us in all our work; that we may know nothing save the will of God, see nothing save the need of others, do nothing save what is prompted by love and the spirit of helpful service. We have but one ambition, to become co-laborers with God in the saving of a sinful world. Help us, O Lord, to realize this ambition, guide us that we may become efficient in doing Thy task. Amen.

Advanced Bible Studies

Lesson Material for the Second Year: New Testament Studies—the Messianic Era and the Apostolic Era.

Lessons for the First Quarter, 1916

- Lesson 1. Jan. 2. Between the Testaments; Dan. 2: 31-45.
Lesson 2. Jan. 9. The Origin and purpose of the Gospels; John 1: 1-14; Luke 1: 1-4.
Lesson 3. Jan. 16. The Growing Jesus; Luke 2: 40-52.
Lesson 4. Jan. 23. The Voice Crying in the Wilderness; Matt. 3: 1-12.
Lesson 5. Jan. 30. At the Gateway of Service; Matt. 3: 13-17; 4: 1-11; Mark: 9-13.
Lesson 6. Feb. 6. Beginnings in Judea; John 2: 13-25.
Lesson 7. Feb. 13. A Woman Lost in Sin; John 4: 27-30; 39-42.
Lesson 8. Feb. 20. Beginnings in Gallilee; Luke 4: 14-31.
Lesson 9. Feb. 27. Teaching with Authority; Matt. 5: 1-16; 7: 28, 29; Luke 6: 20-26.
Lesson 10. Mar. 5. Miracles of Jesus, I; Luke 8: 22-56.
Lesson 11. Mar. 12. Miracles of Jesus, II; John 5: 17-31; 20: 30-31.
Lesson 12. Mar. 19. Parables of Jesus; Matt. 13: 10-17.
Lesson 13. Mar. 26. The Arising Opposition; John 6: 60-71.

Lesson 3. The Growing Jesus

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Jan. 10. Luke 1: 28-38. The Angel Announces the Saviour's Birth.
T. Jan. 11. Luke 1: 39-56. The Magnificat of Mary.
W. Jan. 12. Matt. 1: 18-25. The Angel's Message to Joseph.
T. Jan. 13. Luke 2: 1-21. The Birth of Jesus Christ.
F. Jan. 14. Matt. 2: 1-23. Worshipped by those from Afar, Persecuted by those who are Near.
S. Jan. 15. Luke 2: 22-39. Presented in the Temple.
S. Jan. 16. Luke 2: 40-52. The Growing Youth.

The Lesson Key:—"And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld His glory, glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth," John 1: 14.

Few passages of the Gospel narrative of the life of Christ are more important and significant than the one with which the present lesson closes: "And Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." We know that Jesus Christ was true man because He was conceived by the Holy Spirit and born of the Virgin Mary, whereby He entered into human nature and became in all things like as we are, yet without sin. We learn that He fasted and hungered and thirsted; that He was wearied and that He slept; that He was moved to tears, and that He finally died a physical death, and by all these signs we know that He was actually a human being as we are human beings. But no proof of Jesus Christ's humanity is so absolute and conclusive as that which shows us that He grew naturally into the Man that He later was, that He advanced thru all the various stages of human development just as we grew from infancy into childhood, youth and man or womanhood, and as our children after us grow into and thru the same stages.

It is well to note that the words wisdom, stature, or age, and favor, or grace, with God and man, refer respectively to the intellectual, the spiritual and the social side of human nature, and their use here indicates that Jesus grew normally and naturally in every direction. He increased in wisdom, i. e., the powers of His intellect developed fully and harmoniously. There was nothing in the working of His mind which distinguished Him from other children of His age. His faculties of observation, of reasoning, of memory, in short, His entire intellectual ability developed just like that of other children. There was nothing precocious or eccentric about Him, the only difference between Him and other children was that His abilities were raised to the highest power because He was without sin. He was without sin. Where other children allowed their faculties to be controlled by the sinful disposition which is the natural heritage of every ordinary human being, He could, by virtue of the divine element in His character devote all the faculties of His active and gifted mind to doing the will of His Father which was in heaven.

He increased in stature, or age, means that His body and the physical energies it possessed developed as He increased in age; He possessed the same love of healthful, out-door activity, for the wholesome bodily exercise which play affords, that He had the same tastes and desires which characterize other boys. He took part in the games and frolics the boys of Nazareth loved to play, and we are quite sure that He enjoyed the good things to eat which Mary provided for her family. But He was always Master of His desires and His appetite because the Spirit of His Father that dwelt in Him helped Him to see clearly the dividing line between right and wrong and to stay on the safe side.

He increased in favor with God and Man means that there was, besides the growth in mind and body, also a development of His spiritual or religious life that rounded out the whole being. The naturally religious spirit of early childhood had full play, especially as it must have been nourished and fostered by His godly parents thru the faithful use of the Word of God and all the other rites and ordinances provided for the purpose. And it was not merely the outward, formal acceptance of the Jewish religion, so common in those days, but such an understanding of the spirit of godliness that naturally expressed itself in goodness, kindness, sympathy and helpfulness, that all who met Him could not help but like the child and to wish Him well. And over all this growing process in wisdom, stature and favor with God and man there was a natural genuine simplicity that disarmed envy or rivalry and made life brighter and better for all who knew Him.

Somehow it is very comforting to know that Jesus shared our growth, that His physical strength, His intellectual power and His religious life gradually grew into the perfect human nature that the record of His life exhibits. He seems so much closer to our hearts because He passed thru the same periods and kinds of growth as we did, and in the light of this knowledge it is much easier for us to see the significance of the fact that the Word became flesh and dwelt among us, that He is the Great High Priest who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities and has been in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.

South Illinois District Sunday School Convention

The first South Illinois District Sunday-school Convention was held in St. Paul's church, Nashville, Ill., November 27-28, 1915. In spite of the late season and inclement weather it was well attended and was very successful. Fifty-seven Sunday-school workers had registered by Sunday noon. The convention was opened in the evening of November 27 with a song and praise service, led by the chairman of the District Sunday-school Board, followed by the greetings of the local pastor, the Rev. J. H. Buescher, who declared that St. Paul's Sunday-school and Church considered it a great privilege to stand sponsor to the first District Sunday-school Convention in South Illinois. After suitable response by the chairman the General Secretary of the Sunday-school Board, Pastor Theodore Mayer, gave an instructive lecture on "The Adult Bible Class" illustrated by about seventy-five lantern slides, showing its organization, its scope and work.

On Sunday morning the visiting Sunday-school workers and many local Sunday-school friends assembled during the Sunday-school hour in the school building to organize an Adult Bible Class as a demonstration of the work of such a class. The lesson was taught by Pastor H. Katterjohn, St. Louis, while the Rev. Theodore Mayer, St. Louis, acted as class president. Some seventy-five persons took part in this work. The offering of this class was by vote assigned to our Hoyleton Orphan Home. Then the members of the class marched in a body from the school building into the main school to take part in the closing exercises of the Sunday-school.

The convention sermon was preached in German by Rev. H. Katterjohn, who based his earnest remarks on Matt. 7: 24-27, and pointed out the only true foundation of all Sunday-school work: Jesus Christ and His blessed word.

At 2 p. m., the afternoon session, replete with good things was opened by the president. Rev. H. Katterjohn first spoke on our own Sunday-school periodicals. Then followed a most interesting study on "Knowing Whom We Teach" by Pastor H. Katterjohn, presenting the necessity of knowing the pupil from his personal, home, social, moral and spiritual life in order that the teacher may gain the best influence upon the pupil. "The Teachers at their Best" was presented by Rev. Paul Buchmueller, Marine, Teacher Training Superintendent of the Sunday-school Board. Rev. H. H. Wintermeyer, Farina, in a striking, forceful way presented his topic full of helpful hints "How to Organize a Home Department and How to Make it Work." "You don't have to make it work, it works by itself," he declared and proved it.

Our genial General Secretary then led an Open Conference on Best Sunday-school Methods which elicited many interesting problems, questions and discussions, closing with an instructive talk by Rev. Mayer on "Organized to do Our Best," emphasizing the need of organized efforts.

Then the convention business was speedily transacted. Resolutions of thanks to the Nashville Church, Sunday-school, pastor and choir for their hospitality were adopted, also that next year a two-day convention, if possible in September or October, be held and that no Sunday, but two week-days shall be used. Another resolution instructs the executive board to take steps for a good representation of our South Illinois District Sunday-school Association at the first National Sunday-school Convention in 1916.

The evening session was opened with a devotional service led by Rev. P. Buchmueller, followed by the chairman of the South Illinois District Sunday-school Board who spoke on "The Sunday School Work in our South Illinois District, a Survey."

Pastor Theodore Mayer then gave an inspiring address on "Working together with God," 1 Cor. 3, 9, showing the beauty and glory of our work. With earnest words the high calling of the teacher, the great responsibility, but also the great reward of faithful work was presented. Pastor Mayer then publicly installed the officers.

A word of thanks to St. Paul's Church, Sunday-school teachers, pastor, choir and all who helped to make this convention so successful, and in spite of cold and rain without, so warm and enjoyable within, followed, and with the Lord's Prayer, reverently spoken by all, this First South Illinois District Sunday School Convention adjourned.

The following officers were elected: president: Rev. D. Buchmueller, Trenton, Ill.; vice-president: Rev. K. Friebe, Duquoin, Ill.; secretary: Mr. George Hohman, Nashville, Ill.; treasurer: Rev. J. F. Langhorst, O'Fallon, Ill. The Department Superintendents are: Elementary: Miss Hulda Elbring, Marine, Ill.; Secondary: Rev. O. W. Heggemeyer, Pickneyville, Ill.; Adult: Mr. O. Kramer, Alton, Ill.; Teacher Training: A. A. Sotier, Alton, Ill.; Home Department: Rev. H. H. Wintermeyer, Farina, Ill. D. B.

Loyalty to Christ

Concluded from Page 3

they out of sight forever? Oh, no; "be sure your sin will find you out." The word is not: "Be sure your sin will be found out"; it may not be found out in this world, but it will "find you out." It will plague you, spoil your happiness, make your life wretched. What shall we do about these wrong things we have done? A life of loyalty to Christ means a life that is white, clean thru and thru. None can build a beautiful, shining character on covered sins. Joy is part of a complete Christian life, and no one can be joyous with sins concealed in his heart.

St. Paul has a word about "bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ." We should test every feeling, every imagination, every disposition, all conduct, by this test—loyalty to Christ. Some one does you a wrong, and you feel like getting angry. Be loyal to Christ; keep your whole life, every day, every hour, under the sway of His Word.

Loyalty to Christ! There really is nothing else in religion; it is all in those three words. I will be faithful to Christ. I will be true to Christ. I will please Christ. I will be obedient to Christ. I will do His will. I will submit to His discipline. I will bear the cross He lays upon me.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

Missouri District

Continued from Page 6

spoke, as the pastor in charge remarked in his closing address, with the same enthusiasm and fervor he used to show in his younger days and was greatly appreciated by the audience. He was followed by Rev. J. J. Meyer, D. D., who briefly addressed the audience in English on Ps. 26, 6-8. The service was beautified by a solo, sung by Mrs. Lochmueller, and by a choice rendition of the church choir. During the service four members were received into membership. It was a remarkable and rare coincidence that on this occasion the Rev. Dr. Haeberle and Rev. Walz, his former scholar, officiated together.

The evening service which was also well attended was conducted by the Rev. W. Hackmann, the president of the Missouri District, who spoke in English on our educational institutions, followed by Rev. G. Bode who addressed the audience in German on our missionary work. The Rev. C. C. Stahmann, State Supt. of the Children's Home Society of Missouri, a neighbor of Rev. Walz, closed the impressive service with congratulations and well wishes for the future of Salem's Church and its pastor. Pastor F. Krafft led in prayer. Two excellent renditions of the choir of Emanuel's Church beautified this attractive service.

In this connection the noteworthy fact deserves mention that this congregation during the thirty years of its existence was in charge of only two pastors, the Rev. J. J. Fink who could not attend on account of illness (he has meanwhile departed this life on Dec. 11) and the present Pastor in charge, who has our hearty best wishes for further successful service in Salem. J. J. M.

The Immigrant Mission, Baltimore, Md.

Continued from Page 4

On October 16 we were compelled to lay a German seaman to rest in a strange land. Friedrich Grube, twenty-three years of age, succumbed to an operation at the hospital. He was a good, quiet young man who had mustered out a year ago and made an honest living while boarding with a German family. He was the only son of a widow who survives him in Bremen. His fellow-seamen honored him with a beautiful floral wreath and the German Society gave him a decent burial. The crew intends to erect a tombstone over his grave.

Let us pray for peace—and carry on the work of peace. O. Apitz, GES. Tr.

A COLLECTION OF FRESH, ORIGINAL MATERIAL

Illustrative Incidents for Public Speakers

By
Will H. Brown

326 Pages. Cloth $1.25

The author has gathered in this volume a rare collection of striking incidents: Stories of human interest that touch the heart; objects in nature that appeal to the mind; odd and strange happenings that impress by contrast; wit and humor that cheer and uplift. Each incident is aglow with life. Altogether it is a "feast of the unusual." Besides illustrations, the following additional helps for speakers are included: "The Public Speaker"—things to avoid and traits to acquire. "The Appeal Through the Eye"—illustrating by objects. "Better than a 'Scrap-book'"—preservation and classification of clippings. "Seed Thoughts"—true to the title. It is a book every public speaker will be eager to add to his library and one that everybody will read with keen interest.

THE WAY TO WIN

SUCCESSFUL METHODS IN THE LOCAL CHURCH

Fred B. Fischer

and Collaborators

Flexible Cloth

Net . . $0.50

Something different on church efficiency. A real contribution to the effectiveness of pastor and officary in local church work. It might be called the "How Book." No attempt is made to tell the Church how inefficient it is, nor to investigate the cause of its alleged failure, nor to suggest remedies. The book takes it for granted that churches want to succeed and tells the story of successful methods. It is the outgrowth of experience, full of human interest, and compelling.

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.,
202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CHANGED ADDRESSES

Rev. J. C. Bierbaum, Lexington, Mo.
Rev. E. Herrmann, Fergus Falls, Minn.
Rev. F. Leonhard, 1221 La Porte Ave., Fort Collins, Colo.
Rev. R. Niebuhr, 1761 Vinewood Ave., Detroit, Mich.
Rev. F. L. Rodenbeck, 106 W. 4th St., Fulton, Mo.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all.

Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., JANUARY 13th, 1916

NUMBER 2

The Ford Peace Party

Let us not judge Henry Ford and his fruitless efforts to "bring the boys out of the trenches by Christmas" too harshly. He has done in his own way what he thought the situation demanded and he was not afraid of the ridicule which the press and people heaped upon him for his "wild goose chase," tho neither the press nor the people who laughed at his efforts had the courage of conviction which he showed. We did not expect him to succeed, because it was clear to any one just a little familiar with the European conditions that brought on the war, that a conflict that had been brewing for ten years and affected the fate of more than 200,000,000 people, could hardly be expected to be settled by a peace party, the members of which had only vague ideas as to the cause and meaning of the war, and had, in addition, been hurriedly gathered in ten days, and who, when they sailed, had no idea whatever what the task they had undertaken would demand of them. But Mr. Ford deserves to be taken seriously in spite of the mistake he made. He stands for an idea that is worth while, and which will yet be realized. Mr. Ford embarked on his mission with the spirit of the inventor rather than that of the business man. The business man deals with known facts, the inventor experiments in order to discover unknown facts. And it is when we regard the Ford peace party in the light of an experiment that we shall be able to judge it most fairly. Nor do Mr. Ford's utterances after his return detract from the value of the experiment. No one who knows anything about Europe and pre-war conditions ever believed that the bankers and the munition-makers were responsible for the war. But the bankers and munition-makers took advantage of conditions that existed in order to enrich themselves, and the constant rivalry in "preparedness" among the European nations made war more certain every year. And if the United States should get caught in that current of "preparedness" it would only have the same experience.

And at least one additional reason why the experiment succeeded so poorly has come to light, a reason that appears in a still stronger light when it is considered in connection with two other incidents. On the occasion of the Woman's Peace Congress at the Hague last spring, a delegation of representative women including Miss Jane Addams, visited practically all the heads of the belligerent governments and also those of the most important neutral nations. They were cordially received everywhere and gathered a large amount of useful information. We did not agree with either the spirit or the action of the Congress, but we shall give the members all the credit they deserve. The essential things they learned were that the neutral nations of Europe were anxious to have some kind of efforts at official mediation inaugurated, which none of the belligerents could have regarded as an unfriendly act, if the Hague conventions were to be respected. They also learned that the United States, being the strongest neutral nation, was expected to take the lead, or at least to lend its powerful co-operation. Upon their return the good women called upon President Wilson and the Secretary of State, only to learn that the United States would not only not take the initiative, but would also decline to say the word that might set the mediation machinery in motion.

The war went on and with it the enormous shipments of munitions and war supplies. When the National Peace Congress met at San Francisco in October it sent Dr. David Starr Jordan to Washington as its representative to lay its mediation plan before the President. Dr. Jordan was obliged to wait two weeks before he could obtain an audience with the President. The result of the audience he finally secured has not yet been published. We may be quite sure that if the President had regarded the proposal, which was not at all impractical, favorably, at least the Democratic press would have seen to it that the country heard of it.

Then came Henry Ford. All that he desired of the President was that he should be permitted to say unofficially upon his arrival in Europe, that the United States Government would look with favor upon an attempt at mediation and would join hands with other neutral governments in bringing about peace in Europe. But his appeal was in vain. Mr. Ford was not deterred by this negative attitude nor by the adverse criticism of the New York newspapers, probably thinking that public sentiment would in time compel the administration to co-operate in case he should succeed in his efforts. There is no doubt that if the expedition had had even the tacit approval of the President, it would have been able to secure a number of strong representative American men who declined to take part under existing circumstances, and Mr. Ford and his party would certainly have been more welcome in Europe than was the case if it had been known that he had the unofficial support of the American government.

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

There is an idea abroad among people that they should make their neighbors good. One person I have to make good: myself. But my duty to my neighbor is much more nearly expressed by saying that I have to make him happy—if I may.

—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Does this attitude of the President mean that he does not desire to see peace established in Europe? We earnestly hope not. But people who learn of these things, and also know the vast profits the munition-manufacturers are making with their shipments to Europe, and the methods they are employing to induce the people of the United States to begin a campaign of "preparedness," which of course means that they will enjoy continued prosperity for many years to come, can hardly help having their suspicions. President Wilson can easily convince the people that he does desire peace in Europe. All he needs to do is to place an embargo on the shipments of munitions. We believe the war would be over in a month if he did it. Congress can do it, if the President does not.

How long will Congress Endure it?

Now that Congress is in session again after the holidays for the transaction of real Government business, we are wondering how long the representatives of the American people, too long denied their share of the government of this nation, will wait before making it clear to the administration and the British government that the United States is an independent nation and has long ceased to regard itself as an English dependency. By tacitly admitting that "Britannia rules the waves," and has a right to do so, the President has practically neutralized the Declaration of Independence, as far as our trade with other nations is concerned, and submitted to British dictation. Not only was American trade with Germany practically stopped, but Great Britain even claims the right to requisition without trial the cargo of neutral ships brought into port, while the "blockade" of Germany, which affects only American trade, while the Scandinavian countries ship undisturbed to German Baltic ports, has inflicted untold losses on American shipping. The British restriction on cable messages to America has caused great inconvenience and loss to normal American business, and has actually destroyed the trade of several American houses by diverting it to British firms, the seizure of American meat products in transit to points in the Netherlands, Scandinavia and elsewhere, on the mere assumption that possibly some of the cargo might reach an enemy country was practically an act of defiance, and now the "principle" that parcel post matter would be regarded as part of the cargo of a ship and is not entitled to the protection given to first class mail matter under the international convention, amounts to practical assertions of sovereignty over the United States on the part of England, which Congress, if it desires to retain its self-respect cannot patiently endure.

And signs are not wanting that Congress is waking up to its business. Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska is as determined as ever to push a bill for an embargo on arms, and in the House Representative Cary of Milwaukee, took time by the forelock by introducing, on the very first day of the present session, a resolution placing an embargo on all contraband and munitions of war, and "to end the war in thirty days." The past months have brought about some very definite changes in the situation, and the administration is not nearly as powerful in the new Congress as it was in the preceding one. The embargo problem is to be solved, as far as the House of Representatives is concerned, not by the committee on foreign affairs, but by the committee on interstate and foreign commerce. The chairman of this committee is Representative Adamson, of Georgia, who, like Senator Smith of that State, cannot be charged with partiality toward England. The cotton planters of the South think that the mere threat of an embargo on munitions will be an effective means to bring England to her senses, if she ever had any. For this reason the chances of the passage of the Cary resolution in the House seem to be fairly good, and the Senate may be more apt to accept Mr. Cary's resolution than risk the loss of some of the Southern States in the approaching presidential and Congressional election. If these political and commercial motives can be reinforced by the strong moral and religious sentiment of the country, which is strongly in favor of stopping the cruel trade which makes this country a silent partner in the war, and of making a heroic effort to stop the war by any means available, there seems to be strong probability of Congress passing the resolution. Our readers are urged to secure copies of the Cary resolution (House resolution No. 25, 1st session 64th Congress, Hon. Wm. J. Cary, M. C., Room 303 House Office Building, Washington, D. C.) and to write their Senators and Representatives emphatically requesting their support of the measure. For patriotic, religious and moral reasons the nation ought to be cleansed from the hideous stain which the bloody traffic has put upon it.

Many of our readers are telling us how they enjoy reading the paper. Most of the others enjoy it just as much without telling us about it. ALL have friends or neighbors who would enjoy it just as much as they do. Tell THEM how you enjoy the paper. SEND US THEIR NAMES AND ADDRESSES BY FEB. 1, 1916, and the publishers will send them three consecutive numbers. Many who are not readers will thus receive a copy. READ IT THRU AND GET THE HABIT. You can't invest a dollar to better advantage. Address all requests for sample copies, and all orders and remittances to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716-18 CHOUTEAU AVE., ST. LOUIS, MO.

To You and to your Children

"For to you is the promise, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call unto Him", Acts 2: 39.

Our Lord's promise to Peter, "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven," is one of the most misunderstood passages of the New Testament. The Roman Catholic Church has made it the scriptural basis for the absolute supremacy of the Roman See, not only over the entire Church of Christ, but also over the individual conscience. While the Protestant Church rightly opposes this interpretation, it is not at all unanimous as to the real meaning of the promise. There are, however, two outstanding events in Peter's work as an Apostle of Christ that seem to make the meaning quite clear. In the wonderful series of parables in Matth. 13 Christ has defined the character of the kingdom of heaven. It is the kingdom He had come to reveal, the rule of God in the hearts and over the lives of men, the society He was establishing, the Church and dispensation of which He is the Head and Chief. To Peter He gave the keys, or the power of opening the doors of this kingdom; and this office St. Peter duly executed. He opened the doors of the kingdom of heaven to the Jews on the day of Pentecost, and to the Gentiles by the conversion and baptism of Cornelius. That Peter himself recognized this fact, and was satisfied with it, seems evident from his speech to the brethren gathered at Jerusalem for the Apostolic council, "that a good while ago God made choice among you, that by my mouth the Gentiles should hear the word of the Gospel, and believe." Acts 15: 8.

The Child and the Kingdom

The passage quoted above from Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost supports such an interpretation of Peter's mission, altho he himself may not have understood its full meaning at the time. Not only do these words of his unlock the door of the kingdom of heaven, they throw it open so wide that neither sex, age or nationality can ever bar anyone from entering. When we take into consideration the known practice of the Jews, who circumcised their own children on the eighth day, and remember that St. Peter was speaking to Jews of the dispersion, who were accustomed to circumcise and baptize children as well as adults in their missionary work among the heathen, Peter's words seem very clearly to justify the practice of infant baptism. Those who heard him can hardly have understood them to mean anything else than that as Christians they would continue to act as they had already done as Jews, and baptize persons of every age and condition on their admission to the Christian fold.

Since the new life on which the salvation of the sinner depends is a gracious gift of God, the Evangelical Church regards infant baptism not only as a privilege but as a duty. The new life is not given as a consequence of faith or a sanctified life; its planting is rather a direct act of God's saving grace, and conscious spiritual life is attained only after God has planted the beginning of the new life into the heart. That children baptized in infancy know nothing of the gift they receive does not prevent their benefitting from it, just as an infant may possess and benefit by material wealth of which he is in no way conscious. The soul of the child is as closely related to the divine life as that of the adult—if there is a difference between them, it is rather in favor of the innocent child,—so why should not the new life from God find a place in it just as well? If Jesus had not considered children capable of receiving the benefits of His kingdom, in spite of their immaturity, He would hardly have said what He did say, Mark 10: 13-16. In view of all this we may safely say that, not only has no one the right to forbid parents and the Church from putting the little children under the living and saving influence of the new life from above, but that it is the bounden duty of those who desire that their children should partake of all the blessings Christ can give that they should place them under the divine influence as early as possible.

And the young child needs the new life just as much as any adult, for it is in the same sinful condition, Gen. 8: 21; John 3: 5, 6. Without the privilege of Holy Baptism, children would therefore be actually excluded from salvation and the kingdom of heaven. And tho an infant can not believe in the sense in which an adult can, yet the beginning of faith is not beyond its ability, just as the beginning of will power and of sin is not. Just as the beginnings of physical and intellectual life are actually present in childhood, and are reckoned with by those who deal with children, the beginnings of spiritual life may also be present, and this possibility deserves to be reckoned with and appreciated by parents and teachers.

The Old Testament and the Early Church

The Old Testament type of Baptism is circumcision, which was the sign of the covenant between God and Abraham, Gen. 17: 9, etc., and which was to be performed on the eighth day of the child's life. In Baptism God gives what was there foreshadowed, the beginning of a new life, by admission into the new covenant. If young children could receive the blessings of the old covenant, why should they be forbidden to enter into the new? It should also be borne in mind that adult years are no guarantee of worthiness, since the danger of baptizing an unworthy person who may later revert to a sinful life is by no means excluded.

The Baptist and Mennonite contention that the Early Church baptized no infants is answered by Irenaeus (+202), who writes: "Jesus Christ came to save all men; all, I say, who thru Him are born again in God, infants, children young men and women and adults," and by Origen (+254): "The Church has received the custom of baptizing infants from the Apostles." In the Great Commission Baptism is extremely mentioned as the first of the two things necessary to make disciples of all the nations, i. e., 1. Baptizing, and 2. teaching.

The Early Church was almost wholly a missionary Church, and the persons baptized were very naturally mostly adults. A number of instances also show that the Apostles did not attach the importance to a full and definite knowledge of salvation before baptism which is often claimed. Neither the 3,000 in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, the Ethiopian eunuch, the heathen baptized in the home of Cornelius, nor the jailer at Philippi and his family seem to have had very careful preparation for baptism. It is probable also that in these cases, except that of the Ethiopian, children were baptized with the adults.

Naturally infant baptism makes the Christian training of children imperative. Where it is evident that a Christian training is not possible, infant baptism should not be performed. In the early days of the Church, when Christians were persecuted for their faith, many of them, expecting a martyr's death, requested relatives or intimate friends to see to it that their children received Christian instruction and training in that event. Thus the custom arose of selecting sponsors, or godfathers and godmothers, for young children who were baptized, and it has continued to the present day as a natural corollary of infant baptism. It should be self-evident that only such persons should be chosen for this sacred responsibility who realize the obligations assumed and are willing and able to carry them out.

It is the duty of the sponsors 1. To be witnesses of the child's baptism who can testify that the child has been baptized and has been received into the Church and the covenant of God's grace. 2. To aid and counsel the parents in the Christian training of the child, and to care for it in the event of the parents' death. 3. To make the child's spiritual and eternal welfare an object of constant faithful prayer.

It is of course self-evident that the duty of religious training and education of children rests primarily upon the parents, and the custom of permitting the sponsors to represent the absent parents at the baptism of their children should be insistently discouraged.

Her Special Messenger

BY ISABEL GRAHAM BUSH

II

Mrs. Thurlow leaned over and left a kiss upon the pale cheek. "Why, Cynthia Burch, I won't hear to such a thing! I guess the Lord isn't going to lay it up against me if I stay at home with you to-day. It isn't as tho you could drop in 'most any time."

Grandmother Burch smiled contentedly. "I call that a real compliment, Mary. I didn't know as you'd let anything or anybody keep you away unless it was downright sickness. It was such a disappointment when it came into my mind what day it was, I'd counted so on having a real good visit with you—"

"And you're going to," interrupted her hostess briskly. "I don't see anything to hinder. Now you just set back and rest a spell while I run into the kitchen and see to that boiling piece——"

"Don't you go to fussing for me!" Grandmother Burch rose suddenly. "Where's my basket? Rebecca sent you some of her fresh baking."

Mrs. Thurlow looked on in amazement as the cover was lifted revealing a pie—a custard, large, and deep, and delicately browned, a spicy cake, a tin of rolls, still warm from the oven, and a chicken ready for broiling.

"The butter is in that pail along with the can of milk," said her friend.

A rainbow mist danced before Mrs. Thurlow's eyes as she lifted off the small kettle. The last remnant of uncertainty as to what was duty had vanished before this unmistakable proof of the Almighty's favor. He had been better to her than her fears.

"I've been wondering how you were getting along, Mary," said Grandmother Burch as Mrs. Thurlow was again seated with her sewing.

"Well, you'd be surprised how comfortable I keep," was the reply. "Now and then somebody brings in some work. This piece is for Polly Gay's dress," holding up a lace-trimmed ruffle. "My pension money pays my taxes and coal bill, and leaves something to put away for a rainy day. And then it's wonderful how folks remember me every little while, just as you and Rebecca did to-day. It keeps me busy sometimes, counting up the blessings."

"Well, I'm glad of it!" declared Grandmother Burch heartily. "When I think of the Missionary Society, and the Woman's Aid, and all the church doings where you've been right in the thick of the work, it would be a shame if folks forgot. I guess there isn't a sociable or a quiltin' bee, yet, that you don't do as much as two or three of the other women."

"No," confessed Mrs. Thurlow modestly, "I wasn't at the last quiltin'. If you'll remember, it rained something dreadful, and the rheumatism came on in my ankles. I'm just as willing to work as ever I was, but I can't be depended on any more," and a sigh of regret escaped from her lips. The church was as the apple of her eye. Not because of its beauty, for it was plain and unadorned as to exterior, but Mrs. Thurlow never lost sight of the truth that the visible church was only a symbol of what she should see some day when the veil of earth had been lifted from her eyes.

The thought had grown with the years, and because of it she had zealously headed the band of women who had worked and planned for its interior adornment. For the same reason she never lost interest in the missionary cause—home or foreign. There were other symbols to be raised—in China, India, and Japan. If she could have had her way, they would be planted on every peak of those far-away lands. Because of this zeal, the growth of the rainy-day fund was almost imperceptible; it was plainly destined to remain a dwarf.

The members of the Missionary Society wondered at her absence, but that day will always stand apart from the others on Mrs. Thurlow's calendar, white and radiant like a star. The moments grew precious. The dinner dishes were set aside unwashed, and yet the sun slipped to the edge of the western horizon before the friends felt that their visit was half over.

"You mustn't wait so long again," reminded Mrs. Thurlow as she tucked the robe snugly around her guest.

"I guess I won't," smiled Grandmother Burch. "Seems to me I never visited so hard in my life. I've had a splendid time, Mary."

Mrs. Thurlow turned slowly back to the house, the brightness of her friend's parting smile reflected in her face.

Somehow, the days which followed until the next Monday morning were a blur when she tried to think of them afterward. She was hanging out the clothes, Mrs. Dale keeping up a brisk patter of talk from her back porch.

"It's as fine drying weather as I ever saw," she was saying, then her tone suddenly canged. "There's some one coming up your front walk, Mrs. Thurlow, and it looks like—" peering around a post—"Yes, it's Joe Burch."

Mrs. Thurlow hastily set down her clothes-pin basket. "I wouldn't wonder if he'd come for me to go back with him and spend the day—Cynthia said she was going to send for me soon—and here I was just planning to begin ironing. Those clothes'll be ready in half an hour," and with these words she went around to the front of the house.

"Good morning, Joe, I wasn't looking for you on wash day, but my clothes are on the line and I can be ready in ten minutes. Cynthia told me not to fuss any."

The man looked at her dully, uncomprehending at first, but the name was like the turning on of an electric current. "She's—she's gone!" he stammered with difficulty.

Mrs. Thurlow only stared, speechless, her face whitening, and Joe found his voice again. "Grandmother's gone home. She went this morning at half-past two; it was dreadful sudden. She gave this to Rebecca to hand to you," laying a bulky envelope in Mrs. Thurlow's lap, "and she said to tell you it was for missions. Grandmother said she'd been saving it for a bay window in the sitting room, but you was so anxious about raising money for missions she thought we might do without the window and let the Society have it. She was going to give it to you when you come out, but last night she made us promise to bring it around first thing this morning," Joe rose, his lips were quivering.

For a long time Mrs. Thurlow sat very still staring at the bills in her hand. One hundred dollars! Just the amount she had been asking the Lord to send her. Then she glanced across at the chair where her friend had sat only a few days before looking at her with those gentle eyes.

Suddenly she felt the roll of bills in her tightened grasp, and it brought her back to earthly needs. There was so much to be done yet, but suppose, suppose—The long rays of sunlight flooding the pink geranium grew longer and more luminous. It touched the bright cushion of the vacant chair with a tender radiance and Mrs. Thurlow's head bowed humbly.

"May God forgive me," she whispered, "that I did not know He was sending me a special messenger that day."

The Magic Touch

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D. D.

Who does not remember the fascinating fairy who filled our childhood with wonders, and whose magic wand used to change worn-out shoes into silver slippers, and tattered, ragged garments into gardens full of bright and perfumed flowers? How we followed the gracious fairy in her transforming ways!

But fairyland is gone, and fairy wonder is dead. Our years have passed, and life has become sombre with care, dashed with sorrow, grey with disappointment, and withered and blighted by sin and shame. If only something analogous to the romance of childhood could steal back into the sombre years of manhood! If only out of the unseen spaces some mystic spirit would appear who could transform dulled and blighted character and so transform dull and blighted circumstances, how busy he would be! Well, here is an announcement of His coming, and this is what He claims to do! "To give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." It sounds like the evangel of some gracious magician. It will be well worth while to consider His ways.

"Beauty for ashes," and the beauty here suggested is the coronet or diadem of a bride. Some humiliated, sinful soul, soiled with self-abuse, worn and torn, wearied and ashamed, is flinging the ashes of her penitence toward heaven, and letting them fall upon her head. Those ashes are the emblems of a burnt-out and wasted day, and she is flinging them toward the heavens in open confession of her shame, if, perchance, the dead embers might be made to glow again. And what does the gentle Lord offer this depressed and tainted soul? He offers here the coronet of a bride. He will make the dejected exile the wife of the Lamb. The poor, wearied drudge of sin is to be honored by becoming the consort of the Holy God.

What, then, is there in the figure? There is the wonderful love and devotion of the eternal, loving God. God loves the most wretched, dejected, sin-blinded soul on earth, and He would encircle that soul with the diadem of the bride! If that be true, the love of God is the biggest thing we can think about, and the most wonderful theme in human speech. If we only realize that love on the authority of His Word, life will be illumined and glorified with a far more wonderful light than that which fills the soul

Continued on Page 8

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

A Stitch and a Life

One stitch dropped as the weaver drove

His nimble shuttle to and fro,

In and out, beneath, above,

Till the pattern seemed to bud and grow

As if the fairies had helping been;

And the one stitch dropped pulled the next stitch out,

And a weak place grew in the fabric stout,

And the perfect pattern was marred for aye

By the one small stitch that was dropped that day.

One small life in God's great plan—

How futile it seems as the ages roll,

Do what it may or strive how it can

To alter the sweep of the infinite whole!

A single stitch in the endless web,

A drop in the ocean's flow and ebb;

But the pattern is rent where the stitch is lost,

Or marred where the tangled threads have crossed;

And each life that fails of true intent

Mars the perfect plan that its Master meant.

Susan Coolidge.

The Church's Unpaid Debt

BY A COUNTRY GENTLEMAN

"Our church paid $300 interest on that $500 debt before we paid it," said Deacon Dunn to his devout wife, "now our church is free from debt for the first time in many years."

"You have evidently forgotten a part of our last annual statement," said his wife.

"Did that say we were back on the salary?"

"No," said Mrs. Dunn.

"Did it say we owed the sexton, or the organist, or the coal dealer?"

"No," said Mrs. Dunn once more, "but still it said we owed a debt."

"What debt?" asked the deacon.

"Here is the statement, you can read it," said the deacon's wife, who had quickly gone to the family Bible and taken out the last annual statement of their church.

Mr. Dunn read, "All financial obligations have been met except our apportionment for extending God's Kingdom. This lacked $100."

"Well," said the deacon, "I don't call that a debt."

"But I do and so does our minister, for he wrote it and you see he calls it a financial obligation," answered his wife. "It is just the kind of debt that Paul owed when he said, 'I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians; both to the wise and to the unwise.' I can't forget our pastor's sermon on that text. You remember he said something like this:

"Paul lived at a time when three civilizations met—Roman, Greek and Jewish. Rome, after breaking down the barriers of national pride and prejudice, made it possible for people to travel everywhere. The Greek language, rich, I think he said, and able to convey spiritual truths, was spoken in nearly all places. The Jewish religion was the purest and best known. God wanted a man who knew this religion so that he could see how the Old Testament promises were fulfilled in Christ, and who could speak Greek, so that he could speak to nearly all the people, and who was a Roman citizen, so that he could travel unmolested. God called Paul, who was thus equipped, to improve this opportunity of spreading God's kingdom. Paul spent his life in answering that call.

"Then our minister said, 'God is calling us to as great a work. Will we answer?'"

"China is crying for Western learning and it will become godless unless with it goes the Bible; Africa is calling, coaxing for the Gospel. The missionaries of another faith are trying to convert the Africans of Central Africa to their religion—Mohammedanism, I think he said. Persia, Korea, Japan and South America all need four times as many missionaries as they now have. The young men want to go but we won't furnish the money.

"Then I remember his very words; he said, 'God is calling us to give our means.' I suppose he thought about this when he wrote that statement. I think he is right when he calls what we lacked on our missionary apportionment a debt. Certainly if Paul owed those Greeks and Barbarians we owe those poor heathen. If I had been a deacon, I would have proposed taking that $90 balance in our incidental treasury to meet the $100 we lacked for missions, and then I would have said, my farm is mortgaged for half its value, but I will give the other $10."

"But the other church officers would not have agreed to do so," said Deacon Dunn, "for they want a good balance in the treasury."

"I would have then quoted that text in Matthew, 'Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.' There is a big difference between that and our minister's statement, 'All financial obligations have been met except our apportionment for extending God's kingdom,'" replied Mrs. Dunn.

"O, you are a missionary enthusiast and would give away all you had," said the deacon.

"Now, John," said the noble woman, "you say the same thing about our minister, but you know God has blessed our church since his coming. We were still paying interest on that $500 debt, and the walls in the church were falling down when he came. Now the debt is paid, the interior renovated and we have received, so our pastor says, as much in special gifts this year as we raised for congregational expenses three years ago. Still we will raise more for congregational purposes and missions than ever before in the history of the church. Our minister says, 'The Church's first business is missions.' Too many ministers forget this, hence church debts and quarrels. He tries to keep us busy working for missions and we need all our thought and strength for this work. This year I understand every member will be asked to bring a special Lenten gift for foreign missions."

"Well," said Deacon Dunn, "I hope the people will give so much that our apportionment will be met, so won't have an unpaid debt this year."

Personal Service

In all the plans for the uplift of mankind, it is essential that we have an adequate conception of the influence of personality. We have heard again and again that it is the personal touch that counts. The contact of individual with individual can not but be productive of certain intellectual, moral and spiritual results. This fact is receiving strong emphasis from present day leaders in the work of social betterment. It is at the basis of the "settlement" idea. Up-to-date charitable associations recognize the futility and the danger of merely doling out money and supplies to the poor. They are insisting on personal service with a view to the moral reconstruction of the unfortunate. Scientific charity seeks to help the poor to help themselves. And it does this by bringing into action the most wholesome personal influences.

The same principle must be faithfully applied in the work of the Church. Mass movements are often very effective. The crowd can do some things that are abundantly worth while. But on the human side, the supreme need of the Church to-day is the consecrated individual who daily commends, by word and by life, the Gospel of Christ to other individuals. From the beginning Christianity has been winning its way principally thru the method of personal service. Andrew brings Simon Peter to the Saviour. Philip comes to know Christ and hurries away to tell Nathaniel the good news. Thus on thru the ages the testimony concerning the Saviour has been conveyed from person to person. And the work will go on until some day the last unenlightened man on earth will have heard the story of the love of God in Jesus Christ.

There is ample room for the development of the spirit of personal service in the modern church. The lack of it is painfully apparent. We need a great revival of personal devotion to the spiritual welfare of others. That is beautiful testimony which a Glasgow blacksmith gave concerning the saintly Dr. Norman McLeod; "He never came into my shop without talking to me as if he had been a blacksmith all his life; but he never went away without leaving Christ in my heart."

The ability to do effective personal service will not be required unless we are willing to pay the price. The martyr spirit, yea, the spirit of the cross is necessary. It will mean a real giving of life. Dr. Jowett says, "Tearless hearts can never be the heralds of the Passion. We must pity if we would redeem. We must bleed if we would be the ministers of the saving blood."—The United Presbyterian.

Denominational

The Evangelical Colony, Billings, Mont.

A promise once given should be kept, that is right and proper. Some time ago I promised to report on the work and progress of our colonies, and this promise I herewith wish to fulfill.

Our colony has now passed the experimental and entered upon the business stage. All beginnings are difficult, and beginnings on the field of colonization must not only be judged offhand but be tried out. In judging or predicting much depends upon the character and temperament of the prophet, but the trying out shows the true status by actual results.

Is the Evangelical colony in Billings good?—Is it possible for an industrious person with the help of God to make a living there? had been the question of many only a year ago, and being unversed in these matters, many of them asked these questions in a doubtful frame of mind. The company which owns the land has asked these same questions of our colonists after they had resided here for some time, but there was no longer any doubt as to the answer. I will only repeat what one of my people has replied to the inquiry:

German Colony on Billings Bench, July 9, 1915.
Montana Ranches Co.,
Billings, Mont.
Gentlemen:

You inquire what success I have had since I came here and whether I am satisfied with the result. I wish to reply as follows:

I came here during June, 1914, and, with two mules and a large horse I cleared about twenty-five acres of my land and that of my brother-in-law and planted them with winter wheat. In addition I and another colonist rented eighty acres of alfalfa from the company, irrigated the land, cut the hay. This gave me enough fodder. From another colonist I leased another forty acres which had been tilled with the steam plow, and planted that also. This spring I cleared thirty-five acres more on my own land and planted thirty-three acres of spring wheat, five acres barley and five acres oats. On the side I managed to earn $227 on the irrigation canal and otherwise, with the help of my team, so that I could cover my running expenses. My wheat and other grain is doing well; I expect at least thirty bushels to the acre, which would net me at least $2,500 if prices remain as they now are. I am therefore well satisfied. I hardly think I could have found another location where I could have done as well. I sincerely hope that many more good, industrious, German farmers may locate here and join our ranks.

Very respectfully,
B. H. Buehler.

According to this letter matters are not so bad out here. True, the hopes expressed by the writer were not fulfilled to the letter. The harvest was curtailed somewhat owing to hail, which the Lord sent, no doubt, to remind us that we as Evangelical Christians should always remember that His blessings are to be valued more than all else, and that we should not value the gifts more than the Giver. Altho the land which has been planted in alfalfa and is now being sold to colonists, and was fortunate enough to escape the hail, brought from forty to forty-five bushels to the acre, we cannot complain of our harvest, despite the hail. Mr. B. H. Buehler who wrote the above letter, was enabled to thrash 1,860 bushels of wheat and some barley and oats at his first year's crop. Mr. Volz' winter wheat brought him twenty-five bushels to the acre. Mr. Maas, who had planted a single row of potatoes, about fifty rods in length, received 60c per bushel for them, realizing $18.00, and altho the year was rather unfavorable for corn, he managed to raise a very good article. Nor have our other colonists any cause for complaint. Our land is good and very fertile, our irrigation system has proved itself efficient and provided us with plenty of water, and we are therefore able to say: Conditions out here have been proven and found very good.

To-day things look quite different in this quarter of the globe than they did when I first came here. With the exception of a single farm, the eye at that time saw only a vast expanse of sage brush. Now from the balcony of my house I see only fertile fields,

Concluded on Page 6

Dim in the Future, White unto the Harvest Whether Measured by Need, Numbers or Extent of Territory the Country Church is of Strategic Importance. The Peculiar Difficulties are but an additional Challenge to the Man with a Heart and a Vision

The report of the proceedings of the recent meeting of the Federal Council Commission on the Church and Country Life makes it clear that the key to the situation in the rural church is in the hands of the rural pastor. What is needed above all else—next to the power of the Holy Spirit and the Word of God—is the intelligent and consecrated leadership of pastors who have seen the vision of the country church's vast and unlimited opportunities. Just what this means is effectively set forth in the following article reprinted from Rural Manhood (County Work of the Y. M. C. A.). As champion of rural interests, a virile country minister, aggressive member of the Legislature of Vermont and member of the State Board of Education, the author, Arthur W. Hewitt, challenges attention to the message of this article concerning the kingdom of God in our American rural civilization. The Legislative Directory of Vermont makes this biographical note: "Arthur Wentworth Hewitt, Democrat, of Plainfield, was born in West Berlin, Vt., June 22, 1883, and located in town 1908; occupation, clergyman; was educated in the public schools, Northfield High School and graduated from Montpelier Seminary in 1904; was a member of the House in 1912; was superintendent of schools in the town of Glover in 1905 and 1906 and in the town of Plainfield in 1910 and 1911; for the past two years has been chairman of the trustees of Plainfield Public Library and town auditor; religious preference, Methodist Episcopal; Post Office address, Plainfield, Vt."—The Editor.

A Misapprehension

At one of our legislative reunions this yarn was told: "After a night of deep drinking, Tam O'Shanter came home just as the plumber went to work at morning on the street drain sewer, the cover of which he was taking off by a screw-driver which he turned around and around in a bit-stock. Tam staggered back, looked at the workman and said, 'So! You're the son of a gun that's turning this street around, are you?' Tam misapprehended. So do all they who say when a country pastor goes to the city, 'He has gone to a larger field of work.' Against that heresy I declare war to the death.

I admit that a man might find it possible to indulge laziness in the country pastorate more than in the city. Why? The reason only makes the rural job loom the larger. Because the organization of a city church compels a pace which that of the rural does not; which means, that in the rural church the pastor carries all organization on his own shoulders as Atlas upholds the Heavens. The "shepherd of the hills" may shirk undetected more than he of the city; but this thing is true as the Cross: If a man is disposed to heave all his strength into his job he cannot find a church in any city under the stars that will more exhaust his powers than the average country church. It is a sufficient field for the labors of any preacher; and I am not speaking of the merely brilliant, well educated preacher; I am speaking of the men who loom like St. Columba and Phillips Brooks.

I do not care "with what measure ye mete" the opportunity of the rural church. Shall it be by the sin amid which sea it is a lighthouse? Yes. We talk of the vice of the cities, but I can trump any city tale of sin I ever heard with one from rural glen and village. These will be taken from the storehouses of Sabbath-breaking, theft, drunkenness, intrigue, rape, murder, suicide, incest. If I am not more specific just now, it is no lack of ability; it is rather the fear that this magazine might not care to print what I should say. Otherwise these pages would be vivid with violence, they would reek with venereal evil, they would be dark as doom with the blind apathy of those who do not care that "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by."

The Size of the Field

But the measure of a preacher's field is the number of his people, you say? "Exactly so," say I. Try that measure here. Of course it is easy to see that a church of seven hundred members in the city is larger than a church of seventy in the country; but when you are talking about those members are you talking about your field or your reapers? Well, call it the former, take every advantage, then compare. If it is the duty of the preacher to be an evangelist to every person who must take religious privileges in his church or nowhere, I believe the average rural church has a larger field in actual numbers of people than has the average city church. I know this to be true of such particular churches as I have compared. I am in a small village, the center of a large farming community, an average rural parish. Those to whom my church or none must minister out-number by more than two hundred the natural constituents of the thriving church of our denomination in our capital city. The fact that a large percentage of these lambs never bleat toward the fold, never give us their fleece, only makes our task the greater; while my city brother can go from house to adjacent house, my people are scattered along so many miles of road that by actual measure I travel 250 miles in once visiting every house.

In the village where I preach there are three doctors. None of them go so far in any direction as my pastoral work requires me to go. All three are so busy seven days in the week that it is rare, even for the two who are prominent members of my church, to attend divine service. And what are these three men doing? Visiting the sick—the sick only. Yet it is required of me to visit not the sick only, but all the well; not when told I am needed, but at just that moment which is most opportune if I am wise enough to find it.

I do not believe in Heaven any more than I believe that by far the greater part of the people in the rural sections of my own state never once in a year attend church service, never once are visited by any pastor. They are in the great outlying country between parish and parish and the only person related to the Church who cares a hoot about them is Jesus Christ. Ministers do not define and possess these great neglected borders which girdle their charges as Saturn is encircled by his rings. Are we short of candidates for the ministry? Why? The magnificent boys born to be the Beechers and Simpsons of their day are out there in the God-forsaken borders, and will remain unconverted until they die, because rural pastors have not the vision to know, or sometimes, the heart to care.

Mistaken Attitude of the Church

What meantime are the rural pastors doing? Ask of your own observation, hear it from mine, read it in the investigations of Gill and Pinchot, the rural pastors are looking to be promoted to better charges. Why does it not occur to them to be the pioneer and the hero, not asking for better charges which already are made, but despising the world, the flesh and the district superintendent, to make better charges out of the heaving, vital elements that throng their feet, forgotten? It little matters to the world what men move on, but it is altogether strategic what rural communities are redeemed. No man will redeem that which he does not love, and no man loves that which he is watching the first chance to forsake. If these shepherds do not ask for pastures where there is more echo (fame) or green grass (greenbacks) or gold dandelions (dollars) they still cherish the delusion of "greater fields" more fit for their ambition. Charles Kingsley was not too great for rural Eversley, John Fletcher was not too great for wretched Madelay, John Frederick Oberlin was not too great to give his life to the poverty-stricken Steinthal, but these novices are too big for fields that stretch beyond the dim horizons.

Shall we blame them bitterly? Never. These boys but believe a heresy the whole world has made, viz: that success in the Church means leaving the rural pulpit. This belief has the iron force of foreordination. Who stands against it must have supreme courage, and such a consciousness of his own kingliness that when his inferiors patronize him from what they believe to be their loftier stations he will not mind. His very dearest will not understand his ideals if he devotes his life to the country church. One city pastor and I are like David and Jonathan. I have shown him, in my church, congregations larger than his own; I have shown him that the flock to which I (or none) am shepherd outnumbers his; I have taken him by auto (a borrowed one) past every house in my parish and shown him that if it were possible for me to visit every family four times a year I should walk by actual measure from Boston to Chicago; and after it all, because I am in a country village and he is educated to the prevailing opinion, he could write, "I suppose Arthur is very tired from legislature, but he will get rested soon, for there is not much to do in his church."

In perhaps the largest congregation of the Vermont annual conference I set forth the ideal of rural victory thru a pastoral devotion to the country church. By absolute records and figures I showed that we had no larger field of work, none that touched more people. The very next morning a prominent layman who was present said to me, "I understand the Governor is going to appoint you to the State Board of Education, and if he does I suppose you won't move, because you wouldn't have time for it in a larger place."

The very rulers of the synagogue are as much overridden by the fatal heresy as anyone. A district superintendent looked me in the eye and suggested that I might not have physical strength to endure the Sunday work of a city church. At that time my own Sunday work was to preach in morning service; to teach in Sabbath-school; to drive eight miles over the ragged, gullied hills, and after preaching and sometimes teaching a class, to return to the village, attend Epworth League service, and preach in the service which followed. How in blue Heaven could a man do more? (Now I come to think of it, I might have managed a funeral at eight in the morning.)

Some of the Difficulties

I have suggested the greatness of the rural work without giving light on the intrinsic difficulty of it. I have thrown the shadow of its sheer bulk. The rest you must imagine—the difficulty of rural organization, the overcoming of distance, the winning of confidence lost long ago. For the rural church has been so long the infirmity of superannuates and the nursery of greenhorns, that its courage is gone. As soon as a man develops ability he leaves the rural church; the greatly gifted refuse to consecrate their lives to her; she is despised and rejected of men, and while this is true she is foreordained to failure.

Seven years ago I came to the country church of which I am pastor. The church building was ruinous, but the society was so discouraged that it almost refused to let me try to raise $200 on conditional pledges. It was almost impossible to pay the salary. It was never paid on time, and there was a large deficit every year which was paid by taxing the stewards. The church membership was 127. In the seven years thirty-eight per cent of that membership has been lost by death and removal, but in spite of it we have made a net gain of seventeen per cent. The budget of expenses has increased thirty-three per cent, every bill is paid the day it is due, and the year just closed left a balance of $130 on hand. Benevolences have increased fifty per cent. The ruinous church property for which the stewards were afraid to try to raise $200 conditionally, has been repaired without debt at a cost averaging $918 a year for four years in succession. With no special services and in spite of special hindrances, there were thirty-five baptisms last year. Meantime we organized a church membership in an adjacent community and made for it a church building.

The point is this: The average pastorate in the church I serve has been two and one-half years. The church had been fooled so many times that it had made a rule never to keep a pastor more than three years. We are now on the way to success, but tho I worked my fingers to the bone, the church seemed to be steadily on the down grade in every way until after I had stayed out that traditional time limit. Then success began.

There is nothing in Church or State that so needs a definite, constructive policy, long years continued under one management in one place, as the rural church. That man will be of little use to the country church who hopes to rise thru it to something else.

But let us suppose. Into some country pulpit which had been the immemorial stage of failure and experiment in preaching, comes a man of power and eloquence. Into this great unorganized country comes a man of statesmanship. Boys have been too timid, old men too weak, and others too ungifted to command this magnificent field, but this man is imperial, and he has come to stay. I am not talking of the ninny who stays in the country because he must. I mean the man who might have been bishop. For into this country that lesser men have despised and forsaken comes a great man who loves it. Have you got that supposed?

What then? Is not his triumph foreordained as the sunrise? The waves will not rise to-morrow on

Concluded on Page 8

DON'T BLAME THE TEACHER

BY HILDA RICHMOND

In too many Public Schools "Fads" are crowding out Reading, Writing, Spelling and Arithmetic. Intelligent Public Opinion must demand a Simplified School System

While pitching into the existing order of things in the school world that is responsible for all the much-trained, half-trained boys and girls, it is well to keep in mind that the teachers are not to blame for the trouble. To hear some people talk one might suppose they were shirking their duties, when in reality they never were so hard worked. Pity, if you will, the youngsters sagging along under the weight of books to be studied at night, but spare a little pity for the teachers too. There never was a time when it was so hard to teach school—and school teaching was never play—as it is now. The men and women who are doing the real school work would gladly rid themselves of the extra burdens imposed upon them, but it is out of the question. Boards of education and educational theorists keep adding to their duties and responsibilities.

The other day a small boy in the third grade came proudly home with a pumpkin constructed out of yellow paper. "We only had a little number work today, and spent the rest of the time on our pumpkins," he announced. His mother, certain that he must be mistaken, made inquiry and found he had told the truth; the pumpkin had to be made that day, but the arithmetic could be put off. The poor teacher said with tears in her eyes that she did not see how she could possibly get the youngsters thru the prescribed course of study and still have time for the extra work, save by giving night work for the children to bring in next morning. The same small boy exhibited a dirty piece of paper that seemed to be half a mussy brown and half a mussy gray with some darker brown blotches, and was shocked that his mother did not recognize it at a glance. "It's 'An October Day,'" he said in disgust. "We made it at school."

What makes the Teacher Nervous

A physician to whom a teacher applied for something to quiet her nerves and make her sleep, made fun good-naturedly of the modern woman and said she could not stand the things her grandmother went thru as serenely as a June morning. "You come down to my school to-morrow," she said quietly, and having a leisure hour he dropped in to see if things had changed so wonderfully since he was a youngster. He was amazed to find the boys and girls, mere babies in the second grade, busy with a set of doll furniture made out of cardboard. The long-suffering teacher had made manifold copies of the work to be traced out and cut on cardboard by the children and shaped into sofas, chairs, beds and other articles of furniture. The doctor stayed half an hour watching the nervous woman make her way from desk to desk, helping the little fingers and doing a good part of the work herself, for there was to be an exhibit in a month or two, and the school authorities were desirous of making a good display of work done in the primary department. The doctor finally inquired when they had their other studies, and was informed that they must all be crowded in somehow, but that most of the little ones were very deficient in reading and spelling for lack of time to recite. He no longer wondered why the teacher wanted something to make her sleep.

A certain course of study is laid down, and the teachers are expected to make nearly every child "pass" at the end of the term in every branch. To have a large number of failures argues that the worker is a failure herself; so in season and out of season the youngsters are prodded along. An indignant mother who called to remonstrate with the teacher for giving her delicate daughter a long list of problems to bring in worked the next morning, was shown the book neatly laid off in sections—so many problems to each month and so much time to do them in, all in precise, mathematical order. If a child missed a day or two, the whole accumulation must be worked off somehow, regardless of time, health or anything else. The teacher would gladly have cut down the work if she had dared, but hers was not to reason why, and so the children suffered as well as she herself. If the so-called "fads" had been cut out of the course of study there would have been ample time for arithmetic, but drawing and paper-cutting and mud-mixing must be done under the eye of the teacher, while such trivial things as spelling and problems may be worked out at home with the help of the parents. So, while the mothers are imploring teachers to remember that Johnny and Susie are nervous and delicate, and must have their work made just as nearly like play as possible, the requirements of the course of study are spurring them to renewed efforts to get the children into the next grade.

The System at Fault

To keep pace with the times the teacher must know a smattering of many things, for it would never do to be behind the schools in the neighboring places. There are weary hours of grading papers, marking deportment and putting with "materials" for fancy work. With entertainments to absorb the attention of the youngsters, parents to pity them because they must work so hard, rules forbidding them to be punished in the school-room, holidays to permit the teachers to study "methods" in other cities, and everything else that breaks in on the school day, the wonder is that the teachers accomplish what they do. To be sure, business men growl about graduates of the high school who can neither read, write nor spell correctly, but the teachers are not to blame.

The grade books and special lessons are beginning to invade the country schools, thus cutting off hope of proficiency for the youngsters in the rural districts. It has always been a mystery to certain educators why the country school with its multiplicity of classes, its lack of equipment, its crude methods, the absence of libraries and all its other disadvantages, could send out such bright scholars. They can not understand why the country boy comes in to high school or goes off to college to gather in the honors, when the country school is hardly to be classed as a school at all. Well, the mystery is not so great to those familiar with the workings of the little red schoolhouse. The boys and girls attended strictly to business and forged ahead as rapidly as they could. The teacher had no time to grade papers and mark deportment. If a boy disturbed the school he was promptly punished, and if he failed in his work he lost his recess until he made it up. Take work home? No, indeed! The country boy had to do chores and the country girl was needed to help get supper and wash dishes afterward. At eight o'clock the family went to bed, and there was no talk about nervous children in the country homes. No wonder they sent out and are still sending out a race of intellectual giants. It will be a sorry day when the country schools are wholly given over to "advanced" methods and studies.

No, the fault doesn't lie with the teacher; it lies with the higher authorities. The teacher has nothing to do with the course of study; so scolding her or taking up her time lamenting about the children's troubles will never solve the problem. By interesting the neighbors, the women's clubs, the ministers, everybody in the work of simplifying the schools and giving teachers and scholars a chance to do legitimate educational work, something may be accomplished. A determined, united effort on the part of parents all over the country would start a needed reformation toward turning out a thinking, well informed set of young people ready for the sterner school of life.

A Glimpse of Religious Conditions To-day

War Conditions seem to have Helped rather than Hindered Religious Effort during 1915. Numerous and ambitious Plans for the Future are being Undertaken

I

One of the most remarkable years in the history of religion in America, the year 1915, is at an end. The war in Europe has profoundly affected religious conditions in the United States, but conditions here, apart from the war, have affected these conditions more. A year of unusual hardship for churches, 1915 was a year of the most extraordinary progress they have realized in a generation. Unusual features of the year were new emphasis upon work within the United States without let up of effort abroad; big strides forward in the matter of membership; vast sums of money contributed both to churches and to relief; the making for and sale of Bibles to Europe and other Bible markets usually supplied from England; and the uprising of men, shown conspicuously among Protestants in work for missions, among Catholics for lay co-operation in behalf of many forms of progress; and among Jews in a great growth of Zionism. Religious leaders hope America may find in 1916 such year as was 1915, but they fear they may not do so.

The Year 1915 in Review

Whether it be the war and the sacrifice, or whatever the cause, Church membership in the United States in the year 1915 grew apace. The exact figures will be published by the Federal Council of Churches in February. The indications are that when data is all in the Christian membership will show approximately an even 40,000,000. If it does not quite reach that figure it will be near to it, provided the smaller bodies have made progress equal to the large ones.

A big factor in these growths, on the Protestant side at least, is the new activity of men. Laymen's institutes for the training of volunteer lay workers were started in several bodies in 1915, a wholly new development.

In lay effort, almost wholly men, the year 1915 saw perfected in several Protestant bodies well defined and well backed plans for the introduction into management of the temporal affairs of churches something of the same scientific management that is going into industrial, commercial and governmental affairs. The recognition that laymen have proper part, that church plants can be made more productive, and that money contributions can be made to accomplish more, would alone make 1915 memorable in Christian affairs.

Financially 1915 started and continued for several months such stringency, and such lack of employment, that thousands of projects requiring money, new buildings, new missions, needed endowments, were postponed. Money to go into new churches during 1915 was hardly half the usual sum. But the aspect changed when warm weather came, and 1915 was the greatest financial year the churches of America ever knew. The high water marks in home and foreign gifts were reached, and almost all religious bodies enjoyed larger receipts than on any previous year.

By Way of Giving

Benevolence, to war sufferers in Europe, to Christian Associations, to hospitals and Salvation Army, broke all records. The Belgium, Serbian and other funds, running into large sums, must be mentioned in a record of religious gifts for the year, since seventy-five per cent at least of all such relief funds are given by people who also support churches and synagogues. These supporters number 40,000,000 out of a total of 100,000,000, but they give $3.00 of every $4.00 to charities. This is true of causes, such as earthquakes and war starvation, which have about them no religious bearing.

Episcopalians last year passed beyond the $20,000,000 in total gifts to their own work, and they also went $700,000 and more beyond all earlier records in gifts to missions. Presbyterians and Methodists broke all previous records of gifts, the first named by $105,000. Jewish relief to Poland, to Palestine, ran into the millions, with a new giving campaign started by them at the very end of the year. Catholics projected and carried well forward before the year ended a $500,000 campaign to build a national headquarters hall in New York. Many other organizations, supported in largest measure by religious people, started campaigns that proved successful in all cases, and that netted millions. If the first half of the year 1915 was the worst, the last half of the same year proved the best that religion in America has yet known.

The Jews of America found, during 1915, that the problem of the Jews of the world, a problem that is almost as old as the race, is upon their shoulders. Realizing it, young Jews gathered under the Zionist banner, resulting in a growth of that movement in 1915 of not less than 350,000. Thousands of large hearted men and women, not waiting for the relief agencies, have systematically sent money to particular families in Hungary, Bohemia and the Balkans. Some Jews, having no remnants of families there, have helped families there who are relatives of their friends here. Such Jewish co-operation has never been known before.

Agitation before a Jewish Congress, and some friction near the end of the year, resulted at last in a decision to hold such Congress as soon as the European war terminates, possibly before, in which Jews of all ways of thinking are to have part. American Jews are to lead the Jews of the world in an effort, when Europe comes to be remapped, to give Jews a place in the sun, as the Germans say, and if possible to settle forever the great problems of the Jews of all the world. Such movement toward adjustment, started during 1915, bids fair to make the year famous in Jewish annals.

The remarkable feature of 1915 in affairs of the Roman Catholic Church, in its larger affairs as a Church, is the new and strong relations of the Vatican with some nations wherein these relations have not heretofore existed. England is a notable example, and now Holland has also been persuaded to send an envoy to the Vatican. But it does not seem as if Pope Benedict has been able to do very much for England, to all appearances he has not even tried to do a great deal for the British. Virtually the nation has made a fool of itself by its pains to placate Catholic intriguers. And the Holland government has no prospect of any pleasanter experience in the same footless experiment.

Six new cardinals were named during the year, but the end of 1915 finds the Sacred College depleted in numbers, and weakened by age and infirmity of not a few of its members. Another consistory and the election of more cardinals will come early in 1916.

Finally, an unusual feature of 1915 in religious conditions in America grew out of the Panama Pacific Exposition. Christian leaders who heretofore went to Europe for vacations, in 1915 went to the Coast and the Exposition. Many stopped by the way. They saw America first. Not a few had never seen it before. They are in touch with the Middle West, with the South, with the Coast, as they never were before. The change will tell, so everybody agrees in saying. If 1915 and San Francisco had done no more, they would have benefitted religion in the United States far more than have some other efforts that tried to aim better and that cost more money.

Plans and Aims for 1916

Churches of the United States enter upon the new year with plans so numerous and so ambitious that merely to chronicle them in brief taxes the space of a news story. The striking thing of the new year is the set-back Church unity has received. There never was much life in unity plans from the Roman and Greek Catholic side, and now the Protestant side is saying the thing is dead. A meeting of members of all Protestant commissions of North America is called for Garden City, Long Island during the first fortnight of the year.

This conference, intended as preparation for the larger one on Faith and Order, projected originally by Episcopalians is to meet behind closed doors, and a statement will be given out after it adjourns. Protestant members of commissions are saying now that either they do not purpose to attend, or that if they do attend the time is wasted. There is a distinct denominational reaction, stronger now than for years, while the movement toward the World Conference has, so Protestant leaders declare, received such a black eye during the past few weeks that it will take months if not years to get back to normal color. Many say the whole World Conference scheme is dead, or that it will be dead before it is ever called.

Constructively, a big project of the year is in hand by Roman Catholic leaders of America, especially archbishops and college presidents. The Pope has just formed at the Vatican, as part of the administration of the Curia, a new congregation that has for its aim the strengthening of Christian education. In part this new congregation was formed to help education in America. The Catholic University, the diocesan seminaries, the colleges conducted by the orders, and especially the training of priests for Italian speaking Catholics, are to be looked to in 1916.

A second Catholic Church task of the new year in America is the procuring of financial aid for Catholic missions of the world. France has heretofore been the chief support of such missions, and Catholics of France have done fairly well in spite of war. Other nations of Europe have, however, found it almost impossible to help. Almost $2,000,000 is needed. Catholic missionaries in the Far East have been helped by other missionaries in their fields, but upon the Catholics of the United States will fall, especially this year and until the end of the war, a great burden of maintaining Catholic foreign missions of the whole world.

The year 1916 promises to be a memorable one in American Methodism. The General Conference of the large northern body meets at Saratoga Springs in May, and before it will come a plan to merge into one great Methodist body Methodists North, South and Protestant, making a denomination of upwards of 6,000,000. If such a plan goes thru, as now seems likely, three administrative zones will be created, it is said, each with its own General Conference. The other part of the plan is to bring all colored Methodist bodies together, making a denomination of 1,500,000, possibly more. Decisions concerning these great plans rest with Methodists of the north, who have long desired union.

The Evangelical Colony, Billings, Mont.

Continued from Page 4

partly already cultivated and prepared to receive next years seed, and partly glimmering in the beautiful green and growing winter wheat or alfalfa. Half a mile south is our pretty little school house and the bell on top of it daily calls the children to their studies and on Sundays extends an invitation for everybody to come and hear the Word of God. The Jubilee service of our beloved Evangelical Synod was the first service to be held in this building, and Pastor Quader from Norwood, Minn., who happened to be out here with several farmers to inspect the country, delivered the Jubilee sermon. Once in a while our colony receives most welcome callers. Last summer we had the pleasure to entertain the chairman of our Central Mission Board, Pastor Reller and his wife from Evansville, Ind. Pastor K. Koch from St. Paul, chairman of our colonization board, and Pastor Debus from Hebron, together with other pastors who purchased land here, and many other worthy friends honored us with their visit.

All of this points to the fact that we have passed the experimental and are entering upon the business stage. The reason I call this the business stage, briefly told, is this: Every experienced person knows that a piece of land, being fertile and adjoining transportation facilities, representing a valuation which would net 30,000.00 in interest per year, cannot remain idle but must be disposed of as soon as possible. This necessitates rapid colonization and settlement. One of our colonists after a year's sojourn out here purchased another tract of eighty acres and has added them to his old tract of the same size, and other colonists have written to their friends and acquaintances to induce them to join us, but all this is slow work. Many of our Evangelical Christians who live in densely populated communities in the East, will sooner or later have to come West, and we have learned that land agents from the West are very active trying to induce our people to move into their particular locality. Altho we have repeatedly advertised our colony in the columns of the Herald we find that, unfortunately, our people do not all read that splendid weekly, and others either ignore our advertisement or fail to investigate, and would rather believe any stranger,

Concluded on Page 8

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

January 23, 1916. Third Sunday after Epiphany

What to do

The manner in which the orders for Evangelical lesson helps are coming in indicates that the Evangelical Lesson Course is not only holding its own, but is rapidly gaining ground in territory where it had not previously been used. This is as it should be and is a source of no little satisfaction to the publishers and editors who have spent time and money freely in developing the Course. The Evangelical Lesson Course takes the student thru the entire Bible in a thoro and systematic manner without interruption; it seeks to adapt all the material taught to the needs of the pupil at each stage of his development, links up the work of the Sunday-school with that of the confirmation instruction and gives due regard to the seasons and festivals of the Church Year. Schools ordering the course now are taking a long step forward in real Bible study.

The Evangelical Lesson Course is taught to its best advantage by teachers who receive and study The Evangelical Teacher. In this modern monthly educational magazine Evangelical experts treat the Bible Story and Advanced Bible Lessons for every grade in the Evangelical way. The International Uniform Lessons are also given due consideration, as well as all the many needs of Evangelical Sunday-schools. No Evangelical Sunday-school should be without it.

The simplest way to introduce it into your school is to let the school furnish the magazine gratis to the teachers and officers. Your Sunday-school workers and officers cheerfully give their services gratis year in, year out, and deserve substantial recognition for their efforts. In ordering The Evangelical Teacher for them you are not only giving them a token of your appreciation of their efforts, but are also helping to make their work easier and more effective. Single subscriptions to the Evangelical Teacher cost sixty cents per year. Five or more copies sent to one address cost fifty cents per year. A special discount of ten per cent is offered on all club orders sent in before Feb. 1, 1916. This opportunity should not be overlooked, as the offer will positively be withdrawn on the date mentioned. Do not delay, there is still ample time to secure the advantages of the offer for your school. Sample copies are cheerfully mailed free as long as the supply lasts. Send all orders and remittances to Eden Publishing House, 1716-18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

WORTH-WHILE AMUSEMENTS

M. Jan. 17. Bodily exercise. 1 Tim. 4: 7-11.
T. Jan. 18. Song. Jas. 5: 13; Ps. 100.
W. Jan. 19. Orchestra. 1 Chron. 15: 16, 28.
T. Jan. 20. Nature-study. Ps. 19: 1-6.
F. Jan. 21. Literature. Eph. 3: 1-13.
S. Jan. 22. Sociability. John 12: 1-8.

Sun., Jan. 23. Topic—Amusement That is Worth While. Eccl. 3: 1-15.

Suggestions to the Leader

The Social Committee ought to have charge of this meeting. If the topic has not been assigned to this committee for treatment and presentation, then the leader ought to plan the program in such a way that this committee will have an opportunity to present its aim and plans of work. We must provide for opportunity to develop the social spirit in our society life. Thus we meet the inborn desires of the individual, and thwart the purposes of those who offer such opportunities for selfish purposes, and thru these selfish aims lead others into sinfulness, extravagance, lust, abuse of health and faculties etc.

If there is a Boy Scout troop connected with the church, call on the Scout-master to explain the aims and purpose of the Boy-Scout movement.

The Topic Presented

What kind of amusements are not worth while?

It is a difficult matter to judge the value of amusements. But in a general way we can declare those so-called amusements not worth while that exhaust vitality, deplete the purse, and destroy our ideals and virtues.

The American nation is devoted to out-door amusements. Baseball, athletics, including football, etc., are well adapted to the development of strength and health. But since these amusements have been commercialized to a large degree their effect upon the nation as a whole are neutralized. The present form in which these amusements are followed is destructive to our morals and detrimental to our inner development. As a rule we can say that all amusements that are conducted on a commercial basis are not worth while. Being conducted in the interest of the financial gains of individuals, these individuals cater to the baser desires and introduce such features as can not serve the high purpose of amusements. Thus selfishness debases amusements that might otherwise not come under suspicion and censure.

The American nation spends every year about a billion and a half for liquor, the same amount for tobacco, the same for theaters, and probably the same amount for other forms of amusements. Thus we are spending approximately six billion dollars for what those who spend the money consider amusements. In addition to this the Lord's day is wasted and degraded, health is ruined, life destroyed, the purse depleted, all for the sake of that artificially created exhilaration which people call amusement.

What amusements are worth while?

Recreation is a necessity and not a luxury. We need recreation to get out of the rut of every day life, to prevent the warping of our faculties, to enlarge our interests, to widen our horizon. True amusements will produce bodily vigor, mental alertness, spiritual kindness. It will bring us into closer touch with each other, that thru our mutual interests we might aid each other in the development of the inner life. True amusements will develop and call out the noblest qualities in the noblest way. Some amusements, such as travel, concerts, etc., will cost money. But it is money well spent if the amusement awakens in us an interest in things outside of our daily sphere of life.

Amusements ought to be carefully planned. Parents ought to give much thought to home amusements. A musical instrument may cost quite a sum, but it is one of the best investments a father can make. It may cost money to develop the musical faculties of sons and daughters, but every lesson helps develop the inner life of that child. The home ought to be the gathering place of young people. The boys and girls ought always feel perfectly free to bring their boy and girl friends into the home for an evening's or an afternoon's social affair. Boys and girls ought to be permitted to bring their friends to the home for study and play. Make the home the center of your child's interests.

The church ought to lay great stress on amusements. A Christian social atmosphere must be created. Young people must come together. It is far better that they meet in a social way at the church than on the corners of the streets. 'Tis a pity that our churches are not open every evening of the week, and that a careful supervision of the social activities of the young people is not exercised.

The community ought to provide for amusements. These last years our cities are providing in a more liberal way for parks and play-grounds for the children. The sign "Keep off the grass," is rarely seen these days. The grass is grown to be walked on.

Amusement is related to the word "muse." For true amusement is never thoughtless nor aimless.

Some Questions on the Topic

What kind of amusements are not worth while?
How do you judge the value of amusements?
What kind of amusements are worth while?
What is the purpose of amusements?
How can amusements be provided?
Why are commercialized amusements as a rule not worth while?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Gal. 5: 19, 21; Job 21: 12, 13; Heb. 11: 25; Eccl. 2: 11; Luke 8: 14; Ex. 32: 4, 6, 19; 1 Cor. 10: 7; Judg. 16: 23-25.

A Prayer

We thank Thee, our heavenly Father, that Thou didst so create us that we desire and can rejoice in the fellowship with each other. We thank Thee for the opportunity of joy and gladness that comes into our life. We pray that we may be saved from the sin of prostituting the joys of life for sinful and selfish purposes. Let us learn from the Master how the true joy and happiness can be used for the uplifting of the soul and the serving of others. Forgive us our sins and weaknesses. Make us strong and determined in doing Thy will. May the true joy of fellowship come into our life thru our faith in Jesus Christ, the Saviour of men. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson Material for the Second Year: New Testament Studies—the Messianic Era and the Apostolic Era.

Lessons for the First Quarter, 1916

- Lesson 1. Jan. 2. Between the Testaments; Dan. 2: 31-45.
Lesson 2. Jan. 9. The Origin and purpose of the Gospels; John 1: 1-14; Luke 1: 1-4.
Lesson 3. Jan. 16. The Growing Jesus; Luke 2: 40-52.
Lesson 4. Jan. 23. The Voice Crying in the Wilderness; Matt. 3: 1-12.
Lesson 5. Jan. 30. At the Gateway of Service; Matt. 3: 13-17; 4: 1-11; Mark: 9-13.
Lesson 6. Feb. 6. Beginnings in Judea; John 2: 13-25.
Lesson 7. Feb. 13. A Woman Lost in Sin; John 4: 27-30; 39-42.
Lesson 8. Feb. 20. Beginnings in Galilee; Luke 4: 14-31.
Lesson 9. Feb. 27. Teaching with Authority; Matt. 5: 1-16; 7: 28, 29; Luke 6: 20-26.
Lesson 10. Mar. 5. Miracles of Jesus, I; Luke 8: 22-56.
Lesson 11. Mar. 12. Miracles of Jesus, II; John 5: 17-31; 20: 30-31.
Lesson 12. Mar. 19. Parables of Jesus; Matt. 13: 10-17.
Lesson 13. Mar. 26. The Arising Opposition; John 6: 60-71.

Lesson 4. The Voice Crying in the Wilderness

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Jan. 17. Luke 1: 5-23. John's Birth Announced.
T. Jan. 18. Luke 1: 57-80. The Birth of John.
W. Jan. 19. Matt. 3: 1-12. The Voice crying in the Wilderness.
T. Jan. 20. Isa. 40: 3-5; John 1: 19-35. Preparing the Way.
F. Jan. 21. Mal. 4: 5-6; Matt. 17: 10-13. In the Spirit and Power of Elijah.
S. Jan. 22. Matt. 11: 2-29. Christ's Tribute to John.
S. Jan. 23. Mark 6: 14-29. The Sad End.

Lesson Key:—"Verily I say unto you, among them that are born of women there has not arisen a greater than John the Baptist; yet he that is but little in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he," Matt. 11: 11.

John the Baptist is one of the great and remarkable Bible characters. He is the only person besides Christ himself, whose mission in life was previously outlined in the Scriptures. In his personality and work Old Testament prophecy reached its climax; he not only prophesied himself, but saw the fulfillment of his message. To call him the greatest of prophets is not making the others inferior, he lived in a greater period and measured up to loftier standards than were required of those who had gone before.

Out of the thoro religious training of a godly home he graduated into God's special school, the wilderness, where nature and the Bible were his textbooks, prayer and meditation his method of study and the Spirit of God his teacher. Here the foundations of his character were laid deep and strong; here he became a man of courage and conviction, ready to tell the truth even to princes and men of power, and to die, if need be, a martyr to its cause. Because he was absolutely certain of his mission he put into his work all the energy and earnestness of his forceful personality. No other servant of God except Paul devoted his whole life so absolutely to God's work as did John the Baptist.

Nor did the knowledge of his mission make him proud or ambitious. When he saw the Pharisees and Sadducees coming to his baptism, he called them an offspring of vipers, and told them the truth in a fashion in which they had not heard it before. But when his disciples, jealous of his prestige, told him that Christ was gaining in influence and popularity at his expense, there was not only no trace of envy in his answer, but the answer, "He must increase, I must decrease," in its humility and depth of spiritual insight ranks with the noblest words human lips have ever uttered. Because of the self-forgetfulness and devotion with which he had performed his task, Jesus himself, when that task was completed, gave him his place beside the greatest of God's people. Neither Abraham, Moses, Elijah or Daniel—not even David is accepted—were greater than John the Baptist.

What is it that made John the Baptist so great?

Not only his absolute devotion to his task, or the self-sacrificing spirit and the humility with which he accomplished it, but the clearness with which he recognized the essentially spiritual character of the kingdom of heaven. Tho the religious leaders of his people were content with calling themselves the children of Abraham, thinking that their descent from him would insure them a full share in the blessings of the kingdom; tho the vast majority of his people believed in a political kingdom of God, on the order of that of David, perhaps, a great world-power that would overcome their hated Roman enemies, John the Baptist saw the great need, not only of Israel, but of all the world and insisted on repentance from sin as the condition of the coming of the kingdom of God. He recognized sin as the one great obstacle of the establishment of the kingdom of heaven on earth, and goes to the root of the matter by demanding repentance as a preparation for its removal. In this he was in line with all that the prophets of old had said, but he could go beyond them by pointing out Him who was the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world, and who would baptize, not with water only, but with the Holy Spirit and with fire, and gather the wheat into His garner, but burn up the Chaff with unquenchable fire.

That was a very unpopular message at that time as it is to-day, and we may be sure that John got very little encouragement from the people who heard it. But he was not looking for encouragement nor was he seeking popularity. He was a preacher of truth and he was not afraid of being unpopular if necessary. To-day also people do not like to hear the message of repentance; it is too "personal," because it hits the sore spot and touches the exposed nerve of what is wrong in the inner heart-life. But there can be no kingdom of God without it, and the men who preach repentance as a condition of entrance into the kingdom of heaven are the true benefactors of the race. A preacher with this message is trying to do his duty before God and man and deserves an increase in his salary rather than a hint that his resignation is desired.

The Magic Touch

Concluded from Page 3

of a young girl when first she hears the whispered words that tells the story of a pure and manly love.

"Oil of joy for mourning," and this is coronation oil, the oil significant of the endowment of regal authority and power. Who are to receive coronation? Those whose souls are filled with mourning. The mourning is the cry of defeat. It is the wail of the failure. It is the moan of the broken. It is the pathetic cry of the disordered, the men and women who have fallen, who have succumbed in moral and spiritual calamity. That is to say, the good Lord offers the crown of restored sovereignty to the children of moral disorder. He offers restored legality to those who have "gone to pieces." He offers coronation to those who have lost their crowns, sovereignty for those who are bruised and broken. "He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth the needy out of the dunghill, that He may set him with princes." He will transform the slave into a monarch. "He crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies."

"The garments of praise for the spirit of heaviness," and the heaviness is that of dimness and failing light, light trembling on the verge of eclipse. There are people whose lives are like that. There is no heat about them, and no radiance. They are cold, dull, cheerless, funereal, shut in by encompassing gloom. And the magician comes, and He offers to change that gloomy, sombre attire for the garment of praise. For heaviness He will give buoyancy, the joy of the bridal feast for heavy-footed woe.

Surely this bright, regal, bridal attire is what is lacking in the religious life of to-day. There is something wrong with our nobility when it is not crowned with radiance. There is something wrong with our good-will when it does not bear the hall-mark of good cheer. There is something wrong with our communion when we are not "children of light." When the bridal attire is missing there is little or nothing about us to suggest that we are the brides of the Lamb. How are men and women to know that we are of the King's household if we do not wear "the garments of salvation?" How can they believe that we have gazed upon the Divine glory if we do not wear the splendors of "the garment of praise?"

I remember two significant sentences in one of

Robert Louis Stevenson's letters, which express the common judgment of the world: "I do not call that by the name of religion which fills a man with bile. If a man is surly, filled with a dull and bitter disposition, if he be somber and melancholy, how can he witness to the glories of the eternal life?" And the other sentence is this: "I will think more of his prayers when I see in him a spirit of praise." Stevenson wanted to see common gratitude before he received the witness of a clamant piety. If our religion does not clothe us in the refinements of common courtesies, it will fail to win the interested attention of the men of the world. A fine spiritual grace, nobly worn, is a great witness for the Lord. The distinction between the Church and the world ought to be found in the difference of their habits. The elect ought to prove their relationship by the beauty of their moral and spiritual attire.

Do we believe that the transformation is possible? Have we full confidence in the power of the Great Magician? Do we believe that He will exchange a coronet for ashes, joyous sovereignty for sullen despair, and a garment of radiant cheerfulness for the spirit of gloom? If we do not believe it where is our Gospel? If we do not believe it, where is our life? The Almighty God can transform the most ungracious and unwelcome life. When He touches barrenness, "the wilderness and the solitary place become glad, and the desert rejoices and blossoms like the rose."—The Episcopal Recorder.

Dim in the Future, White unto Harvest

Continued from Page 5

Hampton Beach so surely as this man will loom in the Church. You can turn back Bruce from the morning of Bannockburn, Napoleon from the sunrise of Austerlitz, and the Iron Duke from the field of Waterloo, but you cannot defeat this man. He has the vision of the rural church and the courage to face the misunderstanding of friends who wish him to "conform."

Why should he not be thus noble? For the story of the Cross men have cried their "morituri salutamus" (we who are about to die salute Thee) to the throne of the Caesars and have died in the jaws of the lions; they have died in flame to light the night gardens of Nero; they have crossed the angry seas to set their feet on Plymouth Rock; they have died on the heathery mountains of Scotland in the grim old days of the Covenanters; they have gone to the leper islands like Father Damien; they have left the trail of their martyrdom in blood and ashes down the history of the world, and is it after all, so evil a thing to give one's life to such sheep as walk in green pastures, along the still waters?

The Evangelical Colony, Billings, Mont.

Continued from Page 6

whose character is an unknown quantity to them, and finally purchase from him and locate in some section of the country where they have no Evangelical church, and where they are thus lost to our Synod and to our synodical colony. This is evidence for us that we must begin to hustle if we would make progress with our synodical colony. I was therefore instructed to make some trips this fall in the special interest of our colony and as the result of my travels thirteen new colonists have bought land and settled here. In consequence the Central Mission Board has arranged that I should temporarily give up my congregational work and devote my entire time to colonization propaganda, so that this entire enterprise might become a vigorous branch on our home mission tree. I shall therefore visit such States in the East where the population is very dense and where land is very high in price and difficult to obtain, so as to advertise our colonization work and our colony in Billings, Mont. We realize that this is the only business-like way to solve the problem for our colony, and as soon as our people learn more of our project, those who are ready to come West will make use of our offer and will locate with us. The result will very soon be that our land will be disposed of, and from a business stage we will then enter the congregational stage and as true members of our Synod, and live wires for its cause, will prove helpful to the cause. May the Lord grant it.

R. Maurer. GES. Tr.

P. S.—Just a pointer to the pastors: It will of course be impossible for me to be at all times wherever my presence may be desired. If advised where my presence would be desirable I shall make it a point to call as soon as possible. Congregations who wish me to call will be under no expense therefor.

News from Texas

Rev. J. Nuesch,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear brother:

Your call for reports from missionary workers in all parts of our country came to my attention. The fact that these reports are few and far between is not always due to unwillingness, but often to the fact that nothing of importance can be reported. I shall try, however, for once, to tell you something about our mission work in Texas and leave the publication to your discretion.

The first requirement of a missionary worker is his adaptability to conditions, and this includes patience above everything else, and when the apostle wrote "For ye have need of patience," he naturally applied this first of all to himself. But patience alone will not fill the bill, enthusiasm for the cause must also play its part. I might add that without the latter the former becomes a weakness.

I have two congregations, one in the city and the other in the country. The country round about is very productive, and cotton is the main product. Probably no other plant is as profitable as cotton. As a result most of the members of my congregations are well-to-do and therefore need no God. It is as our Lord and Master said, "It is hard for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven." Our whole preaching must therefore carry the message "What shall a man be profited if he gain the world and loose his soul?" From this you can imagine that the attendance at the services is rather small, and it requires much patience to preach the gospel of love to the few who do come. However, the Lord makes Himself manifest in His own, and so He has here too, blessed many a one. In one of my congregations I was able to organize a young peoples society which now number forty members, mostly people who have never before visited a church. This same congregation raised $1,100.00 this year for the pastor's salary and liquidation of the church debt. The country congregation is now building a parsonage and in this manner is helping to build the Kingdom.

The greatest danger for congregations composed of rich members, would be a pastor who himself worships Mammon, placing the dead god above the living God and serving the former. Our Lord can use only such servants who will serve Him only.

Our faith gives us the victory over all troubles, and faith alone will warm our hearts and inspire them for our heavenly king. And so we Evangelical brethren, young and old, will work jointly and harmoniously for the Lord, assured that our work, if performed with the Lord, even under the greatest difficulties, will not be in vain. X. GES. Tr.

THE BALKANS

A LABORATORY OF HISTORY

William M. Sloane

322 Pages

Cloth

Net . . . $1.50

This book is especially interesting now, since the Balkan situation has been brought into the limelight in the present European war.

Professor Sloane has long been an accepted authority on questions relating to the near East. In this particular instance he happened to be in Europe during the recent upheaval, (first and second Balkan wars) and so was able to make a first-hand study of the situation at close range. This volume is a careful, lucid, and scholarly review of the whole Balkan question, dealing with the social, religious, and political problems in a most comprehensive fashion. The causes, progress, and results of the late war are discussed with such clarity and vision as will make this work a standard characterization of the Balkan situation at the present time.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716-18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., JANUARY 20th, 1916

NUMBER 3

More Opposition to "Preparedness" Cult

A New York news dispatch announces that more than seventy members of the House have expressed themselves in opposition to the administration's national defense plans, but the reason given for their attitude—it is not stated that this reason was given by the Representatives themselves—is rather strange. The Congressman are supposed to consider preparedness on so large a scale unnecessary because "it seems to be generally conceded that the Allies will conquer the Germanic forces in the present war." Aside from the fact that, in view of the present situation on the various fronts in Europe, a very fertile imagination is required as a basis for any such "concession" as that referred to, we fail to see the connection between the need for preparedness in this country and the statement that "the Allies will conquer the Germanic forces in the present war," unless it is the absurd idea that Germany is planning a war on the United States. Germany is the one European Power that has consistently stood for peace in Europe for more than forty years, and there is no evidence of any kind of any thought of an attack on this country by Germany. On the contrary, Germany has constantly, by her attitude toward the American demands on the submarine question, shown her desire to retain the friendship of the United States. If any European Power has shown hostility toward the United States, it is England, as a thoughtful perusal of Mr. William Bayard Hale's new book, "American Rights and British Pretensions," a complete compendium of the facts and documents, official and other, bearing upon the present attitude of Great Britain toward the commerce of the United States, conclusively shows. It is just here that the United States should be on her guard. Mr. Hale is a writer of national achievement and distinction whose accusations will not fail to carry weight with thoughtful and intelligent Americans. The book contains 172 pages of important data and information, and may be had for one dollar at Eden Publishing House, St. Louis.

In the last days of the old year there was organized in Washington, D. C., the "Anti-Militarism Committee" for the purpose of waging a national fight against the administration's huge war budget and the cult of preparedness which is sweeping the country. The names of the leading members are such as to inspire confidence both in the motives of the movement and in the ability to carry on the campaign on the highest level of patriotism and humanitarianism. The members of the committee are: Lillian D. Wald, head resident, Nurses' Settlement, New York City; Paul U. Kellogg, editor of The Survey; the Rev. John H. Holmes, Church of the Messiah (Unitarian), and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Free Synagog, New York City; Mrs. Florence Kelley, general secretary of the National Consumers' League; Prof. Geo. W. Kirchwey, Columbia University; Elizabeth G. Evans, national organizer Woman's Peace Party, and others equally well known.

The committee is in close touch with the anti-preparedness minority in both House and Senate. Its congressional program, as announced, is as follows:

"1. Our immediate purpose is to prevent, if possible, any unusual expenditure for armament during the present session of Congress.

"2. Before any increased defense appropriations are made, we demand public investigation of our present huge war budget, so that every dollar now spent for the army and navy may bring 100 per cent of efficiency.

"3. We stand for congressional investigation of the sources of the demand for a large increase in the army and navy appropriations.

"4. We stand for taking all possibility for private profit out of armament manufacture.

"5. We hold that any increased expense for armament should be met by income and inheritance taxes, and not by taxes which place additional burdens upon the poor.

"6. We hold with the President that the time has come to develop the Monroe doctrine with its inherent dangers and difficulties into a real Pan-American Union, and therefore urge that a fifth Pan-American conference be called early in 1916, and that our delegates to that conference be instructed to recommend a true democratic federation of the twenty-one American republics in the interests of peace and republican ideals.

"7. We hold that the question at issue between America and the Orient are important and complex, and therefore urge, as a rational approach to their solution, the appointment of an expert commission, representing America, Japan, and China, to study these questions and make recommendations to the various countries involved, after considering all interests concerned—local, national and international."

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

A crowd of troubles passed him by
As he with courage waited.

He said: "Where do you troubles fly,
When you are thus belated?"

"We go," they said, "to those who mope,
Who look on life dejected,
Who weakly bid good-bye to hope;
We go—where we're expected."

The committee desires to raise a budget that will permit it to put speakers into the field to meet the propagandas of the various preparedness organizations. L. Hollingsworth Wood, 43 Cedar St., New York, is treasurer.

The Church Peace Union, established by Mr. Carnegie's endowment of $2,000,000 two years ago, has also gone on record in opposition to increased armament. The purpose of the Union is to promote the cause of international peace thru the churches, Protestant, Catholic and Jewish, each of its twenty-nine trustees representing some one of the denominations. The stand of the Union was outlined in a resolution, which, after reciting that the United States is "under bonds to do what it can toward the reshaping of the opinion of nations," goes on: "And be it resolved, that we appeal to the American people to withstand the present demand for increased armament for the United States. We are already spending each year the enormous sum of $250,000,000 on the army and navy, and if neither of these is now efficient we would ask that Congress discover how the money of the people may be more effectively spent."

In the meantime we are discovering just what the campaign for preparedness which the administration aims to inaugurate would mean for this country. A supposedly inspired dispatch from Washington states the policy on which the plans of the Army War College and the Navy General Board are based. It is a frank avowal, and is of the utmost importance: "To develop a navy equal in strength to those of any two world Powers, except a combination including Great Britain, and an army prepared to fight for the integrity of the Pan-American idea anywhere in Pan-America is the ultimate aim of the plans of the military experts."

Even so Anglo-American a paper as the New Republic comments on this policy as follows:

"Let us be perfectly clear about this aim. What the 'experts' have in mind is a navy greater than the combined fleets of Germany and Japan, and an army greater than the combined expeditionary forces which the two greatest military nations in the world might land anywhere in this hemisphere. The experts give us ten years in which to prepare these forces. Assuming that Japan and Germany would not make war against us unless they too were prepared, there ought to be a pretty little race of armaments in the next ten years, so that the 'plans' of the experts will have to be increased still more. It might be that Japan and Germany will pick another ally in these ten years, say Austria, whereupon the two-Power standard would become a three-Power standard. To recruit such a navy and such an army we should, 'of course,' have to adopt conscription; to pay for our defenses we should have to go in for taxation so wholesale that internal improvement would be out of the question; and at the end, when the hypothetical war in Chili or Brazil took place, we should probably be jolly well beaten. It is good that the experts have disclosed their aim, but why do they call it ultimate? It is an aim which means armament without limit. In other words it is a mad aim."

How the preparedness campaign may crowd out things that are of far greater importance from every point of view appears very clearly from the following editorial in The Public, Chicago, entitled, "An Embarrassing Suggestion":

"Miss Julia Lathrop, head of the Children's Bureau, wants to know, according to her annual report, why the rate of mortality among children in industrial and mining centers is nearly twice that in suburban residence centers. She also wishes to know what the country is going to do for the 18,000,000 children who do not live in cities. She has noted the fact that in many instances both the parents and the children are illiterate, that many are undernourished; that they work too hard, and that their lives are too monotonous. There is little doubt that many of the near-statesmen at Washington will think Miss Lathrop very inconsiderate to issue such a report at the present time. She should not permit herself to become so absorbed in her own work that she forgets the needs of other departments of the Government. The Army and the Navy Departments were in the field before her. The President and Congress are wrestling with their problems. What can the men who direct the affairs of the nation think of the head of the Children's Bureau who suggests at this time the advisability of looking after the children of the Nation? She should know that this will take money; and how can we spare the thousands of dollars called for by the Children's Bureau, when a half billion dollars is needed to begin the two-billion-dollar plan of preparedness? Suppose 124 infants in 1,000 do die in the first twelve months; the stork will bring more. Dreadnaughts must be paid for; children can be had for nothing. Why all this pother about saving the children, when we are preparing to kill the men?"

Many of our readers are telling us how they enjoy reading the paper. Most of the others enjoy it just as much without telling us about it. ALL have friends or neighbors who would enjoy it just as much as they do. Tell THEM how you enjoy the paper. SEND US THEIR NAMES AND ADDRESSES BY FEB. 1, 1916, and the publishers will send them three consecutive numbers. Many who are not readers will thus receive a copy. READ IT THRU AND GET THE HABIT. You can't invest a dollar to better advantage. Address all requests for sample copies, and all orders and remittances to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716-18 CHOUTEAU AVE., ST. LOUIS, MO.

The Parents' Duty

"And, ye fathers, provoke not your children unto wrath, but nurture them in the chastening and admonition of the Lord," Eph. 6: 4.

In the preceding passage, 5: 22-33, Paul has been dwelling upon the relationship of man and woman as regulated by the Spirit of Jesus Christ, and the Christian view of marriage. The marriage relation was the sore spot of heathenism. Nowhere were the utter failure of mere human principles and ideals for lifting up and purifying mankind more apparent than in the relationship of man and woman, husband and wife in the great heathen nations of antiquity. Woman was practically a chattel, to be used by man as he saw fit, and the most degrading practices and vices were the order of the day, especially among the well-to-do and wealthy, and at the time of Christ the family as an institution had sunk to its lowest level. The Gospel of Jesus Christ, in its practical application, meant a new social order, established upon new, righteous and eternal principles, and could not possibly pass by so important a subject, and St. Paul rightly gives it a conspicuous place in this epistle of Christ and the Church. The people who had accepted Christianity at his hands needed to know its full bearing upon this fundamental and far-reaching question.

Childhood Requires Nurture

From the husband and wife he naturally turns to the children of the household. Obedience is the natural religion of childhood, and in theory at least, even heathenism insisted on filial respect and obedience. This is right says Paul, as he leads over to the deeper thought embodied in the fifth Commandment and the promise it holds out to those who obey its spirit. This obedience will be first and easiest where fathers—the heads of the household, who determined the spirit of the home far more in the apostles' time than is the case in our own day—are gentle. The father is not to enforce obedience by harsh or oppressive treatment, but to lead and train the child so that it will easily and naturally yield its will to his. Not that the father is forbidden to cross the child's wish; nothing is worse for a child than to find that parents are "easy," and do not insist on obedience. But to exasperate the child, to needlessly thwart its natural inclinations, while it may secure submission, will not foster obedience, and naturally leaves a rankling sense of injustice. Christian fathers and mothers will not be inclined to provoke children unto wrath, but will rather desire to nurture, i. e., to nourish them, i. e., their growing character, in the chastening or discipline, and admonition of the Lord. The chastening involves the "training up of the child in the way in which he should go"; the admonition checks and holds him back from the way in which he should not go. The former includes discipline and instruction, the whole course of training by which a child develops into an adult; the latter implies faults in the nature of the child, as well as the wisdom of the father to see and correct them. Both these services are to be rendered in the Lord, i. e., in the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, "in such a way that it is not so much the father that corrects and teaches his children as the Lord thru him." Fathers and mothers must not forget that they are rearing their children, not for their own enjoyment or profit, but as instruments of the Lord who gave them, and who will one day call them to account for the way in which their duty has been performed.

Spiritual Nurture more important than Physical

If it is the parents' sacred duty to give their children the proper physical care, food, clothing, shelter and education, the care of their spiritual life received in baptism, which is far more important for time and eternity, is their supreme obligation. Without careful attention and cultivation the beginnings of the Christian life must languish and perhaps die, just as the seed-grain cannot properly grow without due attention.

Parents are to promote the growth of the new life in their baptized children by training and education toward godliness. Christian parents will naturally seek to restrain their children from evil associates and habits and to accustom them to all that is good. The most effective means for this purpose is the parents' example in word and deed. Much talking is usually in vain, if it accomplishes anything it encourages a precocious, unwholesome, hypocritical "piety" that fails to stand the test when the children must make their own decisions. If, however, parents are agreed in their determination to impress the one thing needful on the minds of their children, and to require them to live up to all that is right before God and their conscience, they will become accustomed to will and to do that which is good, and will be doing all that is humanly possible to lead them to conversion. It is essential that parents are entirely agreed as to the principles and methods of training their children; any sign or disagreement only encourages the child in seeking to have its own way.

Instruction toward godliness is another essential means of promoting the growth of the new life in the hearts of children. Knowledge of the facts and truths of the Bible furnish the most favorable soil for the growth of the spiritual life, and parents can hardly begin too early with instructing their children in a way adapted to their age and development. This should be followed by definite religious instruction in school or Sunday-school as the child grows older. At the proper time confirmation instruction should prepare their hearts for the voluntary decision to accept Christ as their Saviour and to live for Him and serve Him loyally thruout the entire life. Confirmation instruction can accomplish this only on the basis of adequate preparation. This should preferably be given in the home, while the instruction offered in the Sunday-school should serve the same purpose. The aim of Christian home training and instruction is to make the religious impressions permanent and decisive for the child's later years. 2 Tim. 1: 5; 3: 15-17.

Prayer is also a most important means of promoting the new life in the heart of the child. Children should see and hear their parents pray in the family devotions and on other occasions, and parents should teach their children to pray with them. Intercession for their children is the most powerful aid of sound Christian home training. Monica, the mother of Augustine, prayed for her son, who led a dissipated life, for many years, apparently in vain, until finally he was converted and became the famous Christian teacher.

Children should also be required to attend the public services of worship regularly. Even tho they may not grasp all they hear there the spirit of worship will impress itself upon their hearts and mind, and the regular attendance trains them in Christian habits. Unwillingness to attend may usually be removed by loving explanation and persuasion, if the parents themselves give the example of regular and intelligent attendance. The parents' life and conduct is, in fact, the child's object lesson in practical Christianity. Children are natural observers and imitators, and the parents' effort to live a really, unselfish, faithful Christian life cannot fail to make an impression on any child. Prov. 2: 11.

Lost and Found

By CORA S. DAY

The big touring car stopped, and a pretty young woman, fashionable in dress and manner, stepped quickly out. She was followed by a little girl as dainty and pretty as herself. A few low words were spoken to the man at the wheel, and in obedience he turned the car and departed the way he had come.

The young woman stood quite still for a moment. Involuntarily her eyes followed the car; and in them was a curiously mingled expression—of regret and of wistfulness, overshadowed by defiance and smouldering anger. She stood so, gazing, for just that one moment. Then, turning away suddenly, one might have seen a subtle hardening of eyes and setting of straight lips which seemed intended rather to smile in lovable curves.

The next moment, indeed, she smiled sweetly enough, as she took the hand of the waiting child and went up the narrow, flower-bordered gravel walk to the tiny porch that sheltered the door of a simple, old-fashioned village home.

Some one within had seen her coming. Some one stood at the open door with outstretched arms of welcome, and eager smiles and words of joy at her coming.

"Margaret! And you never sent me a word of your coming," laughed the plump, comely woman who hugged and kissed her lovingly as she drew her into the cool, dark hallway. "Come right straight into the parlor—no, you're not a bit rmped, in spite of your long ride—and see who's in there calling on me this afternoon."

She was drawing her dearly beloved niece into the old-fashioned, low-ceiled room, whose quaint furnishings seemed to fit it so well. They fitted as well the occupant of the room, who rose at the entrance of the three, for Aunt Martha had cuddled the chubby hand of the child in her palm and led her along close beside her.

"My dear child—this is an unexpected pleasure. We were speaking of you only a few minutes ago, and your aunt was saying you had not been down here for some time past," a musical old voice was saying, almost before Margaret realized her surroundings, and who he was. A white-haired old man clasped her hand warmly as he greeted her.

For a moment she could not reply. That she should meet him, of all the old friends in this village where she had been born and bred—of all those whom she would avoid this day, and all the days to come—it was too much, too cruel of fate. For he was her old pastor. He had baptized her; he had given her entrance into his little band of believers; he had spoken the solemn words that had made her Robert Fane's wife.

She controlled her quivering nerves and wandering, half-dazed thoughts with a supreme effort. Somehow she forced herself to smile back brightly in answer to his smile. Somehow she compelled her lips to say—lightly and merrily, a careless observer and listener might have thought:

"Such a surprise! I was quite breathless for a moment. I had no idea you were here. Aunt Martha should have told me," and she shook a none too steady finger at her beaming aunt in laughing reproach.

"I'm glad I timed my call so that I met you," he replied. "For I am going home again to-morrow."

"He's been here a week now, visiting his daughter, and calling on all of the old church folks," Aunt Martha explained. For the old pastor had now been retired for some years, and made his home with a prosperous son in a distant town. This visit to the daughter who had married and still made her home in the old village was a great treat to him. Tender memories crowded about him at every step and turn in the old familiar streets and homes of his beloved flock.

"Yes? How lovely—I'm sure they all are as glad to see him as can be," Margaret said pleasantly, and as lovingly as he could have desired. She did love the dear old saint, sincerely and deeply. Under other, happier circumstances she would have been delighted to see him and talk over things past and present. Now—ah, his first question was the one she dreaded most—the one she would most have avoided, from him and all others.

"And you, my dear—is it well with you still—you are as happy as ever? And Robert—how is he—and the boy?"

"Robert—Robert is as well, and handsome, and gay as ever," she smiled with deceptive frankness. "And prosperous still in his business—so prosperous that we have spent more than I dare count up—when I remember the lean years."

He knew how modestly she and Robert had begun life together. He knew, too, that she was largely responsible for the prosperity that had come; that she had encouraged and inspired and steadied the one who was "as gay as ever." He nodded appreciatively as she paused.

"Yes, yes—but it is honest prosperity. You have a right to enjoy it together." His tone was gently positive. Something hard and cold seemed to settle about her heart, and try to smother her. She had a wild impulse to laugh aloud—to scream—to burst into tears and sob out the whole wretched story at his feet. What would he think—this kindly, gentle old man, whose whole life had breathed of peace and holiness—what would happy, placid Aunt Martha think, if her pretty prosperous niece were to tell the story of the pass to which things had come between these two who "had a right to enjoy it together." But the old man was speaking still.

"Yes, yes, you have a right to enjoy it together—so that you forget not the Giver of all good—and the needy whom it privileges you to help. For it is clean money, and has fallen into good hands. Good, clean, honest hands, from childhood up; for I can remember well when you were both children. Robert was a manly little lad, always ready to do pleasant things for others, sweet-tempered, good-natured. I was more than once a bit anxious over his easy-going nature; I feared he might be too easily led astray." She drew a quick, silent breath of pain. "But he fell into good hands, my dear." He gave her a smile of loving approval. "He fell in love with you. And you were sweet and sensible and true-hearted, and strong to help him with his easier nature. You were just what he needed to balance him, to steady him. You have done it well—better, I think, than you can ever realize. He has become a fine man. You have traveled happily together, helping each other. For he has helped you, too, Margaret, has he not? His easy casting off of trifles that you with your intenser nature might take too seriously—has it not helped you to have him teach you something of his care-free spirit, too?"

His kind old eyes searched her face benevolently. Something in her strained heart and brain seemed to relax slowly as he went on, without waiting for an answer.

"Yes, I know that it has—I know that you have been good for each other—I was not really putting the question. I saw enough of your beautiful, loving life here together, before he went to town; I know how ideally you fitted into each other's characters. You should thank God, Margaret, that you and your husband are each what you are, to help and love each other 'till death do you part.'" He rose slowly to take his leave—the call had been a long one.

"I am very glad that I had the opportunity to see you before I went home," he repeated, and held her hand closely a moment in parting. Then he went away; Aunt Martha bustled out to set things going for the early tea; little Elsie ran after her to explore the mysteries of kitchen and pantry; and Margaret was left alone.

She leaned back in her big chair, all the pretty color and animation gone out of her face.

"Thank God that she and Robert were what they were." She, quick-tempered, stubborn, grown more and more intolerant and nagging and rebellious. Robert—"as gay as ever"—ah, yes. But was he as loving, as tender, as sweet-tempered and good-natured as ever? She smiled bitterly to herself at the very thought.

What would the dear old pastor say or think, could he know the sharp things she had said—and the cool, provokingly unruffled replies that Robert had made—again and again, more and more of late until she had felt that it was unbearable longer? What would he say if he knew that they were no longer helping each other; that they were hindering each other, by every means in their power, from the love and happiness that should be theirs—that had once been theirs?

How had it come about, she wondered dully. How had they ever strayed so far from the paths of peace and joy in which they had once walked hand in hand? When they were poor in pocket, they had been rich in love. Even when prosperity first came; then—then—

She sat upright suddenly, her sad eyes filling with a great light. Like a flash—like a white light of revelation from God—she knew the secret of disaster. They had allowed their prosperity to dim the sacred inner vision. They had run blindly after pleasure—worldly pleasure—and not only had it eluded them, but they had lost the old peace and joy and love. They had indeed forgotten, or grown indifferent to the Giver of their good; they had given no thought to the needy ones whom it privileged them to help. So the old pastor had put it. She had winced at the words. Only now did she fully realize how deeply they had cut, how straight they probed to the root of the evil.

She had come down here this afternoon with no intention of ever returning to her husband's house. Let him have the beautiful house that was home no longer when love was dead and discord reigned. Let him have his—their—boy, even tho her heart broke at that. She knew full well that she could not hope to have all—and Elsie had come with her mother. The future had been a pain-filled bitter blank. Now—

She slipped softly out at the front door, down the narrow walk, and away thru the deserted village street to the station, where she could send the message that was forming swiftly in her hungry heart and brain—where she could send a message—home.

Never did the wires carry more joy-laden tidings. The big red touring car made a second trip to the village that night—the next day was too far off for the things that waited to be said on both sides.

So, while a white-haired old man bowed his head that night in earnest petition that he might have spoken the right words to the troubled young soul which had tried in vain to hide its trouble from him, that prayer was being answered in two penitent hearts under Aunt Martha's humble roof.

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

Let Me but Live

Let me but live from year to year,
With forward face and reluctant soul,
Not hastening to, nor turning from, the goal;
Not mourning for the things that disappear
In the dim past, nor holding back in fear
From what the future veils, but with a whole
And happy heart, that pays its toll
To Youth and Age, and travel on with cheer.

So let the way wind up the hill or down,
Tho rough or smooth, the journey will be joy;
Still seeking what I sought when but a boy,
New friendship, high adventure, and a crown.
I shall grow old, but never lose life's zest,
Because the road's last turn will be the best.

—Henry Van Dyke, D. D.

Cousin Reba's Investments

"Cousin Reba was in this afternoon," Mrs. Wilson remarked at dinner.

"What is she doing now?" the family asked, instantly interested. But, altho the words were the same, the tones were very different.

Mrs. Wilson laughed. "I believe her latest is lessons in Italian," she answered.

"Italian—Cousin Reba! When she doesn't know anything of English literature," Olive exclaimed. Olive was at the age when any lapse from fashionable attainments upon the part of her relatives was a personal grievance.

"What's behind it? An Italian Sunday-school?" Mr. Wilson asked. "There must be a motive in her madness, for Cousin Reba is the best business woman I ever knew."

A chorus of protests met the statement.

"Cousin Reba! Why, father, she never could keep accounts in her life!"

"She failed in half a dozen investments."

"Anybody with a story of misfortune could take her in."

"Nevertheless, I repeat my statement," Mr. Wilson said, quietly. "Cousin Reba is the best business woman I ever knew. She never lets any stock lie idle—every smallest thing is put to work. It was so when we were at school together, when, as soon as she learned a thing, she was helping someone else who was backward. Her father gave her a piano when she was twenty; she never played much herself, but before a month was past she had that piano busy two or three hours every day—poor girls practicing on it, you know. She would learn new recipes—Cousin Reba was a born cook—and, before you knew what had happened, she was teaching some poor woman so that she could send cakes to the woman's exchange."

"She was always nervous with horses, but she learned to drive so that she could take out all the invalids in town. She used to declare that she never could sit still long enough to knit, but I noticed from what you said awhile ago that she taught that crippled Mamie Akers a new sweater stitch. As for her books and her flowers and her fruit and preserves, you know they go all over town. She can't even go out West to see her sister without coming back and stirring us all up on behalf of the missionaries out there. If you know any life better invested than Cousin Reba's, I don't."

"I never looked at it that way," Olive said, thoughtfully.—Youth's Companion.

A Memory and a Providence

BY FRANCES E. TOWNSLEY.

Is the divine word losing its meaning among Christians? Are there, in these latter days, no "divine leadings"? Is there no "guiding of the Spirit"? Does the Father no more have use for the bow drawn at a venture in the hand of a feeble but trustful saint?

A memory comes to my mind and heart as I write. Listen! Darkness, loneliness, homesickness! It is nearly midnight, on a slow train, which is moving on thru the gloom with its freight of human planning, and hope and fear and mortal need. Business men are aboard, talking of banks and stocks; mothers soothing fretful babies with songs of home and lullabies of peace; traveling men telling jokes upon one another; ministers poring over manuscripts of sermons or addresses to be delivered on the morrow.

The train moves on and the night is darker and blacker.

"Ugh," says my traveling companion, "it is a gruesome night! Sing;" and together we begin softly, "Mid pleasures and palaces tho we may roam,
Be it ever so humble there's no place like home."

The mother hugs her baby closer, the infant's eyelids droop, and the little fingers are quiet.

"I hear Hope singing, sweetly singing, softly in an undertone,

And singing as if God had taught it—it is better farther on!"

That sad-faced man has covered his eyes. The car is quiet. "One more," I suggest, and my friend's alto joins my soprano, and we sing the prayer,

Saviour, breathe an evening blessing,

Ere repose our spirits seal;

Sin and want we come confessing,

Thou canst save and thou canst heal."

Long years pass. A weary sense of uselessness has crept over me. Is there any value in Christian profession? Any real use in trusting in the dark? Does not the sweet and good and honest fail, and the unholy and the self-seeking prosper in the earth? I am visiting a Congregational friend and pick up her paper, the Advance. A well-known man writes in it, and the providence of our Father sends to my tear-dimmed eyes his words. They tell me this: Long years ago the man was on a western bound train at a late evening hour, heart-sick, discouraged, having buried all earthly hope, and seen the desire of his eyes, and the longing of his heart utterly failed him. He has about decided that "There is no good, there is no God,

And faith is a heartless cheat

Who bares the back for the devil's rod,

And scatters thorns for the feet."

In that dark hour when he is meditating suicide, two women on the car with him begin to hum and then to sing aloud the songs of home, of hope, of a Saviour who can "save" and who can "heal." He writes of the singing as coming from those who do verily believe. Somehow that singing, of words and sentiments once dear to him, is the message of the Holy Ghost to his lonely, sinful spirit, and he dates his new life, and his unselfish service and devoted labors to the inspiration and comfort that came to him the evening he so distinctly remarked and proved as the time when we weary, lonely, homesick travelers sought to comfort somebody else on a train loaded with strangers. "After many days" came the fruitage of our tiny seed-sowing. Yes! There is a God. He is Father, Guide, Protector! Let us trust and not be afraid.

The Human Touch

In New York, years ago, a city missionary found a poor Jew. He strove to lead him to Jesus, and succeeded. In after years that Jew became a missionary himself, and a bishop of the Episcopal Church, and translated the Bible for millions of people. No one knows the name of this missionary but a few of his friends, tho thousands knew the name of the distinguished convert. Years ago, in Russia, a Catholic priest so preached that a young mechanic became a missionary, and translated the Bible twice over for two different nations, learned nineteen languages, and was a most useful man. Few ever heard of the priest, but many thousands knew of his convert. Probably no preacher ever had as great success as Mr. Spurgeon. He had had many thousands added to his church, and has established thirty-six missions in London. Yet, as he tells the story, he was converted by the preaching of an obscure preacher, whose very name is scarcely ever heard.

Japan owes the late Joseph Neesima a boundless debt of gratitude for his wise and unceasing labors for the Kingdom in his native land. But does it owe nothing to those who in this land led that student to Jesus?

It may be that God shall use you for the conversion of a Moody or a Spurgeon or a Moffat. A child can light a match that shall set a city on fire. So in spiritual things, one, tho feeble, can start a succession of causes that shall result in blessing untold millions of fellow-creatures.—Rev. A. F. Schaffner, D. D.

Denominational

† Pastor Emeritus J. J. Fink †

John Jacob Fink saw the light of this world on July 24, 1848, at Altenheim, Baden, Germany, the son of Theobald Fink and his wife Margaret, nee Fritsch. The year of his birth was a stirring one, politically, and many Germans made up their mind to go to America. When he was four years old his parents sought a new home in the United States, settling near Altheim, in St. Louis County, Mo., where the boy was educated and confirmed. During the years that followed the quiet rural surroundings deepened the convictions implanted in school and confirmation instruction. An article in the Friedensbote of March 15, 1864, by Pastor Schrenck of Evansville, Ind., calling for teachers for the parochial schools, moved him to consider this as his life-work. As yet there was no institution where such teachers could be trained, but the ball had been started rolling, and in the spring of 1871 Fink entered the seminary just opened at Evansville, removing to Elmhurst, Ill., in the fall of that year, when Melancthon Seminary, now Elmhurst College, was assumed by the Synod upon its union with the German Evangelical Synod of the Northwest.

The personalities that impressed themselves most deeply upon the life of the young student at Elmhurst were Professors Kranz, master of the art of discussion, and Weygold, whose comprehensive scholarship combined with a genius for teaching inspired his students for their future calling. Pastor Fink often spoke of his former teachers with the highest respect and appreciation. On June 24, 1873 he was graduated, his first school being that of St. Paul's Church, Pekin, Ill., where he labored faithfully and successfully until 1885. It was here also that he found a worthy helpmeet in Miss Anna M. Ehrlicher, to whom he was married in March 31, 1875, and with whom he lived a happy married life.

In 1885, in view of the great scarcity of ministers, Fink resigned the school at Pekin to enter Edin Seminary in order to prepare himself for the ministry. Completing the abbreviated course he graduated in June of the following year, and received his ordination for the ministry of the Gospel on June 18, 1886, at the hands of Pastor J. C. Kramer, assisted by the pastors F. Klick and J. Baltzer. His first charge was Salem Church, St. Louis, from where, after eleven years of successful ministry, he accepted a call to Jesus Church, in the same city, which was the field of his faithful and effective labors until June, 1912.

An attack of diphtheria, which induced a weakness of the heart and also seemed to have affected the larynx, prompted his resignation. In the fall of 1912 he removed to California hoping to find relief in the balmy climate. At first his condition improved somewhat, and he was again able to be active in the ministry, and was even chosen as president of the Pacific District for the year 1914-1915. His trouble rapidly developed into an incurable ailment, however, and in October, 1915, he returned to St. Louis, anxious to be present at the Jubilee exercises in the "heart of the Synod," where he had spent more than a quarter of a century of service. His desire was gratified, but the Master called him sooner than his friends had expected. December 11 found him still on his feet, but very weak. In the afternoon he was taken to the Deaconess Home to undergo an operation as a last resort. After barely an hour's stay, however, he passed away at the age of 67 years, four months and seventeen days. His death is mourned by the bereaved widow, three brothers-in-law and three sisters-in-law.

Of the ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God, no more is required than that they be found faithful. Faithfulness in service was the secret of Pastor Fink's success in his ministry. He has now entered into the rest that remaineth for the people of God, to experience the reward of faithfulness concerning which the Lord has given the promise: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

A memorial service was held on December 13 in Jesus Church, which was far too small to hold all the mourners. Dr. Haerberle led in prayer and read the Scripture lesson. Addresses were delivered by the Pastors H. Walz, of Salem Church, and J. Baltzer, Zion Church, in German, and Dr. W. F. Simon, Pastor

Concluded on Page 5

"Other Sheep I Have"

Jubilee Echoes from India—and a Jubilee Offering also. English Prejudice drives out Pastor Jost from Chandkuri. With three missionaries—Nottrott, Nussmann and Jost—in enforced idleness, redoubled Earnestness and Energy in providing Men and Means is imperative

The Jubilee in India

Some of our friends in America will perhaps be surprised to hear that we "Indians" got ahead of them in celebrating the Diamond jubilee of our Synod. But such is actually the case. We are always ahead by about a half a day, you know.

It was at the annual conference of the missionaries held at Mahasamudra during the month of June that plans were first made for the coming celebration. No doubt they had long before been budding in the minds of individuals, but as all the missionaries do not get together more than once or twice a year, nothing very definite could be undertaken. However, be that as it may, every one present seemed very much delighted when Pastor Goetsch extended a hearty invitation to all to come to Bismampur and celebrate the event there on the fifteenth of October,—leaving the seventeenth for a celebration with the Indian Christians at the various stations. Kindness begeth confidence. Now, please do not think that he did not have our confidence before giving the invitation, but the expression of confidence in the present instance was so enthusiastic that he not only received a hearty vote of thanks for the invitation, but was also asked to arrange the program for the entire celebration.

The confidence was not misplaced. When October 15th came, nothing had been left undone by the good "shib-log" of Bismampur to make the celebration a success. Nothing lacked nor lagged. Food, drink, entertainment and comfort, all were given in a spirit that deserved the most hearty appreciation on the part of all.

May it be interposed, that what has just been said of the arrangements for October 15th is equally true of those for the thirteenth and fourteenth. For it was on the thirteenth that most of the brethren and sisters had arrived to be present in good time for the extra conference to be held on the following day. We cannot, however, stop now to enumerate the questions discussed and the resolutions passed, but must hasten to tell about the significant event which took place in the evening of that day.

Everything seemed to go on strictly according to schedule, until one of the brethren, the tallest and lankiest of all, got up to whisper something into President Gass' ear. The worthy chairman in turn nodded and smiled in his usual ready way, and arising from his seat in a few simple words congratulated Pastor Hagenstein, in the name of all upon his twenty-fifth anniversary,—not of married life, but of faithful service to his Master and fellow Indians. Pastor Hagenstein, who had objected to a formal commemoration of his long stay in India, was now all the more touched by this simple expression of good will. Words failed him for a long flowery speech, but no one failed to catch the note of hearty appreciation from the few words that he was able to utter. A fitting climax to the whole was made when the Rev. Goetsch offered up a prayer of thanksgiving and the whole assembly followed by singing a hymn of praise.

The celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary, which took place the following morning, proved no less impressive. The weather being ideal, especially for those who like it a little warm, and the church where the services were held, being very beautifully decorated with wreaths of green leaves, could not help but arouse a jubilant spirit. And no doubt the loud halleluiahs would have risen up even more joyously, had it not been for the dark war-cloud still hanging overhead. Yet, as one of the speakers fitly said: "The Christian's jubilee need not necessarily be a loud and boisterous one."

The two speakers for the occasion were the Revs. Gass and Feirabend; the former preaching the jubilee sermon, he latter reading a paper on "The Evangelical Synod in its Jubilee-year," Rev. Gass showing the characteristics of a Christian's jubilee; Rev. Feirabend bringing forth the reasons for rejoicing at this time, and urging a greater loyalty to the Church whose foundation is the unity of the Spirit and whose corner stone is Jesus Christ.—I also will not forget to make mention of the special singing at this occasion by a ladies' trio and men's quartet. The offering is incomplete as yet, tho Rs. 500 (about $160) had come together at this writing, a result which would have been considered impossible a few years ago.

The Jubilee services will surely long continue to linger in the memory of all who had the privilege of being present. Furthermore it served to bring all to a fuller realization of the talent that God has entrusted to the members of the Evangelical Synod, and to fill each other with a greater desire to do his or her utmost in letting neither language nor creed, blood nor nationality disturb the unity of spirit,—the sum and substance of anything and everything that can ever make the Evangelical Synod of North America worthy of another Jubilee celebration. "X. X."

Evangelical Missionaries ordered out of India

The Board has been advised that the English government has decided upon the removal of all German missionaries from India, or their internment in the event that they were eligible for military duty; this proceeding has now been extended to German missionaries under the jurisdiction of neutral countries also. Our fears regarding Pastor Jost and his family, who are not naturalized American citizens and are therefore regarded as German subjects, have been realized. Pastor Jost, his wife and daughter are probably now on their way to Germany in care of British escorts, together with other German missionaries.

Under date of October 28, Pastor Jost adds to his report of October 12 the following: "On October 17, we celebrated the Evangelical Jubilee. The church, which had been gayly decorated for this joyful occasion, was filled to overflowing. My dear wife had recovered sufficiently from her recent illness so that she was able to attend also. Miss Kettler was also with us as a guest. My text for the Jubilee service was taken from Ps. 103, 1-5. It was a most joyous occasion and it gave me pleasure to tell the congregation of the good the Lord had done for our Synod and for us out here in India. In the same manner our Sunday lesson called upon us to give thanks in the afternoon service, and I implored the audience to show their gratitude by their behaviour thru life. With reference to the Jubilee offering I can report that our Christians together with the teachers brought Rs. 87, to which amount my wife and daughter, as well as myself, intend to add Rs. 50 each. It may be that our people will increase this sum later on.

"On Monday evening we held our prayer meeting, which proved a blessed one for us, and many of those present uttered sincere words of gratitude for God's mercy which enabled us to celebrate this jubilee in peace. On Thursday I had the monthly conference with the catechists and teachers. On Saturday I preached on the market place and went to the church in the afternoon to conduct the preparatory lesson for the Sunday-school. But on Sunday morning I was taken with the fever and had to ask a native helper, Joseph to deliver the sermon for me. And just as I lay sick with fever the police brought us the notification that we would have to make preparations to leave our station, our congregation, and India. I am unable to tell any one how this message affected me, the Lord only knows. But He gave us strength that we could bear this. It was only with the greatest effort that I could get up from bed to sign the necessary papers. And so we will, with God's help, get ready to go to our old country. Whatever our Lord Jesus, to whom the Father in heaven has given all power in heaven and upon earth, has determined in His holy wisdom, will be done. His kingdom is bound to come with great power and will manifest itself in India also. There may be many a struggle to be fought, but His kingdom will gain the victory, in India as every where else.

"And now I commit you to the dear and glorious Lord Jesus. My very best regards to the many dear friends of our mission. Your grateful and humble, Concluded on Page 6 J. Jost."

† Pastor Emeritus J. J. Fink †

Continued from Page 4

Fink's successor as pastor of Jesus Church in English. The writer read the obituary, and Dr. W. T. Jungk spoke the closing prayer and the benediction. Early in the evening the mortal remains were taken to Pekin, Ill., for interment. The funeral services were held at St. Paul's Church there on the afternoon of the 14th. Pastor G. W. Goebel, president of the North Illinois District, was the chief speaker; the pastors C. Hoffmann, Lincoln, Theo. Kettelht, Minonk, G. G. Press, Peoria and F. Krohne, Chicago, also took active part in the services. Pastor Goebel committed the body to its final resting-place, each of the pastors present quoting an appropriate Scripture passage. Thus does he who has been a faithful guide to salvation for many rest in his narrow chamber until the resurrection morn.

J. J. Meyer.

APPOINTED TO BEAR FRUIT

Christianity is not conforming to certain Standards of Teaching or Conduct.
It is Life and Power that seeks Natural Expression in cheerful, active Service

I

Jesus Christ never uttered more important words than those found in John 15:17. They might be called the declaration of Christian independence, for they set before us the full liberty of the children of God. Thru these words those who have found Jesus Christ are lifted up above the narrow horizon of this world and the bondage and drudgery with which the routine of its life burdens them to behold a new vision and a new task. The passage might also be called the constitution for Christian conduct. The members of that chosen group that listens to these words on that last night the Master spent with them in the flesh, have been selected with a definite purpose: they have been appointed that they should go and bear fruit, and that their fruit should abide. As the branches of the vine cannot bear fruit except they abide in the vine, so they also cannot bring forth fruit of themselves. They are able to bring forth fruit only as they abide in Him who is the true Vine. Apart from Him they can do nothing.

What it is to "Bear Fruit"

The fruit is the service the vine renders to men. It is the natural outpouring of its life into visible, tangible results, the life-blood of the plant transformed into palatable, refreshing, nourishing food. Those who have found the Master and are in such close and intimate communion with Him as the branches are with the vine are to bring forth fruit in pleasant, helpful and useful conduct and service in just the same natural manner as the branches bring forth their rich and luscious clusters. The followers of Jesus are to show forth the life that is in them by the results they accomplish. The world in which they live is to feel their influence; the people among whom they move are to experience something of the life and the power that is in them; they are, in short, to be known by their fruits. This is all the more significant and important as Jesus has at the very outset told them that "every branch in Me that beareth not fruit He taketh away." And farther on, "If a man abide not in Me he is cast forth as a branch and is withered; and they gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned." On the other hand, every branch that beareth fruit, He cleanseth it that it may bear more fruit.

The fruit then is an expression, a manifestation, of the life that is in the vine. The most obvious lesson, then, that we learn from the Master's words is that He transmits to those who associate with Him the life and the power to bring forth fruit. There are those who see in Christian discipleship merely the acceptance of certain beliefs, conformity to certain standards, or obedience to certain church rules and ordinances. To them there is little question that all who unhesitatingly accept every statement of the Bible "from cover to cover" are really Christians, without any regard to the fruit which such acceptance brings forth, or, indeed, whether it brings forth any fruit at all. In their opinion the man or woman who firmly believes that Moses wrote every word of the five books that bear his name—excepting perhaps the narrative of his death—or that Job or Jonah were actual human beings to whom the things described in the respective books actually happened, or who is firmly convinced of the virgin birth of Jesus or the resurrection of Lazarus, is a true Christian, regardless of what his conduct or the influence of his life on those around him may be. Still others accept those as true Christians who subscribe to certain creeds as the last word in the interpretation of God's revealed truth, or who think that a certain form of church organization is the only divinely appointed way of managing the affairs of the Church of Jesus Christ, without any regard as to what such an acceptance means in their own lives or those of others. Yet others class only those as real disciples of the Master who are regular in their personal and family devotions and church attendance, or avoid questionable practices or amusements and abstain from liquor or tobacco.

In mentioning these things in this connection we are by no means saying that they are not expressive of Christian life and character. We see no valid reason why Job and Jonah should not have been real men who actually had the experiences related of them, nor do we question in any way the virgin birth of Christ or the resurrection of Lazarus. But neither Jesus Christ himself nor Paul or the other apostles, nor any of the great Christian leaders who have left their impress upon the history and the achievement of the Church made the value of Christianity for mankind depend on things like these. They all knew that Christianity was life, and was to be judged by the fruit it brought forth; that it was power placed into the world for purposes of conquest, and that it was to be measured by the results it brought about. It may also be very helpful to the Christian life to be able to place one's finger on certain passages of the Augsburg Confession or the Formula of Concord, or the Thirty-nine Articles of the Westminster Confession, and say, "That is exactly what I believe," altho personally we reserve the right to subject these centuries-old documents to a searching criticism in the light of what other great and godly men, with just as much consecration to Christ and the truth, and more knowledge concerning God's word and works, have discovered in the Holy Scriptures. We also believe that the liquor and tobacco habit can work great injury to the Christian life, and we are very sure that those who abide in the Master will not only have no desire for any questionable practices of amusements, but will very naturally want to keep their close relationship with Him alive by a regular and earnest prayer-life and Bible study.

Christianity is not Belief or Form, but Life and Power

What we are not prepared to grant, however, is that any one of these things, or all of them together, are the test by which the Christian life is to be judged and measured. All of these things may be a part of the Christian life—and sometimes even a very important part—but if that is all there is of the Christian life it falls far short of the Master's requirement, "I chose you and appointed you that you should bear fruit, and that your fruit should abide." The things we have mentioned are no more capable of bearing fruit than was your Christmas tree. The Christmas tree ornaments were no doubt pretty, and perhaps even valuable, but no one would think of calling them fruit, because they were no part of the tree and its life, in fact, the tree was dead and incapable of bringing forth any fruit at all. All these things are merely external and incidental, just as the color, size or shape of the fruit is incidental. Even the fruits of the many kinds of vine differ in size, shape and color, and the Master might, without losing anything of the force of His words, have chosen any other kind of fruit-bearing plant to drive home His great lesson. The essential points are that the Master expects fruit from those who claim to be His disciples, and that they will be able to bring forth fruit only as they are united with Him as closely and firmly as the branch is united with the vine.

The real test of the Christian life is that it is really a living thing, a force and a power that "does things" and "brings results." There can be no doubt that there is real life and power in the life and the work of Jesus Christ. Those who saw and heard Him during His earthly life felt it to a degree they never forgot, and all who came into such close personal touch with Him that they may be said to abide in Him and He in them, from the apostles on down to those all who are glorifying Him to-day by the fruit they are bearing, are convincing evidence of the fact. It is the most natural thing in the world that those who have come under the influence of Jesus Christ should show forth in their lives the new power that has come into their hearts in some kind of activity; they cannot help bearing fruit because they are abiding in the Vine.

Life expressed in active Service

It is for this reason that the Church needs to provide activities for its members. To leave them without a task is to rob them of the opportunity to bring forth fruit. The Sunday-school, the young people's society, the Brotherhood and the Ladies' Aid society are but so many fields for the exercise of the life that Jesus Christ has put into the hearts of those who have received Him. And as the new year opens out before us its days and weeks can be put to no better use than that of seeking new and larger tasks for the spiritual energies which the preaching of Christ may have awakened, or for strengthening and deepening those that have already been begun. Every member in every church should feel the desire to do something, to bring forth some kind of fruit as an expression of the life which his Master has planted in his heart.

Just what that service will be depends upon the peculiar gift each one possesses, and upon the opportunities among which God has placed each one. The gifts possessed by boys and the opportunities they have differ not only from those of girls, but also from those of young men and those of maturer or older men, and the talents and opportunities of women differ very materially from those of men, and those of married women from those of young or unmarried women. The peculiar gifts of some are intellectual, while others are more practical; some have a genius for organizing, others for attracting others, still others for leadership or just plain kindness and helpfulness. It is the problem of the pastor to suit each one to the task to which he or she may be best fitted. No better guide in the solution of this problem can be found than the leaflets prepared for the Secondary and Adult divisions and the Home, Missionary and Teacher Training Departments of the Sunday-school, which may be secured free of charge from the headquarters of the International Sunday-school Association, 1416 Mallery Building, Chicago.

The essential Motive

In the practical solution of the problem, however, care must be taken to avoid one fundamental error too often committed in the undertaking of active Christian service. Whatever form of service is undertaken must be performed not for the sake of the activity, or for the purpose of achieving certain outward objects, but as a means of bringing forth fruit for the Master. If the Boy Scouts are trained to "do a good turn to somebody every day," let it be done with the understanding that that is their way of bringing forth fruit, of showing their faith in and their devotion to their Master. If the organized class undertakes some kind of activity to relieve a need, help the church or promote the welfare of the community, be sure that it is done not merely for the sake of accomplishing a worthy end, but from the point of view of bringing forth fruit for Him who is the true Vine. If a membership canvass is undertaken, or a campaign for wiping out an indebtedness, it is not the immediate aim that makes it worth while, but the service that is rendered unto Him who has appointed His followers to bear fruit. Service rendered in this spirit will not be in danger of becoming a mere feverish activity, rushing here and there for "something to do," and trying to get everything done at once, but will take time and thought to do what needs to be done in the spirit of Him who has issued the call to service. It will not seek to create opportunities for the exercise of certain activities, but will rather seek to recognize the opportunities that already exist, and to meet the particular need that presents itself by adapting service to the opportunity. And service inspired from such a motive will not be that of the busybody, minding everybody's business and in everybody's way, with nothing worth while really accomplished after all, but that of a real helper, who is able to bring forth real fruit because he is a live branch of the Vine, Jesus Christ.

A Glimpse of Religious Conditions To-day

The Questions of Policy and of Teaching may make Trouble in some Quarters, the Determination to press forward is everywhere Manifest, notably in Lay Activity and the Raising of Money

II

On January 12 there met in Philadelphia the Episcopal House of Bishops. Much apprehension exists as to the outcome. Ostensibly the meeting is called to elect a missionary bishop for South Dakota, but really it comes together to prevent, if the high church party has its way, the Episcopal Church sending delegates to the Panama Congress. This Congress is to meet in Panama in February, and will be composed of about 400 delegates from all Protestant bodies having work in Latin America. Promoters of the Congress say it will do no more than make and consider reports, leaving plans to be made by the missionary societies represented.

Apprehension obtains in the Episcopal Church at the beginning of 1916 to an extent it has not done in a generation. The quarrel over the Panama Congress matter admittedly has left deep scars. At St. Louis next October the Episcopal General Convention meets, and fear is expressed in many quarters that the differences may be carried there. Peculiarly unfortunate would it be if they were so carried, since the selection of St. Louis as place for the Convention of 1916 was due to the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of Bishop Tuttle of the Missouri diocese as Missionary Bishop of Montana, with jurisdiction over Idaho and Utah. Bishop Tuttle is now senior or presiding bishop. The year 1916 may mar Episcopal Church history, perhaps make some.

The Presbyterian Church, the large northern body, is also not without its troubles in 1916. A determined effort on the part of Western leaders has been made for some years against Union Theological Seminary, and especially against the New York Presbyterian, to prevent the latter from receiving Union graduates under its care, and admitting them to the Presbyterian ministry. The fight is to come to a head at the General Assembly next May. It may be that Dr. Francis L. Patton, former head of Princeton University, and the leader of Presbyterian orthodoxy, has made an end of the trouble by declaring, in one of the addresses on "Christianity and the modern Man," which he is delivering this winter in numerous American cities, almost identically what Union Seminary graduates have been stating in their examination answers. In his discussion of the resurrection of Christ Dr. Patton said that while he believed in the virgin birth of Jesus and the resurrection of Lazarus, he did not hold that these are essential to faith in Christ. He had never heard Christianity propagated on the basis of the resurrection of Lazarus, and he did not know that God could not incarnate himself without a virgin birth. And so, while holding to both these beliefs, he was ready to drop either if any lack of manuscript evidence called for this, and this would not touch his faith in the divinity of Christ. But the resurrection of Christ is fundamental and vital, as it is the foundation rock and central pillar of the whole structure of Christianity.

Disciples of Christ have a novel plan which they hope to head up during 1916, possibly at Des Moines next October, when the Disciples General Convention meets. It is the pledging of one thousand young men and young women to enter college in preparation for mission fields, home and foreign, and the raising of $6,000,000 for missionary and educational work. Teams have been out for more than a year advancing this plan, but have not been able to cover the Disciples churches by at least half. Nevertheless they report having pledged more than half of the college volunteers and of the money. To complete the other half is one of the big Disciples' tasks for 1916.

Jews are Active

Jews of America have just before them tremendous tasks, not perhaps to be finished in 1916 or in some years thereafter. Zionism has grown by leaps and bounds within the last twelvemonth. Jews of all ways of thinking are coming to look favorably upon the Palestine colonization idea. Such relief as Jews of America have given to Jews of Europe, and will give during 1916, the world has never seen before. Conservative, Orthodox and reform distinctions have been forgotten, and while 1916 is not likely to see any union of these different branches of Judaism, it is certain to see such co-operation in Zionism, in war relief, and in solution of the Jewish problems of the world as Judaism has not taken part in before.

The big event of the year to come, or at least of the very near future, is a Jewish Congress, held either in Washington or New York, representing every shade of Jewish belief, and almost every organization. A contest was held over democracy in the Congress, and the democratic idea won. The task of the Congress is to find out if possible how American Judaism may help to solve once for all the Jewish problem of the world and of the ages. The war coming to an end, Jews want to be part of the negotiations. And Jews of America realize that they must do what Jews of Europe cannot do. They must furnish the leaders and they must furnish the money for expenses. Dependent upon the termination of the war, 1916 is to be a big year in world Judaism.

Congregationalists and Baptists, their methods much alike, look to 1916 for an unusual growth. Both have been perfecting organizations for the last ten years. Both have followed almost the same lines of reconstruction. All interests have come together as they never came together before. Efficiency has marked every consideration. Where formerly several different agencies did one thing, now co-ordination obtains. A success for one branch of work means in 1916 success for all. It is probable that no other religious bodies are more united, or better organized, than these. Gotten into working shape, they expect such advances in 1916 along all lines as no previous twelvemonth has ever witnessed.

During the first part of 1916 Bible literature will be much in the public mind. The reason is that the American Bible Society is celebrating the close of one hundred years of remarkable effort and progress. The other great Bible society of the world, the British and Foreign, will take part in the American Society's jubilee. Meetings are to be held in many cities, with a general meeting in New York. Auxiliary societies will hold meetings, of course, and histories of Bible translation and circulation will be distributed widely. Bible circulations have been the largest in the history of the world, sales of Bibles and Testaments outstripping easily and always all of the best sellers in other literature together.

Lutherans of the United States, all of the many branches, are preparing to celebrate in 1917 the four hundredth anniversary of the protests made by Martin Luther, and the nailing of those protests to the door of the Castle Church at Wittenberg. The year 1916 is to be a year of Lutheran preparation. A part of the preparation will be efforts on the part of Lutherans to induce other Protestants to enter into the 1917 celebrations. Luther's bold step at Wittenberg made him the father of the German Reformation and the great figure of Protestantism. The plan is to form one central committee on the celebration, and get it into working shape during 1916.

Laymen to the Front

The year 1916 is to be the era of the Church layman. The Laymen's Missionary Movement, easily twice as successful in 1915-16 as in 1909, is to hold conventions to the end of April, but it is by no means all of the laymen's projects. This year's Movement conventions, starting with Houston, Texas, on January 19, will conclude with a National Congress in Washington, April 26 to 30. Conventions are scheduled for New Orleans, Minneapolis and St. Paul, Birmingham, Newark, San Francisco, Los Angeles, El Paso and other cities. Vast numbers of laymen, men of large business and professional affairs, are attending these conventions. They will easily be the feature of the first three months of the new year.

Laymen project plans to help many lines of Christian effort besides missions, and the year 1916 has in store for it the putting of a large number of these plans into effect. Plans include better business methods for Christian work, the use and welfare of the average man rather than the pushing of machinery, extension for religious education, some of it on the so-called Gary plan, and a tremendous advance, if anything like all ambitions are realized, of Christian service for labor, unemployment, health, morals, temperance and most forms of social reform. Everybody regards the upheaval of old ideas, brought on by the war, as opportune time to sow new seed. The year 1916 is to be a time of seed sowing, therefore, and in this sowing laymen are to take such part as they have not taken heretofore.

The thing, however, for which 1916 is likely to be most note-worthy, is money raising. The Salvation Army wants $500,000, Y. M. C. A.'s will ask for $10,000,000 in various fields of the country, the missionary societies are to announce bigger plans than ever before, hospitals of many cities plan financial campaigns, great churches, like the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian, New York, are ready to launch endowment campaigns, and there will be needed millions of dollars for European war relief. The benevolent minded man and woman, if known, is likely to receive in 1916 such piles of financial appeals as will stagger records of all earlier years together. Men and women are actually in training schools, learning how to enter business offices, put up financial pleas, and walk out with signed pledges. If the benevolent record of 1916 does not beat that of 1915 two-fold at least, then all signs fail.

Evangelical Missionaries ordered out of India

Continued from Page 4

It was at first feared that Pastor Hagenstein had received similar notice. In his quarterly report, mailed in October, he had briefly requested the Board's permission to go on furlough to America. He gave no reasons for this request, and it was thought that he also had been given a hint to leave the country in order to avoid being interned or, like Pastor Jost, deported to Germany. Pastor Hagenstein had been in India for over twenty-five years, and is greatly respected by the natives of his territory. As he has been vice-president of the circuit court for many years, it seemed probable that the government did not wish to remove him forcibly, or to have the fact of his being ordered to leave the country made known.

Later advices, however, (received Dec. 30), are to the effect that Pastor Hagenstein is still in India, and there seems to be no reason just now to fear that he will be deported. Pastor Hagenstein reports that his school work is progressing. "After the rainy season," he writes, "I visited a number of the schools and was glad to see them in so flourishing a condition. All were well attended, everywhere I was greeted by Christian hymns sung to native tunes. After a lengthy controversy the matter of using Christian text-books in our schools has been settled favorably. Of this I am especially glad, and grateful to God for the turn matters have taken, as I had made it a matter of much prayer.

"The number of pupils in my schools is now 1,100, and still more may be expected. Only a few days ago a request came to me from one of the villages for the opening of a school there; the people were ready to help build the school and support the teacher. Under these conditions I have promised to send a teacher when the rice harvest is over."

Pastor Jost's farewell to his people was very touching. One of those present writes: "Many innocent persons, missionaries as well as natives, wept bitterly at the parting, and tears like these must bring the judgments of God upon those who caused them. All things must work together for good to them that love Him, and days like these bring us still nearer to God and make us put our trust in Him still more earnestly. But those who have caused this trouble will certainly be punished unless they repent. To many God's kingdom is not an important matter, but it is very important to Him."

Are not these tears, wept by the native Christians of India at parting from their missionary, pastor, physician, friend and counselor abundant evidence that our work in India has not been in vain? "You have come to us in the name of the Lord," they tell us, "you have comforted us, have awakened and nourished our spiritual life—now do not leave us alone! Keep the work going! Send us new messengers! Do not cease coming over to help us!" This is undoubtedly the mind of all the missionaries in India.

Concluded on Page 8

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

January 30, 1916. Fourth Sunday after Epiphany

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

12 GREAT FOREIGN MISSIONARIES

- M. Jan. 24. Paul: Traveller. 2 Cor. 11: 16-33.
 T. Jan. 25. Peter: Pioneer. Acts 10: 7-23.
 W. Jan. 26. Barnabas: Comforter. Acts 9: 23-30.
 T. Jan. 27. Titus: Organizer. Tit. 1: 5-16.
 F. Jan. 28. John: Conqueror. John 3: 11.
 S. Jan. 29. Apollos: Orator. Acts 18: 24-28.

Sun. Jan. 30. Topic—Great Foreign Missionaries.
 2 Cor. 8: 16-23.

Suggestions to the Leader

This meeting offers an excellent opportunity to make use of all the missionary items published in our various Evangelical papers, such as The Herald, The Evangelical Tidings, The Evangelical Companion, and Junior Friend. Also make use of the copies of Our Work, and The Mission Sunday. All these papers ought to be on file in the library of the society and Sunday-school. There is an abundance of material published from week to week. For studies in the Life of Raymond Lull, see the number of the Evangelical Companion dated, January 30. As the Companion is always mailed about ten days ahead of the date it bears, the copies of that issue will probably have arrived.

Let the news contained in each paper be read by some one in the department for which the paper is intended. Thus you can call on all the departments of the Sunday-school to contribute some missionary information.

Make much of this meeting by preparing it well, and by securing the co-operation of as many as you can possibly enlist for service.

The Topic Presented

It will not be possible to give many biographies of missionaries at one meeting. If the plan given above is not followed, then assign the names of different missionaries to different ones and let each one present some biographical notes on the character assigned to him. And let us not forget our own men and women in the service. Perhaps we know some of our missionaries personally. This will be an opportunity to tell the society what you know about them.

We republish here brief notes on the lives of great missionaries taken from "The Endeavorer's Daily Companion." These notes may be made the basis of more extended remarks.

Glorious Missionaries

When John E. Clough, the great Baptist missionary to India, was asked by the Board what he would do if they decided not to send him, he replied. "Then I must find some other way to go."

Judson Collins, pioneer Methodist missionary to China, begged to be sent. "Engage me a place before the mast," he said, "and my own strong arm will pull me to China and support me while there."

The Presbyterian missionary, Dr. H. N. Allen, was the first Protestant missionary to reside in Korea. For his safety he was made physician to the United States Legation, but he soon won a great reputation by tending the wounds of a native prince.

William Murray, the missionary to the blind of China, was a simple Scotch postman who became a colporter and was seized with pity for the half million of poor blind men in that great empire. He invented a wonderful system by which the blind can master the difficult language in six weeks.

Matilda Rankin, the pioneer missionary to Mexico, was a school teacher who raised money herself, established a mission school which she taught, and sent out Bible distributors for twenty years.

When Robert McAll began his splendid mission work in France he knew only two French sentences, "God loves you," and "I love you." Now there are about a hundred McAll missions in France.

Jonas King, the first Protestant missionary to Greece, was haled before the Areopagus, and fifty men bound themselves together to kill him. A mob assailed his house and he was saved only by unfurling the American flag.

Hans Egede, of Norway, the pioneer missionary to Greenland, labored for thirteen years amid all kinds of ridicule and opposition before he could rouse his countrymen to send him to Greenland for its conversion.

At one time, when George Dana Boardman was laboring in Burma, his lonely house was plundered of all its valuables, and murderous eyes watched him and his wife thru great slits cut in the curtains of their bed.

When William Goodell went to Turkey as missionary of the American Board, a great fire burned his books and other property at the very start, fierce persecutions assailed his converts, and he passed thru a plague which claimed from six to ten thousand victims weekly.

Some Questions on the Topic

What foreign missionary seems to you especially notable?

What characterizes most foreign missionaries?

What are the rewards of foreign missionaries?

Name our missionaries in India.

Why are our missionaries at present in need of our prayers?

Some Scripture on the Topic

1 Chron. 16: 23; Psalm 18: 49; 96: 3, 10; Isa. 43: 6; Jonah 3: 1-9; Matt. 28: 19; 1 Cor. 16: 9; Rev. 14: 6, 7.

A Prayer

We thank Thee, O Christ, that Thou dost constantly prove Thyself to be the King of kings, and Lord of lords, the ruler over all the earth. We thank Thee for the great victories Thy servants have won in the years past. We thank Thee for the awakening of Thy Church to a full realization of her duties and responsibilities towards the non-Christian inhabitants of the earth. We would ask Thee to teach us how to pray effectively "Thy Kingdom Come." May we understand that only thru the self-surrender of Thy followers, and personal consecration of Thy disciples can this world be won for Thy heavenly kingdom. Give us love to labor, faith to persevere, hope to triumph in the end. We would remember, especially, our own men and women who are working in distant India. May they not grow weary, but grow stronger in their faith in the ultimate triumph. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson Material for the Second Year: New Testament Studies—the Messianic Era and the Apostolic Era.

Lessons for the First Quarter, 1916

- Lesson 1. Jan. 2. Between the Testaments; Dan. 2: 31-45.
 Lesson 2. Jan. 9. The Origin and purpose of the Gospels; John 1: 1-14; Luke 1: 1-4.
 Lesson 3. Jan. 16. The Growing Jesus; Luke 2: 40-52.
 Lesson 4. Jan. 23. The Voice Crying in the Wilderness; Matt. 3: 1-12.
 Lesson 5. Jan. 30. At the Gateway of Service; Matt. 3: 13-17; 4: 1-11; Mark: 9-13.
 Lesson 6. Feb. 6. Beginnings in Judea; John 2: 13-25.
 Lesson 7. Feb. 13. A Woman Lost in Sin; John 4: 27-30; 39-42.
 Lesson 8. Feb. 20. Beginnings in Galilee; Luke 4: 14-31.
 Lesson 9. Feb. 27. Teaching with Authority; Matt. 5: 1-16; 7: 28, 29; Luke 6: 20-26.
 Lesson 10. Mar. 5. Miracles of Jesus, I; Luke 8: 22-56.
 Lesson 11. Mar. 12. Miracles of Jesus, II; John 5: 17-31; 20: 30-31.
 Lesson 12. Mar. 19. Parables of Jesus; Matt. 13: 10-17.
 Lesson 13. Mar. 26. The Arising Opposition; John 6: 60-71.

Lesson 5. At the Gateway of ServiceDAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Jan. 24. Matt. 3: 13-4: 11 At the Gateway of Service.
 T. Jan. 25. Mark 9: 9-13. The Story as Recorded by Mark.
 W. Jan. 26. Luke 3: 21, 22; 4: 1-13. The Account of Luke.
 T. Jan. 27. John 1: 31-34. The Testimony of an Eye-witness.
 F. Jan. 28. Heb. 4: 14-16. The High-priest Tempted Like as we Are.
 S. Jan. 29. Deut. 8: 1-10. The Sword Used in the First Encounter.
 S. Jan. 30. Deut. 6: 10-19. The Swords Used in the Second and Third Encounters.

Lesson Key: "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life as a ransom for many," Matt. 20: 28.

The baptism of Jesus marks the beginning of His public life. During the thirty years of private life He had been fully prepared for the great task that was appointed for Him, and heart and mind and will had ripened and grown strong, so that He not only knew all that the task involved, but was also fully determined to enter upon it and fulfill it with all the energy and ability at His command. Here at the Jordan the old and the new dispensation meet. "John, the last prophet of the Old Testament, is the representative of the old dispensation. His baptism points out the supreme purpose of all Old Testament institutions. Neither the law nor the sacrifices could grant salvation, but those who have sincerely sought to fulfill their duties toward God have learned thereby that they need a Saviour, and they make this declaration by accepting John's baptism. By requesting this baptism for himself Jesus establishes the direct connection between His work and the old covenant. He has come, not to found a new religion, but to fulfill the promises of God, to gain for mankind the righteousness demanded by the old dispensation, but sought in vain thru its instruments." A new and far-reaching step in advance is taken in the eternal plan of the ages when Jesus of Nazareth stepped down into the water of the Jordan. And John's ministry also was practically completed, when He who came to the river as "the carpenter's son of Nazareth" ascended the bank as the Messiah, and the voice of God from heaven proclaimed Him His beloved Son. At the very height of his fame John suddenly lifted his hand and pointed to "the Lamb of God." Recognizing Him who was greater than he, John at once made way for Him with heroic self-effacement, taking the second place.

"Straightway," Mark tells us, "the Spirit driveth Him forth into the wilderness." There was not a moment's delay before taking up the momentous struggle against the prince of darkness and the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places. No doubt Jesus was eager to meet His great adversary, and had very probably made the preparations for the conflict, tho He may not have known just how Satan would make his attack. But He was ready nevertheless, and it is more than likely that even the forty days' fast has not only not weakened His powers of resistance, but has even strengthened His purpose and intensified His determination to win at any cost.

And Satan goes right to the heart of the matter. "Jesus is looking forward to establishing the kingdom of God. He is tempted to establish it by making stones bread,—i. e., to achieve His purpose by ministering to men's temporal ambitions and fleshly needs. He is tempted to achieve power by casting himself down from the pinnacle,—i. e., to dazzle men's eyes, and enchain them by His brilliant command of the forces which other men cannot control. He is tempted to achieve pre-eminence by worshipping the prince of this world,—i. e., by compromising with evil and using its enormous and fascinating powers to advance His own ends."

Note also how Jesus overcomes the temptation which thus subtly approaches Him. He is not content with defending himself, with merely watching the beginnings, with praying instantly and earnestly, nor even with taking His stand armed with the whole armor of God. He meets the adversary directly with an attack, the most effectual strategy in all warfare. In each of the three temptations He thrust the tempter thru with a dart fresh from God's own quiver. And the devil had to give up, at least for a season. And in the matter of meeting and overcoming Satan Jesus Christ is ready to help any one who comes to Him.

The story is told of a man who once came to Mr. Finney, the famous lawyer-evangelist and said: "I don't believe in the existence of a devil."

"Don't you?" said the evangelist. "Well, you resist him for a while and you will believe in it."

Sunday School ProgressSunday School Hall Dedicated

A much cherished wish was realized and a much felt need met, when on Sunday, Dec. 12th, 1915, the good people of Trinity Evangelical Church, Mt. Vernon, Indiana, were privileged to dedicate a new modern Sunday-school hall.

The new hall is connected with the church in such a manner, that, if need be, both rooms can be used as one and thus afford a seating capacity for 700 to 800 persons. In the new hall there is a spacious basement, first floor with a number of class rooms, minister's study, ladies parlor, and assembly room. In addition to all this there is also a balcony on which separate class rooms are to be arranged later on. The cost of the new building is about $13,000.00.

Dedicatory services were held on Sunday, Dec. 12, 1915. There were four services. The speakers were: Rev. Paul Pfeiffer, Evansville; Prof. S. D. Press, St. Louis; F. Daries, Caborn; J. U. Schneider, Ph. D., Evansville, and W. F. Mehl, Louisville.

Wm. F. Mehl.

Teacher Training Diplomas Awarded

Interesting graduation services were held at Zion Evangelical Church, Steubenville, Ohio, (G. H. Freund, pastor) on Sunday evening, December 12th, 1915. Six young ladies who had completed a course in Teacher Training received their diplomas. Dr. J. D. Darling, Secretary of the Ohio State Sunday School Association delivered an earnest and inspiring address which was well received by an appreciative congregation. The consecration service for all the teachers of the Sunday-school as led by the pastor was very impressive. Both school and church have greatly benefitted by his service. We believe that such a service emphasizes the opportunities and responsibilities of a Sunday-school teacher. Such an emphasis is always helpful for the sake of the teacher as well as for the members of the congregation. The office of the Sunday-school teacher needs to be elevated and dignified.

Evangelical Missionaries ordered out of India

Concluded from Page 6

Letters received on December 30, last from six of our workers, earnestly plead for more additional missionaries. One of the writers repeats the statement often made during the past year, "The attitude of the natives toward us has in no way changed; they are just as cordial as they were before." In view of the critical situation now facing the missionaries in India, Pastor Gass, president of the conference, most urgently requests the Board to send two young missionaries of American birth at the earliest possible moment.

The request of the Board for more workers immediately is a most serious matter, and at the present time the Board is unable to determine the correct solution of the problem. But the Board considers the publication of this request a duty towards their brethren in India, and a special duty towards the three brethren who have devoted an entire life time to a work which they are now compelled to relinquish against their will and desire. Is their blessed work to be jeopardized? Is it not imperative, in order to keep what we have attained in all these years to fill these vacancies, especially if the Lord should prevail upon one or the other to say: "Here am I, send me!"

On the other hand we have a right to ask: "Who will guarantee that the British government will not take another step and deport our American-born missionaries, because they suspect them of German sympathies? This is quite possible. However, as far as our missionaries are concerned, we have no reason to fear the probability, or even the possibility, of endangering their lives, on account of the political situation. Naturally our missionaries do not write anything about the political situation, but if they were worried about their personal safety they would not, in every letter they write, continue to assure us of their uninterrupted ability to work. In such a case they would surely not request the sending out of new missionaries.

And, last of all, is it not our duty as Christians and friends of the missionary cause, to think first and foremost of God's work, despite all human doubts? The entire history of our mission shows how wonderfully the Lord has guided us to this day. We are in India because the Lord has led us there. And we believe that the Lord stands above those who, blinded by greed and arrogance, have presumed to hinder His holy work and to "lay hands on His saints and servants." Our anger is human. God, however, desires that we and all friends of the mission should not lose faith in Him and His holy guidance. Patience of the Saints,—we need it just now. Remain steadfast and do not despair under all these difficulties. All these latest news from our mission in India, should cause us to pray more earnestly for wisdom and determination to do His will regardless of our personal feelings. Therefore, remember our mission work and our Board.

E. Schmidt, General Secretary, GES. Tr.

Our Finances

Sometime ago we told you of the depleted condition of our treasury. The free will offerings for our foreign work had decreased so dreadfully that instead of remitting $21,000.00 on July 1 we were able to send only $11,763.81, little more than half of the amount, or to be exact fifty-six per cent of the necessary sum. Only those able to place themselves in the position of our sisters and brethren in our mission field, can realize fully the seriousness of the situation as expressed by these simple figures. No possibility to obtain relief elsewhere; communication with the home land affected only with immense difficulties; no reliable or definite news regarding the war; sad prospects for the future, and in connection herewith the worry how to provide for the days to come and how to continue the work. All of this causes great anxiety and it is our duty to relieve the missionaries of material need, at the very least.

We have not planned any increase either for the current or for the coming year. Our expenses have been cut down to the lowest notch, but what we now have should and must be retained. Our obligations must be met and for this reason we must again and again urge our friends not to cease in their giving so that the hands of our missionaries may be filled. We do not ask for special gifts, we only ask that you give what you gave before, not less than heretofore, then we will be taken care of.

We are glad to be able to report a ray of light: During the past four months we can report an improvement. We should have sent $35,000.00 by November 1, but have been able to remit only $24,000.00, leaving a shortage of about $11,000.00. This deficit has been increased by $1,607.00 since July 1, but the percentage shows an improvement. The money so far remitted aggregates sixty-nine per cent of the total, against fifty-six per cent on July 1.

May the Lord grant that this increase may continue, for we are still praying for the missing $11,000, which sum is augmented by the $4,000 deficit of the previous year, due to scarcity of gifts owing to the war and other conditions. This deficit is a heavy burden on our shoulders, and for this reason we ask you most cordially and urgently: Help us, help soon, and help freely; let every one do what he is able to do that this care may be removed from our hearts.

H. Manrodt, GES. Tr.

This and That

As already announced the new monthly for our Sunday-school teachers, "The Evangelical Teacher" will devote a separate column to our mission work. It gives us pleasure to announce that Rev. M. P. Davis, for a time at least, has undertaken the editing of this department.

Prospects for a good harvest in our territory in India have been corroborated by two other missionaries, the Pastors Hagenstein and Twente. It is easily conceivable what a load has been removed from the shoulders of our workers out there thru this knowledge, and the congregations out there are also grateful for this prospective blessing.

We learn with deep regret that Dr. Alfred Nottrott, the oldest son of the venerable Pastor Nottrott, who has done so much for the Gossner mission, has found his death before Lodz. Even this severe loss has not been able to lessen the aged father's love and activity for mission work in India. Despite his seventy-eight years Dr. Nottrott has expressed the desire to return to India after the war, there to reorganize the Gossner mission. "Such a desire" remarks a friend of the cause, "should help to remove all doubts regarding our own work."—It is with much satisfaction that we learn that all women members of the Gossner mission, together with the male contingent, who have passed their forty-fifth year, are now on their way to Germany, after having spent a long time in detention camps. Among these is the mother, three sisters and a brother-in-law of Mrs. Nottrott, of Bismarck, and the mother, sister and brother-in-law (with children) of our missionary, Mrs. Nussmann. Another brother-in-law of Mrs. Nottrott, who has not passed the forty-fifth year is still in the military camp at Ahmednagar.

The departure of Miss Wobus, and Miss Rose Baur, who will become Mrs. Koenig upon her arrival in India, who have left their homes, St. Charles and St. Louis, Mo., respectively, on December 29, emphasizes the confidence which the missionaries themselves feel in spite of the unfavorable situation. Miss Wobus writes in regard to her returning to India at the present time, "I had heard so much from many well-meaning people who wanted to keep me from going back, that really I did not know what to think. For this reason I visited.....who are unusually well informed on the war and the conditions in India. Both of them were so heartily in favor of my returning to India, and that immediately, that I rejoiced inwardly. I have no fear whatever, and would much rather go than remain here. Miss Baur thinks just as I do. Our papers, passes, etc., are all arranged for. It is really tragic that no one is willing to go out to India where the workers are now doubly necessary. For the younger missionaries it is no doubt hard to remain at their lonely posts, especially in view of the steadily increasing work. I do not think that we should retrench, or limit our work in any way. We must hold what we have and better times will come."

Miss Wobus and Miss Baur left San Francisco on January 8 on the Japanese steamer "Tenyo Maru," and expect to arrive in Hong Kong about a month later. May the Lord protect and keep them on their journey, and guide them safely to their destination.

P. A. M.

Robert J. Thompson

American Consul, Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany.

(Resigned)

England and Germany in the war

Letters to the Department of State

127 pages with the Author's portrait

Net Postpaid $1.00

This book comprises a series of letters addressed to the Secretary of State by Mr. Robert J. Thompson, recently American Consul at Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany, who resigned from his post, as the letters explain, purposely to be free from official restrictions in reporting facts of the European war situation as he has found them.

Thompson's letters were first printed serially in the Chicago Tribune, from February 14 to February 21, 1915. This great newspaper claimed for that period the largest circulation it had had since the beginning of the war, attributing this gain to Mr. Thompson's letters. They created a sensation and much comment.

The letters set forth that their author is not pro-German by predilection or inclination; rather that ties of blood, friendship, sentiment and intimate personal relation bind him to England and France; in view of which he submits that his conclusions in favor of Germany were forced upon him directly against his personal inclinations.

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CHANGED ADDRESSES

Rev. D. J. Heimkamp, 405 Wooster Ave., Dover, Ohio. (No longer called Canal Dover.)

Rev. J. H. Jahn, 528 E. 2nd St., Faribault, Minn.

Rev. J. Lebart, 3616 5th Ave., Sacramento, Cal.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., JANUARY 27th, 1916

NUMBER 4

Full Returns make still better Showing

At the close of the first section of the National Missionary Campaign, December 12, and before the accurate figures from all the conventions were in, we estimated the total attendance, on the basis of the figures that were available, at 30,000, half afraid, however, that this figure would have to be scaled down somewhat when all the reports should be in. Now, however, the complete reports from the first twenty-two conventions of the campaign held between Oct. 12 and Dec. 12 show a total of 34,325 registered delegates. In sixteen of the twenty-two cities, conventions were held in the campaign of six years ago. At that time the registered delegates for these sixteen cities numbered 17,813. The total for the same cities for the conventions of the present year was 26,762, an increase of 8,949 delegates, or more than fifty-two per cent. The conventions thus far held have been mainly in the eastern and middle western cities and have been marked by a rising tide of interest and spiritual power. The conventions beginning this week will be held in the South, the Northwest, and on the Pacific Coast, as well as in the East and the Middle West. In the majority of the forty-seven cities that will have conventions until the middle of April, conventions were held in the campaign of 1909-10, when the registration was about 70,000. If the same rate of increase continues as in the conventions of the autumn, the registration will exceed 110,000. Reports thus far received indicate great interest, and the work of preparation is well advanced.

"One of the striking characteristics of most of the discussions by thoughtful men concerning the campaign," according to Men and Missions, "has been the question of properly conserving the results."

"Everything possible is being done by those responsible for the campaign to make the most of the unusual opportunity. No doubt, as is ever true, some of the seed will fall by the wayside and will not come to fruitage, but there are increasing evidences that the minds and hearts of men are prepared and receptive in an unusual way, and that there is a seriousness among men and an eagerness to move forward which promise large permanent results.

"There is a multitude of purely personal results. A stream of testimony is coming to the leaders of the Movement of life purposes formed, of new standards of consecration reached, of old enemies vanquished, of wider and more effective service rendered.

"Many churches are organizing their first canvass as a result of the conventions. Seed sown in former campaigns is being quickened into life in many places. Many special gifts have been secured for needy fields, often a single subscription amounting to more than the cost of the convention. In the aggregate these gifts will represent a large sum.

"The public conscience is being quickened. The constant repetition of the fact that the business of the nation is the service of mankind will have its effect upon large masses of men and the tone of American life will inevitably be invigorated and uplifted by the wide-spread hearing of the missionary message, with its national and international, as well as personal significance and power. The results to the churches are bound to be large."

During February conventions will be held at Atlanta, Ga., 2-6; Spokane, Wash., 6-9; Seattle, Wash., and Dayton, O., 9-13; Portland, O. and Richmond, Va., 13-16; San Francisco, Cal., 20-23; Evansville, Ind., 23-25; Indianapolis, Ind. and Los Angeles, Cal., 27-March 1. Evangelical people in these cities will see that they receive their share of inspiration and help from these conventions.

Moral Advance in 1915

Since there can be no true National progress without an advance in the moral conditions of the people, the inquiry as to whether such an advance has taken place in the year just past is not only interesting but also instructive and stimulating. At the outset, however, it should be borne in mind that the facts and conditions indicating moral advance in a nation of nearly 100,000,000 people of extremely varying conditions, tastes and ideals such as the United States harbors, are uncertain and elusive, and subject to different interpretations. What seems to be moral

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

If you and I, just you and I,
Should laugh instead of worry;
If we should grow, just you and I,
Kinder and sweeter hearted,
Perhaps in some near by and by
A good time might get started;
Then what a happy world 'twould be
For you and me for you and me!
—Selected.

advance to one person from his point of view may appear to be the very opposite to another. Laws that have been passed in the effort to aid a moral advance are not always conclusive evidence that a step forward has actually been taken, since laws may be ill-advised, short-sighted or non-enforceable, and even the best laws may be rendered void by non-enforcement. Nevertheless the passage of laws aiming at the improvement of moral conditions is in itself evidence of a determination on the part of the people to abolish wrong moral conditions, and may therefore be regarded as a hopeful sign. If the laws are inadequate, or are not enforced, the problems involved are subjects for further investigation and study.

The conditions in San Francisco during the Panama-Pacific Exposition, to which attention has repeatedly been called in these columns, have helped to impress the country with the seriousness of the problem of commercialized vice and the need of increased Federal control and vigilance along the lines inaugurated by the Mann act. The commercial influences that can be brought to bear are too intimate and powerful for city administrations to meet adequately, unless public sentiment is sufficiently aroused in the matter and has the means at hand to make its influence immediately felt, conditions, however, that cannot be said to exist in most American cities. But even at San Francisco, where the vicious influences of the Nation had gathered for a season of unexampled revelry, a remarkable showing was made in regard to missing girls. Police reports show the department has not in a single instance failed to locate any of the 153 girls reported missing, and it is not improbable that the things that have been written about the city and its administration will help to stir up the people to a stronger campaign against all the immorality for which it has long been notorious. From Los Angeles a marked moral quickening is reported, largely due to an awakening social conscience. The red light abatement law has brought some desirable changes because favorable public sentiment brought almost absolute enforcement. The enactment and enforcement of anti-gambling and anti-prize fight laws shows progress. In Spokane the abatement law was vigorously enforced by a committee of ministers and laymen; several immoral hotels were fined and closed, and public officials have begun to show a different spirit toward the social evil and law enforcement. Seattle has also made a conspicuous record in law enforcement, pushing for public utilities, cleansing public places of immorality, and in punishing men preying on unfortunate classes. The Times, Seattle's great newspaper, seems to have undergone a transformation as a result of having heard the voice of the people, and now stands for what makes the city clean and contented.

In Chicago the red light district is claimed to be practically eliminated. Commercialized vice is being rapidly driven out by action against owners of real estate used for immoral purposes. In Topeka local charities have been brought into systematic work under a city board representing all local philanthropic bodies. The tuberculosis death-rate has been greatly reduced, a new department of child hygiene organized in connection with the state board of health, and a juvenile detention home established. In Detroit the mayor's appointment of a vigilance committee to censor theaters, a stricter surveillance of vice conditions, a more careful enforcement of Sunday laws, and a quickening of the public conscience as reflected by the public press indicates a moral advance. In Indianapolis the passage of the state abatement and injunction law closed about twenty-five immoral houses.

In Baltimore the advocates of social revolution and social reform have been brought into better understanding of the churches and Christian people by the opening of a Protestant Episcopal church at the evening services as an "open forum" for the discussion of public questions. Evidences of a moral advance in Pittsburg are the evident awakening of the civic and social conscience of Christian people, due in part to the work of the Christian social service union. By surveys, investigations, publicity and agitation it has brought to the attention of the Christian people of the city the political corruption and commercialized vice and aroused them to fight. In Rochester also united Christian ministers and laymen manifested more active, intelligent and conscientious interest in matters pertaining to civic purity, political righteousness and general public welfare than in many years. In Washington, D. C., the year has seen distinct improvement in the housing problem and the sanitation of the poorer districts, and the completion of plans for the erection of many model tenements. In Boston the machine of partisan politics met crushing defeat at recent city elections, all good government candidates being elected.

The above outline does not claim to be complete, nor does it aim to prove that the forces of uplift are everywhere in the ascendancy. It only attempts to call attention to a few of the outstanding indications of moral progress in many different parts of the country, so that those who are interested in these movements, as all Christian people naturally are, may remain steadfast and immovable amid the discouragements that may come to them locally or personally, knowing that their labor is not in vain in the Lord.

Many of our readers are telling us how they enjoy reading the paper. Most of the others enjoy it just as much without telling us about it. ALL have friends or neighbors who would enjoy it just as much as they do. Tell THEM how you enjoy the paper. SEND US THEIR NAMES AND ADDRESSES BY FEB. 1, 1916, and the publishers will send them three consecutive numbers. Many who are not readers will thus receive a copy. READ IT THRU AND GET THE HABIT. You can't invest a dollar to better advantage. Address all requests for sample copies, and all orders and remittances to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716-18 CHOUTEAU AVE., ST. LOUIS, MO.

The Growth of the New Life

"As therefore ye received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk in Him, rooted and builded up in Him, and established in your faith, even as ye were taught, abounding in thanksgiving," Col. 2: 6, 7.

Life means growth, and if the new life given by God in baptism is real life it must and will grow, just as all other life does, in its own way. It is the duty of parents to nurture the growing Christian life of their children i. e., to train and educate them toward godliness by means of wise and faithful precept and example; to see that they obtain a knowledge of the facts and truths of the Bible; to teach them to pray by praying with them, and to encourage their regular and intelligent attendance at the public services of worship. The more earnestly the parents strive to give their children an object lesson in practical, consecrated Christian living, the more effectively will they be able to foster the growth of a Christian life and character in their children, even tho appearances should sometimes be against their efforts. Parents who do not, by education and instruction, by prayer and example promote the growth of the new life in their baptized children neglect their most sacred responsibility as well as their most glorious opportunities.

Christian Character the Aim of Nurture

Just as the care for the physical growth of the child aims to lead the child toward maturity and independence, so the Christian nurture in the chastening and admonition of the Lord aims to lead the child to that point in the growth of the Christian life when it will be able to make a voluntary decision for accepting Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord. They are not only to receive the new life, as something that is given to them without any effort of their own, they are to make use of it consciously in all the practical affairs of every-day life. It is this that St. Paul has in mind when he admonishes the members of the Church at Colossae to walk in Christ, to be rooted and builded up in Him and to be established in the faith in which they had been taught. To walk in Christ means to go forward in His spirit; to live according to His principles and to seek the goal that He had in view. To be rooted and builded up in Him means to be so firmly grounded in Christ as the forest trees are fixed in the soil, thereby getting from it the nourishment they need for their increase in strength. The giant cedar or oak that has driven its roots down deep into the earth stands so firm that practically nothing is able to dislodge it from its place. The lightning may destroy, and the fire may consume, and it may die of old age, but it cannot be moved or uprooted. Thus firmly may the new life given in baptism be fixed in the life of Jesus Christ and receive from Him the strength to grow firm and strong enough to withstand the vicissitudes of life. To be established in the faith means to stand secure in the unshakable conviction of divine truth, to have not merely the belief but the experience of the power of Jesus Christ to save and to sustain. The aim of Christian education, whether in the home, the school or the Sunday-school must always be to enable the children to stand for themselves as Christian characters, to make their own decisions in the spirit and mind of Jesus Christ, so that they may, as Christian men and women stand up firmly and faithfully for Him and work together with Him in the accomplishment of the will of God.

It is because the Evangelical Church desires to aid its members in such a process of nurture that she holds fast to the practice of providing Christian instruction for those children who reach the age of early adolescence, where the formation of character begins, and practices the rite of confirmation. To confirm means to strengthen, establish, ratify or assure. Because our children are baptized in infancy, without conscious action on their part, the baptismal covenant entered into thereby needs to be ratified by them as soon as they are able to realize the meaning of baptism. A covenant is a mutual pledge of faithfulness. In baptism God has promised to the child His love and mercy, and parents and sponsors have pledged the child's faithfulness and obedience. In confirmation the young people who have been baptized as infants voluntarily ratify and assume the pledges made by their parents or sponsors.

How Confirmation Helps

Naturally only those children can be confirmed who have been baptized and instructed in Bible facts and teachings and carefully prepared for the step they are about to take. They should fully understand the need and the meaning of conversion and what surrender to Jesus Christ as an act of the heart and the will implies. The aim is by no means a forced or precocious spirituality—young people at the age of decision are by no means able to grasp the whole content of Christian teaching—but to make the impression of the love of God in Christ and the need of wholly yielding one's self to Him as deep and lasting as possible.

After careful and thoro preparation the confirmands are to publicly confess their faith. This confession is usually preceded in Evangelical churches by public examination which aims to show, as far as this is possible, that the children realize and know what they are about to do. By their confession during the act of confirmation the young people declare their acceptance of the faith in the triune God upon which they have been baptized and in which they have been instructed, as their own for time and eternity.

The confirmation pledge is followed by the confirmation prayer spoken by the confirmands:

"Come, God, Holy Spirit, into our hearts and make them Thine own for time and eternity. Do Thou confirm and ratify all our promises, and help us both to will and to work, as long as we live in this world. Do Thou keep each one of us that none may be lost. And if any one of us should ever stray away from Thee into the ways of sin and the world, do Thou seek him and bring him back, Lord Jesus, Thou Good Shepherd! Draw us, O Father, to the Son, and give us to Him that we may become and remain His own and finally behold His heavenly glory. Amen."

Many objections have been made to the confirmation pledge on the ground that it is broken sooner or later by those who assume it. The pledge, however, aims to be a help in obedience to the will of God, see Gen. 28: 20. Tho broken it is not made void, but may rather aid in inducing the sinner to return to God. In the Old Testament those who had assumed vows and broken them were obliged to begin over again, Num. 6: 12. The broken pledge thus becomes for the confirmed an incentive to repentance and a new beginning in faithfulness.

Full Membership in the Church

Upon this their public confession the young people are confirmed in the renewal of their baptismal covenant, admitted to membership in the Christian Church and are entitled to all its blessings and privileges and to participation to the Lord's Supper. Confirmation of the baptismal covenant was not instituted by Christ and is not mentioned in the Scriptures. It has grown out of the practice of the laying on of hands or consecration, in the Apostolic Church, Acts 9: 17; 19: 6, and the needs of practical church life. In the Apostolic times the laying on of hands was the outward symbol for imparting the Holy Spirit. The Roman Catholic Church has made a sacrament of confirmation, which consists of unction and can only be administered by the bishop. Protestants abandoned unction, but retained confirmation as a church rite, stress being laid, not on the rite as such, but upon the Christian instruction and spiritual nurture preceding it. Evangelical confirmation in its present form dates back to the time of Spener (1635-1705).

No greater mistake can be made than to suppose that confirmation is an end in itself, or the climax of the spiritual life of the confirmed. It should rather be regarded as the beginning of a conscious and steady development of Christian character and personality by means of thoro and systematic Bible study and training for Christian service. The Secondary and Adult division and the Missionary and Teacher Training departments of the Sunday-school, as well as the work of the Evangelical League, offer valuable and far-reaching opportunities in this direction. The church that does not provide for this is neglecting its most sacred responsibility and most glorious opportunity.

The Treasure of Mesquite Prairie

BY FRANK H. SWEET

I

"O, I do wish we had a buggy," sighed Amanda Almstead, as her chair danced in the back of the wagon that young Danewood, her father's hired man, was driving over the big mesquite prairie on the way to church. "You wouldn't have a seat in the buggy if we had one," cried her sister Milly, also jolted and cross. "Not if you are older'n me, and think yourself a young lady. There wouldn't be room for but two and I'd be one of them two. Or Henry would stop goin' a-horseback to drive it, and he'd be for takin' Warren in aside him."

"Mandy could have my seat," said Warren, the nine-year-old boy, who sat beside Danewood on the board in front. He turned to smile at Amanda.

"You ain't got no seat to give 'way in no buggy," snapped Amanda. "Just you keep them big teeth of yourn out of sight now, and stop squintin' that way in the sun. You're ugly enough without that anyhow."

Warren looked hastily to the front, and became again as silent as Danewood. Possibly the young man's taciturnity accounted for part of Amanda's ill-temper. He never gave her any attention, but always seemed absorbed in sad thoughts. Amanda and Milly agreed that he was "stiff and stuck up."

Now Danewood stared blankly at the vague outlines of mesquite trees which extended in every direction around the Texan road. At all times ghastly looking because of the light color of their bark and foliage, the mesquites now looked doubly "lonesome," for the month was December and they were denuded of leaves.

The two girls continued to wrangle about the desired buggy till Warren, whose eyes had been roving among the mesquites, turned round again.

"Mandy," said he, "if I could find that there treasure you could have a buggy."

"Could I?" Amanda scorned. "Well you, Warren Knox Almstead, for a boy that's got an old school teacher a-braggin' on him for good spellin, and writin' and sich, you beat anything I ever seen for no sense."

Warren was silent after that. He had Henry's word for the treasure. Henry was his grown-up brother, his idol, and Henry had told him a tale of gulf pirates and of much treasure brought inland here and buried on the mesquite prairie.

Henry had made up the whole story as he went along, and had been much amused at "the little bub" taking it for truth.

"Well, if it ain't true, it ought to be," Henry said, when his mother remonstrated with him. "A treasure might just as well be here as anywhere; it would come in handy, I know. Just you hunt, little bub, at the foot of some gnarled old mesquite. That's where you'll find it." So Warren had sought again.

After the return from church, he resumed the search with a new vigor. Henry, catching sight of his familiar figure afar off—blue jeans trousers and clean white Sunday shirt against a background of somber mesquites—little dreamed what the boy was seeking, for the big young man had long ago forgotten that story of his own manufacture.

There was a summer sky above Warren, and yet it was the first day of December. A haziness was in the still air. The silence affected Warren; he thought something was going to happen to him—perhaps he was about coming on the treasure! But it was to the whole land that something was going to happen—a norther.

Warren walked slowly, his eyes squinting and his two big front teeth in full view. He had quite forgotten how ugly he was; indeed, he never thought of it except when Amanda reminded him, and just now he was intent on the treasure which he was seeking in order that Amanda might have a buggy.

How came that bleached skull of an ox there at the foot of a mesquite tree? Was it a sign that the treasure was buried there? The mesquite was a "gnarled old tree" such as Henry had described. The boy knew that neither cow nor ox had lain down to die so near the house. Perhaps it was an ancient landmark of the pirates.

The head was really that of the last beef steer killed in the enclosure, but Warren did not think of that. He remembered more than one wild tale told by Henry—tales in which the various skulls denoted the location of pirate hoards. So he easily dreamed this skull might signify the treasure's burial place.

He did not go to work forthwith, because the day was Sunday, and one must not dig on a Sunday. He climbed the fence, and sat there, absorbed in a day dream of the treasure. So complete was his abstraction that he did not hear Danewood approaching till the young hired man almost stumbled over the skull on which Warren's eyes were fixed.

Then the boy was amazed to see that tears were flowing from the downcast eyes of Danewood, who went on all unaware that any human being had witnessed his weeping.

Warren had never before seen a man cry. He sat on the fence rider, shocked. He brooded over those tears, wondering what they might mean, till Henry came thru the mesquites almost on Danewood's track.

"Hello, little bub, big boss!" cried Henry. "Here you serjourneying? Took up your roost with the buzzards, air ye? En I clean forgot your existence. Thought this big universe seemed mighty blank jist now all of a sudden. I was countin' off my blessin's to keep from howlin' aloud of lonesomeness this glorious Sabbath day—told 'em off on my fingers—and forgot you, the chief."

Warren laughed with delight at Henry's "big talk."

"Do you think a heap of me, shore enough, Henery?" asked he.

"Do I think a heap of you, shore enough, Henery? Well, lemme see."

Henry pretended to think.

"First, hev you been doin' anything 'thout my permission? I don't think nothin' of no little boy if he ever jist even smiled 'out askin' me. Boys mustn't never do nothin' 'out consulting big brothers—nothin'."

"I never do nothin' 'out askin' you, Henery."

"That's right. But say, where is that Danewood—where? Canst ye—mighty brother, a-seated on thy throne, a-viewin' the surroundin' regions, tell me where?"

Warren doubled himself up in laughter. Such words—such words as Henry could utter! Then, sobered suddenly, he asked:

"Aint Mr. Danewood feelin' bad 'bout something, Henery?"

"He is, Henery," was the emphatic reply. "He ran away from home and now he's wantin' after his ma. We cowboys promised to take him to see his ma when we take cattle to Kansas this spring—pore little feller! We're goin' to let him ride in the box behind a wagon with the other right young calves."

"Did he run away from home, you say, Henery?"

"He run away from home, I sry, Henery. 'Tis now some three years, boss, so the story goes, since a youth of sixteen sweet summers, he left his father's palatial residence in northern wilds and lit down here to drive cattle for Bedeman. And one day the cowboys pretend he was going to stampede a herd—jist the sight of him—and Ben Dueberry says:

"Let's string him up to a tree quick 'fore he does any such mischief."

"And we jist went on pretendin' like we's goin' to do it, and he didn't seem to like it, so he come over here and hired to pa to grub mesquite out of the new cornfield. He's mighty sick—homesick."

Henry began to walk away.

"Henery," called Warren after him, "didn't you feel sorry for Mr. Danewood, the boys a-treatin' him that-a-way?"

"Sorry?" cried Henry, turning about. "Look-a-here, you air a-thinkin' without a permit. Where'd you git that word? Folks mustn't never git in a place where folks'll be sorry for 'em. I'll disinherit you, shore, if I hear of you sayin' you're sorry for anyone. You aint goin' to git thanked for comin' at anyone with your sorry."

"No," continued Henry, reflectively; "that's one thing Danewood's got grit in. He's got into the bog, and he's goin' thru. He aint goin' to lay down and beller for his pa and ma to come help him out. They're big rich folks up yonder, and his ma, I 'spect, is a-takin' on about her boy, not knowin' where he is, an, all that. But of course, if he's got any spunk he can't let on to them now."

"But don't you feel sorry?" began Warren. "I—I mean jist think of his ma not knowin' nothin' 'bout him!"

"Stop it! stop it!" said Henry. "A-thinkin' without my permit." Then he walked away.

Helpful Sayings

God's schools are everywhere. He will not forget those committed to His care, and there is no seeming ill to ourselves or those dear to us, that He may not use for our education in that which is highest and noblest.—Rev. J. R. Miller.

Blessed is the man who has found his work; let him ask no other blessedness. Know thy work and do it; and work at it like Hercules. One monster there is in the world—the idle man.—Carlyle.

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

In the Morning

BY MARIANNE FARNINGHAM

A dangerous time is the morning!
There is nothing to fear at night;
Calm are the eyes in closing,
Tired of the urgent light;
The body is healed in sleeping,
Trouble and labor cease,
The soul is in God's safe keeping,
The heart is in perfect peace.

But who can say in the morning
How fierce will the trials be?
What difficult paths may be trodden,
What griefs may encompass me?
The great wide world is sunlit;
But I see not an hour before
What new, strange sorrows or dangers
The future may have in store.

Oh, speak to me in the morning,
Lord of my every day!
Thou art my great Director
As I pass to the hidden way;
If I hear Thy voice in the morning
I open the day with song,
Forth shall I go to conquer,
Thy presence shall make me strong.

"The Liddy who said 'Thank You.'"

Nancy stepped from an electric car late one afternoon on her way to the small upstairs shop where certain artistic wares are found. As she hurried along the crowded street, looking for the familiar front of the building, she saw in surprise that it had disappeared. Its place was partly taken by scaffolding, and for some distance the space in front of the building was boarded in, enclosing piles of lumber, plaster and several workmen.

At first Nancy turned away, but on second thought decided to persevere and indulge in the feminine pastime of "asking."

"Are people still doing business in the upstairs shops?" she inquired pleasantly, looking into the open door in the boarding.

"Sure, Miss, everything's goin' on, same as ever," replied the head workman coming forward, "excepting in the front, of course."

"But can I get thru here?" and Nancy laughed a little doubtfully.

"Sure. We'll fix that all right," was the answer as, with an authoritative wave of the hand, the man motioned two others to lift away a heavy piece of timber, to kick aside some plastery blocks and to place a clean plank in the doorway.

"I'm sorry to trouble you," apologized Nancy, as the workman pulled off his rough cap and gallantly helped her to mount.

If Nancy could ask questions like a woman she could also select a purchase quickly, "like a man." Before many minutes, therefore, she reappeared in the doorway and, thinking to have slipped out unnoticed, her pretty brow wrinkled in annoyance to find the plank removed and the work going on as before. She was plainly helpless. By this time the friendly man had caught sight of her, and with a "Wait a minute, Miss," he sprang for the plank himself, again ordering the way cleared for "the leddy."

"Thank you," smiled Nancy. "It is too bad to interrupt your work again, especially as I suppose you're here to build this new front and not help persons in and out of the building."

"Oh, no, Miss," he replied "we're used to it; we've been a-doin' of it all day long. But," he added, hesitating, as he stood aside to let her pass, "you're the first leddy as has said 'Thank you.'"

The Golden Day

There are two days in the week upon which and about which I never worry.

One of these days is Yesterday. Yesterday, with all its cares and frets, with all its pains and aches, all its faults, its mistakes and blunders, has passed forever beyond the reach of my recall. I cannot undo an act that I wrought, I cannot unsay a word that I said, on Yesterday. All that it holds of my life, of wrong, regret and sorrow, is in the hands of the Mighty Love that can bring honey out of the rock, and sweet waters out of the bitterest desert.

Save for the beautiful memories, sweet and tender, that linger like the perfume of roses in the heart of the day that is gone, I have nothing to do with Yesterday. It was mine; it is God's.

And the other day I do not worry about is To-morrow. To-morrow, with all its possible adversities, its burdens, its perils, its large promise and poor performance, its failures and mistakes, is as far beyond the reach of my mastery as its dead sister, Yesterday. It is a day of God's. Its sun will rise in roseate splendor, or behind a mask of weeping clouds. But it will rise. Until then, the same love and patience that hold Yesterday hold To-morrow. Save for the star of hope that gleams forever on the brow of To-morrow, shining with tender promise into the heart of To-day, I have no possession in that unborn day of grace. All else is in the safekeeping of the Infinite Love that holds for me the treasures of Yesterday. The Love that is higher than the stars, wider than the skies, deeper than the seas. To-morrow—it is God's day. It will be mine.

There is left for myself, then, but one day of the week—To-day. Any man can fight the battles of To-day. Any woman can carry the burdens of just one day. Any man can resist the temptations of To-day. O friends, it is only when, to the burdens and cares of To-day, carefully measured out to us by the Infinite Wisdom and Might that gives with them the promise, "As thy day, so shall thy strength be," we wilfully add the burdens of those two awful eternities—Yesterday and To-morrow—such burdens as only the mighty God can sustain—that we break down. It isn't the experience of To-day that drives men mad. It is the remorse for something that happened Yesterday, the dread of what To-morrow may disclose.

These are God's days, leave them with Him.

Therefore, I think, and I do, and I journey, but one day at a time. That is the easy day. That is the man's day. Nay, rather, that is Our Day—God's and Mine. And while faithfully and dutifully I run my course, and work my appointed task on that day of Ours, God the Almighty and the All-Loving takes care of Yesterday and To-morrow.—Robert J. Burdette.

The Miff Tree

Once upon a time, so a fireside legend runs, a chorus of song birds began to make tuneful the roadside by which they were perched. It was only a post and rail fence that they had chosen as a choir loft, yet so inspiring and melodious was the volume of song which poured forth from their throats that the listener might have imagined himself to have been in one of the suburbs of Paradise, if not within the jasper walls. Yet suddenly, so the story runs, there came a serious marring of the harmony. Not by directly discordant notes, but by the silencing of certain of the songsters' tones. It came to some of them that the warbling of others was clearer, if not sweeter, than their own; and not able to endure the thought of being out-classed by others, they suddenly betook themselves to the "miff tree," which stood near by, sullenly hiding their bills in their plumage instead of continuing to praise their Maker to the best of their ability.

We are glad this is only a folk-lore tale. We have yet to meet the person who has witnessed the exhibition of such a spirit among the feathery tribes. Would that we could say as much of mankind, made in the image of the Creator, redeemed by the priceless blood, refashioned into the same image by the Spirit of love! But who of us has not known those who refuse to serve unless there be a conspicuous recognition of their gifts?

It is said of Michael Angelo that he wore a miner's lamp on the front of his workman's cap that no shadow of himself might fall upon his work. If this precaution was needed in order to obtain the highest efficiency in the chiseling of marble, is it not even more necessary on the part of those who would help fashion immortal souls in the image of the Redeemer that the light of His love shine always with such brightness in the workman's face that no shadow of ourselves fall over and mar the work to which we have given our hearts and lives!—The Christian Union Herald.

Denominational

Weal and Woe

of Retired Evangelical Pastors and the Widows of Deceased Pastors

Our last "Weal and Woe" column has been responded to by several friends of the cause in a manner which deserves to be made public. We are gratified to note the interest with which this column is read, and especially the growth of interest in our Pension Relief Fund, which these replies betoken.

One friend writes as follows:

"Looking thru the Herald recently, I read among other things the plaintive appeal of a dear old brother. As I am troubled with the same ailment that he has and shall be seventy-two years old on April 8, 1916, if the Lord will, but am more fortunate than he is, because I was able to save enough to provide for old age, I am impelled to lend him some support, that he might observe Thanksgiving day with a joyful heart.

With kind regards to you and also to my unknown yet well-known friend.

P. R., Louisville, Ky.

From another letter we quote as follows:

"Two ladies of my church, subscribers to the Herald, sympathize with the teacher you wrote about and it is their wish that the enclosed donation be sent directly to him.

D. B."

A third reply was short and terse, a letter without words, but an enclosure that was self-explanatory. From the post-mark we see that it was mailed in Pittsburgh, Pa. Finally we received a letter from St. Louis, the "heart of the Synod," with a gift and the kind wish that the dear old man referred to may enjoy a good glass of wine for Christmas.

It was with a glad heart indeed that we answered the letters of these kind friends to show our appreciation for their noble intentions and to convey to them our most heartfelt thanks. However, we could not fulfill their wishes to send these donations directly to the persons indicated, as the Board had decided when the "Weal and Woe" column was planned, that it should not be used for this purpose. We are glad to note that the kind donors mentioned above consented to our placing their gifts into the treasury of the Fund, when they heard our explanation. We believe that it will be proper to add a word of explanation at this place also, so that the kind friends of our retired workers may understand our position. If we consented to accept special donations for those who happen to be mentioned in our column, we would be giving undue preference to these. We beg to note that in the past year we had forty-four pastors and teachers and fifty-six widows to provide for, whose circumstances are very similar to these described. All of them should in our estimation have more assistance than we could grant them last year. While the letters we publish show the need in single cases, the purpose of their publication is to awaken such an interest in our Fund that all might be helped. All are worthy of our assistance and all are also in need of it.

The Soliciting Committee, Pension and Relief Fund,
J. Schoettle, Chairman.
432 Kellum Ct., Scranton, Pa.

APPOINTED TO BEAR FRUIT

The Fruit of the Law was Slavery, Hypocrisy and Drudgery; the Fruits of the Gospel are Liberty, Character and Service. Why not make Lent a Season of loving, self-sacrificing Service in every Evangelical Church?

II

What is the true spirit of such a service appears very clearly from verse 15 of the passage quoted (by an inadvertency John 15: 17 was named in the first installment, instead of John 15: 15, 16, as it should have been). "No longer do I call you servants," says Jesus, "for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I heard from my Father I have made known unto you." It is here that the full liberty of the children of God appears in all its glory. In the old dispensation God's children had been servants, they were under the law. As long as the heir was a child, he differed nothing from a bond-servant, tho he was lord of all; he was under guardians and stewards until the day appointed of the father. Hence the spirit of legalism and the exaggerated regard and zeal for the letter of the law that blighted later Judaism. The captivity had taught its lesson so well that none of the Jews who returned to Palestine ever showed the least sign of a relapse into their old weakness for idolatry. Instead, however, the pendulum swung to the other extreme. In order to make sure that this besetting sin was forever done away, the scribes and the pharisees exalted the letter of the law and thus began to forge those heavy fetters that bound the people hand and foot when Jesus began to preach the true freedom of the children of God.

The Difference between the Old and the New

Jesus came with a new and higher ideal and a new and loftier message. What makes the lot of the slave unbearable was just this: that he "knows not what his master doeth." Says Marcus Dods: "It is not that his back is torn with the lash; it is not that he is underfed and overworked; it is not that he is poor and despised: all this would be cheerfully undergone to serve a cherished purpose and accomplish ends a man had chosen for himself. . . . But soldiers and sailors have sometimes mutinied when subjected to such treatment, when no inkling has been given them of the port to which they are shipped, or the nature of the expedition on which they are led." Jesus Christ, however, asks nothing like this of His followers. They are not to be drudges or slaves, who do their tasks merely because they must obey the commands of a master; they are to be friends who are glad to help in the task in which He is engaged, because they have felt the irresistible call to self-sacrifice and labor for the relief of men which inspired Him to become flesh and dwell among men. "He did not," to quote Marcus Dods once more, "allot clearly defined tasks to His followers; He did not treat them as slaves, appointing one to this and another to that: He showed them His own aim and His own motive and left them as His friends to be attracted by the aim that had drawn Him, and to be ever animated with the motive that sufficed for Him." He does not desire and could not be satisfied with any mere blind obedience to certain rules and ordinances. He comes to us, as it were, and says, "We are friends, animated by the same purpose and the same motives. Let us all work together. Something can be made of this world. Let us with heart and hand strive to make of it something worthy of the best that is in us and worthy of the Father in heaven for whom we are working. And thus He not only redeems us from the slavery of a mere outward obedience to the demands of what might be called the law of service, He also redeems life from its vanity, aimlessness, and hopelessness and shows how service is the true source of the joy of living, because it is the only way of making life fruitful and therefore worth while.

With this attitude toward the conduct and the service of His followers Jesus laid the foundations of Christian character. Character cannot thrive in slavery, it requires the bracing atmosphere of freedom for its growth, and it is this that Jesus proclaims when He calls His disciples friends, not servants. The three great motives in the life and character of Christ were love and truth and righteousness. It was His love for a sin-stricken race that brought Him down into human life, not to be ministered unto, but to minister. It was the fact that he bore witness to the truth that earned Him the deadly hatred of the worldly-minded, and it was His spotless innocence and righteousness, which neither slander nor falsehood could touch, that at last brought Him to the cross. Those who had lived with Him for nearly three years were under the constant influence of His love, His truth and His righteousness, and the things they saw and heard, what they beheld with their eyes, that which their hands handled concerning the words of life, that they declared unto all who would listen to them. And their witness-bearing in regard to the life and character of Jesus Christ gave them the world-wide influence they had and made converts for the Gospel of the Kingdom wherever their voice was heard.

Only Character Counts

Without the great motives of character which Christ had planted into their hearts the disciples would have been powerless to win men for Him; with it they had the power to do even greater things than He had done. The old dispensation had not developed character. The spirit of legalism which had grown out of the misconception of the law and its purpose as an end in itself had degraded the idea of serving God to a mere outward form, which made it easy for hypocrites to sound a trumpet before them in the streets when they gave alms, that they might have glory of men; that made them stand and pray in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men; to wear a sad countenance or disfigure their faces when they fasted, that they might be seen of men to fast. It was this spirit that made them compass sea and land to make one proselyte, only to make him, when he had become so, two-fold more a son of hell than they were themselves; that made them tithe mint and anise and cummin, but leave undone the weightier matters of the law, justice and mercy, and faith; that made them build the sepulchre of prophets, and garnish the tombs of the righteous, and say, "If we had been in the days of our fathers, we should not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets." Matt. 23 paints a picture of the hypocrisy and corruption that had grown out of this attitude toward the service of Jehovah that is really awful to contemplate.

Not that all who sought to serve Jehovah in this spirit were actually hypocrites like so many of the scribes and the Pharisees. There were doubtless very many who honestly sought to serve God in this way, because they had no other conception of serving God. They were anxious to serve in some way, and strict formal obedience to the letter of the law was the only way they had been taught, and so they conscientiously did the best they could and knew. But tho they were not hypocrites they were servants, i. e., slaves, for they knew not what their master doeth. They were drudges trying to accomplish a given task without any idea of its purpose or its significance. They went thru the appointed routine of performances and ceremonies from day to day in a mechanical way, thinking thus to offer service to God, but without any of the real joy and satisfaction of true service, and without any influence that makes toward character.

Character before Converts

It is thus that altogether too much of what is today called Christian service is performed, the mechanical, formal, outward spirit of servitude, that seeks to do a given task in a given way in a certain time, for the sake of "efficiency," and thereby robs itself of the real pleasure and enjoyment of service which the child of God should feel at all times. Like Martha, Luke 10: 38-42, the servants of God are cumbered about much serving, and are prone to eye with envy and reproach all those who leave them "to serve alone," as they think. And the Master has also in the passage referred to, left no doubt as to what He thinks of the service rendered in this spirit. It is not the fruit which He expects, for it does not grow naturally out of the branch abiding in the vine, and is therefore not the kind of fruit that He longs to see in the lives of His followers. No fruit is possible without close personal touch with Jesus Christ, because this alone makes Christian character, and Christian character has ever been the strongest force in winning men to the standards of Christ and His Church. Without it any kind of work for Christ and the Church is impossible, and would be fruitless if it were possible. The world knows enough of Christ and His character to notice any lack of character in those who would seek to win others for Him, and then it will not listen to their voice. The character of Jesus Christ is so pure and lofty, so attractive in its gentleness, unselfishness, meekness and kindness, that it naturally wins those who behold even a trace of its beauty and power manifest in the lives of others. Effort is rich in instances where those who could not be won by the most powerful eloquence or the most zealous proselyting have been won by a casual glimpse of the simplicity, purity and beauty of Christian character. Eloquence may attract and charm and create an enthusiasm that carries the crowds with it; earnestness and zeal may make an impression and set people thinking, and efficiency can "get things done" by using means and circumstances to the best advantage, but without Christian character neither of them can actually win others for Christ and the Church. And where the workers are true branches abiding in Him who is the Vine, they will grow continually in Christian character and bear their fruit for Him, even tho there be neither eloquence nor zeal, nor what men call efficiency. The love and devotion to Christ naturally carries with it obedience to His new commandment, which is only this, "that ye may love one another," and even so eloquent, earnest and efficient a worker for Christ as St. Paul knew that there is no greater force in the world than the love of others for Christ's sake, 1 Cor. 13: 1-7. And the supreme aim of love is always ministry, never merit. Christian love always glorifies Christ, never self.

The Source of Character

We are again approaching the Lenten season, when the love of Jesus Christ for us shines forth anew in all the divine fullness of its beauty and power. Is there anything more natural than that those who have felt the power of Jesus Christ should realize then more closely than at any other season of the year the closeness and the intimacy of the tie that binds them to the Saviour? Is there any more appropriate season than this for examining the condition of our inward life and making sure that we are in fact as well as in name branches in Him who is the Vine, that the personal touch is so close and constant that His life and His power can have free and unhindered access into our hearts and lives so as to purify, regenerate and transform them into images of His own life and set them to bearing the fruit for Him for which He has appointed us? We are to be not servants but friends, impelled by the same motives of love, truth and righteousness that actuated Him, and working together with Him toward the same end that He had in view: the redemption of the world and the establishment and extension of His kingdom. It is not our own ability or efficiency that is to bring about these results, but His life and power working in and thru us by means of the Christian character that He can and does impart to and impress upon all who desire to enter into friendship with Him.

If it seems as tho we have not been successful so far in our efforts to win men for Him, it may be because we have not given Him the chance He should have had, or it may be that we measured our success by wrong standards. It is not the amount of activity and energy that may be put forth, nor the number of persons we may be able to reach that determines the effectiveness of our service. It is rather the love and devotion to Him and to those we desire to reach that counts, and the extent to which our character, the source and motive of our conduct that makes our life what it is, has become wholly Christian. There is nothing that influences men so strongly and permanently as the personal touch, and no kind of work for Jesus Christ is more effective than personal work, but the personal touch will be nerveless and personal work useless unless we ourselves are in the most intimate personal relationship with Christ. It is this that makes Christian character and brings forth the fruit that He desires and the world needs most.

INTO THE STREETS AND LANES OF THE CITY

Jesus Christ evidently did not want the poor, the maimed, the blind and the lame to go without the Invitation to His Great Supper. Preaching the Gospel is a Ministry, not an Investment, and the Church is bound to seek and invite those who cannot make Recompense

The poor, the maimed, the blind and the lame did not get much consideration in the days of Christ. They had no chance with the well-to-do, the able-bodied and the strong, and might made right in far more unjust and unpleasant ways than it does now. And when it came to making a dinner or a supper people were wont to invite their friends, their kinsmen, their rich neighbors, who could bid them again and make recompense. No one but Jesus Christ would have thought of bidding those who had not wherewith to make recompense. His tender regard for the poor, the destitute, the ignorant, the physically wretched, these of whom men spoke as "common people," and the "vulgar multitudes," was such that He immediately thinks of giving them the opportunity which those who had been bidden to the great supper so lightly rejected. And so it is quite natural for Him to picture the mercy and lovingkindness of God, slighted by those who were first entitled to benefit thereby, seeking out the afflicted, the despised and the neglected in the streets and the lanes of the city.

Three Years of City Mission Work in St. Louis

The need of following the example of Christ in this respect also had long impressed itself upon a number of earnest Evangelical people in St. Louis, and when, nearly three years ago a board was organized to undertake bringing the Gospel to the poor in at least one neglected section of that city, no difficulty was experienced in securing the necessary support and co-operation. Persons of small and of large means faithful, patient Christian service the work has grown from the small Sunday-school with six pupils which first met on April 6, 1913 in a rented room on Hickory and Dillon Streets, to a school of nearly 100 members with ten teachers, and Primary, Junior, Intermediate and Home Departments, and a variety of other activities that seek to minister to the needs of the neighborhood and win for Jesus Christ those whom no Evangelical or other Church would be able to reach. New needs and opportunities are constantly arising and redoubled efforts are being made to place the undertaking on such a financial basis that an assured income may be offered a permanent worker who will be able to reach especially the older boys and men of the neighborhood.

Daily Vacation Bible School Group at the Picnic, O'Fallon Park

The following information concerning the work now being done at the "Evangelical Social Center" was given at the first meeting in 1916 of the board having the work in charge by Mr. D. Jensen, of Eden Seminary, superintendent of the Sunday-school. On Jan. 9 eighty-one children were present in Sunday-school; the average attendance is eighty-five. Two Christmas celebrations were held on December 26, one in the afternoon for the Primary pupils and members of their families, and another in the evening for the older members. Few of the children had any Christmas at all, except what was prepared for them at the Center. Perhaps none of the thirty-five adults present on this occasion attend any church, and the great Christmas truths spoken in a direct and simple manner by Prof. S. D. Press, a member of the board, must have made a deep and lasting impression on many a one long accustomed to their sound. A permanent worker would be able to win not only these people to regular attendance at Sunday-school or services of worship, but no doubt, also many more. The workers are all greatly encouraged by the response their efforts have found and feel that God has blessed the work and will continue to do so.

In addition to the Sunday-school, a Boy's Club meets on Saturday morning with a membership of fifteen. These boys are off the streets for that length of time and are usefully employed in manual training work. The Club is a self-governing organization that aims to help its members grow up into the kind of men God would have them be. Most of the boys are sadly neglected, and there are many more in the neighborhood who have not been reached. Mr. D. C. Jensen is the leader.

Sister Anna, the visiting deaconess reported having made 467 visits during the year. Clothing was distributed to twenty-one families and forty-eight individuals, in addition to six "rummage sales," where those in need of clothing may purchase at "their own price." The proceeds of these sales was $56.75. Groceries were furnished to seven families, besides the Thanksgiving and Christmas baskets; several families were also supplied with free ice tickets. One family was aided in removing to a more favorable part of the city; a month's rent was paid for two families. One patient was nursed regularly, and one young woman who could not read or write was given sixteen lessons in English. Sister Anna also superintends the Willing Workers Girls' Club.

The Willing Workers Girls' Club meets every Saturday afternoon for the purpose of developing its members spiritually, intellectually, physically and socially. Sewing and crocheting and other household activities are also taught to an average attendance of twenty girls. A free kindergarten in charge of Miss Gaisler is open Saturday afternoon. On the afternoon of New Year's Day the kindergarten enjoyed a "fish-pond" and the Willing Workers' Club a "Christmas pie," also toys, books etc. that had been kindly contributed by the Sunday-school of Emmanuel Church at their "White Gift" Christmas. On January 2 at an after celebration four teachers of Emmanuel Sunday-school were present with a pretty little Christmas tree, decorated with pennies wrapped in white paper, and also distributed some candies, oranges, etc. The Christmas supply was considerably increased by the toys and books kindly donated by the Junior department of Carondelet Evangelical Church.

The Daily Vacation Bible School was taught from July 6 to August 16, 1915 with an enrollment of eighty-three children and an average attendance of sixty-eight. Bible stories and Christian hymns were taught, as well as craft work of various kinds and sewing.

Religious services have been held more or less regularly at different times, but the lack of a worker who could follow up and visit the families reached by the other activities, has so far made this phase of the work somewhat discouraging.

A Plain Obligation

The Evangelical churches of St. Louis have loyally and liberally supported the large charitable institutions, such as no other Protestant denomination in the city can boast, and unless we greatly misjudge the enthusiasm shown for the work of the Evangelical

The Boys' Club, and some of its Work

Social Center wherever the people become familiar with its needs and opportunities, it is also bound to become the success it deserves to be.

There can be no doubt that there is a crying need for just such work, not only in the part of the city referred to above, but in many other sections, and willingly contributed toward the necessary expenses, and consecrated workers from the ranks of the Sunday-schools, young people's societies, Eden Seminary and the Deaconess Home volunteered to help bring in the poor, the maimed and the blind and the lame. As a result of the cheerful and liberal giving and not only in the neglected districts of St. Louis, but in those of every other large city. As the character of certain neighborhoods changes the well-to-do people move away to the more pleasant and desirable sections, and the churches soon follow their members, leaving the less fortunate population to the tender mercies of the saloon, the dance-halls, cheap moving picture shows and even worse and more demoralizing influences. Poverty, disease and neglect tend to lower the standard of living and those things that make for real home life become increasingly difficult to obtain. The ignorant and degraded are attracted, the people become indifferent and reckless, and vice and crime become more and more rampant.

Girls' Sewing Class Outing, Lafayette Park

The Church of Jesus Christ has a very clear and definite obligation toward these neglected sections of our cities, and a vast field for missionary effort right at its own door. It is absolutely wrong to be content with bringing the Gospel only to those who are ready and able to build a church, support a pastor, and raise offerings for the work of the Church. The bounties of salvation have been provided free for all for the poor, the maimed, the blind and the lame in the streets and lanes of the city as well as for the more prosperous, and the servants of Him who made the Great Supper are in duty bound to seek out those who cannot make recompense and to constrain them to come in that His house may be filled.

Religious News

Annual Report of Moody Bible Institute

At the thirteenth annual meeting of the corporation of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, the educational department reported that 1,468 students enrolled in the day and evening classes during the year, 808 of whom were men. They represented thirty different denominations, forty-one states, and thirty-one foreign countries. Many of these specialized in Sunday-school work, and foreign missions, but a still greater number in evangelism. The opportunities which Chicago furnishes for training in evangelism was illustrated by the fact that the students conducted or attended 40,895 meetings for men, women and children, in churches, missions, factories, industrial clubs, and in the open air. They taught 16,838 Sunday-school and Mission-study classes. They made 20,404 personal calls in homes, lodging houses, and hospitals. They talked individually about salvation with 63,552 persons and reported 9,638 as professing conversion to Jesus Christ. They distributed 70,770 tracts and 3,332 copies of the gospels.

The correspondence department reported 3,068 students as actively studying the different courses it puts out, making a total of 4,536 students, all told, under the care of the Institute during the year. The extension department handled 492 calls for evangelists, pastors and other Christian workers, and conducted thru its own representatives in the field about 1,500 meetings reaching approximately 175,000 people. This does not include certain Bible conferences held in different parts of the United States and Canada, nor union Bible classes conducted under its auspices in Chicago and other cities with an average weekly attendance running from fifty in one instance to approximately 800 in another. This department also provides sermons and Sunday-school lessons prepared by the faculty of the Institute for a syndicate of newspapers, reaching about 5,000,000 of readers per week. The financial department reported no loss on investments or deferred interest and a slight increase in the worth of the Institute by betterments and annuities, making a total present worth of $1,141,127.01. The books were closed for the year with a net deficit of $6,206.46. There are no mortgages or other encumbrances on the property.

Episcopalians and the Panama Congress

In the eleventh hour the proposed special meeting of the Protestant Episcopal bishops called in Philadelphia for Jan. 12—ostensibly for selecting a bishop for South Dakota, but in reality because the high church leaders wanted the special meeting to prevent the Episcopal Church from sending delegates to the Panama Congress—was called off because so many bishops declined to attend that a quorum was impossible. The high church people, it is said, have by no means abandoned their purpose of defeating the participation of Episcopal delegates in the Panama Congress, but it is not known in what way they expect to go about it. Since less than a month intervenes before the assembling of the Congress, their action must be immediate and decisive if it is to have any effect. The seven men who are to attend will do so as full delegates.

The citizens of Panama are said to have waked up to the importance of the Congress. The President of the republic has promised to deliver an address of welcome, and the people are subscribing money, in the name of their board of trade, to see to it that the delegates are to be suitably entertained. One hotel is able to accommodate nearly all of the six hundred delegates and visitors, and it also contains a hall ample in size for the sessions of the congress. Following the congress dates, February 10-20, extension conferences are to be held in Santiago, Lima and Rio, and possibly in the City of Mexico and Havana. So marked is the interest that more than one thousand persons, related with missionary interests, plan to go to the isthmus to attend the Congress. Indications are that the Congress will do for religion some of the things which political and scientific congresses just held have done for their causes.

Eight commissions on as many forms of missionary and educational work will report at Panama, after the plans of the Edinburgh Conference. It is stated informally that these Commission reports confine themselves to conditions as they now exist, and do not make recommendations for future efforts. Practically every missionary society in America, all Protestant bodies, is joining in this Congress. Protestant societies of South America, of which there are several, are also joining.

American Missionary Council

Foreign Missions

The missionary interests of North America, representing about $75,000,000 a year expenditure, met last week to hear reports for last year and make plans for next year. They represent the greatest missionary enterprises in the world, America surpassing Europe now, in all times not just war times, in the missionary business. The foreign interests had for chief concerns, apart from reports and plans, the matter of unity of effort in China, all Protestant bodies, and the closer co-operation there with the medical work as projected and carried on by the Rockefeller Foundation; and the expansion of growing work in Latin America, including the rehabilitation of missionary work under more promising political conditions in Mexico, and work among the millions of South America, both whites and Indians, whom Protestants say are not reached at all by any Christian agency. The Roman Catholic Church is making no attempt to evangelize this vast population.

The American people, thru their churches and their foreign missionary societies, gave last year, a war year, $1,625,300 more than during 1914. Their total gifts last year reached $17,145,500, or including Canada, $18,793,000. These sums are the largest by far in the history of American foreign mission giving, and they are larger than are given by all of the rest of the world together. Because of the war foreign mission figures for Europe for the years 1914 and 1915 are lacking. The total for all the world is not, however, much above $30,000,000, showing that considerably more than half of the entire sum comes from North America.

No foreign society in Canada has an income of $500,000, and the great foreign societies of the United States, as shown by figures for last year and just now made public, are: Presbyterian, North, $2,262,000; Methodist, North, $1,588,700; Baptist, North, $1,364,200; Episcopal, $1,152,200; Congregational, $1,101,500.

Christians in the foreign fields of these societies also give large sums toward their own support. These Christians now number 2,644,000 having doubled in numbers in the past ten years. When their gifts are added the big American societies show figures as follows: Presbyterian, $2,978,500; Baptist, $2,491,800; Methodist, $2,436,700; Episcopal, $1,672,200; Congregational, $1,468,800.

Besides these record-breaking figures some home mission societies sent $594,200 to foreign fields in Mexico, Central America and Cuba. The American Board, Congregational, and the Presbyterian North sent more than $1,000,000 to Syrian and Armenian sufferers because of the war. Two societies, the Baptists and the Episcopal, paid off big debts, the last named requiring the raising of $400,000 in addition to the sums reported in the regular way. Women's boards had also their greatest year in 1915, spending under their own administration or turning over to the official boards larger sums than in any previous year.

Because of the war the Standard Oil Company has figured in foreign mission affairs. When it was impossible to transmit money to the nearby fields in Turkey and in Egypt, owing to war conditions, it was found impossible also by the oil company to transmit money from these countries to America. So the foreign missionary societies paid their money into the Standard's treasury in New York. The Oil company cabled to Constantinople to agents there to pay to missionary and Bible society treasurers there. And both missions and oil prospered in spite of the war. Most of the relief funds contributed by Americans to Armenians and Syrians, and not a little sent by Bohemians and Galicians here to their friends in southern Europe were transmitted to their destinations in the same fashion.

An unusual feature of foreign missions in 1915, as in 1914, was the large number of missionaries, usually supported by countries in Europe now at war, who were helped by mission funds from the United States. Some of these were Roman Catholic, and some Protestants. All were assisted in so far as possible, at least to the extent of food and clothing. In some cases work has been maintained. Most of the continental European societies, notably German and Austrian, have been powerless to support their workers in China and Japan, and they have been freely helped with American money.

Home Missions

The home mission interests represent more strictly the United States, and less of Canada work than the foreign, and they met this year with the representatives of the women's mission boards. They gave special attention to work among negroes and for the immigrants, including and expecting a pouring in of foreign peoples from southern Europe the moment the war ends. Conditions of colored people north as well as south engaged attention. Formerly little co-operation was had, even in the same religious bodies, between home and foreign agencies and societies, but all this has changed within the last few years, and now all meet in the same city at the same time, interchange decisions like two houses of the Congress at Washington, and dine together after all conferences are over, usually to arouse enthusiasm for the whole missionary cause on its official side. Twenty-four million Christian are involved in support for the societies.

For the first time Canadian home mission interests met this year with those of the United States. Here more than 75,000 individual congregations were represented in the United States alone, spending a total of $55,000,000 a year in missionary propaganda of Christianity in the United States. It was shown at the Council that no fewer than 17,500 missionaries are at work under 101 home agencies that represent all possible views of the Christian faith, and almost all conceivable methods for spreading it.

Figures issued by the Council showed that sixty-two societies spent last year in home work $14,000,000 and the estimate was given that if all figures of all societies were available the sum would reach a total of $21,000,000. This is a larger sum than on any previous year in the United States, Canadian figures were not given, but Canadian delegates present stated that the war had much affected home work in the Dominion. The effect is not so marked, they said, in money as in sending to the front some of the best of the volunteer lay workers of the churches.

Apart from sums passing thru the large official societies, other sums are expended by other agencies, the total home mission expenditure being put at $55,000,000 as against a little less than $19,000,000 sent by Christians of the United States and Canada to foreign fields last year. The Council this year gave consideration to country work, to the immigrants and to the negroes. In proportion to numbers, Congregationalists are spending most money for home missions, largely among dependent peoples for education, and others ranking next to them are Presbyterians, Methodists, Disciples and Baptists. The American Bible Society's expenditure for all purposes last year amounted to $234,000.

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

February 6, 1916. Fifth Sunday after Epiphany

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

CONSECRATED INFLUENCE

M. Feb. 7. Penetrating influence. Matt. 5: 13-16.
T. Feb. 8. Influence of Giving. 2 Cor. 9: 1-7.
W. Feb. 9. Home Influence. 2 Tim. 1: 5; 3: 15-17.
T. Feb. 10. Influence of Sacrifice. Acts 20: 28-35.
F. Feb. 11. Revealing influences. John 14: 1-9.
S. Feb. 12. Influence that Abides. Heb. 11: 1-6.
Sun., Feb. 13. Topic—The Consecration of Influence.
Heb. 10: 19-25. (Consecration Meeting.)

Suggestions to the Leader

Consecration is the assigned topic for the first meeting of every month. Care must be taken by the leader that he confines himself to the discussion of the sub-topic of the evening. Otherwise he is in danger of trespassing on the subjects that are to follow.

If a blackboard is available write down the sub-topics that have already been treated in the order in which they were discussed. This will demonstrate to the members of the society the wide range of the general subject, Consecration, and impress upon their minds the many things that need be consecrated to the service of Jesus.

In presenting the topic, bring out the thought that there is no one so lowly or insignificant but that he does exercise some sort of influence upon somebody. The combined influence of the citizens of a community make up the spirit of the community. What is the spirit of your church? Society? Community? Our country? Does that spirit need to be changed? How can we change it? These are some of the thoughts that might be profitably discussed.

The Topic Presented

Influence, the prime meaning of the word, signifies a process of flowing upon or over, like the waters that inundate the valley, which rise gradually but surely, and leave either a deposit to fertilize the ground, or wash away the fertile soil, leaving the ground sterile and bare. Influence is therefore a physical, moral or spiritual force, that gradually affects a change in another.

1. Each one is capable of exercising an influence.

The greatest leaders are not those who hold official positions as leaders of the parties and the people, but those who in silence and obscurity are molding public opinion. It is said that the war of 1870 and 71 was won by the German schoolmaster. The influence of the schoolroom accompanied the scholars into manhood and womanhood and made the great national development of Germany possible.

All who are capable of friendship are able to wield an influence. The outpouring of one's self into the life of another carries with it our innermost motives, and secret hopes.

2. We can determine the character of our influence.

The character of the influence is dependent on the quality of our own self. "By their fruits ye shall know them. Ye cannot gather grapes from thorns, or figs from thistles. A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit." An evil character will influence for evil, a God-fearing character will lead to God and His righteousness. A bit of heaven permeates the entire meal. So does a bit of evil destroy the constructive influence. We influence others not by what we say, but by what we are. Our life is the determining factor in influencing others.

John Brown's life was the leaven of righteousness that gradually permeated the entire body politic of our nation. His death on the gallows was the bursting of the bonds that held this influence in check. Suddenly the fury of the storm broke loose, for men realized suddenly the enormity of the crime of which our people was guilty when it passed the death sentence on John Brown. Not the one-time act, but the steady daily life constitutes the influence which you exert.

3. What kind of an influence are you exerting?

This question needs to be directed, first, to the congregation and society. Is it true, what someone has said, that there is room for imitation in the Christian Church, because we are surrounded by those whom we can safely imitate? Let us recall the dog-erel:—

What kind of a church would this church be, If all were members just like me?

Quote these same lines, applying them to your society. Would others be safe in your society, in permitting you to influence them? There is probably at least one characteristic or trait in everyone that is worthy of being imitated, but there may be many other traits in all whose imitation would become dangerous to others. Let us seek to increase the virtues in ourselves, that others might be safe in imitating.

Our lives may be far from being perfect, but when others recognize the fact that you are striving after better things, that you are constantly endeavoring to grow into the more perfect manhood and womanhood thru Jesus Christ, then others will gain confidence in you and your efforts.

The Christian influence, that is the Christ Spirit, is the only safe influence. Let us grow in Christ Jesus, then His influence will dominate others thru us.

Some Questions on the Topic

What is influence?
How is influence exerted?
How can we consecrate our influence?
What will consecrated influence accomplish?
Why is it our duty to influence others?
Can we control the character of our influence?
How?

Some Scripture on the Topic

INFLUENCE

Evil—Kings 21: 25; 22: 53; Chron. 33: 9; Matt. 13: 24; Luke 12: 1; 1 Cor. 5: 6-8; Gal. 3: 1; 5: 7-9; 2 Tim. 2: 14-18; Heb. 12: 15.

Good—2 Kings 15: 1; 1 Sam. 20: 4-9; Matt. 5: 13-16; Mark 4: 21, 22; Luke 11: 33-36; John 7: 38; 1 Cor. 7: 16; 1 Thess. 1: 7, 8; 1 Tim. 6: 1; 1 Peter 2: 11, 12.

A Prayer

We thank Thee, O Christ, that from Thy life flowed rivers of living water that refreshed the dying souls of men. Thou art the way to life, the light of our souls, the truth that never leads astray.

We pray that we may more and more lead others to Thee thru the simple faith we can have in Thee. Help us to become guides for others, that thru us the light of God's truth, the Gospel of salvation, may bring life to such as are dead or dying in sin. May we walk circumspectly, as wise men, who know the eternal truths of God. We ask not for worldly greatness and power, but for the divine influence of building up Christian character in others. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson Material for the Second Year: New Testament Studies—the Messianic Era and the Apostolic Era.

Lessons for the First Quarter, 1916

- Lesson 1. Jan. 2. Between the Testaments; Dan. 2: 31-45.
Lesson 2. Jan. 9. The Origin and purpose of the Gospels; John 1: 1-14; Luke 1: 1-4.
Lesson 3. Jan. 16. The Growing Jesus; Luke 2: 40-52.
Lesson 4. Jan. 23. The Voice Crying in the Wilderness; Matt. 3: 1-12.
Lesson 5. Jan. 30. At the Gateway of Service; Matt. 3: 13-17; 4: 1-11; Mark: 9-13.
Lesson 6. Feb. 6. Beginnings in Judea; John 2: 13-25.
Lesson 7. Feb. 13. A Woman Lost in Sin; John 4: 27-30; 39-42.
Lesson 8. Feb. 20. Beginnings in Gallilee; Luke 4: 14-31.
Lesson 9. Feb. 27. Teaching with Authority; Matt. 5: 1-16; 7: 28, 29; Luke 6: 20-26.
Lesson 10. Mar. 5. Miracles of Jesus, I; Luke 8: 22-56.
Lesson 11. Mar. 12. Miracles of Jesus, II; John 5: 17-31; 20: 30-31.
Lesson 12. Mar. 19. Parables of Jesus; Matt. 13: 10-17.
Lesson 13. Mar. 26. The Arising Opposition; John 6: 60-71.

Lesson 6. Beginnings in Judea

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Jan. 31. John 1: 35-51. The First Disciples.
T. Feb. 1. John 2: 1-11. The Wedding at Cana.
W. Feb. 2. John 2: 13-25. Cleansing the Temple.
T. Feb. 3. John 3: 1-15. Jesus and Nicodemus.
F. Feb. 4. John 3: 16-21. God's great Love Proclaimed.

S. Feb. 5. John 3: 22-4: 3. The Bridegroom's Friend rejoices with Him.

S. Feb. 6. 1 John 1: 1-10. The Life was Manifested.

Lesson Key: "And Jesus answering said unto them, They that are in health have no need of a physician; but they that are sick. I am not come to call the righteous but sinners to repentance," Luke 5: 31, 32.

After the temptation Jesus seems to have returned to the scene of His baptism where John continued to labor. Some of the Baptist's disciples, directed by his testimony, followed Jesus. Andrew and "another disciple," probably John, were soon joined by Peter, Philip and Nathanael. "We have found the Messiah," said Andrew to Simon, thus expressing the fulfillment of the fondest hope that slumbered in the breast of every true Israelite. Having once met Him, ordinary avocations might be resumed for a while, but His final call found them ready to leave all and follow Him.

To Nazareth was an easy three days' journey, and Cana was about seven miles to the northwest. In the Orient even a poor man may entertain a great company on the occasion of a marriage. Failure of viands, which need not be expensive, would disgrace the host, and Jesus' first miracle saved His friends from such a calamity, as well as revealed His glory. After a brief visit to Capernaum, perhaps the first, Jesus went up to the Passover at Jerusalem. Dealers in cattle and doves for sacrifice, and men who, at exorbitant rates, changed the current money of the provinces for the shekels of the sanctuary, in which the temple dues were paid, pursued their nefarious traffic within the court of the Temple itself. Deeply resenting this slight upon His Father's house, Jesus drove them out, conscience making cowards of them all.

It was right here that unbelief began. Christ's entrance into the public life of the people at once challenged men to a decision. There was no middle ground, they must either approve or condemn His conduct, and in doing so they would necessarily lay bare the innermost motives and condition of their hearts. He had disturbed special privilege in the enjoyment of its supposed rights and is at once questioned as to His authority. Those who considered themselves wronged took offense at His presumption, for He was not an official of the Temple, nor the high-priest, He was not even recognized and licensed as a teacher by those in regular authority in religious affairs. And yet He was strictly within the lines marked out by the prophet, Mal. 3: 1-3. There was no need of any further sign as testimony that He really was what He claimed to be. The moral courage He showed in taking such a stand in opposition to a large and power majority, His appeal to God's holiness, which was always the test of the true prophet, as well as the guilty conscience of those who, in spite of having human authority and influence on their side nevertheless fled before the majesty of one Man fighting for righteousness, should have led especially the leaders of the nation to think twice before opposing Him.

The real cause of unbelief toward Jesus Christ is always a guilty conscience. He represents the truth and the righteousness of God, and what He says and does is the word of God, living and active, sharper than any two-edged sword, and piercing even the dividing of soul and spirit, of both joints and marrow, and quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart. Those who are of the truth, i. e., who love the truth and want to see it prevail, will hear His voice, and be led by it. Those who are not of the truth, who hate truth because it exposes them, and who do not want to see it prevail because it would mean their disgrace and destruction, oppose Him. Wherever Jesus Christ enters a decision for or against truth and righteousness is bound to come. If the decision goes against Him, "There's a reason."

How does Jesus meet the unbelief and opposition? Not by condemnation, not by anger or revenge, nor by an act of judgment, He does not even argue with them or try to convince them that He is right and they are wrong. He simply appeals to their conscience and earnestly warns them of the consequences of their unbelief, giving them a sign whereby their eyes may be opened when His words are fulfilled in the future. And then He retreats for a season to give them ample time to consider the matter calmly, so that if possible truth might still conquer their hardened hearts.

Teacher Training Class Graduates

On Sunday evening, November 21st, a special service was held in St. Paul's Church, Columbus, Ohio, for the graduation of a class of Sunday-school teachers. The class had been instructed by Pastor H. L. Streich, who was at the time pastor of the church; the graduation exercises were in charge of the present pastor, the Rev. W. L. Bretz. A splendid address was given by the Rev. Timothy Lehmann of Columbus on "The Qualifications of a Sunday-school Teacher." Pastor Bretz presented the four graduates to the congregation and awarded the diplomas. It was an inspiring service and as such it was not only a fitting recognition of the work of the graduates, but it served to magnify the work of the Sunday-school in the eyes of the congregatoin. M.

The Confirmation and Value of Prayer

BY JAMES I. VANCE, D. D.

There are facts which confirm prayer. Over against all doubts which may challenge the worth of prayer is the fact of human experience. Some of us know that prayer is worth while, for we have tried it. To send and receive one message is to establish the fact of wireless telegraphy. You and I have had answers to prayer—not always, for prayer has not always been prayer. Sometimes it has been formal. Sometimes we have asked for that we did not want. You cannot call that praying. It is the counterfeit, the caricature, of prayer. But when we put ourselves into our prayers the heavens have opened, and

God has come down our souls to greet.

His grace has crowned the mercy seat."

Let us place this against our doubts. We may not be able to answer the logic of doubt, but logic is not always infallible. A thing may be absolutely logical and at the same time utterly false. Listen to the voice of experience and you will be able to say, "I know whom I have believed."

The teachings of the Bible confirm prayer. Nothing is so stressed as prayer in the Scriptures. I cannot believe that God would deceive us—that He who loved us enough to give His Son to die for us would mock us and encourage us to pray when prayer is only useless mummery. I have faith in the teachings of the Bible. My mind may not be able to work out the philosophy of prayer, but one does not need to understand a mother's love in order to have her concerned for his welfare; and one does not need to understand how prayer works in God's great plan to have its blessings. I claim the privilege and rest on the promises, and know the Book will not lead me astray.

Over against doubts about prayer is the fact that Christ prayed in His ministry, in the garden, on the cross. Was it all useless? Was He merely trying to get reconciled to the inevitable? Did nature mock Him as He prayed? Did God laugh at Him? As He prayed, the angels ministered unto Him. Christ has made the path to the mercy seat radiant. The fact that He prayed silences every doubt about the worth of prayer. He was not deceived; and I am not the sport of fate or the victim of a delusion when, in my human needs and perplexities, surrounded by forces which would slay me, pressed down by burdens which would crush me, confronted by tasks which dimay me, I fall on God and pray.

The value of prayer is the verdict of experience. The privilege of prayer is the doctrine of the Bible. The practice of prayer is the life of Christ. "Pray ye therefore."

Yes, there is some use in praying. It satisfies the soul, the longing for fellowship with the Eternal. We get lonely, and our hearts cry for our heavenly Father. He calls, "Come to me," and we fall at His feet, and He takes us in His arms and says, "Fear not." And we go to our work comforted and strengthened. We are not alone; God is with us. Is not this something?

Prayer is a reminder of unearthly values. The world gains on us. We are in danger of gaining the whole world and losing our own souls—of saying that all that is worth having is what satisfies the flesh. But flesh is dust in seventy years. Shall a man sell out eternity for a strip of time seventy years long? We pray and the air clears. The worth of eternity crowds in. God and faith and duty all shine out. The soul gets up from its knee emancipated. Is not this something.

Prayer produces results. It changes us and our world. It is a link in the chain of cause and effect. Mind influences mind as much, if not more, than matter influences matter. Coal influences pig-iron: it lays hold of it with the teeth of flame until pig-iron becomes steel. Mind influences mind. Infinite mind lays hold of finite mind; divine love flames about a common soul, and God's nature is imparted. Finite mind influences infinite mind. A human spirit prays and the world is changed. Prayer is potent. It brings things to pass. Is not this something?

Beyond all else, prayer keeps us in fellowship with God, in contact with the Infinite, in touch with the soul's source of life and power. "Pray ye therefore." Yes, there is some use in praying. Go back to prayer. Some of you have given it up. You once prayed, but now not for a long time. Go back to your heavenly Father. God is, and He is our Father.

"Speak to Him, thou, for He hears thee,

And spirit with spirit shall meet,

He is closer to us than breathing,

Nearer than hands and feet."

—The Christian Intelligencer.

Religious Books of Great Merit

CHRISTIAN PSYCHOLOGY by Prof. James Stalker.

Of special value to pastors as a help towards a better understanding of personality and of the various influences which operate in the development of Character. 12mo Net $1.25.

THE ORATORY AND POETRY OF THE BIBLE by Prof. Ferdinand S. Schenck.

The noble appeals for God, righteousness and humanity which were made by the prophets and apostles of old are reported in these chapters in the form of graphic and readable letters. 12mo. Net $1.25.

PUBLICITY AND PROGRESS by Herbert Heebner Smith.

Twentieth century methods in Religious, Educational and Social Activities. The value of advertising is convincingly shown to be a necessity for churches and other organizations working for human advancement. 12mo. Net $1.00.

THE SWORD OF THE LORD by Rev. Arthur C. Hill.

A searching examination of the ethical teachings of Jesus and a striking discussion how their high principles can be applied to daily life. 12mo. Net $1.25.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN LIFE AND LITERATURE by Jane T. Stoddart.

A companion volume to "The Old Testament in Life and Literature." The rich fields of history, poetry and biography are garnered to illustrate the manifold message of the New Testament and its influence thruout the world. Octavo. Net $2.25.

THE BIBLE: Its origin, its significance and its abiding worth, by Arthur S. Peake.

This report of the results of scholarly research places the Bible in an attractive light and makes clearer its untold value to the multitudes of people. Octavo. Net $2.00.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS. With a Christian application to modern conditions. By Henry Sloane Coffin.

Net $1.00. The author understands the needs of our day and, what is better, he knows that in Christ these needs can be supplied.

SIDE WINDOWS OR LIGHTS ON SCRIPTURE TRUTHS.

New and unique Bible object lessons, by Mattie M. Beteler. $0.75. A vital need of present-day preaching is a return to the simple and practical method of our Lord, who used the parable and the illustration almost exclusively as the most effective mediums of teaching truth.

Workable Plans for Wide-awake Churches.

— By —

CHRISTIAN F. REISNER

335 pages with index

Cloth. Net $1.00

"Workable Plans for Wide-awake Churches" comes out of the reading, thinking, correspondence, and experience of a busy city pastor, who falls far below his own ideal. God has blessed the use of many plans here given. Large joy and some fruitage has come from their use. All plans for religious work must be fitted to the local community. The pastor who said, "I usually try everything I hear of, if I have a place for it in my field," has the right attitude. Some conservative churches may hesitate, but kindly and careful conferences will win the governing boards over to a trial, at least, and this will open the way for future activity. Though it is a hard lesson for some of us to learn, yet in making innovations of any sort we must "make haste slowly."

Robert J. Thompson

American Consul, Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany.

(Resigned)

England and Germany in the war

Letters to the Department of State

127 pages with the Author's portrait

Net Postpaid $1.00

This book comprises a series of letters addressed to the Secretary of State by Mr. Robert J. Thompson, recently American Consul at Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany, who resigned from his post, as the letters explain, purposely to be free from official restrictions in reporting facts of the European war situation as he has found them.

Thompson's letters were first printed serially in the Chicago Tribune, from February 14 to February 21, 1915. This great newspaper claimed for that period the largest circulation it had had since the beginning of the war, attributing this gain to Mr. Thompson's letters. They created a sensation and much comment.

The letters set forth that their author is not pro-German by predilection or inclination; rather that ties of blood, friendship, sentiment and intimate personal relation bind him to England and France; in view of which he submits that his conclusions in favor of Germany were forced upon him directly against his personal inclinations.

THE BALKANS

A LABORATORY OF HISTORY

William M. Sloane

322 Pages

Net $1.50

Cloth

This book is especially interesting now, since the Balkan situation has been brought into the limelight in the present European war.

Professor Sloane has long been an accepted authority on questions relating to the near East. In this particular instance he happened to be in Europe during the recent upheaval, (first and second Balkan wars) and so was able to make a first-hand study of the situation at close range. This volume is a careful, lucid, and scholarly review of the whole Balkan question, dealing with the social, religious, and political problems in a most comprehensive fashion. The causes, progress, and results of the late war are discussed with such clarity and vision as will make this work a standard characterization of the Balkan situation at the present time.

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.,

202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CHANGED ADDRESSES

Rev. A. Artus, Skidmore, Texas.

Rev. F. H. Krohne, 3617 Belleplaine Ave., Chicago Ill.

(New parsonage.)

Rev. F. Westermann, Neustadt, Ont. Can.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., FEBRUARY 3rd, 1916

NUMBER 5

The Progress of Prohibition

Since January 1, when seven additional states adopted some form of prohibition of the liquor traffic, the total number of "dry" states is eighteen, or somewhat more than one-third of all the states in the Union. The new prohibition states are Colorado, Washington, Oregon, Arkansas, Idaho, Iowa and South Carolina. The new year thus saw the closing of more than 4,000 saloons, and the destruction of the demoralizing influence of the liquor traffic on the lives of about 8,250,000 people in these states. This progress of prohibition, however, does not mean that even the majority of the more than eight million people affected are actually convinced that the use of intoxicants is morally wrong, or that alcohol is a poison that can have only injurious effects upon mind, body and soul. The fact that in South Carolina, for instance, each citizen has the right to receive "only" one gallon of whiskey or of beer each month, and that in Oregon each member of a family is entitled, under the law, to one case of beer and two quarts of whiskey per month, indicates the concession that had to be made to the liquor-using element of the population in order to get a prohibition law thru the legislature. Prohibition is not our way of fighting the evils of intemperance, but just as Paul, Phil. 1: 18, was content to have Christ proclaimed, whether in pretence or in truth, so we are content to record any progress in the fight against alcohol, because we regard it as one of the greatest enemies,—if not the greatest enemy—to the welfare of the American people. At the same time it must not be overlooked that any sort of prohibition laws will be enforced only to the extent that public sentiment becomes convinced that only total abstinence from intoxicants insures immunity from the injury of body, mind and soul which alcohol causes, and strong enough to demand the vigorous enforcement of the laws that have been passed for the protection of the people.

In Colorado liquor now can be obtained only four ounces at a time on a non-refillable prescription of a physician. Prohibition in Iowa was brought about by the repeal of the mulct law. Arkansas has the most stringent prohibition law in the United States. Under local option laws all except six of the seventy-five counties have been dry for several months. The new law provides one year in the penitentiary for violators, and clubs are prohibited from serving drinks to members. Idaho has closed its saloons with a drastic law now before the United States supreme court on appeal. The year is expected to bring an overwhelming upheaval for prohibition in Utah, where the governor vetoed a measure enacted just before adjournment by the legislature in March which would have made the State dry after June 1, 1916. In Minnesota the government has declared almost all of the northern part of the state prohibition territory under an old Indian treaty, for the enforcement of which the "dry" interests of Minnesota have been fighting for years. In Florida 200 saloons were closed by the Davis package law, abolishing the treating system and the free lunch and closing all saloons between 6 p. m. and 7 a. m., besides imposing other drastic regulations. There are now only seventy-five wholesale, retail and mail order liquor houses in Florida. Georgia last fall at a special session of the legislature enacted laws for rigid prohibition enforcement to go into effect on next May 1. The state has been under prohibition laws for some time, but the laws have not been rigid enough to be very effective. New Jersey during the year extended to cities the right to vote on the liquor question. Alabama became dry last July 1.

One of the remarkable features of the anti-liquor movement is the way in which liquor advertisements are being crowded out of the newspapers. In Colorado these advertisements have been forbidden by the prohibition law. The Detroit News has followed the Times of that city in voluntarily excluding liquor advertising. All the Indianapolis evening papers, beginning with Jan. 1, refuse liquor advertisements, and one editor estimates that his paper will lose $50,000 annually from this source. The business is thus gradually becoming an outcast from respectable advertising, a fact that will count strongly in creating sentiment against it. In Milwaukee, where formerly from eight to twelve members of the city council were saloon-keepers, there is none in the present council, and one owner of a leading brewery has left the firm to go into the candy business. In Detroit one of the largest distilleries in the West, which is just across the river, and from which Detroit gets a large part of its whiskey, was closed in October, to remain closed for a year, as demand for the product had fallen off.

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

From friend to friend the choicest gift
That ever love can give

Is that which comes the heart to lift,
Or help the soul to live.

Of all fair bounties ever sought,
Of gems or jewels rare,

What treasure like a lovely thought
Or love's far-reaching prayer?

—Mary Mapes Dodge.

In Washington, D. C., sentiment seems to be crystallizing in favor of absolute prohibition, and three bills to put an end to liquor traffic in the District have been introduced in the Senate. Sentiment against the saloon also seems to be growing in San Francisco, as for some time practically all licenses for saloons issued have been renewals or transfers, not for new establishments.

A Pertinent Question

It has been conservatively estimated that the property of Protestant church members in the United States amounts to over $23,000,000,000. Yet while they added an average of nearly $700,000,000 to their possessions each year for the ten years from 1890 to 1900, in 1915 they gave but $32,000,000 to home and foreign missions. This amount came practically from fifty percent of the church members, and even of these a large percentage have not been paying up to their real abilities. If with less than fifty percent of our church members paying nothing, and a large percentage of those who are not now paying up to their real ability, our Protestant churches could nevertheless raise in 1915 nearly $32,000,000 for home and foreign missions, what might our churches raise in 1916 if all would respond to the claims of Christ with anything like the devotion with which the European soldiers have given themselves to their countries? And why should Christians and church members do less for their God and their Saviour and His everlasting kingdom than their brethren across the sea are doing for their earthly rulers and their temporal kingdoms? Should not the cause of Jesus Christ and His work on earth for immortal souls and for eternity be worth far more to us than the earthly and temporal possessions for which they are fighting are worth to them?

In 1914, according to Men and Missions, Protestant church members in America gave to all home mission work an average of forty-seven cents per member; to all foreign mission work seventy-one cents per member, or an average for both of $1.25. During the same time the American people—at least one-half of whom may be classed as members or adherents of Protestant churches—spent

For confectionary	$ 290,000,000, or $ 3.15 per capita
For soda water	415,000,000, " 4.46 " "
For tobacco	1,200,000,000, " 12.91 " "
For liquor	2,000,000,000, " 21.50 " "

Is it not a sad state of affairs that the Protestant Christians of the country can make annual per capita contributions of $21.00 (one-half of the total per capita expense as above), for these useless things, and only $1.25 for all mission work? It is just as easy for church members to set aside their gifts for missions daily or weekly as it is for them to pay out their money daily or weekly for confectionery, soda water, tobacco and liquor. Not until the church members will pay to churches systematically will the Church be rid of this reproach and the Lord's treasury be adequately supplied with the funds needed for the extension of the kingdom.

To overcome the shameful indifference and the woful results of haphazard giving in the churches, three definite things should be undertaken: 1. To enlist church officers and leaders in the whole program of Christ for the evangelization of the whole world; 2. To enroll as regular supporters of the church the fifty percent or more of our Protestant church members who are not now contributing to the current expense and benevolence budgets; 3. To develop in the entire membership of our churches the true spirit of Christian stewardship which gives proper recognition to the Lordship of Jesus Christ. The Every-Member Canvass promoted by the National Missionary Campaign, which will be set forth in full in a later article, has overcome the indifference complained of and brought the desired results.

As great as have been the financial results of the every-member canvass, these returns have been secondary in importance. The spiritual results have been far greater. Lapsed members have been reclaimed. In one church alone over 200 members who had been entirely lost to the church for years were won back to the worship and work of the church as a direct result of the canvass. Church attendance has been stimulated. Pastors have reported an increase in their congregations of from 5 to 100 per cent. The canvassers themselves receive new joy as a result of the service. Again and again canvassers have asked for other work to do, and ministries that hitherto have been impossible for want of leaders have been carried forward with the result that all departments of the church work have taken on new life and inspiration. For the real joy of it canvassers have gone out on a fellowship canvass or an evangelistic campaign, and cases are on record where in a few weeks as many as one hundred and fourteen new members have been added to the church, without extra meetings of any kind, as a result of the personal evangelistic efforts of men who caught the vision of such possibilities while conducting a money canvass. Not only have the salaries of hundreds of pastors been increased, but what is far better, the canvass has resulted in giving new vision and encouragement to pastors whose messages and ministries have been quickened until revivals have broken out and the greatest work of grace ever known has been experienced by scores of churches.

In view of such victories in so many churches, why should not any church have faith to believe that our Lord is able to do a fresh piece of re-creative work in any parish just as soon as He has proper channels thru which to work?

The Prophet that Cometh into the World

"When therefore the people saw the sign which He did, they said, This is of a truth the prophet that cometh into the world," John 6: 14.

John's purpose in writing the fourth gospel is plainly stated in 20: 30, 31: "Many other signs therefore did Jesus in the presence of the disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written, that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God; and that, believing, ye may have life in His name." The one great subject before the Apostle's mind as he records the words and works of power in the unique Life it had been his privilege to observe and to experience is the Word that became flesh and dwelt among men that those who believe in Him should not perish but have everlasting life. Others have recorded His birth and His boyhood and emphasized the human side of His life and work; his only aim is that of exalting the divinity of his Master and its supreme significance to mankind.

With this aim in mind he presents Jesus Christ as the pre-existent, eternal, divine Word manifested in the incarnation, heralded by John the Baptist and commended to the faith of every man, 1: 1-18. As such He is proclaimed the true Word of God, 1: 19-2: 11; recognized by His work and words, 2: 12-4: 54, and antagonized, 5: 1-12: 50, as He reveals himself as the life and the light of the world. The charge of blasphemy, first raised at the cure of Bethesda, where His words, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," 5: 17, 18, were at once and rightly understood as claiming equality with God, was never lost sight of, and was the final cause of His condemnation and death. The feeding of the five thousand, 6: 1-15, gave new incentive to the worldly hopes of many of His followers and causes Jesus to emphasize more than ever the spiritual character of His mission, tho this only makes the conflict between the darkness in the world and Him who is the light of the world more clear and significant. His people recognize Him as the Prophet (Deut. 18: 15, 18), but their worldly-mindedness leads them to mistake His mission and His message.

The fact that the miracle of feeding the five thousand is recorded by all four evangelists (Matt. 14: 13-21; Mark 6: 30-44; Luke 9: 12-17; John 6: 1-15) shows the deep impression it made, and points out its deep and many-sided meaning. No miracle of Jesus is richer in spiritual significance and suggestion, and no deed of Christ is more Christlike. The fullness of meaning that Christ himself put into it is indicated by the discourse with which He follows the act of compassion.

For it was first of all, an act of divine compassion for the hungry. Many, if not most of the crowd that gathered there, came on the spur of the moment, out of curiosity to see the Man who was making such a reputation for himself by His wonderful deeds and words, or with excited political expectations of some new and still more wonderful deed that would liberate the nation from the bondage of Rome and establish the kingdom of God on earth. Jesus knew their hearts, and He also divined that when these people would come to understand His real mission among men they would, as they actually did afterwards, go back and walk no more with Him. Yet he had compassion, not only upon those who sought living water at the fountainhead of everlasting life, but also upon those in that vast crowd who came with the unworthiest purpose. Indeed, it would be difficult to say which of the two awoke His pitying love most movingly, those who came for what He wanted to give, or those who had not yet learned that what He wanted to give was all that was worth having.

The Need, not the Motive Counts with Christ

We may often be suspicious of the reasons why men want to join the church and seek the ministry and blessings of religion. But no matter how weighty or how clear our reasons for such a suspicion may be—if there are such reasons for it,—we are most Christlike when we too think pityingly of the great needs of just these people for the highest and best things the Gospel of Jesus Christ can give. If Jesus Christ, who alone of all men had the right and the ability to judge and to condemn, felt only compassion, what business have we, who have neither the right nor the ability to judge, to suspect and to criticize or even to condemn those who come from questionable motives? Let us rather rejoice at the impulse that makes them seek Jesus Christ, and at the possibility that His words, which are Spirit and are life, may yet enlighten their minds, purify their hearts and sanctify their lives. The Church and Christians in general have great need to-day of Christ's compassion for even the lowliest and basest of all.

And Christ's compassion found the way out. The disciples advised sending them away as they marked the famished looks of the people and the coming of the night. They were afraid of the responsibility involved in keeping such a crowd of hungry men and women together. There might be trouble, and they did not know what to do in that event. But Jesus boldly thought of the one thing to do. "Give them to eat," said He, nor did the thought of the meager five loaves and two fishes, as the only resources at hand, or the doubting words of the disciples, "What are these among so many?" keep Him from carrying out His purpose. And the faith of the disciples as they obey is splendidly rewarded not only by seeing the multitude fed in an orderly and satisfactory manner, but also by the twelve baskets with broken pieces gathered up, many times more than had been available at the beginning.

In carrying out the demands of Christlike compassion we do not need to fear the poverty of our resources. "Go ye into all the world," was Christ's command to a handful of men whom the world was ready to mock. Looking only at the men and their physical or spiritual ability, it seemed hardly less than insanity to send them out with such a message. But looking at Him who sent them, and considering that all authority in heaven and on earth were given to Him, it was the one thing to do under the circumstances. So even to-day the little things we have are multiplied many times as we place them in the Master's service. As we go to gather in one street waif, power is given to house a thousand. As we bind up the wounds of a stricken one, the great hospital for thousands of suffering and afflicted is made possible. A poor woman's guest-chamber can become a home of mercy sheltering thousands. A little child's gift may become a splendid endowment. And so on thru the list. Jesus Christ asks us to use what we have, no matter how insignificant it may seem, and then He uses it.

And it is thus that people come to recognize Him as the Prophet that cometh into the world.

The Treasure of Mesquite Prairie

II

But Warren must have gone on thinking. Certain it is that he sat there for an hour or more, looking very grave, and certain it is also, that then he went straight home and took from his little trunk in the shed-room his paper, pen, and ink. Then he sat down to write, with lips firmly set and eyes well open.

In due time his letter, dropped by his own hands in the Keyville post office, reached a far northern city. It ran thus:

"Dear Friend: I seat myself to write you a few lines, to let you know I am well and doing well, and hope you are enjoying the same blessing. And your son is doing mighty well. I want his ma not to be uneasy. He aint been doin' no such hard work except grubbing mesquite stumps off of the prairie, and if he keeps on he will get rich.

"He gets fifteen dollars a month and find, and I think will get rich at it, not spending nothing hardly. He don't never drink nor play cards nor nothing—just as steady, and and mighty sick he is now. So I just write myself and let you know.

"If ever you come this way you must stop and see us. Our latch-string is always on the outside, as the saying is, and things mighty fine if the mesquites is sorter lonesome, some folks think, but they aint. I done told you Mr. Danewood is mighty homesick, so I will close saying Write Soon to Your Friend till Death,

G. W. K. Almstead."

A wild norther came roaring down that Sunday night. Henry and Danewood were glad to sit by the mesquite-root fire all the next day after they had once got to the corn-crib to feed hogs and horses.

The poor starved cattle stood about in fence-corners, shivering; they were never fed, but lived on what green they could find thru all weathers. Many a one, as Henry said, "went up" that night—lay down and died.

"The cattle's begun to die already," said Henry, a few days later. "I don't know what they'll do by spring if we have such a hard winter as I believe we are goin' to have."

"The cattle aint the only ones that I do' know how's going to stand it," said Mrs. Almstead. "There's that boy, Danewood. He's gone to bed there in the shed-room. The northers don't agree with him no better than they do with the cattle—he's a-coughin'; and he won't take more'n half the quinine I give to you all."

At the end of the week, Danewood was well again, or declared himself so, to escape Mrs. Almstead's doses. Then he got out to work just in time to be exposed in the next norther. So again he lay in the shed-room, his head hot, his hands cold, a pain in his side, and the same old cough.

The weather was against them from the beginning, they said—his nurses—all those cowboys who had treated him so roughly. They strove their best to save him now. But it was bad weather for pneumonia, and the wind whistled thru the cracks that ventilated the Almstead house.

"He'll die," old Dr. Waggoner was heard to say. "Can't live. System run down and heart wrong."

But one day there came to the Almstead door a belated telegram, and following fast on it, young Danewood's father and mother.

"It's astonishing," said the old doctor, a week later, "what good nursing can do, and I thought they did pretty well for Danewood before his mother came, too. But you see a mother's a mother. He's almost ready to go home with her now."

"And havn't they found out yet, doctor," asked a neighbor, "bout that telegram to G. W. K. Almstead, when Almstead, his initials is Henery Clay. And how'd they git word so's to git here jist in the nick of time?"

"O, they found out all about that—the Almsteads have. It was their boy Warren that wrote. He'd found an old envelope with Danewood's name on it and address. Warren picked it up where Danewood had thrown it away—picked it up to copy the hand-rite—he was sich a boy you see, for writing, and that was a fine hand, he thought, for a copy. Well, that boy took a notion to write to the address, and he went on to tell 'em—we suppose—that young Danewood was homesick. But what he said was, 'mighty sick.'"

"It was jist Warren's smartness," Mrs. Almstead explained to the same neighbor the next day. "Why, Mr. Perkins, you don't know what a boy that is. Mis' Danewood, she's been talkin' about him. She says he's a perfect treasure, and his pa 'lowed Warren was a treasure, he's sech a good, careful, thoughtful sort of a boy, always studyin' 'bout others. Warren, he opened his eyse wide, wide, at his pa."

"Don't forget to tell him 'bout the telegraft," whispered Milly. "A real live telegraft we got, Mr. Perkins. Sent all the way, and then out here from Keyville—sent tryin' to find something. The folks at Keyville, they found out by that telegraft that there was some Almstead in this country. And they had to send it with a horse and messenger."

"And we got the telegraft—we got it," Amanda finished. "I'd most as soon have a real, live telegraft as a—as a buggy—'cept it was directed to G. W. K. Almstead, this here smart thing, as he thinks himself. Hum! they must 'a' thought we had mighty small men down here."

"G. W. K. Almstead," said Henry, who had sat in a silence which his little brother did not like, "claim your telegram they seem to think so big. It sure was yours, G. W. K."

G. W. K. Almstead laughed slightly, as he always did when Henry honored him with a word. But he grew serious then again, immediately, and he kept a steadfast eye on his brother's face.

Henry himself was serious. It was not until the room had been left to him and to the little boy still regarding him wistfully, that he aroused himself, pushed his big gray hat from his brow, pushed it off by accident, and hastened to put it back in place on his locks, where it stayed ever, save at meal times. Then he spoke:

"You've deceived me. I'm filled with grief. You, too, boss. What have you to say in your own defense?"

"I knowed it," cried the little boy, sadly, "I knowed you'd disown me, Henery. I knowed you'd disown and disinherit me, but I couldn't help it. I couldn't help it anyway. You'd 'a' disowned me, I mean, anyway, 'cause—I'll jist tell it now—I'm sorry all the time; I am. There aint nary minute I aint sorry for somebody, and you said I mustn't be. I'm sorry for Mandy right now. She wanted a buggy and I never found the treasure. I dug and dug; I wanted to get a buggy for Mandy so bad."

His small breast heaved, but Henry, looking at him, drew his hat down over his eyes.

"And I wanted his ma to know so bad," continued Warren. "I thought what if you was 'way from home. What if you was 'way up north with tears in your eyes, Henery—tears—and nobody was good to you."

He had no more to say. But still Henry did not speak. It was a long time before Henry spoke.

"Warren," he said at last in such an altered voice that the little boy's eyes became even more serious, "I don't mind tellin' you that it would 'a' made me feel pretty bad if that there boy Danewood, after the way us fellows treated him, had 'a' died here away from his folks. I believe his mother's gittin' here just when she did, saved him. I was a-thinkin' some of telegraphin' but it was too late.

"I say you done me a favor writin' that letter, and I'm obleeged to you. If you did go and meddle into other folks' affairs, a thing I despise folks a-doin', I don't believe you'll be hurt with meddlin' when you git to be the man I see you're goin' to be, and I tell you this, I'm proud of you.

"Mrs. Danewood kissed you yesterday and said you was a treasure. Now let me tell you 'bout that treasure what you mustn't hunt no more. I've found it."

"Where?" cried Warren eagerly. "Where?"

"Here," said Henry, laying a big hand on the small boy's shoulder. "It's a treasure that I never knowed of, and I'm a-goin' to dig for it now. O, I'm a-goin' to dig around the roots of this here fambly-tree generally."

Warren did not quite understand, but somehow Henry's words made him very happy.

Money in Terms of Life

How many young people who are dependent upon their parents for their support—their food and clothing—realize the meaning of money? Money may be expressed in terms of human life, and human life may be expressed in terms of money. Do not misunderstand. Life is an infinitely more precious thing than money. Money and life are not convertible the one into the other. And yet there is a sense in which money represents an expenditure of life.

Here is a hard-working mechanic who makes four dollars a day. His daughter wishes a modest, warm wrap costing sixteen dollars. She thinks this is not an unreasonable request, and perhaps she is indeed quite within reasonable bounds when she asks her father for the garment. And yet it would be quite a wholesome reflection for the young lady if she should remember that she has asked her father for his work of four entire days in order that she may have her heart's desire. When the thing at issue is not a wrap, but a piece of costly jewelry that might have remained unbought without serious privation, or some foolish entertainment that gives at best only temporary excitement, the question takes on a more serious aspect.

A right-thinking parent is, of course, perfectly willing to provide for those depending upon him all the things necessary to health and the real welfare, even tho he may be compelled to devote his strength and, indeed, his whole life to that end. But the young people in the family who are thus cared for should appreciate the fact that what they eat and wear and enjoy has back of it all a father's investment of his very life. He has coined his strength of body and mind—many a time to the point of painful fatigue—into money. Hence money has an element of sacredness in it that is often not realized.

We have known young men who are earning only five or six dollars a week to blow away the entire week's earning in a few hours' frivolous entertainment with giddy friends, little thinking that this is equivalent to throwing away a week of strength, of work, of life itself.

This is an age of gross extravagance. The young people of our land need to think more accurately as to the measuring of their expenditures. All wealth is derived from two, and only two sources. First, there is the raw material, so to speak, which God has made and put at man's disposal—land, water, wood, ores, foodstuffs, and all the great variety of the earth's natural resources. Second, there is human effort invested in gathering and reshaping these things for the use of mankind. Waste of the first is sacrilegious trifling with God's bounties. Waste of the second is sinful using up of human life.—Service.

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

The City Beautiful

Sometimes when the day is ended
And its round of duties done,
I watch at the western windows
The gleam of the setting sun.
When my heart has been unquiet
And its longings unbeguiled
By the day's vexatious trials
And cannot be reconciled,
I look on the slope of the mountains
And o'er the restless sea,
And I think of the beautiful city
That lieth not far from me.
And my spirit is hushed in a moment
As the twilight falls tender and sweet,
And I cross in fancy the river,
And kneel at the Master's feet.
And I rest in the shade that there falleth
From the trees that with healing are rife—
That shadow the banks of the river—
The river of water of life.
And some time, when the day is ended,
And the duties He gave me are done,
I shall watch at life's western windows
The gleam of the setting sun.
I shall fall asleep in the twilight
As I never have slept before,
To dream of the beautiful city,
Till I waken to sleep no more.
There will fall on my restless spirit
A hush, oh, so wondrously sweet,
And I shall cross over the river
To rest at the Master's feet. —Selected.

Neighbors

Lois Sweetser lay back in her chair, every line of her slender figure betraying her weakness. The doctor looked at her keenly.

"Lois," he said suddenly, 'you are not playing fair."

The girl's heavy eyes widened. "I have done everything you've told me to," she answered. "You can see for yourself—"

"With your body, yes; but you haven't done it with your mind. You haven't put yourself into it for one moment. You're a deserter."

"You can't make yourself care when there's nothing else to live for," the girl replied.

"That's a coward's answer," the doctor retorted brusquely. "I know it sounds brutal. We doctors have to hurt terribly sometimes. But it's true. Nobody has a right to be a coward when the battle needs every man. Child, child, the things that are needing you this moment!"

"If you'd tell me," Lois said, with an effort.

"I might tell you wrong. You must find out for yourself. Hunt round among your neighbors. You won't have to look long if you are in earnest. There, I must run. Out of doors every day, rain, wind or sunshine, remember."

Lois lay still for one hour—two; then slowly she rose and dressed for her walk. How she hated that walk! Drearily she trailed thru one street after another. Suddenly she stopped, her heart beating heavily.

For one wild moment she hardly knew what she thought, so vividly did the soft, musical Italian bring back the past year, when she and Roger had studied it together in preparation for their trip to Italy. The next moment she realized the situation—the little cobbler pleading hopelessly with his bewildered American customer.

Moved by a sudden impulse, Lois stepped forward, and in careful Italian asked what the trouble was. The little man flashed about, his face transfigured as, with eager gestures and adoring looks, he explained to the angelic young lady the trouble. She in turn explained to the customer. In three minutes it was straightened out.

The next day Lois went to the little street again. The cobbler was watching. He poured out a torrent of supplication of which Louis caught almost nothing except bambino, but the little man's eager face told the rest. She followed him to a back room where the girl-mother was. Above the tiny dark head on her arm the eyes of the two women met and found each other.

A month later the doctor looked at his patient beamingly.

"Teaching dago women English!" pretending to scoff.

"Not dagoes—neighbors."—Youth's Companion.

Shadows Across the Track

Railway engineers do not like the shadows which are cast across the rails ahead of them by trees and other objects along the way. Sometimes these weird specters of the night look like men. Now they take the form of horses and cattle. And well these men of the throttle know that if these shadowy visitants are what they look as if they might be, danger lies close ahead. But soon they see that it is only moonlight playing them tricks.

A good share of the trouble Christians have in this world comes from shadows.

Life's way does not always run thru meadow land and prairie. Winding along the side of the hills, dipping deep into leafy dells, following the course of moonlit streams and often seeming to plunge straight into the heart of some mountain of trouble, grim objects appear to lie on every hand to frighten us and make us think that there never will be peace again. Then suddenly the thing we feared has melted away and we have seen only shadows.

Does it seem to us we are walking alone? Shadows. Close by our side is the dear One who never forgets His own. Are we fearful that we are not living up to our best, but that at last we shall meet the Father's frown? Shadows. Trusting Him, we are ever coming a little nearer to the ideal we have set before us. Do we fancy that our prayers are never to be answered? Only shadows. He is ever better than our fears. Some day we will know that even our faintest cry was heard and never forgotten.

Why should we worry ourselves with these shadows? Why not trust Him more? As the moonlight brings the shadows on life's way, so it is God's love that sends the sunshine and the rain, and all is for our good.

—Christian Work and Evangelist.

The Mountain and the Squirrel

This little fragment has been pronounced the very best bit of poetry that Emerson ever wrote. Suppose we all commit it to memory, not only as an example of the real wit of its celebrated author but also for the homely lesson it conveys.

The mountain and the squirrel

Had a quarrel,

And the former called the latter "Little prig!"

Bun replied,

"You are doubtless very big,

But all sorts of things and weather

Must be taken in together

To make up a year,

And a sphere;

And I think it no disgrace

To occupy my place.

If I'm not so large as you,

You are not so small as I,

And not half so spry;

I'll not deny you'd make

A very pretty squirrel track.

Talents differ; all is well and wisely put;

If I cannot carry forests on my back,

Neither can you crack a nut."

She Was Worried

"These folks that are always worrying about things that may happen," said the man on the soap box, "remind me of a thing that happened in my school days. We used to have a lecture every Friday afternoon, and one day the lecturer was a geological sharp and chose Niagara Falls for his topic.

"He told us all about the geological formation of the falls, described the different periods that could be traced in the gorge, and then went on to say that the falls were slowly wearing back toward Buffalo, and that in the course of some 200,000 years they would be worn back to Erie, Pa., and that town would be left high and dry.

Just then one of the girls in the class began to sob wildly. 'What's the matter?' asked the teacher in alarm.

"'Oh,' she wailed, 'I've got a sister living in Erie.'"—New York World.

Denominational

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS

Installations

In accordance with the instructions of the respective District presidents, the pastors named below have recently been installed in their various new charges:—

On Oct. 10, 1915, Pastor R. J. Kurtz at Cincinnati, O., (Columbia) by Pastor W. L. Krueger.

On Dec. 5, 1915, Pastor P. Ott at Syracuse, Neb., by Pastor J. Abele.

December 12, 1915

Pastor J. Reichardt at Lowden, Iowa, by his predecessor, Pastor F. Werning.

Pastor F. Schemmer at Primrose-Farmington parish, Iowa, by Pastor W. Kreis.

On Dec. 26, 1915, Pastor J. C. Bierbaum at Lexington, Mo., by Pastor J. M. Munz.

On Jan. 2, 1916, Pastor G. D. Fleer at Geneseo, Ill., by Pastor Theo. F. Krueger.

Central Sunday School Board

The semi-annual meeting of the Central Sunday School Board will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday, February 15, and 16, in the office of General Secretary Mayer at Eden Publishing House, St. Louis. This is the meeting to which we cordially invite the members of the District Sunday School Boards, and it is hoped that a goodly number will be present. All suggestions, recommendations and requests concerning the denominational Sunday-school work should be made in writing and sent as soon as possible to the General Secretary, Rev. Th. J. Mayer, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, which co-operation will be heartily appreciated.

Paul Pfeiffer, Chairman.

Who Will Help?

Thirty years ago I made the acquaintance of a young baker in St. Louis, Mo. We met quite often and I found that the young man had an open heart and mind for the divine truth. Our paths separated,—he went to Chicago, and I took charge of a congregation. Just recently I received a letter from my old acquaintance, who is a steady reader of our periodicals, and I wish to quote a few extracts therefrom:

"Among the home mission items I find an article from your pen in which you request Evangelical Christians to help our mission workers by supplying them with sufficient denominational publications so as to enable them to counteract the evil influence disseminated by the Mormons, Adventists, etc. I am surprised that our home mission workers are compelled to ask for such assistance. Will not our Evangelical Church itself have the greatest gain from the work of such brave men who act as outposts in the far West? Thousands of such papers as you mention are printed weekly in our publishing house; could not a few hundred more be printed and sent to these mission workers at the expense of the Synod? I believe positively that there is a sufficient number of copies left over each time to supply this demand, so that there would be no extra expense attached to this except the postage.

And what do our Herald readers say to this? When I see how the Adventists and Scientists have large numbers of their publications for distribution in every large railroad depot, and when I note how so many traveling men read them in order to pass the time, I am surprised at the position taken by our Synod in not sending out any sample numbers. If all the numbers of the "Friedensbote" or "Herald" which are left over from month to month, were sent out by the publishing house, it would not be necessary to send out consecutive numbers to our mission workers for distribution, they would perform their mission.

But who will pay for the expense connected therewith? Are there not some readers of these papers, or some Sunday-school, young people's society, some Brotherhood, who would make this offer to the publishing house or to the Board: We will bear the expense for this. Enclosed find — Dollars. Perhaps it is necessary to call attention again to the fact that it is against the law to send out sample papers regularly to the same people from month to month. Papers sent in bundles to the various mission workers require a higher postage than those sent to regular subscribers.

J. Jans.

"I will make you Fishers of Men"

The Spirit of Evangelism an active Force among the Russo-Germans. A Service—or several of them—like that at Delta might help some other Evangelical Churches also. A Great Work still waits to be done in Colorado as soon as the Board can provide the Means

What We are Doing on the Western Slope

REV. J. J. BRAUN, GRAND JUNCTION, COLO.

Scattered thruout the valley of the Grand and the Gunnison in Western Colorado are hundreds of German beet-farmers. They are invariably people whose ancestors migrated from Bavaria and Wuerttemberg to Russia about a hundred and fifty years ago to escape religious persecution and economic hard-ent laxity of morals. The cracks between the undressed boards are covered on the inside with heavy felt paper. Some of these people are sadly addicted to drink. Such victims of John Barleycorn are materially helped by the new dry law. Coarseness in speech and action among this class of our Russo-German brethren is very offensive to those accustomed to more civilized and gentler ways.

Russo-German Congregation at Delta

2840

ships. In Russia they lived in colonies often enjoying considerable liberty, and conscientiously preserving their German traditions. But economic, political and religious oppression, as well as the reports of American wealth and opportunity lured them to the land of freedom.

Being accustomed to hard work, they find the best market for their labor in the raising of crops that require a great amount of patient industry. In the West this is usually the sugar-beet. The sugar companies, their managers and field bosses frequently take advantage of the Germans. The latter are accustomed to the Russian patriarchal system and know nothing about legal rights in America. Unscrupulous bosses and managers find numerous opportunities for profit thru the ignorance of their beet-workers. By oral promises they get the people to move into the country from places hundreds of miles away; get them to raise a crop of beets, and when the beets are shipped, the promises are forgotten. In the little col-

Counteracting this shiftlessness is the so-called "brotherhood" in which quite another spirit prevails. Evangelistic meetings are held with or without a minister and every convert is called a brother. These meetings originated in Russia, where the Church seems utterly to have failed to minister to the deeper needs of the people. The brothers are always ready to give their testimony and their story of God's hand being heavy upon them until they finally yielded and accepted God's grace rings true. Never will the writer forget Brother Martin's testimony: Having just arrived in western Colorado, it was his task to clear a large tract of land and burn a great mass of sage brush. The heat of the bon-fire was intense and the savage relentlessness of the lapping, darting flames most impressive. As he dodged the flames, the thought of God's wrath against sinners seized him irresistibly. "David," he said to himself, "These flames you can dodge, but will you be able to dodge the flames of your Maker's judgment?" Full half ony of Silt, the people told the writer of many hundreds of dollars promised that never reached the growers. It is no wonder that during the last few months we have lost about half the colony to Nebraska and Montana. They are quick to move away to test the honesty of the bosses at another place. In point of fact their poverty is largely caused by their frequent moving. But feeling themselves the hopeless dupes of their employers, they try another state, if haply their dreams of prosperity and happiness may be realized.

Evangelistic Meeting at Delta

In many of the families the standard of living does not rise very rapidly. They are content to live with their large families in miserable shacks built like the old-time wooden box-car, and having but two rooms. This accounts to some extent for the prevail-a year he fought against the Spirit, mocking the brethren. Finally, in a wonderful all-night testimony meeting on New Year's Eve, he broke down and gave his heart to God. Since then he has been a leader among his people.

Unfortunately, there has been no adequate agency for the care of the converts. Always conscious of superiority over the unconverted, and with no proper training in the progressive knowledge of the Saviour, many of the brothers have grown conceited and talk much about religious matters without any longer being the channel of divine power. Not aware of it themselves, the sinful element present even in converted men frequently leads them into bitterness, selfish and manifold transgressions. For the minister of a congregation of Russo-Germans, most vexing problems are often created by the brothers. What a crying need of a consecrated thoro training of converts. Nothing less than a well organized Evangelical church will answer the purpose. No denomination seems so well adapted to the task as our own Evangelical Synod.

Missionary Services at Delta

At Montrose and Delta the blessings of a well-organized church life are quite evident. Many beet-farmers have settled around these centers and the Rev. A. Fuenning has charge of the prosperous work at both places. The Congregational Church inaugurated a work here, but the degree of local autonomy granted by this church body rendered the work flaccid and ineffective. Pastor Fuenning in true Evangelical spirit wields a mild but firm discipline that commands not only the respect of the people but their whole-hearted confidence.

This Russian-born future citizen at Silt is getting one month's schooling a year
His father rents a substantial log-house

Upon their pastor's invitation, a goodly number of the people appeared on the evening of Nov. 21st at his headquarters, the home of enterprising, successful Mr. Gamel. The next day special missionary services were to be held. The visiting pastor had already come, so the time was most opportune for a good evangelistic meeting. Every available chair, bench and box about the place was put into service. Equipped with their beloved song-books, men and women arrived and took their places in the spacious dining-room. Singing, prayer, Scripture reading and addresses by the two pastors opened the meeting—merely opened it. Then as if by a pre-determined arrangement everybody arose, knelt by his seat and waited. Presently a sister raised her voice and prayed fervently. The pastor announced a hymn, of which five verses were sung, and again everybody knelt. Another sister prayed eloquently. Pauses were not awkward and grew shorter as the meeting progressed. Another hymn, several more prayers by men and women, more singing, more praying—all very natural, very simple, very fervent and very real. Nearly every prayer went to the very heart of Christian truth, the atonement in the cross, and thence to all the cardinal facts of Christian experience. In such meetings many a man and woman give their hearts to God.

These meetings are a phenomenon and a problem for theologs and religious psychologists. The people are untaught by the dignitaries of the Church. Their religious life is the product of spontaneous revivals. Men among them had asked the Father for His Spirit and had not been denied. Their energies were set

Concluded on Page 8

FINANCING THE KINGDOM

Are your Gifts to your Church and to Missions and Benevolences in Proportion to your Prosperity? One instance of what happens when Christians make up their Mind to give rather than beg

I

The conventions of the National Missionary Campaign now being held in all parts of the country are bringing out no more significant fact,—and none more deplorable in its significance,—than this, that the churches of the country are woefully unfaithful and inefficient both as to the methods and the amounts of their giving. The figures exhibited on the large chart, indicating that the Church has received only a very small fraction of the general increase in prosperity during the past decade, while the property of Protestant church members, according to a conservative estimate, was doubled every three years and the amount spent for liquor and tobacco and other luxuries, from chewing gum to automobiles, has increased by leaps and bounds. Less than fifty percent of the members of Protestant churches are now enrolled as regular contributors to the local expense and benevolence budgets of the churches, or participating in any definite form of service, and a very large proportion of those who are giving are not contributing in proportion to their real ability or in proportion to the actual needs of the churches. A very small proportion of those now contributing to the local expense or benevolent budget of the churches are paying in accordance with their privilege and duty as Christian stewards. There are in our churches scores upon scores of men and women whose income and wealth have increased year after year, but whose gifts to local needs and missions have nowhere nearly kept pace.

The result is not simply lack of funds for the Lord's work, but more fatal even than that fact is the awful calamity which is befalling many of these people in the drying up of the fountains of their spiritual lives. Then, too, think of the awful, far-reaching paralysis of the influence of such members upon the life of our churches. The sad state of affairs set forth on page one can only be remedied by a thoro change of heart in the general attitude of church members toward giving, and by a complete reversal of the practice of giving followed in most churches. Not before Christian people undertake to finance the Kingdom on the principles established by its Head and Founder, and followed by its first Apostles, can the full blessings for the individual life be realized and the world-saving and world-regenerating influence of the Gospel bear its glorious fruits. What these principles are is well set forth in the following by the Rev. Clarence H. Benson in a recent issue of The Mission Field.

Financial Methods a Reproach to the Church

All great enterprises have to be properly as well as adequately financed. Large corporations and business houses are recognized in the commercial world largely in proportion to the system and security of their accounts. Altho the Church is the oldest and largest and most important industry upon the planet, the financial support and system of no other big business is as open to criticism. The Church is reproached for its haphazard methods by every master of finance, and its lack of system in money matters has not furthered its interest among business men. Instead of the Church having compassion upon the business man, the average business man has had compassion upon the Church. And the shame of it all is that the Church has absolutely no excuse for attaining such an unfavorable reputation. God has provided a practical plan for financing the Church just as He has provided for all her other enterprises. The difficulty is that either men are ignorant of that plan or that they are endeavoring to substitute some other method.

A favorite plan is to have the Kingdom financed by the wealthy members of the Church. That is what they are in the Church for! The average member firmly believes that there is somebody else better able to pay the bills of the Church than he is. The financial secretary of some churches really ought to be elected Overseer of the Poor. Few men ever meet so many poor people. And yet these poverty-stricken individuals would feel very much insulted if you should esteem them poor in relation to any other object.

A young man working on the Every Member Canvass out West relates his experiences as follows: "The first man I met said he was very sorry, but the fact was he was so involved in business that he could not give anything. He was smoking a ten-cent cigar at the time, and before I left the store he purchased an expensive pair of cuff buttons. The next man I met was a young clerk in a banking establishment. He read the paper over and acknowledged that it was just what the Church needed, but it so happened that he was owing for his board and badly in need of a suit of clothes, so he could not do anything. That afternoon as I went by the baseball grounds I saw that man pay one dollar for a seat in the grandstand. The third man was a farmer. He also was sorry. Times were hard and his crops a failure. He could not see his way clear to give anything, altho he did not doubt but that the canvass would be a success if all who could afford to give would respond. A week later I saw that farmer drive into town with his entire family and go to the circus afternoon and night at an expense of at least four dollars." The Bible says: "Judge not, that ye be not judged," but it also reminds us that "by their fruits ye shall know them." Men do not gather grapes from thorns or financial fruition from frozen hearts and frosted pocket-books. There is still a work of grace needed among those members who are always looking for somebody else to do their work. "Every one of us shall give an account of himself to God," and we need not be surprised if the first account to be examined in that day is our financial one.

The Church must learn to pay its own Bills

Another favorite plan is to have the Kingdom financed by the members of the community. There are too many churches to-day built by the community rather than their constituency, and in consequence we have community clubs rather than consecrated churches. Now the Church is our force and the community is our field. The force should work in the field; not the field work in the force. The Church is woefully belittled in the eyes of the people of the community if it has to seek their conciliation and co-operation to pay its debts. No man of self-respect will permit his neighbor to pay his bills, and yet the Church is so oblivious to its standing in the community that it welcomes the financial aid of the neighborhood to meet its running expenses. Moreover the Church which incurs indebtedness for which it has no intention of being responsible can hardly hope to produce members who will have enough self-respect and honesty to pay their bills. Is it any wonder that such a system of finance loses the respect of the very people that the Church is supposed to be seeking to save?

Dr. Truett tells of his experience at the dedication of a large church in Texas. He had been asked to preach the sermon, and just before the service the officers of the church took him aside and said, "We must get $6,500 in money." "Where are you going to get it?" he asked. They said: "We think that we can get $500 out of the church, but you must get $6,000 out of the town." "No," said Dr. Truett, "it will not come that way. If we get that $6,000, why $500 may come out of the town; but $6,000 must come out of the church." Well, there were some long faces and murmurings, but after about thirty minutes $3,000 had been raised—$3,000 in thirty minutes. Then Dr. Truett said, "What shall we do? There is still $3,500 to be raised." A little woman bowed her face in her hands, and then, rising up with something of a sob, said to her husband, who was near the pulpit taking down the count, "Charlie, we were offered $3,500 yesterday for our little home. We have just gotten out of debt, but I wonder if you feel as I do. If you do, we will give that house, and then God's house will be free from debt. Charlie, Jesus bought us with His precious blood, and you and I can work. If you are willing we will give it." And he answered, "I was just thinking of that myself. We will give it." But they did not do it. The men of that city stood around the walls of the church—men of banks, stores and factories. They had come on that day to see the new church and hear the outside speaker. These worldly, critical men had shot out their lips in scorn at the begging church, but they are not doing it now. A man who had given $50 now arose and said, "I have sinned. Make it $500." Another who had given $25 said, "Make it $250." A woman who had given $5 said, "Add $245 to mine." Faster than the clerks could take it down the church members provided that $3,500. But that was not all. That was not the best part of it. Some of those men who had stood around the wall with no respect or regard for the church came down the aisle and said, "Where is the God of this people and what must we do to be saved?" They had seen a church manifest the sincerity of its mission by satisfactorily financing its own debts.

Still another favorite plan is to have the Kingdom financed by indirect methods. The story that is told of the prayerless sailor in a storm at sea, who when called upon to do something religious took up a collection, is a good illustration of the vital association that the public conceives as existing between the Church and the offering plate. Yet collections, no matter how frequent, are only an indirect means of financing the Kingdom. No business could be successfully maintained by collections, and no industry could thrive upon free-will offerings. Last year our school system cost us $780,000,000—a sum nearly equal to the value of our wheat crop, one-half the value of our corn crop, and many times what we are putting into our religious crop. Now how was the great budget of expense in our educational institutions financed? By direct taxation. There were no collections. A government only exists in so far as it possesses the power to levy taxes for its own maintenance, and a Church likewise can only be recognized as such in so far as it possesses the power to secure by direct methods the means necessary for its preservation and progress.

Church, and do not believe in the priests or in their teaching.

In Brazil there is no state church, tho the Roman Catholic is generally recognized.

The most bitter opposition comes from the priests. As a rule the governmental authorities encourage, rather than otherwise, all evangelical work. The progress of evangelical work is not limited by law or by opposition, but by the paucity of workers and the lack of sufficient means.

In some parts is to be seen the most polished civilization, and in other parts there exist degrading forms of slavery and diabolical atrocities.

There is no continent that has so few missionaries for its size and population.

In any of the ten countries a missionary could have a city and dozens of towns for his parish. In some of the countries he could have one or two provinces without touching any other evangelical worker.

The Call of Ten Million Neglected Indians

"During my stay in the United States," reports the Rev. Gerhard J. Schilling, D. D., Buenos Aires, Argentine, missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) "I have often been asked: What is the use of sending missionaries to South America, when all the Southern republics are Christians of the Roman Catholic type?"

"An experience born of many years' residence in Argentine, Chile, and Bolivia has taught me that every reason which makes it necessary to preach the Gospel in North America is equally applicable to South America. Besides this, we must not forget that there are millions of souls in that continent who have never yet heard of the Christian faith, and other millions who have a very wrong idea of it. Surely these benighted souls constitute a legitimate field for missionary labor.

"Few American Christians have any definite idea of the number and condition of these unevangelized multitudes. Their number is not known. In the United States it is estimated that there are 260,000 Indians and many mission boards in North America which carry on work among the various tribes. Contrast the conditions in the Southern continent. In Ecuador, for instance, out of a population of 1,250,000 the Indians number 870,000. These are very low in the scale of civilization, and the majority of them are absolutely unevangelized. Moreover, 200,000 of the Indians in that republic, have never as yet been politically subdued. They still roam in the forests, killing game with their poisoned arrows and bringing down birds with their long blowpipes. Any approach to them is unsafe, and no one seems willing to expose his life in an effort to win them to Christ.

"Look at Peru. The last census reveals the fact that 57.6 per cent of its population of 2,592,000 are Indians. Some of these have heard of the Christian faith, and some will even salute a church when they pass, but two millions of them could not give a reason for the faith that is within them. In Bolivia we find 50.9 per cent of the people Indians, or 920,864; of the 486,018 of 'mixed population' returned in the last census, almost all have little Spanish and much Indian blood in their veins. So we can safely add one million Indians as the Bolivian contingent. No man living can tell how many Indians live in Brazil. Baron de Santa-Anna Nery, authority on the question of Indians in the Amazon Valley, actually gives the names of 373 tribes in that region. I venture to say that there are from seven to eight millions of Indians in Brazil.

"In addition to these millions there are the unnumbered Guaranies and Lenguas, 25,000, as Rev. W. B. Grubb estimates, in Paraguay and the Gran Chaco of Argentine. There are the Patagonians of the South and the Araucanians of Chile. One could fill pages with only an enumeration of their tribal names and a guess at their numbers.

Indian Life and Character

"The manner of living among these Indians is as varied as the area in which they dwell. Begin with the southernmost, the Onas of Tierra del Fuego. Altho they are exposed for months during the rains to frost and snow, they go about almost naked and entirely so in their poor habitation, which often take the form of caves dug into the side of a hill. Many of them are polygamists and all show very little respect for the government. Not long ago a Chilean Army officer stationed among them, was found pierced by twenty-five arrows pointed with splinters of glass.

Concluded on Page 8

RELIGIOUS NEEDS OF SOUTH AMERICA

Pan-American Co-operation in Religion as well as in Commerce, Science and Politics. Forty Million People with no adequate Conception of Jesus Christ and His Gospel Constitute a stupendous Opportunity—and Responsibility. Ten Million Indians are still in practical Savagery

I

The troubles the United States has been having in recent years with its nearest Latin-American neighbor should have at least one far-reaching constructive effect. Since the war with Mexico finally settled the boundary line between the two countries, the people of this country have not concerned themselves greatly with the affairs of their southern neighbor except in a commercial way. A few hundred missionaries and Bible colporteurs sought to bring to the Mexican people the one supreme treasure of the American people, but the American people as such knew little about their work and probably cared less. What they did care about, at least the only concern ever given official utterance, was that American business should have free access to the natural resources of the country and an unlimited opportunity to develop them in its own interest. The past few years have been teaching us that any neighborhood relationship that is built on selfishness inevitably spells trouble, and that the American people cannot expect to get material profit out of their neighbors unless they are willing to give them something better and more valuable. Under present conditions the problem of giving Mexico a Christian civilization is an extremely delicate and difficult—and at the same time a dangerous one—and it seems very doubtful if the manner in which the present administration has gone about it will bring any sort of a satisfactory solution. If the American people thru their official representatives had cultivated agreeable and cordial relations with the people of Mexico, the situation would not be nearly as critical as it has now become.

There are indications, however, that the people of the United States do not intend to make the same mistake in regard to their other Latin-American neighbors that has been made in regard to Mexico, and the last two years have seen numerous attempts on the part of the Government to bring about closer and more neighborly relations with the people of South America. The European war has cut off American commerce with that continent and forced it to seek new channels, and with no other "foreign" trade in sight than that with South America, efforts are being made to become better acquainted with the nations to the south of us. The recent political and scientific Pan-American gatherings have tended to bring the two continents into a better and closer understanding of each other, and there seems to be reason for the hope that a better mutual understanding will in time bring about a fraternal co-operation in regard to all that is essential to real Pan-American progress.

If this is to be the case, however, the religious point of view cannot be neglected. Any influence that really represents the people of the United States must be strongly and practically Christian, because the people of the United States are essentially and fundamentally Christian in their point of view, even tho the attitude of the men at the head of American politics and industry very often would not lead one to suspect it. It is therefore only proper that the Panama Congress to be held from February 10-20 should seek to do for Pan-American Christianity what other gatherings have sought to do for science and politics. There can, however, be no intelligent interest in South American religious conditions without adequate information, and it is the lack of authoritative information that has so far tended to keep South American Christianity beyond the view of the average North American Christian, especially that of the North American Protestant. So North American Protestantism is out on a tour of investigation in order to discover what is wrong and find out what needs to be done. Any light on the true situation in South America will not only reveal the real need of the hour, but will also indicate the best means of meeting that need. The general information given in the following, for which we are indebted to the Missionary Review of the World, offers at least an outline of the urgent needs and of the inspiring opportunities that have so long been neglected.

Facts About South America

South America is nearly 5,000 miles long and 3,000 miles wide in the widest part.

There are ten republics, exclusive of Panama and the Guianas.

It has the largest rivers, greatest mountain ranges, and the densest forest of any continent in the world. The Amazon River basin has 60,000 miles navigable waterway.

The River de la Plata is 150 miles wide at its mouth, and is thirty miles wide in front of the city of Buenos Aires, situated 150 miles up the river. It is notable that a high degree of material progress has been made only where there is a large influence exercised by the outside world. Towns left to themselves make little progress.

In nine of the ten republics Spanish is the chief language, in the tenth, Brazil, Portuguese is spoken.

In most of the countries there are tribes of Indians who speak different languages.

South America has over 300 tribes of Indians, some of whom have come under the domination of the Roman Catholic Church, but many have not yet been reached by either Roman Catholics or Protestants.

The population is about 50,000,000, out of which number probably 40,000,000 have not heard the Gospel sufficiently intelligently for them to understand. At least they do not give evidence of it in their lives.

South America is exceedingly rich in natural resources. Material prosperity is advancing rapidly, and education is being pushed in most of the republics.

All of the republics have granted religious toleration, the last one, Peru, taking such action over the veto of its president. In five countries the Roman Catholic Church is the state church.

From the beginning of Rome's domination of South America every effort has been made by the priests to prevent the spread of the evangelical truth.

The Bible is pronounced an immoral book which will corrupt the minds of those who read it, consequently the priests seize every opportunity to destroy it.

A large percentage of the men are opposed to the

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

February 13, 1916. Sixth Sunday after Epiphany

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

THE BIBLE IN LIFE

- M. Feb. 14. Bible-study. Ps. 1.
 T. Feb. 15. Apply Its Precepts. John 13: 17.
 W. Feb. 16. Study Its Examples. 1 Cor. 10: 1-13.
 T. Feb. 17. Memorize It. Deut. 6: 4-9.
 F. Feb. 18. Utilize It. Matt. 4: 1-11.
 S. Feb. 19. Practice It. Jas. 1: 22-27.

Sun., Feb. 20. Topic—How to put the Bible into Life. Ps. 119: 105-112.

Suggestions to the Leader

What is the Bible? What purposes does the Bible serve? Why is it called the Word of God? These are some of the questions which this meeting ought to answer for us.

Who ought to take part in the discussion and treatment of this topic? The pastor, as the shepherd of the flock whose duty it is to break unto the people the bread of life; the superintendent of the Sunday-school, as the man in charge of the religious educational work of the church; some experienced Christian, who can give testimony of the power of the Word of God; the members of the society, who are seeking to make the Bible their book of life.

A brief history on, "How we got our Bible," might be helpful. Some one may call attention to the different versions now in use. It might be of interest to know that in our English Evangelical publications the American Standard Version only is used, whenever Scripture passages are quoted.

The Topic Presented

What is the Bible? It is not a book that as such can produce miraculous results. It is therefore not a book of magic, which can direct us in the transaction of our earthly affairs. It is not a charm, or talisman thru which miraculous things can be accomplished. Israel used it as such and failed. It is not a book of science, altho it is not unscientific; it is not history, altho it contains history, nor is it a book of morals, altho it is the foundation of all true morality. Our Scripture lesson tells us what the Bible is. Read the passage carefully, every one of the eight verses contains a different definition of the Bible.

1. (Verse 105.) The Bible is a lamp unto my feet. A lamp shows the path immediately ahead of us. The Bible is no "street-lamp," but a lantern that one carries with him. The lonely wanderer on the dark road, the conveyances out on a dark night carry lamps that show the dangers and the way itself. Blessed is he who always has such a lamp with him on his pilgrimage thru life. A light unto my path. A light does more than illumine the road ahead of us, it shows the landscape and the course of the road itself. The Bible will reveal to us the road we must travel. That revelation will not fill us with fear but with delight; because it assures us of the constant presence of God, as our guide and protector.

2. (Verse 106.) I will observe Thy righteous ordinances. The Bible is a guide that directs us. He who follows this guide will never err.

3. (Verse 107.) Quicken me, O Jehovah according to Thy word. The Bible offers refreshment and healing. It brings comfort to the afflicted heart and balm to those in distress. See Revelation 22: 2. The Bible is for the healing of the nations.

4. (Verse 108.) Teach me. The Bible is for instruction. See 2 Tim. 3: 16. Every Scripture—is profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is righteousness. In the olden days the Law was the only text-book used in the schools. In the days following the Reformation the school curriculum consisted mainly of the catechism and Bible History studies.

5. (Verse 109.) My soul is continually in my hand. The Bible is for the salvation of the soul. Everywhere in the Bible man is reminded of the destructive effects of sin. Thruout the Bible there runs the carmine thread of God's plan of salvation. John 3: 16 expresses this plan most perfectly: God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son. In the sacrifice of the Lamb of God the atonement of sinners was accomplished. Whosoever will, may come and drink of the fountain of salvation freely.

6. (Verse 110) The wicked have laid a snare for me. The Bible contains warnings against the snares of the evil one and his helpers. Jesus shows us in His temptations how the snares may be recognized. Whatever is not in harmony with the will of God is evil, and to be avoided. He who is filled with Bible truths, and lives in the Bible atmosphere will recognize evil intuitively.

7. (Verse 111) Thy testimony—a heritage forever. The Bible is the heritage descended down to us from the men of God, who lived in former ages. It is the accumulated, typical experience, common to men of all ages, and therefore the Bible appeals to us thru the familiarity of the experiences it records. The Bible is a treasure book, given unto the possession of every seeker after salvation. It makes nations and individuals rich beyond all dreams.

8. (Verse 112) Forever to the end. The Bible is the Book of Life. He who follows that Book will find the way to eternal life. John 17: 3. This is eternal life that they should know Thee the only true God, and Him whom Thou didst send, even Jesus Christ.

Also see Romans 6: 23; Gal. 6: 8; Titus 3: 7. 1 Pet. 5: 10; 2 Pet. 1: 11; 1 John 2: 25; 5: 11; Heb. 9: 15.

The Use of the Bible

Daily reading of the Bible should be as necessary to us as breathing. Take long breaths of Bible wisdom daily.

When reading your Bible mark the striking and helpful passages, which attract your special attention thru their suggestive helpfulness at that time.

Then take time to think over the Bible truths you have read. Reading is of but little profit unless followed by meditation.

Some Questions on the Topic

Give some of the names by which the Bible is known.

Name some of the special purposes of Bible reading.

What should be the main purpose of Bible reading?

What is the advantage of committing Bible passages to memory?

What parts of the Bible are most helpful to you?

Suggest some system of marking the Bible passages to make them more easily available?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Assign the Scripture passages referred to in the Treatment of the Topic to certain persons, and have them read as the leader refers to them. Let the reader call out the passage he desires to be read.

A Prayer

Heavenly Father, who didst speak to men of ancient days in the sacred experiences of their life, and and compel them to write down for our aid these great truths which Thou didst reveal to them, we pray that our heart may understand Thee, as Thou dost speak to us to-day. The voice of revelation is not still. Day by day Thou dost reveal to us the way to salvation, thru faith in Thy Son, Jesus Christ. Help us to know and to will to live Thy truths, that we too, may inherit life everlasting, thru Jesus Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson Material for the Second Year: New Testament Studies—the Messianic Era and the Apostolic Era.

Lessons for the First Quarter, 1916

- Lesson 1. Jan. 2. Between the Testaments; Dan. 2: 31-45.
 Lesson 2. Jan. 9. The Origin and purpose of the Gospels; John 1: 1-14; Luke 1: 1-4.
 Lesson 3. Jan. 16. The Growing Jesus; Luke 2: 40-52.
 Lesson 4. Jan. 23. The Voice Crying in the Wilderness; Matt. 3: 1-12.
 Lesson 5. Jan. 30. At the Gateway of Service; Matt. 3: 13-17; 4: 1-11; Mark: 9-13.
 Lesson 6. Feb. 6. Beginnings in Judea; John 2: 13-25.
 Lesson 7. Feb. 13. A Woman Lost in Sin; John 4: 27-30; 39-42.
 Lesson 8. Feb. 20. Beginnings in Galilee; Luke 4: 14-31.
 Lesson 9. Feb. 27. Teaching with Authority; Matt. 5: 1-16; 7: 28, 29; Luke 6: 20-26.
 Lesson 10. Mar. 5. Miracles of Jesus, I; Luke 8: 22-56.
 Lesson 11. Mar. 12. Miracles of Jesus, II; John 5: 17-31; 20: 30-31.
 Lesson 12. Mar. 19. Parables of Jesus; Matt. 13: 10-17.
 Lesson 13. Mar. 26. The Arising Opposition; John 6: 60-71.

Lesson 7. A Woman Lost in SinDAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Feb. 7. John 4: 4-26. Jesus Offers Living Water.
 T. Feb. 8. John 4: 27-30; 39-42. The Woman Lost in Sin.
 W. Feb. 9. John 4: 31-38. His Meat, the Father's Will.
 T. Feb. 10. Matt. 18: 11-14. Seeking the Lost Sheep.
 F. Feb. 11. Luke 15: 8-10. Angels rejoice over Repentant Sinners.
 S. Feb. 12. Luke 7: 36-50. The Sinner who Loves much is Comforted.
 S. Feb. 13. John 8: 1-11. The Adulterous Woman is not Condemned.

Lesson Key:—"Wherefore also He is able to save to the uttermost them that draw near unto God thru Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them," Heb. 7: 25.

For the writer, verse 34, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me and to accomplish His work," has always seemed the key to the story of the Samaritan Woman. That verse, applied to the story, above all others tells us not only the attitude of the Son toward the Father, but also the mind of the Father toward sinners, both of which are very important for us to know. The Son's devoted obedience to the Father's will is of the utmost personal and social interest to each one of us when we understand that it is the Father's will that even persons like the Samaritan woman are to be saved thru the work of Jesus Christ.

In a sense Jesus had no obligation toward the Samaritan woman, for He was a Jew, and there was a reason for the fact that Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans. The Samaritans were outside the Jewish nation, and Jesus had not been sent except to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. When the seventy disciples were sent out they were expressly forbidden to go into any way of the Gentiles, and to enter into any city of the Samaritans, because it was their first business to bid the invited guests to the great supper which had been prepared for them, Luke 14: 16-24. But the Good Shepherd was altogether too tender-hearted and broad-minded to limit His shepherding to one fold, and wherever He found sheep that needed shepherding He could not and would not pass them by just because they were not of the fold that needed His attention first, but rejoiced at finding them and sought to bring them home just as lovingly and tenderly as tho they had strayed from the fold to which He had been primarily sent. And after the guests that had been bidden to the great supper had excused themselves and declined to come, the servants are at once sent out into the streets and lanes of the city to bring in the poor and the maimed and the blind and the lame, and even into the highways and the hedges, and to constrain them to come in, that the Lord's house may be filled.

And so, while most Jews, in the spirit of conceit and self-righteousness, preferred to travel around Samaria so as to avoid every possibility of being defiled by casual contact with the despised people, Jesus passes thru the very midst of their country, ready at all times to do the will of the Father in heaven, i. e., to seek and to save the lost. Tho He was thirsty from the long journey and longed for a refreshing draught, He was not too thirsty to give the water of life to the parched lips of an erring soul; tho He was wearied with the journey, He was not too weary to lift up the fallen one and guide a straying child of God back to the Father's heart and home. The desire to save that woman lost in sin was so strong that in seeking to accomplish the Father's will He forgot not only that He had been hungry, but actually no longer had need of the food which the disciples had gone to the neighboring village to secure for Him.

The Master's earnest devotion to duty in seeking to save the lost is thus a shining example to all His followers. It is deplorable, however, that so many of those who call themselves followers of Jesus have so little interest in the work which He regarded as the will of the Father, and which absorbed Him to such an extent that He did not need food or drink, that they do not even see the great opportunities that surround them on every hand. The average Christian man or woman can go to church Sunday after Sunday year in and year out enjoying the full privileges and blessings of the Gospel—as he or she thinks—without giving a thought to the neglected and forsaken ones who are in need of its healing, refreshing and regenerating power. Is not the land full of poor who need to have the Gospel preached to them, of maimed, blind, and lame whom the Church does not care to invite to a feast because they cannot or will not make recompense. Those who have drunk of the living water that Jesus Christ offers cannot help but becoming wells of water springing up unto eternal life for all who are round about them, no matter what their station or condition.

Religious Needs of South America

Continued from Page 6

"A much sturdier race are the Araucanians. Among all the aborigines of the region now called Chile, they only have never been conquered, neither by the Incas who extended once their empire as far as Maule, or by the Spaniards who had to withdraw from them. It has been my privilege to preach to them some years ago, and I found among the family of Mapuches, near Carahue, a very kind reception. They live in large huts, called rucas, the sides of which are made of branches, straw and occasionally of hides. Some of these rucas are large enough to shelter all the members of one of the smaller tribes.

"The Indians in Southern Argentine, south of the Rio Negro, have wonderful physical endurance, especially where pain is concerned. Dr. F. Corbin, of Mendoza, who lived a long time among them in the neighborhood of Viedma, told me the following incident of his medical practice among them. Two Indians had been fighting with knives. One had been severely cut in the abdomen. He managed to reach the doctor's house, simply closing the wound, holding the sides together with his bare hands. Dr. Corbin sewed up a large flesh wound and left the man in one of his outhouses. When he came to visit the man the next morning, he found the Indian's squaw sitting by the door of the hut, smoking a cigaret. She fell down at the doctor's feet, imploring him not to be angry with her husband. She said that necessary business had taken him to his home, 'But,' added she, 'he will be all right, doctor, he did not go on foot but on horseback.' This was ten hours after an operation involving a large flesh wound.

"The Indians of the Gran Chaco, the northwestern reserves of Argentine, and the Guaranies are first cousins. The Rev. W. B. Grubb, who knows most about them, says: 'Altho cannibalism is not practiced in the Chaco, the people have many stories about it, which may be only invented. But it is quite possible that they are the result of a long-forgotten habit. These cannibals are supposed to be located in the far West, and in that direction among a people of Guaraní descent, such practices were evidently in vogue.... The most prevalent crime among the Lengua-Mascoy (one of the Paraguay tribes) is that of infanticide, which they do not rank in the same category as the murder of a grown child or adult, and this evil is so general, that the very existence of the race is endangered. There are many reasons for infanticide. The strongest incentive to the crime is the difficulty of nurturing and bringing up a young family under the most unfavorable conditions, especially the shortage of food. It is for this reason that an Indian mother nourishes her child up to even four and sometimes five years of age, and she feels that in her hard, exposed, and trying life, it would be absolutely impossible for her to maintain and suckle a numerous family. There is no doubt that infanticide owes its origin to stress of circumstances, and that sanction was sought for it on religious grounds, in order to obviate the instinctive repugnance to such a crime.'

"Another feature of heathenism, found among the Lengua-Mascoy Indians, which is apt to strike one at first sight as extremely cruel, and indicative of a total lack of natural affection, is the habit of hastening the death of the aged and the victims of a serious accident or sickness. So long as there is any probable hope of recovery, the patient is kindly treated and attended to, but their attitude to these unfortunates at once changes when they realize that their efforts are in vain. Then they hasten death by starvation and neglect, sometimes even by violence, and willful, premature burial is by no means an uncommon occurrence.

What We are doing on the Western Slope

Continued from Page 5

free, their stolid minds became active. The Bible gave them the explanation of their wonderful experience, and Biblical phraseology became their everyday language. Do all the people of the Evangelical Synod grow up into spiritual power so gradually, so surely, that such awakenings have no place in her churches? Oh, that God might awaken among us more evangelists, spirit-filled, true, Christ-like.

Of course, in listening to the prayers of the brothers and their testimonies, one frequently draws up with a shock when the good brother, for instance, gets Moses' burial mixed up with Paul's glimpse into the third heaven, and on the spot evolves a new doctrine of the believer's citizenship in the higher heavens without burial, provided he can draw water from a rock with a word. But angels would correct such lapses with the greatest caution, so let fools be kept from rushing in. The need is for a deeply consecrated, broad-minded, well-trained ministry.

St. John's Evangelical Church at Grand Junction

But back to Delta. The morning after the Evangelistic meeting there dawned a typical fall day on the western slope: Not a cloud in the skies, the air perfectly dry and cool. Where the air was not filled with dust, mountains that were fifteen miles distant, seemed to be about three miles away. The heavy loads of beets, now all hauled in, had ground the adobe soil on the roads to about six inches of highly pulverized dust. The season's work was done, the horses had months of rest ahead, so one team after another drove up to the country school-house, where the missionary services were to be held. Sixty children attended the Sunday-school. There were no modern methods, but plenty of memorizing and faithful, thoro teaching on the part of the pastor and a few adult helpers. In the main service the singing did credit to the German ancestry of the people. Surely God was present among these simple people and richly blessed the preaching of His Word. After the service, the congregation posed for a picture and then gathered in groups for a basket dinner. The afternoon was devoted to a missionary address and the evening to another evangelistic meeting.

This devoted congregation asked the Home Mission Board to pay their pastor's entire salary for a year, so that they might be free to build a church. The Board unfortunately found it necessary to refuse the request. Who is to blame? To some extent the migratory habits of the German Russians in general, in consequence of which the Board is never sure that a strong congregation will remain strong. But in a beet-country as good as the Delta valley, there are always sure to be a large number of German Russians for a long time now especially, since two new well-capitalized sugar factories are coming in. Even if some move away, others are always sure to come in. These people need a place of worship. Are you, perhaps, dear reader, one of those who are to blame that they still have none? Have you done your full share in strengthening the treasury of the Home Mission Board?

Glenwood Springs

The very strongest argument for the appointment of a traveling missionary in Colorado is given by the situation along the Grand River. None of the little groups of German Russians at Rifle, Silt and New-castle are large enough to warrant organizing an independent church. Yet the English-speaking churches cannot reach our people at all. A Congregational minister in one of these places placed his automobile at the writer's service so that he might be able to visit the Germans, expressing the hope that the Evangelical Church would work more regularly among these people who "needed it badly." At Glenwood Springs and Carbondale are groups of about fifteen families each of Germans directly from the Fatherland (as distinct from the German-Russians). Carbondale is the best potato country in the world. Only last week Government experts from Washington and Berlin visited this region and pronounced it so. There is great danger of these successful farmers and business men becoming the grossest materialists. Now is the time to begin regular work among them. The pastor from Grand Junction holds regular monthly services at Glenwood to which he invites all the Germans from Glendale and Carbondale. In January there was an attendance of sixty including Germans that had already joined other churches, and also some sympathetic Americans. Some children were baptized and confirmation instruction begun with two boys. There are famous mineral springs at Glenwood visited by many wealthy persons of this and other lands; the altitude is 6,000 feet, and the air is rare and invigorating. Yet life there is sick with sin and needs the water of life and the renewing spirit of God. The next objective is Leadville, over 10,000 feet above sea-level, where last year alone $480,000,000 worth of metal was taken from the mines. Report has it that Leadville has more unchurched Germans than any other city in Western Colorado.

At present this territory except Montrose and Delta is covered by the pastor of Grand Junction. It could not be done if St. John's Church at the latter place were not quite well established and full of a generous missionary spirit. The Grand Junction Church, consisting almost entirely of independent fruit-growers, has no German-Russian problem to deal with. This year the congregation will acquire a parsonage and will then no longer need any support from the Home Mission Board.

NEW BOOKS

- Adams, Carrie B. Songs, New and Old. Secular Quartets and Choruses for Women's Voices. Stiff paper Cover. Cloth back. Each 0.50. Dozen prepaid 5.00
- Adams, Carrie B. Songs, New and Old. Secular Quartets and Choruses for Men's Voices. Stiff paper Cover. Cloth back. Each 50 cts.; Dozen prepaid 5.00
- Adams, Carrie B. Songs, New and Old. Secular Quartets and Choruses for Mixed Voices. Stiff paper Cover. Cloth back. 50 cts.; Dozen prepaid 5.00
- Adams, Carrie B. Praise and Prayer. A collection of new Anthems for Church Choirs. Stiff paper Cover. Cloth back. 50 cts.; Dozen prepaid 5.00
- Adams, Carrie B. In lighter Vein. Secular Quartets for Men's Voices. Stiff paper Cover. Cloth back. Each 50 cts.; Dozen prepaid 5.00
- Adams, Carrie B. Young Men's Chorus. Sacred Songs, Quartets and Anthems for Men's Voices. Stiff paper Cover. Cloth back. Each 50 cts.; Dozen prepaid 5.00

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.,
202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CHANGED ADDRESSES

Rev. F. J. Kraushaar, P. O. Box 45, Dexter, Mich.
Rev. M. Lienk, Gary, Ind.
Rev. Otto Schulze, Loup City, Nebr.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., FEBRUARY 10th, 1916

NUMBER 6

"What then shall this Child be?"

Such was the eager, curious inquiry when the sayings concerning the birth of John the Baptist were noised abroad thruout the hill country of Judea. Many of us have perhaps felt prompted to make a similar inquiry in regard to the organization of the Evangelical Brotherhood. Both the friendly and the skeptics are eagerly awaiting developments.

The responsibility for guiding the new movement into the right paths has lain heavily upon those entrusted with its destinies, and earnestly and prayerfully they have sought to find the right way. Dr. Torsch, the president of the National Evangelical Brotherhood has written the following statement for the Herald, outlining the fundamental principles of Brotherhood work, and suggesting a standard of Brotherhood endeavor that will make these principles fruitful in the largest possible manner for the work of our own Church. We believe that wherever these standards are adopted and lived up to both the anxious and the skeptical observers will see the child grow and wax strong in spirit, well equipped to go before the face of the Lord to make ready His ways.

Attention, Brotherhoods!

During the past few years those of us who were concerned with the new awakening of the men of our Church, as expressed in the Evangelical Brotherhood, have been grappling with perplexing questions as to the distinct sphere of activity to which the brains and energy of Evangelical men should be devoted.

What is the distinctive office of the Brotherhood? What shall be the underlying purpose of this new organization? Wherein does it differ from those organizations already existing in our Church? These far-reaching questions and many others equally pertinent and thought-inspiring, were placed before the leader of this work for solution and answer.

The great convention, the first of its kind in our Church, was held in October, 1914. The purpose of the committee which arranged the convention was to present to the delegates the magnitude of the opportunity for service in our Evangelical Church, rather than any specific line of effort.

After the convention in addresses and writings, attempts have been made to satisfy this desire for a definite program for Brotherhoods, and with the result that in some quarters one phase or the other of Christian service has been adopted, but in a vast majority of cases the common opinion is still evident, to-wit: that the Brotherhood is simply another financial agency for the church, and that by suppers, entertainments, picnics and the like, legitimate as business ventures, this men's organization can add material strength to the church. Let it be said very plainly that this is not, nor ever was the chief purpose and intention of the Brotherhood movement; good and necessary as material strength and support is, we must not nor dare not confuse the more needful deepening of the spiritual life of each Evangelical man with the erection of buildings, or purchasing pipe organs. Let it be said however, that the writer has knowledge of many instances where without the Brotherhood and its opportunities for discussion and fellowship the visible upbuilding of God's Kingdom would not have made the progress shown in the last two to five years. This testifies very forcibly to the efficiency of the Brotherhood as a distinct factor in the growth and development of the visible Church, and encourages everyone to believe that it can exert just as wholesome an influence in a spiritual direction.

There are those who believe our Evangelical Brotherhoods should hasten the answer to the oft spoken prayer, "Thy Kingdom Come" and go aggressively to work to destroy all agencies and systems which hinder the growth and coming of God's kingdom.

Every right thinking man, especially every Christian man, would not, if he could, oppose the purpose of this belief; truly every Evangelical Brotherhood shall do everything within its power to hasten the coming of God's Kingdom; and all that hinders and holds men from making God King of their lives, thus perfecting the Kingdom within, should be vigorously opposed and fought against by every Brotherhood. However, something remains to be said as to the methods for accomplishing this lofty ambition.

Again it has been urged that the chief aim and object of the Brotherhood shall be to unite all believers in Christ into one great body and congregation of Christians, so that denominational lines be forgotten and obliterated. While this endeavor too may belong in the province of all brotherhoods, it scarcely seems a program in which all could take a vigorous part.

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

"Die when we may, I want it said of me, by those who knew me best, that I always plucked a thistle and planted a flower when I thought a flower would grow."—Lincoln.

Let us rather ask, what is the characteristic requirement involved in the performance of any or all of the worthy objects just enumerated? Whether we speak of material assistance to the individual church or even the entire Synod, or of deepening the spiritual life of all our Evangelical men, or of hastening the coming of God's Kingdom thru a new social program and activity, or of bringing all denominations into a closer bond of Christian fellowship and demonstrate to all the world and all other religions and faiths that Protestantism is and can be united,—whether we speak of any of these most praise-worthy ambitious undertakings, what one characteristic requirement confronts us with every man, or at least a decisive majority, must possess? Is it not a sincere conviction in each man's heart that he is a debtor to the grace of God and he must and will strive to come under the influence of God's will and make God's will his marching orders? How can any man sincerely take his stand for the outward extension and upbuilding of his church, hastening the coming of God's Kingdom, deepening the spiritual life of men or making Protestantism a united and compact force, unless he has made God's will his marching order?

Therefore having reached this conclusion, whatever we hope will be the ultimate aim and object or the distinctive sphere of usefulness of our Brotherhoods, we must employ our present day with a program of real preparedness, and adopt a standard or platform upon which every man must be able to stand before he can be of great service in the Kingdom.

The great trouble with the twentieth century man is that his desire for results makes him unwilling to go thru the school of preparation which will fit him for the greater responsibility of the Church and Brotherhood.

Let us take for our standard this six-fold activity, to-wit; first: Personal or family devotions; second: Membership in a Bible class; third: Increased contributions to local church; fourth: Increased offerings for benevolences, (to include all obligatory denominational offerings); fifth: Regularity in attendance at divine worship; sixth: Support of the National Evangelical Brotherhood. This will give everyone an opportunity for service. Those who are almost fulfilling the standard requirements can be helpful to those who have not adopted its entire program.

May every one of us strive, with the wisdom of God's Holy Spirit as our guide, to carry out the fundamental provisions of this standard, which is so eminently suited to Evangelical needs.

E. A. R. Torsch, Pres.

Louisville, Ky.

The President "Stumping" for Preparedness

The declaration with which President Wilson opened his campaign for more adequate national defense in New York last week, "I hope every man in public life will get what is coming to him" was doubtless received with varying emotions in different parts of the country. There are people who had already made up their minds that as far as they could do anything in the matter, at least one man in public life would "get what was coming to him," and now that that has been made a sort of rallying-cry for the supporters of the policy of preparedness, it is not unthinkable that the number of people afore mentioned may be considerably increased by the time the President returns to Washington. A strong contingent in the President's own party does not relish the idea of the chief executive of the nation going before the people with an appeal on behalf of an issue which he has himself created, and which has all the earmarks of having been raised for political purposes.

This impression is only strengthened by the President's words in his speech at Pittsburg: "The world is on fire. Sparks are likely to drop anywhere. . . . Things are getting more and more difficult to handle. . . . If all could see the dispatches I read every hour they would know how difficult it has been for me to maintain peace. . . . New circumstances have arisen for which the country must prepare itself. . . . Along with the industrial and vocational education, it is perfectly feasible to instruct the young men of this country in the use of arms." Of course the world is on fire, but there is a goodly stretch of water between this country and the fire, and while a great deal of the smoke is coming this way, there would not be much chance for sparks being blown across, if the President had been more careful about playing with the fire in the early stages of the war. If English impertinence and aggression had been vigorously resisted in the beginning and a free hand preserved for our trade and intercourse with Germany, and if an embargo had been immediately laid on all shipments of arms to any belligerent, the conflagration could not have reached the dimensions it did, and would in all probability have already died out.

If new circumstances have arisen for which the country must prepare itself, the people want to know what these circumstances are before they undertake to spend nearly a billion dollars on increasing its military and naval equipment. It also desires to know where the dispatches came from and who wrote them that makes it so difficult for the President to maintain peace. And if "we are not now thinking of an invasion of the territory of the United States," as Mr. Wilson said in his Chicago speech, the puzzle only grows the deeper. The whole matter is so vague and indefinite that the easiest way to explain the President's tour at the present time is to infer that it was desirable to create some "public demand" that would keep people from thinking too much about the many sins of omission and commission of which the administration has been guilty.

Let the President tell us, 1. With what nation or nations he thinks there is danger of war. 2. What cause for war exists with it or them? 3. If there is no reason to believe that there is danger of war with any nation he can name, what makes him afraid? That is what the people want to know.

The True Bread out of Heaven

Jesus therefore said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, It was not Moses that gave you the bread out of heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread out of heaven; For the bread of God is that which cometh down out of heaven and giveth life unto the world," John 6: 32, 33.

When the crowds had dispersed, the disciples started by boat from Bethsaida, and Jesus ascended a mountain to pray. He knew the worldly expectations of the masses of His people, and He realized that the feeding of the multitude would be regarded by most of them as encouraging these expectations. To meet the demands they would make upon Him, He must be prepared for them. He could not afford to make a mistake. He must not only be very sure of what the Father desired Him to do, but He must also know how to lead the worldly-minded multitudes up to a higher level of faith. And so He sought the solitude, not only for mere rest for His wearied mind and body, but for the new spiritual strength which would come to Him only from a personal, private communion with the Father. There is no other refuge for the tired and troubled spirit that wants to be sure of its ground, than the close and intimate communion with the Father. If we always remembered this we should not make the mistakes we do.

As night fell, a great storm, apparently issuing from the valleys westward, broke over the lake, and the disciples, toiling in rowing, made no progress. Toward morning, for the fourth watch, Matt. 14: 25, etc., Mark 6: 48, etc., was the time from three to six o'clock in the morning, Jesus approached, walking on the sea. The disciples were afraid, thinking it was a ghost, but His voice reassured them, and Peter made His brave but disastrous attempt to meet Him on the water. Jesus entered the boat and they were soon at land. The people who had been fed on the day before found Him in the morning near Capernaum, and there Jesus meets their wrong expectations with the remarkable discourses on the bread of life. He points out to them immediately the wrong idea with which they have come and seeks to correct it. The food that perisheth is not really worth working for, and He had given them that food, not as tho that was His real mission among them, but only as a symbol of and a guide to the food which abideth unto eternal life. This food the Son of Man, whom the Father, even God, had sealed, would give to them, and they might possess themselves of it by believing in Him whom the Father had sent.

But the people demand a further sign that He was God's messenger, that they might see and believe. "Our fathers did eat manna in the desert," they tell Him, "bread from heaven, not the common barley loaves that you fed us yesterday. If you are truly sent of God, it is surely not asking too much to expect you to do what Moses did." Psa. 72: 16 the Rabbis gathered that the Messiah when he came would renew the gift of manna. The manna in the wilderness was nothing in itself, Jesus tells them in reply, "Moses gave only earthly bread for the nourishment of the bodies, and it did not prevent your fathers from dying (v. 49); it was meant to sustain only physical life, and even in that respect it was not perfect. God has better bread for you than that, and He is now ready to give you the true bread out of heaven that alone can give life to the world."

"Man liveth not by Bread alone"

Note how the Master points upward from the earth for the things that are really and alone satisfying to the spirit. The five thousand had need of what came to them as the gift of God, just as the manna had come to their fathers in the wilderness centuries ago. Jesus had had compassion with them in their need and their hunger had been stilled. But now that their hunger had been stilled there was a deeper and a stronger need that no earthly food could satisfy. The bread and the fishes they would need to sustain their physical life would not be difficult to get if they were diligent and faithful in their earthly pursuits. But the bread unto eternal life which they needed far more than they could ever need their daily bread was not thus easily secured. It could be obtained neither by any toil of their hands nor by the exercise of their wits. It could come to them only as a gift of the Father in heaven, the giver of every good and perfect gift. They sought Him because they ate of the loaves and were filled, but by thus working for the food that perisheth they were neglecting and losing that which could not perish; by working the works of God, and believing in Him whom He hath sent, they could secure the food that abideth unto eternal life without in any way neglecting or losing what they needed of the food that perisheth.

There can be no abiding satisfaction in the things that minister only to the earthly life. Jesus uses them in His ministry to draw men to Him, but only that He may give those that come to Him something far richer, better and more abiding. He distributed earthly blessings in order to awaken an appetite for the blessings of heaven; He ministered to men's bodies that he might reach and help men's souls. When the Church of Jesus Christ takes compassion upon those who are as sheep without a shepherd and gives them to eat, or ministers to their earthly needs in some other way, let it not be as an end in itself, let it rather be a means to an end, the end of bringing them to believe on Him whom the Father hath sent, the true bread out of heaven, which alone giveth life unto the world. Jesus could have kept on feeding multitudes as He had fed those five thousand, and if He had He would quickly have gained an enormous popularity with the masses of His people. But the multitudes fed in such a way would have died just as the Israelites who were fed with the manna in the wilderness died in due time. Those to whom the Church ministers only in an outward earthly manner will perish, tho they may enjoy and appreciate what the Church is doing for them. Only those who are led to believe in Jesus Christ will have everlasting life.

The Old Hampton Place

BY HILDA RICHMOND

I

"Hampton, have you a sister named Cordelia?" asked Mr. Brookfield turning abruptly from the man in uniform to the new clerk in the corner of the office.

"Yes sir," answered a young fellow about twenty-two years old.

"And did you ever have an uncle who lived near Peru—a bachelor uncle?"

"Yes sir, Uncle Richard. He is my great-uncle, rather, he is the half brother of my Grandfather Hampton."

"He must be the right one," said the man in uniform.

"Come into the private office, Hampton," said Mr. Brookfield. As soon as the door was shut he proceeded to explain. "Your uncle is dead, Hampton, and the neighbors have telegraphed the Chief of Police to locate you and your sister. They want you to come to the funeral which is to be held this afternoon. He was burned to death in his barn. It seems he went out to the barn with a lantern and accidentally set fire to the structure. Of course nothing definite is known, as the charred bones are all that is left. He was eccentric and lived alone, the telegram states."

"Yes, he was peculiar, I suppose. I never knew him. My father moved from Peru when we children were babies and it is only once in a long time and in a round about way that we hear from Uncle Richard."

The policeman who had been sent from the office of the Chief of Police now withdrew to make his report and to carry back a brief telegram that Thomas and Cordelia Hampton would attend the funeral that afternoon. Mr. Brookfield had given permission to his new clerk to be absent several days, and Thomas prepared to notify his sister at once.

"By the way, Hampton, be sure to take the necessary steps to secure your uncle's property if you are the only heirs," said Mr. Brookfield as the young man talked over the matter with him. A farm's a farm in these days, and land in the Scioto valley is as rich as any in Ohio. Proceed cautiously and take charge of things yourself. Some lawyer may try to persuade you that it will cost a lot of money to establish your claim, but don't be in a hurry to believe him. If your people lived up there all your lives you will have no trouble."

"My great-grandfather was a pioneer doctor in that region and all our people came from that section. Grandfather Hampton and Great-uncle Richard were the last of the family and they were half-brothers. Uncle Richard can't be so very old, as my Great-grandfather married after Grandfather Hampton was grown and married. I don't believe he could be a day older than sixty. The last I heard of him he still lived on his little sixty acre farm entirely alone. People say he has money stored away somewhere, but I doubt it, as he potted around on his farm, according to all reports, and never farmed in dead earnest."

"Well, sixty acres of good land must be worth something, Hampton. Be careful how you proceed and take possession of the property at once."

It was only a short journey, and at the end of two hours Thomas and his sister found themselves standing on the platform at Peru, and a kindly neighbor explaining that he had come to take them to the funeral. "We didn't like to go ahead and make extra expense for you," he said, "not knowing what your uncle had left. Of course the authorities had to go ahead and make arrangements for the funeral. We go straight to the church. The house is—well, the fact is, nobody wanted to do much with the house until you folks come, so we took the remains to the church."

Thomas and Cordelia eagerly asked for the particulars of the calamity, but few were forthcoming. The neighbors had been roused from their sleep by the cry of fire and when they reached the spot it was too late to do anything. The big, rambling old barn burned like tinder and nothing could be done until the fire had spent its fury. Whether Richard Hampton had gone to the barn to look after something, or whatever had happened, would probably never be known. Foul play had been suspected at once, but the house and its contents were untouched, so far as could be ascertained. It was not known that the eccentric owner of the farm had any money, as his old horse had lately died and he had sold his only cow, so it was hardly likely that anything of the kind had happened. The most plausible theory was that the old gentleman had been rambling about the premises with a lantern and had accidentally fallen and the lantern had set fire to the place. Probably in trying to get his property out of the flames or in trying to put out the fire he had been overcome and had not been able to get out of the barn in time.

It hardly seemed like a funeral that exquisite September day. The minister could not truthfully enlarge on the useful life of the deceased or speak of the sorrow of friends and relatives. The sole surviving relatives sitting before him without outward badge of mourning had never known Richard Hampton, so they could feel no deep grief. What he could and did say was that it was a great shock to the community that such a thing could happen in their midst, and admonish his hearers to be always ready for the final summons, since death might overtake them at any time, as it had Richard Hampton. Then the pallbearers took up their light burden and the casket was carried to the old Hampton burial lot with its stiff cedars and its old-fashioned tombstones.

"How beautiful it all is here!" said Cordelia softly to her brother as they looked away over the heap of yellow clay toward the fertile farms and substantial houses when the funeral rites were over. The September haze was over all and there was a dreamy poetic look to the whole world that made it wonderfully fair to eyes long accustomed to city streets and buildings. "No wonder papa always said it was the garden spot of the world."

"You're coming home with us to stay all night," said a motherly looking woman coming up as soon as the grave was in order. "We live nearer your Uncle Richard's place than anybody else and you'll want to look things over. Pa's bringing the surrey around so we can get in. Emily will have a good hot supper when we get there, for it's getting late. We had to set the funeral at three so you two could get out here."

The two city people found little to say to the good-hearted neighbors, for they were much averse to staying with total strangers for the night. It was not the way in which they had been brought up, and they felt that it was a great imposition to go with a man and his wife on whom they had not the slightest claim. They did not know that country hospitality would have been disgraced forever if these two young people had been allowed to depart without food or the offer or shelter, or even if they had been permitted to pay for their supper and lodging. So it was a very silent party that wended its way down the hard white road.

"That is your Uncle Richard's place!" said Mr. Gross, pointing with the whip to a forlorn red brick house entirely surrounded and almost hidden by the wilderness of shrubbery and weeds and briars. "Over there was where his barn stood. Several little old sheds went with the barn the other night."

"That!" cried the two Hamptons in a breath.

"Yes, your uncle was not much on farming," said the farmer in an embarrassed sort of way. "He let everything run down of late years."

"May we—would it make you too late to stop a minute?" asked Cordelia breathlessly.

"Certainly not. Run right in and look around," said Mr. Gross. "Emily said she'd have supper at five thirty and it isn't five yet."

"Won't you folks come too?" asked Thomas as Mr. and Mrs. Gross would have sat still. "Please do!"

They made their way thru the sagging gate into the dense growth of shrubbery and around the house to the back door. It was a square brick building guileless of porches and looked forbidding in the extreme with the green shutters tightly closed. Even the mellow golden haze of the perfect day could not soften the ugliness of the place and Cordelia shuddered as she made her way over the tangle of weeds and grass. The fences were either down or in the last stages of dilapidation, the walks overgrown with weeds, the wood-house, smoke-house and other out-buildings falling into decay and the premises strewn with old cans, bottles and trash of every sort, while beyond stretched the farm with fields choked with briars, thorns, weeds and straggling young underbrush. It was painfully evident that the owner of the farm had taken life easy for many years past, if fences, buildings and fields were to be trusted in their eloquent testimony.

"I have the key if you want to go in," said Mr. Gross. "I am the township trustee. We had to force the lock when we first found that Mr. Hampton was missing the other night, but I repaired it at once, as you see."

"Let's not go in till to-morrow!" cried Cordelia shrinking back toward Mrs. Gross. "I—I couldn't stand it. I suppose the inside looks worse than this if possible. Let's get away as quickly as we can. Hurry! Hurry!"

And indeed it was a gloomy place. The tall trees that had not been trimmed for years cast heavy shadows over the old place, making it look as if evening had come two hours ahead of time and the gentle wind that had sprung up made the evergreen trees sigh and moan in the most melancholy way. With all the evidences of decay and untidiness about them and the gloom pressing in on every side it was no wonder that the young girl wanted to hurry away. She had eaten very little since morning, as there had been time only to snatch a sandwich to eat on the train after they made ready to go to Peru, and she was positively faint.

"That's what I say!" said Mrs. Gross slipping an arm around the trembling form. "In the morning things will look different around here. I'm afraid Emily will scold because we're late anyway." So chatting she hurried the little group into the surrey and they drove into her own door yard five minutes later, as the Gross homestead was just around the bend of the road.

"Emily, this is Miss Cordelia Hampton and this is Mr. Thomas Hampton," said Mrs. Gross, as a pretty young girl in pink gingham and a fluttering white apron ran out to meet them. "Is supper ready? Or did we keep you waiting?"

"It certainly is," said the young girl shaking hands cordially. "I was beginning to worry for fear it would get cold. Hurry right in!"

Very soon they were seated in a comfortable dining room and the most substantial supper Thomas and Cordelia had ever seen was placed on the table. The two Hamptons had been alone in the world since the death of their father, which had occurred six years before, and even before that they had lived in a boarding-house since they could remember, so the evening meal was always a formal and unattractive affair to them. They were amazed to find fried chicken heaped on a platter—enough for a dozen, Cordelia told herself—mashed potatoes, sweet potatoes, succotash, apple sauce, sliced tomatoes, pickled beets and cold slaw comprising the main part of the supper, while cake and sliced peaches crowded to the side table evidently made up the desert.

"How very good everything tastes!" said Cordelia for lack of something better to say as the first few mouthfuls revived her. "I never saw a supper like this. If this is a part of country living I don't wonder people like to be on farms. My father always said the happiest years of his life were spent right out here in this part of the country."

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

The Two Ways

I said: "Let me walk in the fields."

God said: "No, walk in the town."

I said: "There are no flowers here."

He said: "No flowers, but a crown."

I said: "But the skies are black;

There is nothing but noise and din."

And He wept as He sent me back,

"There is more," He said, "there is sin."

I said: "But the clouds are thick,

And fogs are veiling the sun."

He answered: "Yet souls are sick,

And souls in the dark, undone."

I said: "I shall miss the light,

And friends will miss me, they say."

He answered: "Chose to-night

Whether I am to miss you or they."

I pleaded for time to be given;

He said: "Is it hard to decide?"

It will not be hard in heaven

To have followed the steps of your Guide."

Then into His hand went mine,

And into my heart came He;

And I walk in a light divine

The path I had feared to see.

George Macdonald.

The Ladies Cleared Ninety Dollars

Of all the examples of "frenzied finance," perhaps the most innocent and amusing is that of the usual church supper. Whatever may be said for or against this popular way of making money from any other standpoint, it is quite certain the dear ladies who help these social affairs never doubt for a moment that they are perfectly successful as to profit. The other day we heard some ladies telling of a certain church supper, and deploring the fact that their own church did not more frequently make money in this fashion. "Why, the ladies cleared ninety dollars!" said one member of the group, half enviously. "Cleared, mind you! I think that is wonderful for one evening's work."

Perhaps it would have been "wonderful" if both her statements had been correct. A dozen ladies worked the greater part of two days at the church getting ready for the supper, to say nothing of the cakes baked at home, the large number of workers needed for the afternoon and evening of the great event, and the extra services of the church janitor for several days before and after. The entire church was solicited for money, cakes, cream, bread, butter, and all but the chickens, which were bought and prepared by a committee of the church, instead of being brought cooked from the homes. Sixty chickens were required at nearly one dollar each. The ice cream also was purchased with money solicited for that purpose. Twelve gallons were needed, at eighty cents a gallon. Of course, no account could be kept of the supplies donated from the homes of the members, but every woman knows that a fine large iced cake is worth at least one dollar in these days of high prices.

Well, as long as the ladies think they made a great deal of money, no great harm is done; but sometimes the men folks get to thinking that if their wives and mothers and sisters dispose of the household allowance in the same way they finance the "Ladies Aid" and kindred societies in the church, there must be a great leak somewhere. We once heard a man say that, after seeing his wife manage a chicken supper for the church, and manage it successfully from the ladies' standpoint, he decided that in case he died she would not have enough property to keep her five years, and he was fairly well to do. As a money-making plan—really a money-making scheme—the church supper is a dismal failure, but as a money-getting proposition there is something to be said in its favor. The dear ladies can take two dollars, and juggle them neatly by way of the chicken-and-ice-cream-route, and get a whole dollar back after two or three days of hard work. And they are so happy while doing it, and so sure they are helping the church along.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

How an Unattractive Girl became Popular

I know a girl who had become so morbid and despondent thru constantly dwelling on her plain features and ungainly manner that she was on the verge of insanity. She was extremely sensitive, very proud, and would brood for days over the fancied slight when she was not invited to a party or other entertainment with her more attractive acquaintances.

Finally a real friend came to her assistance, and told her that it was possible for her to cultivate qualities which would be far more attractive, and would make her much more popular, than the mere physical beauty and grace whose absence she so greatly deplored.

With this kind friend's assistance she completely reversed her estimate of herself; she turned about face, and instead of over-emphasizing mere physical grace and beauty, instead of thinking of herself as ugly and repulsive, she constantly held the thought that she was the expression of God's idea, that there was something divine in her, and she resolved to bring it out.

She denied every suggestion that she could possibly be unpopular, or that she could really be ugly, and held persistently in mind the image of her popularity and attractiveness, and the thought that she could make herself interesting and even fascinating. She would not allow herself to harbor the suggestion that she could be anything but attractive. She began to improve herself intellectually in every possible way.

Hitherto she had been careless of her dress and manners, because of the conviction that it did not matter how she dressed or what she did, she would still be unpopular. She began to dress as becomingly as possible and in better taste. She read the best authors; she took up different courses of study, and determined that at every opportunity she would make herself just as interesting as possible.

The result was that, instead of being a wallflower, as formerly, she began to attract little groups about her wherever she went. She became a fascinating talker, and made herself so interesting in every way that she was invited out just as often as the more attractive girls whom she used to envy. In a short time she had not only overcome her handicap, but had also become the most interesting girl in her community.

Her task had not been an easy one, but she had worked with superb resolution and grit to overcome the things which had held her down; and, in her determined effort to overcome what she regarded as a fatal handicap, as a curse, she was enabled to develop qualities which more than compensated for the personal beauty that was denied her.

It is wonderful what a transformation we can bring about by holding persistently in the mind the image of the thing we would become and struggling hard to attain it. It has a marvelous power to attract what we desire, to make the real picture that we see.—Selected.

Personal Feeling

"Oh, it was no matter of principle, you know," answered a lady when a friend expressed surprise that in aiding to carry out an enterprise in which she was engaged with others, she had accepted plans and associations known to be disagreeable to her. "It was only a little personal feeling of mine, and it was in no way necessary that it should have the right of way."

The reply revealed a character sweet and strong, trained to reasonableness and unselfishness. With too many the personal feeling is always first, and claims free course whatever may be hindered or pushed aside by it. Mood and prejudice, like and dislike, take the right of way and dominate the life; everything with which they have to do must go carefully round them if it goes at all.

It is rare self-control when one has learned to govern one's likes and dislikes rather than be governed by them; to say to such feelings: "You may exist, but you shall not rule. Duty, justice, the right of others, shall take precedence always."

—Forward.

Denominational

Dismissal

With the consent of the honorable President General, Pastor John Baltzer, Pastor J. H. Jahn, formerly of Gladbrook, Iowa, has been granted an honorable dismissal from membership in the German Evangelical Synod of North America in order to regulate his business interests.

J. Ernst Birkner, Pres. Iowa Dist.

Admission to Membership

St. Paul's Evangelical Church, Delta, Colo., which had been admitted to full membership in the German Evangelical Synod of N. A. at the 1915 conference of the Colorado Mission District, was formally admitted to this privilege in a special service conducted by Pastor J. J. Braun on Nov. 21, 1915, by order of the undersigned.

J. Jans, Pres. Colorado Mission District.

An Appeal for Aid

Of all the horrors of the war, none is more shocking than the report that those who suffer most directly in the awful conflict, the sick and wounded soldiers, are, to a large extent, obliged to go without proper nursing and medical care.

The official German and Austrian lists of dead, wounded and missing show that these countries have lost thousands of physicians since the beginning of the war, either in the field or as a result of overwork in seeking to meet the enormous demand for their services with an insufficient force. How great is the actual need appears from an announcement of the Bavarian minister of war, recently published, which decrees the admission of medical students who under normal conditions would pursue their studies for one or more years, into the surgical staff of the army. The need has become still more pressing by reason of the fact that lack of funds has forced the American Red Cross, on October 1, 1915, to withdraw the nurses and physicians whom it supported in both countries. Since then the situation in the already overcrowded military hospitals has become still more critical. The number of physicians is becoming smaller, while the number of the wounded is increasing.

It is well known that Germany and its allies are suffering severely because of the restrictions imposed by the enemy upon the importation of medicine, bandages, etc. Fortunately the American Red Cross seems to have succeeded in securing permission for shipping hospital supplies, altho with some limitations. At the present time, however, hundreds of chests of supplies of all kinds are awaiting shipment at the Red Cross depot at Brooklyn, because the British authorities are delaying the permission to ship it to Germany.

It is needless to point out the dire consequences of such a lack of medical care for the wounded. The civil population is also suffering, especially women and children, because a larger number of physicians and nurses than would otherwise be necessary, must be requisitioned for military service.

Some time ago a committee of American citizens has been organized for the purpose of securing nurses and physicians for service in Germany and Austria. Two expeditions have already been sent to Germany, and the reports of their work show how necessary and welcome their assistance is. A third and fourth expedition is now being formed, and will probably carry with them the necessary equipment, as the first one did, altho the second was not permitted to do so.

The American Physicians' Expedition Committee, of which the president of the National Legal Aid Society, Mr. Arthur von Briesen, is chairman, and of which, former Representatives Richard Bartholdt, Henry Vollmer and Herman A. Metz, with a large number of well-known and influential ministers in all parts of the country are members, hereby appeals for aid to all Americans who have a heart for the sufferings of sick and wounded soldiers, for aid in this urgent work of fraternal love and service.

Many pastors and churches who could be reached by letters have already responded to the appeal. Many expeditions will have to be sent out, however, if any real and effective aid is to be given in this time of need.

We appeal to you again: help us to heal the wounds, to save the lives of men for their families.

Concluded on Page 5

RELIGIOUS NEEDS OF SOUTH AMERICA

Neither the Descendants of the lordly Incas and the wild Tribes of the Amazon have ever heard the glad Tidings of Salvation. Many Attempts to reach them fail because they are not backed by responsible Organizations

II

In Bolivia there are even to-day a great number of distinct tribes of Indians. From all that the writer has been able to learn it appears that the two most prominent families are the Quetchuas and the Aimaraes. Having lived several years in Bolivia, it

La-Paz, but its members simply think of helping them against the sharper, brown or white, who tries to swindle the poor native out of his land and inheritance. When will the day come in which a great and powerful mission will begin its work of evangelizing these descendants of the lordly Incas, to bring them to know the King of kings, Christ, their Saviour?

Besides the tribes mentioned there are also twenty-five more major tribes of Indians in Bolivia. On the official maps used in the Bolivian schools, drawn by Dr. Dan. Bustamante, all these are called "salvajes" or savages. Some of these, as the Guanans who are bordering on Paraguay, or the Chacaros of the East Andes, are still cannibals. No one knows their language, and they hide in the marshes or climb into the trees at the approach of the white man. Lucky, indeed, the foreigner who, having been saved from their poisoned arrows, has been permitted to reach the outer border of their domains.

I little wonder at the wild heathen rites and orgies after having seen several of the festivities and pagan dances performed by the so-called Christian Indians in Bolivia. These dances took place during one of their church festivals.

Wild Indian Dances

I saw them gather for the dance, sewed into the skins of the alpaca, imitating bears, or wearing masks representing lions or rats. This consisted of stepping slowly to the weird sound of bamboo flutes, meanwhile describing large circles. Suddenly they stop at the sign of their leader, turn about and retrace in dancing step the circle just marked. At another signal they stop altogether, when their squaws regale them with small tin cups filled with diluted raw alcohol, manufactured from sugar-cane. In a few minutes dancing is resumed, and some of the men kept this up for forty or forty-eight hours, when they fell in death-like stupor to the ground. They never took off their masks or fancy dresses during all this time and even slept out their debauch in the attire of their orgies. This was in honor of the feast

Huts of some neglected Indians in Bolivia was my joy to establish preaching services among the Aimaraes. The Quetchuas belonged to the four original tribes which unitedly composed the Inca empire.

Some Bolivian Tribes

Much of the history of these pre-historic people is shrouded in mystery. But we know that there was at the end of the twelfth century an Inca Empire. This was composed of the Incas proper, the Quetchuas, Canas, and the Cauchis. At about the middle of the twelfth century these men of the highlands built the famous city of Cuzco. They made it the capital of the empire. From that city expeditions of the neighboring tribes were conducted. It was the Inca—for the word Inca originally is a title, such as Emperor—Viracocha, who, in the territory now called Bolivia, attacked the Aimaraes and conquered them. In their midst he built upon the ruins of an old city, Taipacala, the magnificent temple-city and palace of justice of Tiahuanaco. Its name implies "The desired One on the border of the lake." Lake Titicaca has receded some ten kilometers since then. The mighty city is a heap of ruins and jackals live now where grave judges once decided questions that involved the life or death of the accused. The proud Aimara, then considering himself, the lord of the eternal mountains, is now a shy and crushed servant. He evades the white man who so treacherously treated his forebears in the days of Atahualpa, the Cæsar of his time. With the Spanish political yoke the religion of the conquerors was enforced upon all natives. Many of them little cared whether one image, that of the sun or moon, or another, that of the cross or of the "mother of heaven," adorned their temples or surmounted the hills. The symbol was to them of but little value. And so in his heart to-day, as then, both the Aimara of the mountain or the Indian of the plain, worship the sun, the one imploring the giver of heat and light to shed his benign rays upon the cold, gray, misty mountain abode; the other pleading with the shining sun, lest he burn his body, dry up the fountains, and consume his growing crops with his fire. There is at present a society for the protection of the Aimara Indian in of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary. Can the pagan Indians have more horrible or degrading feasts than these?

Masked South American Indian Dancer at a Church Festival

From the Bolivian border of the Pilcomayo district we come into the almost unknown regions of the Amazon Indians. Somewhere there are the Uginas, of whom even serious white men affirm that the tribe has short tails. There are the Mojas of the Beni, who beat the bark of some tree until they can make

Concluded on Page 8

An Appeal for Aid

Continued from Page 4

Help us secure gifts, not only for the members of your church, but thru them from all whom your call can reach. And not only Germans or the descendants of Germans should help, but all who are in a position to so. The American physicians make no distinction whatever between Germans and Englishmen, Austrians and Russians, Serbs, Frenchmen or Italians who may come into their hospitals.

All contributions are to be sent to the General Treasurer, Rev. H. Bode, 1740 N. Euclid Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. J. Baltzer, St. Louis, Mo.

Prof. D. Irion, D. D., Elmhurst Ill.

Prof. F. Bente, St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. Prof. Th. Graebner, St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. G. C. Berkemeyer, D. D., Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

Rev. G. C. F. Haas, D. D., New York, N. Y.

Prof. J. L. Neve, D. D., Springfield, O.

Rev. Wm. Popcke, D. D., New York N. Y.

Rev. J. D. Remensnyder, D. D., LL. D., New York, N. Y.

Prof. M. Reu, Dubuque, Iowa.

Rev. F. Richter, D. D., Clinton, Iowa.

Rev. Th. Schmauck, D. D., LL. D., Lebanon, Pa.

Rev. Wm. Schoenfeld, New York, N. Y.

Rev. C. H. L. Schuette, D. D., Columbus, O.

† Pastor Frederick Hempelmann †

Pastor F. Hempelmann was born April 14, 1846, near Bielefeld in Westphalia, Germany, where he spent his childhood until after his confirmation. The interest in missionary activities in that particular part of Germany awakened in him the desire to become a missionary. With that purpose in view he entered the Missionary Institute at Barmen. As this school not only trained missionaries to labor among the heathen, but also sent young men to supply much needed aid in the United States for the spiritual welfare of Evangelical Germans, he was sent to this country at the beginning of the seventies. He entered Missouri College, the theological seminary of the Evangelical Synod, at that time located in the backwoods near Marthasville, Mo., now Eden Seminary, St. Louis. On July 5, 1874, he was ordained to the ministry in company with eighteen fellow-students at St. Peters Church, Washington, Mo., by the venerable pastor Ph. Goebel. His first charge was at Minier, Ill. Before he left Germany, he had become engaged to Miss Mary Klein, a deaconess, and on September 14, 1874, both were united in marriage at Pekin, Illinois, by Rev. W. Kampmeier.

In the course of forty years Pastor and Mrs. Hempelmann have experienced the weal and woe of ministerial life in the following congregations: Minier; Harmony, Mendota, Ottowa, Ill.; Lippstadt and Bay, Mo.; Mascoutah, Metropolis, Concordia—Sugar Loaf, near Millstadt, Pana, Johannsburg, Ill.; Waco, Texas; and during the past two years he had charge of Emanuels Church near Hamel, Ill.

Their union was blest by six children, of whom one died in early infancy, and the youngest, Emanuel, preceded the parents in death in 1904 at the age of eighteen.

On September 14, 1914, Rev. and Mrs. Hempelmann celebrated the fortieth anniversary of their marriage, while on July 5 of the same year Brother Hempelmann had been privileged to look back upon forty years in the ministry in company with two of his class-mates, Rev. Jacob Irion and Rev. J. F. Klick.

On January 16, 1915, Mrs. Hempelmann was called from her husband's side, and on the anniversary of her burial, January 19, Pastor Hempelmann departed this life at the age of sixty-nine years, nine months and five days, after an illness of only one week.

His demise is mourned by three sons, viz.: Frederick, in California; Theodore, pastor at Louisville, Ky.; Oscar, pastor at Pittsburg, Pa.; one daughter Mary, wife of Ph. Mueller at East St. Louis; as also by one son-in-law, two daughters-in-law, seven grandchildren, and a sister in Germany, besides a host of friends among the clergy and laity of the Synod.

At the time of his departure from Texas he was president of the Texas District, and when he died he was chairman of the Board for Home Mission in the South Illinois District.

Friday, January 21, was a gloomy and rainy day, but in spite of the inclemency of the weather the members of Emanuel Church at Hamel, and quite a number of pastors and teachers assembled to pay their last respects. Rev. W. Riemeier conducted the services at the parsonage, and the ministers present constituted a choir, and sang a selection. The trustees of the congregation acted as pall-bearers from the parsonage to the church. There Pastors Warber, Buescher, Rahn and Westerbeck served at the altar in prayer and Scripture-reading. Rev. Jac. Irion based his sermon on Luke 2, 29, and spoke with intense earnestness. Rev. G. Plassmann spoke in his capacity as president of the South Illinois District, remarking that he was confirmed in the same church in Germany as was Pastor Hempelmann. The undersigned read the obituary.

The coffin remained in the church until Saturday, January 22, when the body was conveyed to East St. Louis, where at 1:15 p. m. another funeral service was held at the Sunday-school Hall of Emanuel Church. Prof. S. D. Press of Eden Seminary led in prayer and Scripture-reading. Rev. E. F. Schmale, also a class-mate of Pastor Hempelmann, preached the sermon, taking as his text, John 12, 25, 26. Rev. E. L. Mueller spoke on behalf of the Mission Board, and the venerable Senior of the District, Rev. H. Buchmueller read the obituary. A quartette from Eden Seminary sang several beautiful selections. Prof. Press closed with the Lord's Prayer and benediction. After those present had once more viewed the remains, the body was escorted to the beautiful Mt. Hope Cemetery, and laid to rest at the side of her who had been his helpmeet so long and faithfully. Rev. E. R. Jaeger, pastor of Emanuels Church, East St. Louis, officiated at the grave.

Thus a faithful servant of Christ, who came to abolish death, went to his reward with the determined declaration: "I do not fear death!"

Rev. F. J. Buschmann.

CONCERTED ACTION IN THE BROTHERHOOD

The Evangelical Brotherhood was organized for Work, and it is getting ready to take hold of its Job. Three Lines of Endeavor are needed to do the Job right

When the Evangelical Brotherhood was organized during the General Conference of 1913 it was for the purpose of "federating all the men of the Evangelical Church to the end that by the resulting breadth of their vision, by mutual inspiration, and by concerted action the work of God in the kingdom of Christ may be promoted with such results as could not have been attained by the efforts of one man or a single society." This aim has been kept steadily in view during the two years that have elapsed since then, and the stimulus given by the first national convention of Evangelical brotherhoods at Evansville in October 1914 has resulted in strengthening and extending the organization of the movement in various sections of the country. It has broadened the vision not only of those who attended the convention, but also of those whom they have been able to reach when they returned home, and it has inspired the men in Evangelical churches with higher ideals and greater aims in their work. The Evangelical Brotherhood has found its place in the rank of Evangelical organizations and is ready for the task which it is particularly fitted to accomplish.

For there is no doubt that those who were most concerned in the promotion and organization of the Evangelical Brotherhood, as well as those who have since been attracted by its aims and principles, have had in mind an organization that should be willing and able to do real work. Visions and inspirations are very good and very necessary, but the man with a vision becomes a mere dreamer unless he gets to work on his vision, and he who is content with an inspiration alone will degenerate into a mere talker unless he seeks to give practical shape to his inspiration. And Evangelical manhood will not be content with mere dreaming and talking: we should be very much mistaken in the kind of men who have the Brotherhood movement in our churches most at heart, if they would want to give their time, their effort and their means to it unless there is back of it the definite aim and purpose to push the work of the Evangelical Church a little farther along in some practical, effective way.

The Brotherhood eager for Work

And we have no reason to believe that the men who make up the Evangelical Brotherhoods in our churches are afraid of work. In fact, all the men with whom we have come into contact—in person or by letter—were eager for a real man's job, for work that was worth while. The trouble in the past has been, not that men did not want to work, but that they were not shown the specific task for which they were fitted, and were not organized to do it effectively. But the Brotherhood idea points the way toward both these things. To the noble and self-denying work of those pastors and laymen who have unstintingly given themselves to the work of the Evangelical Church during the past three-quarters of a century it proposes to add something that will get all the men in all Evangelical churches to work together and for one purpose. That is what is meant by promoting the work of God in the kingdom of Christ by "concerted action with such results as could not have been attained by the efforts of one man or a single society."

It seems to us that such concerted action, if it is to bring the largest advantage to the men themselves and their families, to the local congregation, the Evangelical Church in America, and the Kingdom of God at large, should be along three lines: 1. It must encourage the growth of a strong and active spiritual life; 2. It should encourage systematic and liberal giving, and 3. It should draw and bind all the men of all the churches together in the interest of the Church. We shall get at the practical significance of these three lines of activity most easily and quickly by making two subdivisions under each. The growth of a strong and active spiritual life involves a) regular personal or family devotions and b) real and regular Bible study. The encouragement of systematic and liberal giving means giving from the principle of Christian stewardship in proportion to income a) the needs of the local congregation, and b) the needs of the different branches of work carried on by the Evangelical Church. These needs are represented by the obligatory offerings—Reformation Day offering; Eden Seminary;—District offering; offering for Home and Foreign Missions; the Church Extension, or Building Fund, and the offering for Ministerial Pensions and Relief, with the recommended offering for Elmhurst College. The problem of drawing and binding all the men of all the churches together in the interest of the Church is that of securing a) regular church attendance on the part of all the men, and the continuous promotion of the Brotherhood idea and organization.

In the following we shall attempt to set forth briefly what these three lines of activity might be made to mean in every Evangelical Church and for the whole Evangelical Church. The ideals and the aims implied in these lines of effort indicated seem to us so essential to Christian manhood, and so fundamental to any practical service which Christian men anywhere can render to their Church, and which Evangelical men want to render their own Church, that they might readily be adopted as a kind of standard for Brotherhood work in Evangelical churches. But whether or not this be done, it would seem to us that any Brotherhood that did not at least earnestly attempt to secure concerted action by its members along these lines is missing the real meaning, advantage and joy of the Brotherhood idea.

Strong spiritual Life a fundamental Need

If it is the problem of the Evangelical Brotherhood to recruit for Jesus Christ, to bring men into living, vital touch with the divine life that He has brought into the world, then a strong and active spiritual life is necessarily the primary and essential aim of Brotherhood work. Some men can be satisfied with a religion that is merely outward and formal. They come to the church once and a while and listen to the preacher respectfully, because it is the preacher's business to talk religion, and they like to listen to him if he is a good speaker. On the whole, however, religion does not seem to them to be anything more than believing certain things to be true, or observing certain religious rites and ceremonies, such as baptism, confirmation, and perhaps the Lord's Supper, and calling for the services of the Church on certain special occasions, such as sickness, in times of particular danger, difficulty, or need at marriages or funerals. They would not want to be without the Church and the comfort of her services, but it is to them simply a matter of business; they pay for what they get and conform to the required regulations, but it does not touch their heart or affect their character. Their life and conduct is merely a matter of custom, convention or habit, they live and let live in the manner in which they grew up, or they accommodate themselves to the ways of the people among whom they live. Their Christianity is merely a shadow, an image, instead of the real thing; a form instead of a force; a mere way of living, but no real life.

There is too much of that kind of Christian masculinity—it does not deserve the name Christian manhood—in the churches, but we like to believe that the great majority of Evangelical men are not of that type. In some way, whether by home training, confirmation or Sunday-school instruction, or the preaching of the Word, a line of thought has been started in their innermost hearts that makes them want to do the right thing by the God who made them and the Saviour who died for them. They realize that this means more than just listening to the preacher, and that their Christianity is merely a sham if it does not get down to the innermost sources of their lives and mean something in their every-day conduct and character. It occurs to them that their lives probably look very different to God and the folks who have to live with them, than they should, and they are trying to be just a little more in earnest about remembering what is the will of God and about putting it into actual practice. And with thoughts like these penetrating deeper and deeper into one's being day by day, one can hardly help feeling the need of a quiet ten or fifteen minutes every day to get into touch with God, if possible before the day's work gets hold of mind and body.

This is what it means to have "personal devotions," and it is something one cannot get along without if one is really trying to be a child of God, and to live with Him and work for Him. It simply means going to God every day to get your orders, for yourself and for your family if God has given you one, so as to be able to do what He wants you to do and to be what He wants you to be amid the tasks and the temptations that you will have to face.

Does every member of your Brotherhood practice personal or family devotions? Of course a matter like this is far too sacred and intimate to be a subject for statistics, and the man who would make a boast of his heart-to-heart relationship with God is not very far removed from the class that loves to stand and pray in the synagogues and corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Nevertheless there is no need of being ashamed of such an intimate relationship with God, or of hiding it from the knowledge of men. There are some men of the writer's acquaintance whom he does not need to ask about it, nor is there any need of their telling him about it; their conduct and words and their actions, their whole attitude in their work and their play, their whole outlook upon life and its duties and responsibilities, show very plainly that they are not only trying, but are actually in personal, living contact with their Father in heaven thru their Lord and Saviour. If the personal life and character of the officers and leading men of your Brotherhood show that they are in personal touch with God, the rest of the membership will want to get to the same point, because it is natural for real men to want for themselves the best and the noblest they see in others. By keeping the ideal of "Personal and Family Devotions for every Member" constantly before all the members of the Brotherhood, and by letting the results thereof appear in your own life, all the members will gradually grow into the same condition, even tho no one keeps track of them and a show of hands is never called for.

The Importance of Regular Bible Study

And such a spirit of personal devotion will lead any one right into God's Word for light on the daily path and the daily duty, and for help and strength in being the right kind of a man. Any one who is in earnest about walking with God takes to the Bible just as naturally as the man with a hard day's work wants his square meal when he's hungry. And just as one needs his physical nourishment well prepared and at regular times, one needs Bible reading and Bible study at regular intervals. That means a men's Bible class in your Sunday-school. If there is such a class in your school, every member of the Brotherhood should belong to it,—“and then some”; start one and make it a point of honor for every member of the Brotherhood to be present every Sunday on time with a mind to learn. No greater mistake can be made than to suppose that one knows all one needs to know of the Bible and its message because one is quite familiar with the contents of the Bible story book studied in the confirmation class. That was merely the beginning, and if members of Brotherhoods had to pass an examination even on the contents of that little volume before being admitted, there might be some startling developments. A Brotherhood without a Bible class is like a man who doesn't care to eat: there is something the matter with him and one cannot depend on him for work. And just as a man who doesn't care to eat needs a doctor, the Brotherhood that doesn't care to start a Bible Class, or does not take part in one that has been started, needs the Great Physician.

The lack of a Bible class is all the more inexcusable as the Evangelical Church is supplying a regular course of Bible study for her adult members. The Advanced Bible Lessons are planned to open the spiritual treasure-house of the Bible to mature inquirers in a five years course, with a course of daily Bible readings, and a full discussion of all the important questions and subjects of the Old and New Testaments. It is designed to stimulate, thought, study and research in regard to Bible truths and principles and apply them to every-day problems and things in an enlightening and helpful manner. And the price, fifteen cents per year, single copies or in clubs, is easily within reach of every purse. In addition to this the Advanced Bible lessons are also treated in every issue of this paper. The two together will give you an opportunity for regular, thoro, uninterrupted popular Bible study that is not surpassed anywhere. It is easy to get every member of your Brotherhood interested in Bible reading and study if you use the Advanced Bible Lessons in the manner in which they are intended to be used.

FINANCING THE KINGDOM

Imagine Moses or Paul using the Methods so common in most Churches for raising the needed Money. The Bible establishes a Law of Giving that has not been abrogated. Try it and get Results

II

And if collections are an unstable means of financing the Kingdom, surely bazaars and fairs and catch-a-penny contrivances are even more so. It is surprising to what an extent some churches will resort to these clap-trap methods when they are absolutely without Scriptural authority. You find nothing of this character in the Old Testament or in the Early Church. In an article in The Christian Steward a writer has well said:

"The old tabernacle of the Hebrews cost an immense sum of money, and it was built at a time when the people were not in a flourishing financial condition. Why, then, do we not read, in the account of its construction, something like the following: 'And Moses called unto him Bezaleel and Aholiab, and said unto them, 'Go to, let us get up an entertainment, a grand festival with a manna supper, and roast quails in abundance. We may also have games and music and dancing. And let sundry beautiful damsels scour the neighboring country, selling tickets. Let them be in comely attire, and let them play upon the timbrel and lute as they go, that they may attract the attention of the people. It may be that yon wealthy Hittite will be pleased to contribute of his substance to the building of the Lord's temple; and, if we shall succeed in drawing a few shekels from some of the well-to-do Amalekites, our burden will be much reduced thereby; and, best of all, these ungodly sinners will have been duped into paying tribute for the glory of our God.'"

"What should we think of St. Paul if he had written to the Corinthians thus: 'Now, concerning the collection for the saints, let all the brethren and sisters unite in getting up a charity ball, or a series of Isthmian games, with tickets of admission, that you may have a goodly sum of money raised when I come?' We should uncanonize him at once. Can you imagine Paul writing to the Ephesians to conduct a rummage sale to pay his traveling expenses?"

"Absurd!" you say. Of course it is. If the Bible contained any such nonsense, we would throw it away. The fact is, none of the indirect methods of raising money find any approval, either from precept or example, in God's Word. They are not in keeping with its teachings. They are a disgrace to the Church of Christ, and bring only contempt upon it from the unbelieving world. The result has always been to vitiate the true spirit of consecration, and to blight the spiritual life, influence, and activity of church-members.

Paul said plainly how he wanted the money raised: he wrote, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." He urged a systematic plan that would do away with collections and every other impractical form of raising money. And Paul was not laying down a new law for the Church. Paul was adhering to the Jewish law—the law of Moses—the same law to which Christ and His disciples were subject. The Jews for centuries had been educated in systematic giving, but Paul found it necessary to instruct the Gentile Corinthian converts who might be misled by the methods of the heathen worshippers about them.

Bible Teaching is Different

"The readiness to adopt indirect methods of raising money is a dangerous weakness of the Christian Church of to-day. Whenever a Church is to be built or repaired, or a large sum of money raised for any object, the first thought is apt to be of suppers and fairs and concerts, and other entertainments. Christians contribute a few dollars to such an entertainment, or buy a number of tickets, and imagine that the sum thus expended has been consecrated to God, and is put down to their credit in heaven. Some day they will learn that they have made a mistake, and that the credit side of their account on the great ledger is much smaller than they had supposed. That money is not consecrated to God that we spend in entertainments or suppers, altho we may receive no adequate return. It is simply a trade in which we have knowingly gotten the worst end of the bargain. Such schemes reflect great discredit upon the intelligence of Christians, to say nothing of their piety. If some one who is equal to the task would write a book on Christian economy, the real loss and wastefulness of these indirect methods might be made clear, and Christians might be induced to abandon them.

Wrong Notion of Church Finances

"The popular notion regarding church finances needs reforming. It is based upon false principles of economy, and places the church of Christ in an unworthy light before the world. The credit of the kingdom of heaven has been weakened by subterfuges and shams. Christians have been too careful to distinguish between religion and business, as tho there were some necessary antagonism between the two. Men like to talk about consecrating 'themselves' and their 'time' and their 'talents' to the Lord, but they shudder when the word 'talent' is translated into the modern word 'dollars.' They fancy that the mere thought of money is worldly, and will lower the tone of spirituality. It is a grand mistake. That spirituality which is so easily injured by contact with the world, which must be bottled up and hermetically sealed lest it should spoil in the open air, is a pretty poor article. True spirituality sanctifies whatsoever it touches, by the power of its own purity. Like Christ, it touches even the leper, and, instead of being defiled, imparts pure and healthy life. We have altogether too much religion that is like a balloon,—full of gas, and shooting straight up into the air whenever it is let loose; or, like a soap bubble, beautiful with its rainbow tints, but bursting into a thousand fragments the moment you touch it with anything solid.

"True business principles are not unspiritual; they are helpful in the religious life. Not only would the Church as a whole be benefitted by a well-regu-

Concluded on Page 7

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

February 20, 1916. Septuagesima Sunday

NOTICE

Sunday-schools of the Indiana District

The Sunday-schools of the Indiana District are requested to pay their annual apportionment to Rev. C. E. Schmidt, 405 Center Hill Ave., Cincinnati, O., who is the financial secretary of the District. Cards stating the amount of the apportionment will be sent out in the near future.

M. Brunner Moore, District secretary.

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

EXTERMINATE THE SALOON

M. Feb. 21. It brings Ruin. Prov. 23: 29—35.
T. Feb. 22. It is Anti-social. Luke 12: 45.
W. Feb. 23. It breeds decay. Isa. 56: 12.
T. Feb. 24. Build the City of God. Rev. 21: 23—27.
F. Feb. 25. Resist the Devil. 1 Pet. 5: 8—11.
S. Feb. 26. Kill the Menace. Exod. 21: 28—36.
Sun., Feb. 27. Topic—Exterminate the Saloon!
Why? How? Hab. 2: 1-14.

Suggestions to the Leader

In dealing with this subject the leader must bear in mind that all sinful agencies come under the ban of God's law. Then do not fail to appeal to the will-power of men. For while organized sin may lead us into temptation, no man can shift the responsibility to such an organization, and say: "I am not to be blamed. The other man led me into sin." In these days when we are so ready to shift our responsibility for ourselves to the other man, and are ready to find excuses for our wrong doing, it is necessary to impress men with this fact that they themselves are responsible for the soul's damnation. God does not condemn any man unless that man is wholly and totally responsible for his spiritual death.

Shall we exact pledges from our young people? That question is a delicate one. It depends on the circumstances and the membership of your society. It is better to guide young people into righteousness by developing inner strength. A well developed sense of right and wrong is an impassable barrier to sin and temptation. It is not necessary to do wrong in order to know the wrong. Make the sense of right-doing so strong that temptation will be repulsed intuitively.

The Topic Presented

We must distinguish between the saloon as an institution, and the saloon as a human agency. The opportunity for doing wrong is present outside of the saloon as an institution. But the institution has been selected as the agency of evil minded persons, because it offered the line of least resistance, and offered the greatest opportunity for attaining selfish ends.

Let us bear in mind that the article of merchandise offered for sale is waste as far as its actual necessity is concerned. Man's physical organism does not need the stimulus of the intoxicant, in fact alcohol destroys the vital tissues, and proves itself destructive to human life.

The influence of the alcohol is such, that by constant use the will-power is weakened, immorality finds easy entrance, our ideals of righteousness are destroyed, and with their destruction the evil passions and desires are aroused. These are like slumbering beasts within us, who are ever straining at the leash, waiting the opportunity to break loose upon society.

The associations developed by this institution are therefore debasing and destructive to human society. The debased and evil-minded, the criminal and libertine, vice and iniquity, these seek this institution as their haunts and dens, from which to prey upon men when the intoxicant has destroyed and weakened the will. Therefore the gambler, the politician, the corrupt deceiving business man, he who lives as a vampire off others, seeks this place as his base of operations. Greed incarnate actuates these men. This greed seeks the destruction of others.

Religion finds no place here. It is an atmosphere where purity fades, as the flower in the hot sun, where religious influences wither ere they are aroused.

We cannot, and dare not, support an institution that as such has proven itself a curse to humanity. It is a curse because it caters only to the baser passions, and seeks to profit thru the evil impulses and weaknesses of others.

If the German government cannot afford to have liquor dispensed to her soldiers in the field, for fear of endangering the nation as such, how can the Church of Jesus Christ sanction the existence of an institution that seeks to destroy the men and women, whom the Church is seeking to save. The governments engaged in this present war have declared that strong drink is their most dangerous foe. It is also the most dangerous foe of our country and our church. But this foe cannot be destroyed except by the personal consecration of the men and women of our churches, and a determined resolution on their part, not to support this great evil. Sin is not the product of an institution, but the product of individual minds and hearts. Resist evil, that means also, support not the saloon and its corrupting agencies.

Some Questions on the Topic

How are the saloons licensed in your State and community?

What does licensing on the part of the State or community involve?

Why are we personally responsible for existing conditions?

How can we aid in removing the sources of evil and temptations?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Gen. 43: 34; Job. 12: 25; Psalm 107: 27; Isa. 28: 1; 34: 7; 51: 21; Hab. 2: 15; Hagg. 1: 6; Rev. 17: 2, 6; 1 Cor. 6: 10.

A Prayer

We pray, our heavenly Father, for the power of the Spirit, that we may at all times discern the evil, in whatever form it may disguise itself. Help us to develop within us the strength to oppose evil and corruption, and fight wrong. May Thy Spirit, the Spirit of Jesus Christ so control our nation and people, that we may seek the welfare of all, encouraging that which upbuilds, but opposing that which destroys character and undermines virtue. May the pure example of our Saviour Jesus Christ inspire us to every sacrifice for the sake of others. Forgive us our sins and trespasses, and may the statue of the full manhood in Jesus Christ assume a more and more definite form. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson Material for the Second Year: New Testament Studies—the Messianic Era and the Apostolic Era.

Lessons for the First Quarter, 1916

- Lesson 1. Jan. 2. Between the Testaments; Dan. 2: 31—45.
Lesson 2. Jan. 9. The Origin and purpose of the Gospels; John 1: 1—14; Luke 1: 1—4.
Lesson 3. Jan. 16. The Growing Jesus; Luke 2: 40—52.
Lesson 4. Jan. 23. The Voice Crying in the Wilderness; Matt. 3: 1—12.
Lesson 5. Jan. 30. At the Gateway of Service; Matt. 3: 13—17; 4: 1—11; Mark: 9—13.
Lesson 6. Feb. 6. Beginnings in Judea; John 2: 13—25.
Lesson 7. Feb. 13. A Woman Lost in Sin; John 4: 27—30; 39—42.
Lesson 8. Feb. 20. Beginnings in Galilee; Luke 4: 14—31.
Lesson 9. Feb. 27. Teaching with Authority; Matt. 5: 1—16; 7: 28, 29; Luke 6: 20—26.
Lesson 10. Mar. 5. Miracles of Jesus, I; Luke 8: 22—56.
Lesson 11. Mar. 12. Miracles of Jesus, II; John 5: 17—31; 20: 30—31.
Lesson 12. Mar. 19. Parables of Jesus; Matt. 13: 10—17.
Lesson 13. Mar. 26. The Arising Opposition; John 6: 60—71.

Lesson 8. The Beginnings in Galilee

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Feb. 14. Matt. 14: 3—5. John's Reproof of Herod.
T. Feb. 15. John 4: 46—54. The Nobleman's Son.
W. Feb. 16. Luke 4: 16—30. Rejected in Nazareth.
T. Feb. 17. Matt. 4: 13—17. Removal to Capernaum.
F. Feb. 18. Matt. 4: 18—25. Calling the Disciples.
S. Feb. 19. Mark 1: 21—34. A Day of Miracles.
S. Feb. 20. Mark 1: 35—45. First Preaching Tour in Galilee.

Lesson Key:—"God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble," 1 Peter 5: 5b.

In Galilee Jesus seems to have been cordially received during His sojourn following the incident at Sychar, and His fame was confirmed by His healing, from Cana, the king's officer's son in Capernaum. Little is recorded of His work, until we find Him again at the feast of the Passover. The pool of Bethesda, fed by an intermittent spring, was frequented by sick folk, for whom its waters had healing virtues. The healing of the man who had long waited for relief again brought Jesus into conflict with the rulers of His people, who resented His claim of equality with God as blasphemy. The time is not ripe for letting things come to a crisis in Jerusalem, and so Jesus again goes northward, this time to the city of His boyhood. Preaching in the synagog He applies the prophecy of Isaiah 61: 1, 2, to himself and His work. While His words and demeanor charmed His old friends, they could not endure His stern reproof of their unbelief.

Men always like to hear the good things the Gospel of Jesus Christ brings. The preaching of good tidings to the poor; the proclaiming of release to the captives; the recovering of sight to the blind; liberty for them that are bruised, and an acceptable year of the Lord, is very pleasant and attractive. But when it comes to acknowledging the lordship of Jesus, putting their faith in Him as the Son of God and the King of Israel, that is a different matter, because it involves a change of heart, a letting go of things and ideas that have become dear to the old natural man, who is of the earth earthy. The people of Nazareth demanded a sign, such as He had wrought at Cana, or in Capernaum, or Jerusalem, and they become angry when He does not fulfill their wish. In point of fact, however, Jesus is unable to perform a sign for them because they are unwilling to believe. Just as Elijah and Elisha performed their greatest signs outside of their own country, where they were not acceptable, so He also is obliged to begin His ministry away from His boyhood home.

"The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; and he cannot know them because they are spiritually judged." Men must be willing to accept the truth before it can be of any use or service to them; you cannot argue with people who do not want to believe. Faith implies an open-mindedness for ideas and things as yet not understood, a readiness to accept a teaching or see a truth. Thus are human hearts prepared for the mysteries of God, and Christ freely unfolds them to all who are willing to see and to be taught, as the case of Nicodemus shows. The first disciples of Christ had confidence in Him even before they knew Him personally, therefore they were able to see His glory. His own townspeople at Nazareth wanted to see signs before they would accept Him as their Lord, therefore He could not reveal His glory to them. Even God Almighty cannot give anything to people who do not want to receive. He never bestows anything against anyone's will.

Perhaps the Jews of Nazareth did not understand what they were doing when they rejected Jesus. To them He was merely "Joseph's son," a man like themselves, whom they had known from His early youth, and whom they all liked as a man. But they saw nothing else than the outward life He had lived among them. But their rejection of His claims were final nevertheless. We are not told that Jesus ever returned to Nazareth again, and if any of His former townsmen ever underwent a change of heart in regard to their attitude toward Him, they were obliged to seek Him at Capernaum. They had their chance of securing His blessings and of becoming famous because of His presence there, but they would not pay the price. It is a dangerous thing to reject Jesus Christ when He invites you to accept Him with all the blessings He brings with Him. The chance may never come again. Keep your heart and mind open for Him and His truth, if He has not already taken possession of it. It costs something to accept Him; but it is worth the sacrifice a thousand times over.

Financing the Kingdom

Continued from Page 6

lated system of economics, but individual Christian lives would be strengthened. May the time soon come when we shall be as practical in religious matters as we are in business. Then we shall do away with all indirect methods, all evasions of duty, and build up our Christian institutions on the only true basis,—that of specie payment."

Why not practice Tithing?

This logically brings us to the proper and practical plan for financing the Kingdom—the only method authorized by the Bible. It is the law that obligates every member of the Church and makes that obligation one-tenth of his income. You ask me then the all-important question, "Is this law binding to-day?" In reply let me ask you if you can give any safe and sound reason why it is not? You will probably tell me that Christ did not tithe or teach tithing. I know it. Christ did not give one-tenth. Christ gave tenths. When the loving Mary broke the precious alabaster box over His head it was the only thing He ever received that He did not give away. I know the disciples did not give a tenth. They gave ten-tenths. They acknowledged to Christ that they had left all to follow Him. The members of the Early Church did not give a tithe. They gave everything. Three thousand of their own accord sold out their business and disposed of their lands and laid the money at the apostles' feet. Universal liberality was the stumbling stone of Ananias and Sapphira. They couldn't bear to give up quite everything and so they lied about it. The Bible clearly establishes the tithe as the fundamental of Christian giving, and anything more than this as the evidence of Christian liberality.

Take it from another standpoint. The blessings and cursings that accompany the tithe are as much in evidence to-day as they were when the prophet Malachi rebuked the Jews. As a nation the Jews will adhere to the Mosaic law of finance. Despite their natural unpopularity and persecutions, do you find them begging in the same fashion as our Christian churches to promote their institutions? Do not the Jews adequately care for their own? Moreover, what nationality with such overwhelming obstacles against it is so marvellously blessed in its financial investments? Then turn to the West for another example of present prosperity in the Mormon Church. How persistently the Mormon tithers have flourished with all the efforts that have been made to exterminate them. Even a corrupt religion will prosper after it has adopted a correct method for financing its interests!

Take God at His Word

The only place in the Bible where God issues a direct challenge to His people to prove the beneficent result of His promises is recorded in connection with the law of tithing. "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." The question is, "have we proved God? Have you and I put this matter to a test? Well, I have. For a long time I gave carelessly and indifferently. I gave nothing and I received nothing. But when I began to give a tithe the Lord started to bless me, and when I began to give more than a tithe the windows of heaven were opened and there was not room to receive the blessings that were showered upon me.

Mr. A. A. Hyde, of Omaha, proved God. He started like a poor man, but in the beginning determined to take God at His word. To-day his annual income is $100,000, of which he gives God $90,000 and lives very happily upon the remaining $10,000. Many other successful business men can give you the same testimony. They have proved conclusively that it is possible to command God with our gifts just as surely as we can command Him with our prayers. On the other hand, many men who have ignored God's plan can testify to business reverses and family failures. The Penalty of cursing operates as fully as the Promise of blessing. "Ye are cursed with a great curse." As Dr. Hall once said, "Let our offerings be in proportion to our incomes, lest the Lord be displeased and make our incomes in proportion to our offerings." "He that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly, but he that soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully."

Prove God now. Take Him at His word. Acknowledge Him as your business partner. He furnishes the capital. You get nine-tenths of the profit and enjoy giving away His one-tenth fully as much as in spending what is left upon yourself. And if we all bring our tithes into the storehouse there will be meat in God's house and all the problems of financing the Kingdom will be properly and satisfactorily solved.

Religious Needs of South America

Continued from Page 4

of the fiber smocks to cover their nakedness. Again, there are the Napo Indians who have pierced the lobes of their ears, and, by inserting coils of bamboo bark, have created holes that are from two to four inches long. Almost all of these Indians are mere savages, living from hunting, fishing, or on the wild fruits they find.

GERMANY Was Legally Justified

in her invasion of Belgium, says Alexander Fuehr in his new book, just issued, THE NEUTRALITY OF BELGIUM. Dr. Fuehr has made a thorough and painstaking study of Belgium's status as a neutral nation under International Law, and as a result he sets forth arguments and evidence by which to meet and refute the accusations that have been made against Germany as a violator of the neutrality of Belgium.

If you would have in your homes a book which will supply you with all of the points and arguments on the German side of the Belgian question get this new and important work by a man who is an authority in the law.

Sign and send this Coupon for a Copy of THE NEUTRALITY OF BELGIUM by Alexander Fuehr

"AN UNANSWERABLE ARGUMENT"

"Dr. Fuehr's numberless quotations in support of statements and arguments and valuable appendices constitute a handy, readable text-book on the subject of international treaties and an unanswerable argument to Great Britain's brief against Germany."—New York Staats-Zeitung.

"As a current book on a big question the work has historic value and will be read extensively by persons favorable to the German cause."—Tribune, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Eden Publishing House,
St. Louis, Mo. Chicago, Ill.

Cross over to the Guianas now, and you will find even in territory belonging to European nations wild Indians who worship the Ceiba tree and place food at the root of such trees nightly. Ghastlier still is the occupation of the Jivaro Indians of Ecuador. They know how to extract from the heads of the enemies—which, like the Dyaks of Borneo, they carry away as trophies—the skull. Somehow, I imagine, they must break the skull into fragments. They do this, however, without destroying the overlying flesh. This they shrink by some process, leaving all hair on the head, until the whole has contracted to the size of a man's fist. During this process they know how to mold the flesh in such a manner that it retains the general semblance of the former being, reduced only in size to a diameter of about four inches. Ghastly, indeed, appear these trophies of an unbridled hatred against their enemies.

Missions to the Indians

Efforts to reach the South American Indians with the Gospel have been few and very far between. The scattered location of the tribes would not have been so detrimental if the efforts had been directed by responsible boards and in a systematic way promising continuance. But the majority of these missions are of a spasmodic character. Two of the stations I know are exceptions. I refer to the work of Rev. Grubb in Paraguay and the successful mission of Rev. Mr. Sadler among the Araucanians in Chol-Chol. These are under the direction of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel.

People talk of "giving up," when they become Christians, as if they were to be losers, but the promise is of added riches.—Drummond.

Blessed is the man who has found his work; let him ask no other blessedness. Know thy work and do it; and work at it like Hercules. One monster there is in the world—the idle man.—Carlyle.

BELGIUM WAS NOT NEUTRAL

according to this author, who makes three distinct claims which have not been made thus carefully heretofore for Americans to consider:

- (1) That Belgium was not neutral territory when the German army invaded it;
- (2) That, according to the Law of Nations, the treaty guaranteeing Belgium's neutrality has been void for many years and had been considered so by Great Britain, prior to the war;
- (3) That, even if the guarantee treaty had still been in force, International Law fully permitted Germany to invade Belgium under the particular circumstances.

Treaties, Documents, Legal Authorities, Press Articles and Affidavits are cited to sustain these claims; and to establish the origin and break-down of Belgium's neutrality. With regard to the latter it is declared:

- (a) That Break-down began with Belgium's annexation of the Congo State, which was "quite incompatible with Belgium's status as a perpetually neutral country."
- (b) It continued, when, by secret alliance, the French plan of campaign for 1914 embodied a union of the French, English, and Belgian armies to oppose German forces.
- (c) It eventuated in the entrance of French troops upon Belgian soil before any German troops crossed the border into Belgium.

SIGN AND SEND THIS COUPON

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE

Gentlemen:—Send me, all delivery charges paid by you, one copy of THE NEUTRALITY OF BELGIUM. I enclose $1.62 in payment.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....

A Fourfold Test of MORMONISM

By

Henry C. Sheldon

151 Pages

Cloth

Net 50 Cts.

Mormonism is not a dead issue. While conforming in some ways to the spirit of the age, the real danger of the system still persists. This little study meets the needs of the hour. The name of the author is a guarantee of its quality and value. It has a keen, critical, dispassionate review of Mormonism, tested by history, by criticism of documents, by reason and by practical results.

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.,
202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CHANGED ADDRESSES

Rev. Fr. Dodzuweit, Scotts Bluff, Nebr.
Rev. Theo. Eisen, 623 Jackson St., Sandusky, Ohio.
(New parsonage).
Rev. F. G. Walter Fuhrmann, 24 E. 25th St., Bayonne, N. J.
Rev. M. Peper, Colby, Wis.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 5

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., FEBRUARY 17th, 1916

NUMBER 7

The Greatest Mistake

any church can make is to suppose that its greatest need is right in its own midst, and that therefore all its own needs will have to be met before it can concern itself with outside opportunities as presented by the Home and Foreign Mission work. Such a policy is selfishness pure and simple, and selfishness always clog up the channels of blessings that God desires to keep open for us.

To-day heart-hungry men in dark countries are holding out their hands waiting for the Christians in Europe and America to give them the opportunity to know Jesus. They want His saving, cleansing, uplifting life and power; they want the spiritual and material, the temporal and eternal blessings which His Gospel alone can give. The National Missionary Campaign is seeking to arouse the men of America to the wonders of their missionary opportunity, and to induce them to take a practical and active part in missionary work. The responsibility is all the greater at the present time, as the men of the United States are practically the only ones who are in a position to discharge it with any degree of adequacy. The responsibilities respecting the Kingdom which this awful war has laid upon the men of the American churches are such that all the best qualities of all our best men are required to take care of them. It is not a responsibility which a few selected spirits can handle. Every man in every church must be made to realize his share in the world-wide work of our Lord Jesus Christ, and must be ready to give himself and all he has to getting it done in the Lord's own way. It has been the experience of all who have earnestly and prayerfully sought to do the will of the Father in heaven that those who undertake their share of this responsibility in obedience to their Master's Great Commission will experience a richness of heavenly joy and blessing which has seemed unattainable before. There is no better way of bringing these things into every family of every church than the "Every-member Canvass."

We have already called attention to the blessed spiritual and financial results that have followed the introduction of the Every-member Canvass. Some of the essential features of an Every-member Canvass are:

1. An adequate program of education and preparation. Nothing short of a month is adequate as to time, and nothing short of the responsibility of the whole Church for the whole world is adequate as to scope. Conferences, prayer meetings, public discourses, letters, and definite missionary information and inspiration are absolutely essential to create the right atmosphere for a successful canvass.

2. A definite time for the canvass. Announcement should be made as to the exact time the canvass is to be undertaken and letters sent to each member or family of the church and congregation, requesting the members to be at home when the canvassers call. Under these conditions a proper psychological and spiritual atmosphere will prevail for a successful work.

3. A trained committee to make the canvass. Many details must be mastered before the committee undertakes its work. "Suggestions to Leaders in the Every-Member Canvass" (get this at your convention, or from the Laymen's Missionary Movement, 1 Madison Ave., New York City.) and other denominational literature is available for this purpose.

The primary qualification for a successful canvasser, however, is that after having considered all the needs, he himself shall make a subscription worthy of his own ability. No man can ask another to do a thing with any assurance that he will secure a favorable reply unless he himself has a clear conscience that he is doing his own duty.

4. Canvassers must take individual interest in those whom they are to see. There is far more at stake than getting a few dollars subscribed to church budgets. It is a fatal mistake to say, "There is no use going to see Mr. So-and-So. He has not given a cent for years and never comes to church." A trained committee will look upon Mr. So-and-So as one worthy of their earnest prayer and the use of their greatest skill that they may win him back to the church and its work.

5. Weekly giving. One of the greatest drawbacks to the work of the church to-day is that we have so far overlooked the fact that giving is an act of worship. The Old Testament law was, "None shall appear before the Lord empty." The New Testament teaches, "Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store."

Too many churches and individuals have reduced giving to an act of convenience. Not only from the point of view of the spiritual teachings of the Word and the practical business efficiency of the church, but also of the best interests and development of the individual contributor, weekly giving is the most effective plan. As has been clearly demonstrated, it is not impossible, even in the rural districts.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Keep your face always toward the sunshine, and the shadows will fall behind you.

—M. B. Whitman.

The President and Congress

It is perhaps too early to state definitely the impression President Wilson's tour has made upon the people of the sections he visited, and it may be that the actual impression—if there was one—will never be fully known. So much may be said, however, that if the country had been really alarmed by the statements made in the President's speeches, such a condition would no doubt have been reflected by the press to a far greater extent than has been the case. While the President was enthusiastically received along the entire route, and especially at the places where he was scheduled to speak, it was notable at nearly all the places that the people who thronged to hear him were not the rank and file of the voters, but good-natured American crowds welcoming the chief executive of the Nation, and giving expression to their patriotism by turning out in the holiday spirit. Altho the President evidently took himself very seriously, there is no indication as yet that the people are following suit. His coming and his utterances created a stir for the time being, but if the American people had been convinced of the need of making a special and immediate effort to follow his advice, that conviction does not yet seem to have found popular expression. A canvass of the House of Representatives taken a few days after the President's return from his tour shows only twenty-four representatives in favor of the President's program for land defense. A majority of the 385 members of the House, practically equally divided between the Republican and the Democratic parties, seemed to favor a federalized National Guard, while 146 (eighty-two of them Democrats) were non-committal. Under the circumstances a favorable report on the continental army scheme by the House committee on military affairs seems out of the question. There seems little doubt that Congress will vote for substantial increases in the regular army and for the establishment of additional coast defenses, unless Congressmen hear a decided protest from their constituencies against increasing expenditures for military or naval purposes. Republicans, of course, will not want to be found backward in declaring their support of a greater National defense, and will no doubt seek to "save the country" by opposing enormous expenditures to be covered by increased taxation. The administration will seek to impress the people with its wisdom by alarming utterances from time to time on some "grave crisis" with Germany or Austria, in order to be able to make much of its skill and firmness in avoiding a break with these powers. For it must not be forgotten that this is a campaign year, in which the supreme effort of both parties will be directed, not to establishing the highest National ideals, but toward winning the next election. It should be the hope and prayer of all Christian Americans that some man may be given to the people who will clearly define the great moral issues raised by the war and its strain on international relationship, and point the way to higher and better things.

In the meantime some members of Congress seem to be discovering where the real danger for America lies. On Jan 27, while President Wilson was opening his defense of the administration, Congressman Gallivan of Massachusetts bitterly rebuked the administration for its pro-British attitude. After calling attention to the deep-seated, but mischievous and unpatriotic prejudice which makes our newspapers act "as tho it was the one mission of America to save England," by allowing "its columns to be fed by misinformation and news perversions supplied from British 'news' agencies, written by interests antagonistic to American peace and well-being," he flayed the "Lodge-Roosevelt-Choate-Root interpretation of American history that would have us believe that all the fundamental rights we possess are a heritage bequeathed to us by England." "For forty years," he continued, "we enjoyed the blessings of a pure democracy before the effect of this universal application of the rule of the people reached England and brought about the reform of 1832, the first advance of centuries on the part of England toward our democratic ideal. These people who seek to give us any different explanation of the facts of history are not genuine Americans; they are Tories. We have always had them in our history. I do not believe for a moment that America, as we know it to-day, is an offspring of British institutions. I believe she has a character and a genius of her own. Discovered after centuries of life had been granted to the nations of the European Continent, she had the providential promises of a new future. That providence will be secured if we are all truly Americans first—not in any spurious sense, but in the real meaning of the term—conscious of the high vocation to which we have been called as the crusaders of a new era in which the rights of man occupy the foremost place and the peace of the people is put before the pecuniary advantage of a moment."

Congressman Henry of Texas spoke very fervently in support of an embargo on the exportation of arms and ammunition, and the great petition of a million names for such an embargo, presented by the Organization of American Women for Strict Neutrality, has made a tremendous impression. Senator Hitchcock will probably move his embargo as an amendment to an appropriation bill and thus force action. It is said that thirty-eight votes in the Senate are safe for an embargo, while ten others are regarded as favorable. If no efforts are spared to impress enough Senators with the necessity of supporting Mr. Hitchcock a favorable result is almost certain.

The Bread of Life

"Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall not hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst," John 6: 35.

It was not easy for the Jews to understand that Jesus was the "bread out of heaven." It had seemed entirely clear that the manna which their fathers ate in the wilderness had come out of heaven. They had never seen or heard of anything like it in Egypt, and still less in barren stretches of the wilderness. Tho the twelve spies told wonderful stories of the fertility of Canaan, they brought no word of manna growing or being found there. It came to them as the result of a divine promise, in a miraculous manner, and they themselves could neither raise it nor improve upon it. Nevertheless, Jesus tells them, altho the manna came from heaven, i. e., as a result of heavenly intervention, it was not out of heaven, i. e., of heavenly character. It was of the earth in every essential particular, and was intended to serve only an earthly purpose. Those who ate of it died in the course of time, just as did those who lived on other food. It was merely a symbol of the true bread of God that cometh down out of heaven and giveth life to the world.

This is what Jesus claimed to be, even tho, in contrast to the manna, He had come into the world in the natural way of birth, and not in the spectacular manner in which many Jews expected that their promised Messiah would come. To the superficial and the earthly-minded He was merely Jesus the son of Joseph, whose father and mother they knew, verse 42, and tho He was no doubt very different from all the other men they knew, yet there was nothing supernatural about His coming into the world—as far as they knew—nor about His way of living. The claim that He should have or represent something heavenly or divine seemed untenable. And yet it is just this that Jesus insists on in His argument with those who came to Him because they saw signs, and because they ate of the loaves and were filled. As He develops His idea He goes a step farther and seeks to make His hearers understand that He is not only the true bread out of heaven, but also the bread of life. He is not only heavenly and divine in His character—it was conceivable that this alone might not mean much to the world—but that it was true and actual life, strength and growth that He brought, yea, the only true and real life, because He was in actual touch with the One Source of all life, God, the Father in heaven. Everything on earth was either already dead or doomed to death, even down to the food that nourished physical life. Since all the plants and animals that serve as food for us do so only after their death.

Truth in Terms of Life

Jesus Christ, however, is life and being. He did not merely come into the world to teach abstract truths, like Confucius, or Buddha, or Mohammed; He came to bring life, so that those who came to him and believed on Him might have life, and have it abundantly. That is why the Word became flesh and dwelt among men. The truth, the righteousness, the love and the mercy of God needed to be put into the human form of life before it could become a power among men. Not even the great sages and prophets of the Old Testament could or did claim to be or even to bring the bread of life, tho they represented the same God and the same truth that Christ came to reveal. They did not come "out of heaven," and all they had to give was example and precept. They were human vessels for God's thoughts, they were instruments and agencies without life and power of their own. Jesus Christ, however, is the bread of life. In Him the Word of God, i. e., the expression of His life and power, which was in the beginning with God, and thru whom all things were made, has become flesh, taken on the likeness of man, in order to live and work among men that they might see His glory and catch the contagion of His life His truth, His righteousness, His love and His mercy.

We know full well how one may read the great dramas of Shakespeare and of Schiller again and again, admire their beauty and even grasp the truths they teach, and yet find no real life in them. But how different all this immediately becomes when we see some great actor express the beauty and the truths the author sought to convey in terms of life, in living words and action! The virtues of the characters stand out more boldly and make a far deeper and more lasting impression, because we see them take on a living shape, and their vices seem more detestable as they step out upon the earth in human form. It is the contact of life with life which an idea receives by being translated into real life and being that gives it power and makes it an active and effective influence.

That is what Jesus Christ has done. He has made the truth, the righteousness, the love and the mercy of God live among men as they had never lived before. What He gave was not merely a mass of precepts or a system of teachings, but a life that gave human reality and human expression to the great truths and realities of God. Jesus was not merely an actor reciting a studied part, He was the Author of the divine drama of human salvation living His divinely pure life before men, giving them an insight into His character, His motives, His ideals and His purposes. He attracted men by means of His sincerity, His simplicity and His unswerving devotion to truth and righteousness, a devotion so earnest and so complete that He willingly laid down His life that mankind might be forever ransomed and redeemed from the bondage of falsehood and unrighteousness. By going all the way in His devotion to the Father who sent Him and to His truth and His righteousness He brought into the world a new kind of life, a spirit and a way of living that satisfies the deepest longings and the highest aspirations of man. Those who come to Him will not hunger, even tho outwardly poverty and even starvation may be their lot. Those who believe in Him shall never thirst, even tho their most cherished ambitions may be thwarted or their dearest plans and purposes may be defeated. Having Him, i. e., the inspiration of His life among men, His work for men and His death as the victory over sin and the grave, they can afford to give up and forget whatever else may seem valuable, because the things of earth perish and pass away, but God and truth and righteousness shall live forever.

The Old Hampton Place

BY HILDA RICHMOND

II

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS. Thomas and Cordelia Hampton, brother and sister, victims of a city boarding-house, receive news of the death of an eccentric old bachelor uncle, supposed to have burned to death in his barn. They attend the funeral and while enjoying the hospitality of a neighbor, become enamored of country life.

"It is nice to be on a farm," said Mr. Gross. "Emily, here, wanted to get up a real stylish supper—dinner she calls it—for you folks because you live in town, but I told her we are only plain country people and not very much on style."

"Why, papa!" said Emily vexed that her father would speak out like this before these strangers. "There are many country people who serve dinner in the evening and don't have anything higgledy-piggledy on the table."

"Well, I'm glad to see a supper—a real supper—like this, said Thomas. "To my thinking it's the most delicious I ever ate. If you had to live in a boarding-house, Miss Gross, you'd be thankful for a higgledy-piggledy supper, if this is one. I'm so tired of the little round of little dishes three times a day I hardly know what to do."

"That's exactly what I tell John and Emily," said Mrs. Gross; "They're both crazy to go to town to work, and I tell them that they're better off on the farm."

It would bankrupt us to buy this much food in a restaurant," laughed Thomas. "Our dream is to find a tiny flat where we can keep house and once in a while enjoy some home cooking."

"But look at the advantages of city life!" said John Gross, a manly looking young fellow of about twenty. "Eating isn't the only thing in the world. Out here everything is deadly dull, while in town something is going on all the time. A fellow can put up with a little unpleasantness in the way of food if things are lively."

"Why don't you start something?" asked Thomas. "It seems to me that there could be things going on in the country as well as in the city. You have pianos, automobiles, plenty of food supplies and everything necessary for good times."

"That's exactly what I've always said!" said Mr. Gross beaming on Thomas. "I've said hundreds of times that the country would be as lively as town if they'd only get at it. Now when I was a boy we had a baseball nine and spelling matches and husking bees and good times of every sort. I'm sorry to see the good old times fall into decay."

"It's plain to be seen, Mr. Hampton, that you never lived in the country or you'd know it is impossible to start anything," said John Gross quickly. "We've tried it and it has always failed. It is all very well for writers in agricultural papers to call upon the young folks to stay on the farms; the young folks won't do it. They want excitement and good times just as well as city people."

"And even if we did get up little entertainments and parties as the agricultural papers advocate," said Emily, "they wouldn't be like the city good times. Now in the city you can go out any time to hear a good concert or a lecture, can't you?" she appealed to Cordelia.

"Yes, if you have the time and the money," said Cordelia honestly. "I never go out in the evenings—except to church services on Sunday night. In the first place I cannot afford to pay one or two dollars for a ticket to a good concert, and I do not care to go to cheap ones, and then I cannot afford the time. The last great singer who gave a concert in our city charged from one dollar up for seats, and the concert began at nine in the evening. For a girl who must do her mending and studying and pressing and part of her washing out of hours there is no time to start out at bedtime to a concert and get home about midnight."

"If you had to live here in winter and have nothing going on I imagine you'd welcome some cheap concerts and even the moving picture shows," said John Gross. "I'll tell you what to do. Take possession of your uncle's place and live here this winter. Then you can see for yourselves how dull things are. I'll venture to say that before December was ended you'd both be back in town and you'd think that boarding-house was the nicest place you ever saw because it was in the midst of good times and excitement."

"I've been thinking that perhaps we will stay here this winter," said Thomas slowly. "If we can possibly manage to make our living expenses I think it would be well to try the experiment."

"O, Thomas!" cried Cordelia with real dismay in her voice. "Have you been thinking about that? I couldn't possibly exist in that gloomy, lonely old house. Please! Please don't set your heart on keeping me in that horrible place."

"And I don't blame you!" said John and Emily sympathetically.

"She's tired and overwrought by all that has happened to-day," said Mrs. Gross soothingly. "Come with me, Cordelia, and help feed the chickens. You must go to bed early tonight and to-morrow everything will look quite different."

Cordelia, quite worn out by the exciting events of the day before, slept late next morning, but Thomas was out almost at daybreak. He had worked out a little scheme before going to bed and he wanted to try how it would do. Mrs. Gross made him wait for breakfast as he was slipping quietly out of the house, but in less than half an hour he was on his way to the Hampton place.

"Nine o'clock!" cried Cordelia as she entered the cheery kitchen. "Why didn't you call me? I'm sorry to have overslept. Please, please, don't go to a bit of trouble for me. I can wait until dinner time," she added hastily as she saw Mrs. Gross draw the kettle forward and punch up the fire. "Thomas wanted me to go over to the house with him to look around, as we must get back to the city. The people we work for only gave us two or three days off."

"Well, eat your breakfast and then we'll walk over to the house," said Mrs. Gross, who thought she knew what Thomas' secret was. "You'll need something hot before dinner time."

Cordelia was sure she had never eaten such a delicious breakfast as the one spread on a newspaper on a corner of the kitchen table. She begged to stay with them, so they allowed her to put down a clean paper and help with the little meal. The soft-boiled egg, the good bread and butter, the cereal and cream and the dish of pink plums stewed that morning for canning and hastily dipped from the kettle seemed a breakfast fit for a king. One pretext and another delayed them and finally Mrs. Gross slipped the roast into the oven and said they would walk over to the Hampton house.

"Why! What on earth has happened? Are there fairies?" cried Cordelia as she entered the yard. "This isn't the same place."

But it was, and she was forced to admit it as she looked the house over carefully. Thomas had made good use of his time, and the unsightly lilac and snowball bushes were trimmed and the brush piled up in a huge heap back of the barn. The masses of weeds and briars had been cut down and the two evergreen trees that scraped back and forth on the house with a weird noise were cut down and chopped to pieces. It was hard work for arms unused to such tasks, but Thomas was working for a purpose and he left no stone unturned to accomplish it.

"I haven't been in the house, Sis," he panted. "Been waiting for you. It will do me good to rest a little."

The morning sunshine was streaming on the old house in a way that was entirely foreign to it, and it really did not look so forlorn as the night before. Thomas hurried on ahead to open the windows and shutters as Mrs. Gross detained Cordelia to see the view of the river thru the open space just made by the new proprietor, so that a flood of sunshine and fresh air was there ahead of her as she entered the old house.

"What quaint old furniture!" she exclaimed as she entered the musty parlor. "Isn't that table a dear?"

The parlor furniture would have delighted an antiquarian, for it dated back at least a hundred years, and possibly many more. The slippery hair cloth, the ponderous high boy, the old time pictures and the ancient chairs must have been inherited by Richard Hampton, tho the young people had no knowledge that such a thing was true. The old-fashioned bookcase was filled with medical works of generations back, so they imagined that their great uncle must have come into possession of the family effects.

"Mrs. Gross, what was it that made Uncle Richard—different?" asked Cordelia as they stood looking at the old-time furniture.

"I don't know," said the lady. "I've heard all sorts of things, but nothing that I am sure of. Some say a girl refused to marry him and others that the young lady he expected to marry died, but those are only samples of the tales told about him. Some say he never was just right, and others that he felt he was cheated when the property was divided. I don't think anybody knows at all. It always was a mystery. He would not neighbor with any of us and liked to be alone, so year after year he shut himself in more and went out less. Once in a while he would go to Cleveland or Cincinnati on business, we've heard, but people tell all sorts of stories."

It was evident that the parlor and parlor bedroom were little disturbed when Richard Hampton occupied the house, for they were in fairly good order, tho snowed under with dust. The living room, if such it could be called, was strewn with clothes, books, papers, cooking utensils, old shoes and a thousand and one things that progressive house-keepers would have cast on the ash heap years before. It was evidently a workshop as well as a living-room, for a cobbler's outfit reposed on the table beside the coffee pot, and a kit of tools for mending harness was partly shoved under the disorderly bed. The kitchen was in still worse confusion, and the pantry hopeless from the standpoint of a thrifty housewife. There were supplies in paper bags, little quantities of each as tho bought by a miserly person, a few tins of baked beans bought in a grocery at some time, crackers nibbled by mice and a few sunburned potatoes covered with dirt, as tho they had been dug a day at a time instead of stored there for winter. Everything was cluttered and dirty and musty and to the three ladies looking at the supplies and utensils, everything seemed worthless.

"Let's begin carting things to the junk pile," said Thomas briskly. "I've found some old baskets and in a jiffy we'll have these things where they belong."

"Do you suppose—it doesn't seem right to touch things that are not ours—that is—" began Cordelia hesitatingly.

"That's all right, Sis. After you went to bed last night Mr. Gross took me to town to consult a lawyer. He says take possession at once. We are the only heirs, you know."

"But it doesn't seem quite fair," went on Cordelia timidly. "Maybe Uncle Richard wouldn't want us to have it."

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

Bread

BY HERALD ALEXANDER LAVELY

Thru barren waste my soul had traveled far,
And fed on husks, the best the world could give,
When in her Father's house were boundless stores
Of bread, to cheer the yearning hearts of earth.
But still to satisfy my soul, the world
Held out a thousand lures, and called them bread,
And showed the kingdoms vast I should possess
If at her feet I blindly down should fall
And fealty swear unto the lusts of life.

Then came a voice: "I am the Bread of Life!
All other bread shall perish in its use
And leave the soul unequal in the wage
Of warfare with the hosts of sin and death."

And yet the multitude rush wildly on,
Unfed—a lean and hungry, starving throng,
Intent on gaining that which is not bread,
When from the Father's hand they might receive
A royal, ample, joyful, endless feast!

Humble Ministries of Life

Life cannot be maintained without ministry, and the ministry in general divides up practically into any number of smaller ministries. Nothing can be done all at once—many things have to be done all the time. It is given to few people to pose as the great leaders or potentates of history—most good souls have to be faithful in a few things, and serve as philanthropists in what are often called petty ways.

It is a mistake, however, to regard a small thing as a petty thing. A tiny bit of effort or sacrifice is not insignificant. There are no trifles when it comes to work in the Kingdom of God. The world may waste its values by the wholesale, but Christianity gathers up the fragments that remain that nothing may be lost. The law of parsimony governs the religious life as well as philosophy, leading believers to do things in the simplest way for the grandest motives.

In the kingdom of God, whatever some theorists may think on the subject, there exist differences of position, rank and duty. The apostles, for example, occupied and do occupy a position in that Kingdom which is unique, and to which not even the noblest modern missionaries can aspire. One star differeth from another star in magnitude as well as in glory. The recognition of this fact of differences of rank and station in the kingdom of heaven—a truth which the sons of Zebedee dimly perceived and which they sought to misapply—need cause no heart-burnings nor jealousies, when it is remembered that God setteth up one and putteth down another, and that such differences do not depend on accidental or arbitrary differences, as in earthly societies, but are essentially moral distinctions, so that any one man is not defrauded of honor by reason of the praise that goes to any other soul, but, according to his own type, is at liberty to develop, by help of the grace of God, the noblest sort of destiny for himself.

When, therefore, we speak of humble ministries in life, we recognize the fact that not all men can do the great and conspicuous work of apostles or leaders of world-wide fame, while all may, according to their station in life, improve a vast number of smaller opportunities to the glory of God, and their own upbuilding in righteousness and gaining ultimately of spiritual fame. God has His eye all the while on the humbler worker in His Kingdom, and is not slow to mark and bless his faithful activities. The humbleness of the work is, after all, generally, but the world's estimate in the case, for such adjectives as "small" and "humble" have little relevancy as the angels look at and appraise men's tasks. The biggest thing that any man can do at any particular time is to fulfill the duty just then set him by the Lord, even if it be stitching on tent-cloth, and he could do no more glorious thing then and there if he were to stand forth and preach before imperial Caesar. It is the duty that gives the distinction.

While, then, it is well for young people to be ambitious, so long as they covet earnestly the best things, an inordinate desire to do some wonderful thing and to achieve a world-wide fame is not in itself commendable. If the aims are really high, and if the heart is set on doing God's will, the fame will come quickly enough, provided it is deserved, or, if it is denied in this world to the anonymous worker, will be given in large measure in the world to come. Some of Paul's helpers were of this unknown class—unknown, that is, to their contemporaries, but all the while commended by the Lord who kept careful watch on all their daily sacrifices and humble ministries in His name. To achieve fame for one's self is ignoble—to live worthy of fame is the proper end to be kept in view. It is after all, of comparatively little importance whether men mark what we do or not, for if the Master praised, what are men?

Many of the judgments of this world are sure to be reversed or largely corrected in the next. Men look with perverted feelings, envious eyes, and disordered perspective on the work of their fellows, esteeming their own handiwork to be most excellent, and their own rank very exalted, whereas it is often the other man who is doing the best service for the cause of Jesus Christ, and building most solidly on the foundation of His Word. We really cannot judge one another very well, anyhow, and would best leave such appraisements to the Judge of all the earth, who will certainly do right, careful to serve the Master ourselves with loving zeal and entire forgetfulness of our own interest, and ready to give our brother all praise when, tho the world regards him not, he is found doing his little task in a great spirit, with a high and heavenly aim.—The Observer.

True Americanism

For what is true Americanism, and where does it reside? Not on the tongue, nor in the clothes, nor in racial inheritance, or transient forms. True Americanism is this:

To believe that the inalienable rights of man to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness are given by God. To believe that any form of power that tramples on these rights is unjust. To believe that taxation without representation is tyranny; that government must rest upon the consent of the governed, and that the people should choose their own rulers. To believe that freedom must be safeguarded by law and order, and that the end of freedom is fair play for all. To believe not in a forced equality of conditions and estates, but in a true equalization of burdens, privileges and opportunities. To believe that the selfish interests of persons, classes and sections must be subordinated to the welfare of the commonwealth. To believe that union is as much a human necessity as liberty is a divine gift. To believe, not that all people are good, but that the way to make them better is to trust the whole people. To believe that a free state should offer an asylum to the oppressed, and an example of virtue, sobriety and fair dealing to all nations. To believe that for the existence and perpetuity of such a state a man should be willing to give his whole service, in property, in labor and in life.—Henry van Dyke.

Aiming High

Former Congressman "Private John" Allen enjoys telling of a unique character near his home known as "Jasp" White.

"Jasp" had lived in single blessedness a good many years, but finally in the evening of his life he married, and in due time an heir was born to him. The day after this momentous event Mr. Allen met "Jasp" in the street.

"I understand, 'Jasp'" said the Congressman, "that you've a fine baby boy up at your place. Have you decided on his name?"

"Yes, suh," chuckled "Jasp"; "we've already decided on a name."

"What's it to be?"

"Jasp" traced one toe reflectively in a semicircle before him. "You know, suh," he said finally, "I's allus been a pow'ful han' fer dem Scripture folks, an' so I's decided t' name de kid after some o' dem big officers what de Bible talks 'bout. I's settled on de name Beelzebub."

"Beelzebub!"

"Yes, suh, dat's de name!" announced "Jasp" in a tone betokening finality. "Beelzebub's a mighty fine name, suh. It shore looks like I's aspirin' pow'ful high, but I figgers dat boy'll shorely do credit to his namesake!"

Denominational

To the Brotherhoods of the Indiana District Federation

Now that the work-season is with us again, may we remind you of a number of things that require our attention.

In the first place, let us remember the constitutional amendment adopted by the 1915 convention, calling for an annual per capita tax of fifteen cents, to be paid our treasurer, for each year of membership in the Federation.

Then, by means of a thoro-going discussion, let us endeavor to gain a clear understanding whether it be the desire of the various Brotherhoods to hold our Brotherhood Convention separate from the District Conference. This matter must be decided at the 1916 meeting.

In reference to the 1916 meeting, let us consider that the District Convention can be no greater than our preparations for it.

Send good live men as delegates. Talk Convention during the months ahead. Let us make our Brotherhood movement a telling factor in our modern life by putting the Brotherhood spirit into universal practice.

Very fraternally yours,

J. N. Pfeiffer, Pres.

A. V. Ireland, Sec'y.

St. Louis Brotherhoods Observe First Anniversary

If the Brotherhood cause is going forward in all parts of the Synod in the way in which progress has been made in St. Louis during the past year, the movement will soon have won a strong and permanent influence in the affairs of the Church. It is not quite a year ago that we chronicled the first union Brotherhood service held in St. Louis on Feb. 14th, 1915, at Bethel Church, attended by upwards of 300 men representing the Brotherhoods of eight churches. On the evening of January 16th, 1916, the organization observed the first anniversary at St. Paul's Church, with Brotherhoods of fourteen churches on their roster, the number of constituent Brotherhoods thus having nearly doubled. The bitterly cold night, perhaps the coldest of the entire season, cut down the attendance considerably, but the enthusiasm of those who did attend made up the deficiency in numbers. Pastor Th. Oberhellmann of Friedens Church preached the annual sermon, and Dr. W. F. Simon of Jesus Church installed the officers for the ensuing year, all of the former officers being re-elected.

Parts of the report of the president, Mr. E. W. Meyer, being more of the nature of a message than a report, as the word is usually understood, are of more than local importance and deserve wider circulation.

"In reviewing the labors of our local Federation during the fiscal year just passed, which have been so forcibly brought to our attention again by the reports of your Secretary and Treasurer, let us tarry long enough at the very first milestone in the existence of our federated activities to 'give thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light.'

"It can hardly be successfully disputed that recent years have seen a great increase of religious interest on the part of men. Statistics of all churches indicate this. Census reports and numerical tests of various kinds are added evidence. Even ordinary observation confirms the fact. We have all reasons to be thankful that in our own beloved Evangelical Church we have made forward strides in re-claiming our men, and that—locally—we have attained much that was beyond our expectations a year ago. There is good reason to rejoice in the new and more definite and effective relations of men to the Church and to the cause and work of Christ as represented in His Church, thru which He is working out His will and purpose in the world. Men are coming to have a profound realization of this truth, and with it a sense of the personal responsibility which rests upon them as members of the Lord's body. They begin to see that they have a personal obligation to co-operate in the divine work for their own salvation. Men are coming more fully to realize also that they actually and effectually are in great part their brother's keepers, but that in many instances they are keeping their brothers out of the Kingdom of God, instead of keeping them out of the power and doom of the devil.

Concluded on Page 5

"Other Sheep I Have"

The Need of more Workers is the Burden of Missionaries' Letters. The Indian Press largely hostile to German Work. The Effect of the War on Christian Work

This and That from the Field

No doubt our regular readers of the articles on India in the Herald have often had our brethren Jost in mind, and the mail we receive from the other side deals considerably with them. Miss Kettler, who spent several days with them speaks with the greatest respect and appreciation of Brother Jost and his wife. Now, that they have been compelled to leave she marks: "I am doubly grateful for the opportunity I had and am convinced that their departure will cause a great void in our immediate circle. The time I could spend with them will always prove a blessing to me, as they are people of a childlike faith and unbounded trust in the Lord."

A School and Church Building in one of the smaller villages

Pastor Koenig who was intimately connected with their work in Chandkuri speaks in high terms of them. "When we had to say good-bye to them it was with a heavy heart, as we do not know when we will ever see each other again. The officials treated the travelers in a very accommodating manner. Yesterday we received a letter from Pastor Jost in which he stated that they were all quite well. They had met many friends on the steamer 'Golconda'. According to the papers there are about 350 foreigners who are now on their way back home. We understand that the trip will be made around Cape Horn, so it will take some time for them to arrive safely in their home port. May they get there safely."

Considering the present situation it will be of double interest to know that another missionary has expressed himself regarding the requirements in the mission field. Pastor Stoll makes reference to the inquiry regarding additional workers as follows: I am in favor of a greater number of stations. Instead of placing two people at a station which has not sufficient work for them, I would favor more stations closely together. For instance, instead of placing two men at Sakti, the second man should be stationed at Chandkuri. Instead of having two men at Mahasamudra it would serve a better purpose, according to my opinion, to create another station, say beyond Rajim, not too far from Mahasamudra. And instead of having another man at Bismampur, it might prove advantageous to place him at Singa, ten miles away. Owing to the asylum, Chandkuri should have two men, and Raipur three, on account of the school, for catechists and the high school. One man should suffice for Parsabhadar. But under this arrangement we would need five additional men within the next five years, besides two more men as substitutes, in case of a furlough to be granted one of the others. But the main thing is: We need, not only more men, but also more stations. Naturally the founding of out-stations would be included in this arrangement, and the catechist school would have to arrange for the workers for these. Our field can only be worked properly by a corresponding increase in the number of stations and out-stations.

P. A. M. GES. Tr.

Apparently our brethren would not permit the transfer of Pastor Seybold from Raipur, as his splendid work at the high school required his further presence. Unfortunately Pastor Koenig must now do did work at the high school required his further presence. Unfortunately Pastor Koenig must now dostitute for Pastor Jost and his wife could be spared. In a letter to a friend he says: "I am now all alone here in Chandkuri. You may imagine what that means. All I can do is hold what we have, as far as it is possible for me to do this. As a rule I spend my forenoons at the asylum for lepers and work at the station in the afternoon. Other work, such as correspondence, I must try to sandwich in somewhere and somehow. Our only hope is that our distant brethren may soon be permitted to return and that this terrible war will soon come to an end. Will we never obtain any reinforcement? I am daily becoming more and more convinced that we should have a larger force of foreign laborers to take care of the existing positions and to formulate plans as to further detail work and its execution. Our native force needs a much more thoro preparation and education. Until we obtain this we must stand still. Use all your influence to obtain for us additional workers. In the asylum we now have 425 lepers and sixty untainted children. Fortunately I can begin to erect the two new wards for women, and one for boys, similar to the one erected for the girls. In Lurkia I was able to erect a school from monies saved on other things. Other places ought to be looked after oftener. Oh, if I could only get someone to bring order and efficiency into our work."

PAM. GES. Tr.

German Missionaries in India

No change of opinion has been noted among the Anglo-Indians, and new discoveries for the enlightenment of the natives are of daily occurrence, reports the Basel Missions Magazin. The Christian Patriot relates the following progress in the line of their research work "According to Sergi, who is a noted authority, the German people are originally of African origin. Bopp and others have erroneously consigned the Germans to the Aryan race. The Germans came to Europe as a race of barbarous conquerors and destroyed a higher civilization than their own. This invasion can be compared to that of the Huns who invaded the Roman empire, coming from German plains." This becomes quite confusing when viewed from a biblical standpoint. This same organ is delighted over the prospects of the formation of a European parliament, excluding Germany, as a result of the present war. Such an institution would be the fulfillment of the "ten-king-federation" of which Baxter (1615-1691) dreamt, altho he did not exclude Germany. The number of kingdoms has long been determined upon, but now the realization is at hand and the group of states comes into actual view. Such an explanation of the Gospel is not entirely new. This selected people already possesses the "gates of the enemy" and has in mind Gibraltar, Port Said, Aden, etc. Otherwise the expression of this Anglo-Indian press appears to be somewhat modified, the same as that of the home country, especially as it merely reflects the opinion of their home papers. The Christian Patriot even refers quite sympathetically to the expulsion of the German missionaries, but is under the impression that they do not sympathize with, but rather deplore the ambitious aspirations of their country's military party. They even praise our missionary activities. This progressive organ of the native Christians in Madras

Concluded on Page 8

St. Louis Brotherhoods' first Anniversary

Continued from Page 4
Men anxious for the Fray

"Why is the Brotherhood movement gripping the hearts of our men as never before? Because they are discovering, and the fact is attractive to them, that Christianity means a fight, that its object is war. Jesus Christ will never be made King by waving banners, by rallying cries, or by singing Coronation. Battles must be waged against the devil: there must be mighty conflicts with sin, and magnificent and costly victories must be won over the powers which enthrall men and keep them from serving Christ. The warfare of Christianity is one of love, and not of slaughter; no less on that account does it require courage, ability and devotion. Many will yet lay down their lives for it, and many more will pledge their lives at the very altars of our Evangelical Church. It is the King's cause, and will triumph.

"The problem of Christian Brotherhood is a problem of recruiting for Christ. Therefore the first business of the Church is to bring Christ and men together. To this end causes of indifference to religion are being studied with a view to a better understanding of condition and forces which keep men out of the Church and out of the reach of the Gospel. The remark of male conceit that men are more intellectual than women, and so are slower to yield to the mysteries of faith, does not explain it; for college records do not warrant the claim of man's superiority. The charge of lack of masculinity in the pulpit, which is so often heard in Anglo-American circles, is absolutely out of place in any Church of German stock—Evangelical or otherwise—for the sturdy array of our clergy proves it thus. Many thoughtful persons find the answer to their quest concerning the absence of large numbers of men from the Church in the greater temptations than those of woman to which they are subjected from boyhood, in the absorptions of business in an age of closest competition, in the aggressiveness of substitutes for Christian Brotherhood such as clubs, lodges and secular societies, in the inconsistencies of men in the Church whose lives, as they daily witness them, are patterned after the philosophy that a good tree may have crooked roots, in the alleged necessity for the practice of anti-Christian principles in trade and in the professions. Probably some or more of these ideas may furnish illumination to those who think upon this subject, but experience teaches that despite all criticism and restraints the Church gets men when the men of the Church combine and go after them. 'Go ye,' is the divinely appointed method of evangelism, and church Brotherhoods will always find that obedience to the divine calling of personal evangelism is the effective means of adding to their own membership and to the number of the servants of Christ. . . .

Co-operation an Essential

"After all, the Evangelical Brotherhood in the local congregation, in the local or District federation, or nationally, will succeed or fail in proportion as the spirit of loyal co-operation prevails. There must be a co-operative spirit existing between the officers and committees; between the officers and pastor; between the members and pastor, and between the local societies and the different Federations. Without it is failure, with it success. Could you imagine anything more devoid of good judgment than an army of men that did not obey the orders of the commanders—that did not co-operate and were not in sympathy one with the other? The outcome would be ruin and a lost cause. Just so in Brotherhood work. We must feel that governing spirit of the greatest Brotherhood Man that ever lived—Jesus; we must have but one ideal and purpose and that to have His Kingdom come on earth as in heaven.

"Most important of all is the co-operation with God thru prayer. Don't think that you can carry on His work without the help and guidance He is so willing to give. It is, indeed, an inspiring sight to find a man, to find an officer, to find a committee, to find a Brotherhood that really and truly co-operates with God and with each other.

"Men, let's grasp the meaning of Brotherhood co-operation more and more. Let's get into that fuller life of the greater Brotherhood that means every man his brother's keeper; every man in every congregation working with and for every other man; and all the men workers together with God for His kingdom. This is real Brotherhood. To attain this we must, first of all, go back to the good book, the Bible, must settle down to a diligent and systematic study of the Word of God. Every Brotherhood man a worker in the Sunday-school or a member of a Brotherhood Bible Class, must be our slogan. In no other way will we be able to demonstrate to the coming generation what Christianity in earnest means. Thus only the ranks of our Brotherhoods will be filled anew and anew by our boys, as they grow up into manhood, and the problem of the man outside the Church will be solved. . . .

"If we, individually, will do our part in the subordinate Brotherhoods, the Federations, locally, in the Districts and nationally, will work out their own destiny. By the grace of God and with wise council prevailing the vision of uniform, concerted action will dawn upon these federated bodies, so that as a mighty host and powerful unit the best energies of all Evangelical Brotherhoods will be enlisted and concentrated for the common good of our Evangelical Synod of North America."

The secretary's report outlines some of the notable achievements of the year: the banner union service during the District conference on April 30th, which served as an object lesson of Brotherhood possibilities to the pastors and laymen of the District; the union service at St. Peter's Church, preparatory to the Evangelical Jubilee on Sept. 26, and the great Brotherhood banquet on Oct. 20 at Frieden's Hall, and the union Reformation service (the usual Reformation service at the Odeon having been omitted by the "Evangelischer Verein" because of the proximity of the Jubilee), at St. John's Church on Nov. 7, with the offering of $100 for Eden Seminary.

The work of the Federation is in the hands of an executive committee, comprising the pastor and two delegates from each affiliated Brotherhood. Business is transacted by means of various committees, a labor bureau, a speaker's bureau, and a committee on social service. A monthly publication, The Pilot, appears in the interest of Brotherhood work. The first reports of the fourteen brotherhoods showed a membership of 553, the December 1915 report shows a total of 649, or a gain of nearly 100 during the year. All Brotherhoods hold monthly meetings; eleven have monthly dues, three only voluntary contributions. According to the reports the receipts of all the Brotherhoods totaled $989.43, which with two not reporting brings the receipts well over the $1,000 mark.

The receipts of the St. Louis Federation during the first year of its existence amounted to $553.44, and the disbursements to $484.69, leaving a cash balance of $68.75.

CONCERTED ACTION IN THE BROTHERHOOD

Our Responsibility toward God for the Use of earthly Possessions. Christian Stewardship alone can solve the financial Problems of the Church

II

Something is bound to happen in the life of any man with a strong and active spiritual life fed and energized thru regular and intelligent Bible study. Wherever the life of Jesus Christ takes root it inevitably regenerates and transforms the entire life and with it the whole view-point. To the same extent as Jesus Christ becomes the center of one's life and being, everything else retires into the background and we begin to place a different view and estimate on the things of earth. The standard of value for the things of earth is money, and the words of St. Paul, "The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil," 1 Tim. 6: 10, possess a deep and far-reaching truth. It is the wrong attitude toward money, the love of it that seeks it for its own sake, that becomes the root of all kinds of evil; the right attitude, the use of money according to the will of God, produces only the best and most blessed results. And just as the natural man, accustomed to seek money for what it will get for him, is led into a temptation and a snare, and many foolish and hurtful lusts, only to pierce himself thru with many sorrows, so the spiritual man, using money for what he can do with it for God and His kingdom, becomes a blessing to others and reaps blessings for himself.

Stewards, not Owners

The natural attitude of the true Christian toward money and toward all the other things of earth is that of stewardship. The things of earth are not to be considered absolutely our own, since it is God who created the materials that make them valuable, who has given us skill and strength to make them usable for our purposes, and the opportunities to make use of them for the best advantage, both to ourselves and those about us. In view of the fact that no man can create values, and that all values that may come into our possession must in course of time be relinquished and passed on to others, no man has a right to claim any earthly possessions as absolutely his own. With all the labor and perseverance any one may bring to bear upon his earthly task, he can merely increase values by means of faculties that have come to him without any effort or merit of his own. Christians should know better than others that it is God to whom the earth and the fulness thereof belongs, and who giveth us richly all things to enjoy, and that therefore that which has come into our possession, whether faculties of mind or strength of body, or earthly possessions of any kind, is something that has been turned over to us for a certain time only that we may use it for the benefit of the Owner, who has the unquestioned right to require an accounting at any time. It is in the light of this fact that Jesus calls the Christian a steward in the parable of the unrighteous steward, Luke 16: 1-13, where it is especially the diligence and wisdom with which the unrighteous steward manages to make friends with the "mammon of unrighteousness" that is commended; and in the parable of the talents, Matt. 25: 14-30, the servants are rewarded according to the use they have made of their talents. What condemned the servant who had received only one talent was not the smallness of the amount entrusted to him, but the selfish and unfaithful use he had made of it.

This idea of Christian stewardship will appeal to the man whose heart is filled with a personal devotion and loyalty toward Jesus Christ as the most natural thing in the world. The men in Evangelical Brotherhoods who have come to realize and accept the full lordship of Jesus Christ can hardly help acquiring such a deep and powerful enthusiasm for Him and their Church that it must reach down into their pocket-books, and we feel quite safe in saying that the use a man makes of his pocket-book in connection with his religion is a very good test of his spiritual life. When God takes hold of a man, and the man lets God have His way—He takes hold of the whole man, head, heart, hands and feet, and the man who tries to keep his pocket-book away from God has about as much consecration to God as Ananias had, who tried to fool God with a part of himself, instead of giving all. And the only thing he was fit for was to be carried out and buried. The Evangelical Brotherhood wants men who are ready to devote all of themselves to their Lord and His kingdom; men who think enough of their God and their Church to consecrate not only their hearts but also their pocket-books to Him; men who realize that they are dishonoring God by giving Him just as little of their earthly possessions as possible. The men who have caught the spirit of the Evangelical Brotherhood are those who have come to understand that all they have belongs to God, and that they are unfaithful stewards as long as they try to keep as much as they can for themselves, and who are therefore ready to do their full duty by loyally and liberally supporting their local church and the whole work of the kingdom of Jesus Christ on earth.

Putting Stewardship into Practice

Such a type of men will see to it that the congregation with which they are affiliated has all the money it needs to carry on its work effectively: that the pastor receives a salary befitting the position he holds in the church and the services that are expected of him; that ample and well appointed quarters are provided for the use of the Sunday-school and the various societies; that the church building is kept in good condition and repair; that all obligations are met promptly, and that there is no need of resorting to bazars, fairs, suppers, entertainments or any questionable means of raising the needed funds for the church. There is no getting around the fact that it is a shame for any church if the pastor receives a salary that is barely sufficient to keep himself and his family out of want. Pastors cannot do their best work for the spiritual welfare of their church if they are continually harrassed by anxiety as to where the money to feed and clothe their family is to come from, a cause of anxiety which is all the greater as they are expected to be rather above the average member of the church in their standard of living. In these days of high and constantly rising prices no self-respecting church in the city or in the country that expects its pastor to do effective spiritual work should think of paying him less than $1,000 in addition to the free use of a residence. Pastors are only human, and want to do all they can to provide for the present and future needs of their family, and the pastor who receives an insufficient salary is tempted to seek other ways of earning money and thus neglecting his regular work, or he will seek some other church that pays him a better living. There is plenty of occasion for self-denial and self-sacrificing effort in the work of the ministry without imposing additional and unwarranted burdens upon those who have given their lives to the service of Christ and His kingdom.

The church that would win the respect of the community and do its work in the manner called for by the conditions and needs of to-day, must provide ample and well-appointed quarters suitable for the various purposes of the organization which the church needs. There must be well-equipped and well lighted Sunday-school rooms to accommodate all the various grades and classes, together with everything in the way of a library or other apparatus that the school needs. The rooms for the meetings of the societies should be of such a character as to make them attractive and pleasant for those who are expected to meet there, and in providing these rooms the interests of all the members of the church, boys and girls, young men and women, and the adult members should be considered. Buildings kept in good condition and repair not only last longer and are therefore more economical in the long run, but their appearance also is a most valuable asset to the church and the community. People will be more ready to visit a well-built and a well-kept church than one that is allowed to run down, or is temporarily patched up here and there because the money to do the work well is not available. The community will also take pride in a church building that is neat and well cared for, and will be ready to support it in its work. The church that always meets its obligations promptly and raises the money for this purpose in a direct and a business-like manner, without any entertainment or side-show features, will stand a far greater chance of serving the neighborhood and the Kingdom, increasing its prestige and commanding the respect of the community than that which is constantly obliged to go begging from outsiders in order to eke out a precarious existence.

Naturally the members of the Brotherhood are already bearing the lion's share of all these burdens, but all these things are so many opportunities for Christian men to show their devotion and loyalty to Jesus Christ that the Brotherhood should make it its business to educate its members to still greater efforts in this direction by stimulating a greater participation in these things from year to year. No matter how much our men are already doing in this direction, there are few members of any Brotherhood, we believe, who could not do a little more this year than they did last year. And the fact of their Christian stewardship makes a larger participation in the financial efforts of their church not only a profitable investment for their own spiritual welfare and that of their children, and the community in which they live, but true and abiding evidence of their personal devotion to Jesus Christ and His work on earth.

RELIGIOUS NEEDS OF SOUTH AMERICA

Altho the Students are practically the only Hope of better Things for South America they are sadly neglected. Latin American Students in the United States should see only the best Characteristics of American Christianity

III

A Remarkable Conversion

But some others, conducted by men and women of deep piety and unquestioned consecration, are of a very doubtful value because of their lack of backing. One had a very remarkable beginning. Antonio Chiriotti, an Italian, lived in California and owned a flour mill. He was a widower and childless, a prosperous man and, of course, held to the Roman Catholic faith. One day a Danish Bible colporteur offered him a copy of the Scriptures. He did not want to buy. But the colporteur pressed his wares and, really so as to get rid of the man, Chiriotti bought a copy. "So, now you can go on," said he to the colporteur, when, to his surprise, that man said: "No, sir, now my real work begins. You have no idea how to handle the Bible, nor how to get the best out of her." So he took a copy and made Chiriotti open with him at the same passage. He turned to a prophecy and then to its fulfillment. Chiriotti told me that the colporteur remained three hours at this first visit. A dive of three hours into "The Book Charming" will set any man to know more about it, and so our Italian friend began to study for himself and, finally, was soundly and scripturally converted. Naturally, he wanted to do something evangelical for others and finally decided to go to the Argentine Republic and start a mission among the unevangelized Indians in the Gran Chaco. When he reached Buenos Aires he was already advanced in age and rather a sick man. He deposited some $40,000 in two of the banks and then wanted to make his will, giving all this money to the work he had planned. How great was his surprise when he learned that under Argentine law he could not make such disposition of his money. Then his attention was called by a godly physician who had practised some years in Bolivia to that country, and in 1911 old Chiriotti actually arrived in La-Paz where I was one of the witnesses to his will, giving all his money for the evangelization of the Aimara Indians. Then he died. The four executors of his will bought a large tract of land on the border of Lake Titicaca, and with the land were taken over some thirty families of Indians. The interest of the residue of the capital is just large enough to pay for the salary of one married missionary. The work is excellent, but I doubt the wisdom and the permanency of such isolated efforts. Past history has shown that somehow they come to grief. How much better had Chiriotti left his money to some constituted board of missions who would continue the work and enlarge it even if something had happened to the original gift.

In Puno, Peru, an excellent Christian couple, Mr. and Mrs. A. Stahl, independently work for the evangelization of the Indians. They often live in abject poverty, and while they are most Christlike, healing the sick and helping the needy, no constitution can stand the strain they put on theirs, and with their disappearance from the field the work is likely to come to an end. The same may be true of some workers who have come to establish themselves among the Indians of San-Pedro, Bolivia. They are connected with some "Faith Mission" in Australia. It seems to me very apparent that the heavy drain upon the finances in Australia caused by the present war, will greatly diminish, if not stop altogether, for some years, these special gifts for independent mission work.

The world is paying attention to the great continent to the South as never before. The war in Europe, the completion of the Panama Canal and, to the Christian worker, the notices of the great Latin America Christian Workers' Congress now being held in Panama, are some of the factors which produce this interest.

We hope that the movement southward will not only result in commercial profits to all concerned, and not simply strike an international and an inter-collegiate note, but we hope that definite plans will be discussed and adopted, whose sole and persistent aim will be to bring the truth as it is in Christ Jesus to these millions of unevangelized Indians of South America.

Who is to undertake the enormous work of bringing the Gospel of Jesus Christ in any adequate manner to these neglected people of a neglected continent? Much has already been done by missionary boards and organizations of North America, and they will continue to do much more than has already been accomplished. But it would be a mistake to depend only on outside agencies, and their work, no matter how able and effective, would be a failure unless there were leaders in South America itself ready and able to co-operate and undertake work of their own. In this connection it will be interesting to note what Mr. Chas. D. Hurrey, General Secretary of the Committee on Friendly Relations Among Foreign Students, has to say in regard to the opportunities among the

Students of Latin America

Why are the students of Latin America a supremely important factor in causing the will of Jesus Christ to be respected and obeyed in their nations? Certainly not because they are numerically strong: it is doubtful whether one in a thousand of the total population is a student of university grade; surely not on account of financial power: many will inherit and acquire vast wealth, but as undergraduates they are not taxpayers; their impetuous radical speeches and writings do not vitally influence political life. Not what they are, but who they are, and what they are becoming, require that they be reckoned with in any enterprise affecting the future of their people.

Within ten years Latin students who are now pursuing their studies in Mexico, South and Central America, and abroad, will be making the laws, directing the industries, editing the journals, and determining in large measure the policies of a score of republics. Will the laws be framed and executed for the welfare of the people? Will industry recognize and respect the rights of the toiler? Can the press be reckoned as a powerful ally of righteousness, and will national policies be such as will advance the cause of international good-will?

An affirmative answer to these inquiries will depend on the extent to which the teachings of the Author of the Sermon on the Mount are disseminated and obeyed among the educated leaders of Latin America. The spreading of knowledge of the sublime truths of the New Testament, and obedience thereto, constitutes a solemn obligation and inspiring opportunity facing the Christian people of North America. The same fundamental factors essential in building and fortifying character among college men of the United States and Canada are indispensable in the construction of South American manhood.

Large Opportunities for Character-building

During the past year forty thousand North American college men were enrolled in devotional Bible-study groups, and other thousands read and studied the Scriptures privately. Nearly as many followed regular courses in an investigation of the needs of the nations for the Christian religion. Ten thousand enlisted voluntarily in definite altruistic service to fellow students and others. The study and practice of prayer are widespread in college circles; three thousand selected student leaders devoted ten days to study and training in summer conferences. Every Sunday finds over one-half of North America's student population assembled in the churches for worship and communion.

Scarcely a Bible-study group can be found in all of the student centers of Latin America. Mission and social-study courses are practically unknown; here and there one discovers examples of social service, but the majority of university students are allowed to live in selfishness. Not five per cent of the students attend church, and the practice of prayer is practically abandoned. One student conference enrolled one hundred students representing a half-dozen institutions of higher learning.

These facts are not stated with a view to making odious comparisons, but rather in order to reveal to Christian people in North America the wonderful opportunity they have for sharing and co-operating with Latin America in applying approved methods of character-building to the needs of student life in the Latin American republics. Successful co-operation will depend largely upon the attitude of North Americans. One who would awaken interest in the Bible as a guide to true living, and inspire confidence in the Church as God's organized plan for extending righteousness, must not move among Latin students with an air of superiority and racial pride; let him rather recognize his own personal shortcomings and the mistakes of his nation; let him appreciate the achievements of Latin American civilization and the noble qualities of her citizens, and let him fully identify himself with their interests and aspirations. He will

Concluded on Page 8

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

February 27, 1916.

Sexagesima Sunday

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

CONSECRATED STRENGTH

M. Feb. 28. Dedicated. Num. 6: 1-5.
 T. Feb. 29. Strength of Youth. 1 Sam. 17: 32-40.
 W. Mar. 1. Strength for Battle. 1 John 2: 12-17.
 T. Mar. 2. Full Consecration. Rom. 12: 1-3.
 F. Mar. 3. Consecration of Mind. Phil. 4: 6-9.
 S. Mar. 4. Strength to Love. Mark 12: 30.
Sun., Mar. 5. Topic—The Consecration of Strength.
Ps. 29: 1-11. (Consecration meeting.)

Suggestions to the Leader

This is a topic that ought to appeal to boys and young men. To be physically strong is every boy's ambition. To be permitted to participate in the games of his school is his hope. Young men read first the so-called "sporting page" of the daily papers, and are posted on the latest decisions and results in boxing, wrestling, foot-ball and base-ball. We may deplore this as a perversion of taste, and a lowering of youth's ideals, but it nevertheless remains a fact. Our aim must be to utilize this natural taste as a channel thru which we can instill higher ideals into the life of our young people. Some day they will, in the process of natural development of youth, learn to appreciate other kinds of strength besides the mere physical. There are three stages in every normal youth's life. The first stage is the stage in which physical strength is admired. Then comes the intellectual age, and then comes the age in which spiritual values are understood and duly appreciated. Let us prepare for the coming stages in the life of our boys.

Invite your boys to be present. If there is a Boys' Scout troop in the church, secure their presence. Look up the boy's and young men's classes of the Sunday-school. Secure their attendance by giving them something to do at this meeting. Have them sing a song, or distribute the books, or share some responsibility for the success of the meeting.

The Topic Presented

The word strength is derived from the same root from which come the German word streng (strict), Straenge (cord or rope) and our word stretch, strain, strong. The word strength involves all these different meanings, of being rigorous, enduring, capable of withstanding intense exertions and hardships. The word strength reflects the entire vitality of the human being, his power to do, and the power to resist.

1. In his work man is primarily offensive. The normal man longs to be of some positive influence in directing the affairs of mankind. Only few are content to be followers, we all long to become leaders. To be leaders requires a concentration of all our faculties to the purpose in view. Divided attention never accomplished anything. Consecrated strength is strength that is aggressive in overcoming evil. It is the devotion of all our faculties to the overthrow of evil. God gave strength, the physical, the intellectual, the spiritual, as revealed in the character that is fixed.

2. Strength is also required to overcome aggressive evil. Evil is aggressive, seeking to destroy righteousness. Eve lacked this inner strength, and evil overcame her. Lot, Esau, Saul, Ahab, David in some instances, Judas, Demas, these men were overcome by evil. They were not on their guard, they did not possess the power of resistance. Jesus' word, addressed to Peter, "Watch and pray, lest ye fall into temptation," ought to be ever in our mind. A wise man will have measured His capacity to resist evil, and will not submit to temptation. Only the foolhardy man will tempt danger, and invite attack of evil.

3. How can we grow strong? We grow physically strong by carefully observing the rules of health. Temperate living, abstinence from all that injures and destroys the tissues, such as smoking, drinking, over-eating, unnecessary exposure, etc. God gave us our body and it is our duty to keep it healthy and strong.

Our intellect should be taught to conceive the truth only. False reasoning, misconceptions of any kind, evasion of duty, indifference to the truth, failure to develop our reasoning faculties, these undermine and destroy our intellectual faculties. God gave us a mind, and He has a right to expect us to make the best possible use of this precious instrument.

Our soul's faculties must be developed. We must learn to love righteousness and truth, to do right in-tuively, to love mercy unconsciously. The soul is our real personality. A distorted sense of spiritual conception leads to a dwarfed soul, a dwarfed soul is an undeveloped God-likeness. Our real strength reveals itself in our similitude to God.

A concentration of our thoughts of God and His will, as related to our work and every day duties, will develop strength within us. That includes a careful study of the Word of God, and a constant communion with God in prayer. If it is true that the pure in heart shall see God, then the pure in heart are the strongest, for they reflect most faithfully the God-likeness.

Some Questions on the Topic

Why is it our duty to develop and guard our physical strength?

How can we increase our physical strength?

Why must we increase and guard our intellectual strength? How can we develop our intellectual faculties?

Why is spiritual strength most important? How can this strength be developed?

How can we use our strength for others?

A Quotation

We are not here to play, to dream, to drift,
 We have hard work to do, and loads to lift.

Malthie D. Babcock.

Some Scripture on the Topic

Deut. 8: 17; 8: 18; Judg. 8: 21; 2 Sam. 22: 33; Job 24: 22; Psalm 21: 14; 31: 11; Prov. 24: 5; Isa. 9: 5; 40: 31; Luke 1: 17; 24: 49; Mark 12: 30; 1 Cor. 1: 24; 2 Cor. 12: 9.

A Prayer

Thou, heavenly Father, didst endow us with strength of body, mind and spirit. These are Thy gifts, that thru them we might accomplish the great task given to men, to establish in their midst God's kingdom. Continue, we pray, Thy strength in us, that thereby our own strength may be increased. Sustain us with Thy wisdom that we may realize the greatness of the task and the need of these gifts. May we not be wasteful in our energies, but careful, lest we lose the precious gift and miss the great opportunity. Forgive us our sins, we pray, this waste of energy and strength. May we learn the great lesson, that he who loses his life, for the sake of others, will find it. Thou Christ didst give Thyself for us, help us to give ourself and strength to Thee and Thy divine purposes. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson Material for the Second Year: New Testament Studies—the Messianic Era and the Apostolic Era.

Lessons for the First Quarter, 1916

- Lesson 1. Jan. 2. Between the Testaments; Dan. 2: 31-45.
 Lesson 2. Jan. 9. The Origin and purpose of the Gospels; John 1: 1-14; Luke 1: 1-4.
 Lesson 3. Jan. 16. The Growing Jesus; Luke 2: 40-52.
 Lesson 4. Jan. 23. The Voice Crying in the Wilderness; Matt. 3: 1-12.
 Lesson 5. Jan. 30. At the Gateway of Service; Matt. 3: 13-17; 4: 1-11; Mark: 9-13.
 Lesson 6. Feb. 6. Beginnings in Judea; John 2: 13-25.
 Lesson 7. Feb. 13. A Woman Lost in Sin; John 4: 27-30; 39-42.
 Lesson 8. Feb. 20. Beginnings in Galilee; Luke 4: 14-31.
 Lesson 9. Feb. 27. Teaching with Authority; Matt. 5: 1-16; 7: 28, 29; Luke 6: 20-26.
 Lesson 10. Mar. 5. Miracles of Jesus, I; Luke 8: 22-56.
 Lesson 11. Mar. 12. Miracles of Jesus, II; John 5: 17-31; 20: 30-31.
 Lesson 12. Mar. 19. Parables of Jesus; Matt. 13: 10-17.
 Lesson 13. Mar. 26. The Arising Opposition; John 6: 60-71.

Lesson 9. Teaching With Authority

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Feb. 21. Matt. 4: 23-25; 12: 15-21. The Fame of Jesus.
 T. Feb. 22. Luke 6: 12-19. Choosing the Twelve Disciples.
 W. Feb. 23. Matt. 5: 1-16. Teaching with Authority.
 T. Feb. 24. Matt. 5: 13-43. Demands of the Kingdom.

- F. Feb. 25. Matt. 6: 1-18. The Spirit of the Kingdom.
 S. Feb. 26. Matt. 6: 33, 34; 7: 13, 14. Supreme Values.
 S. Feb. 27. Matt. 7: 24-27. The Challenge.

Lesson Key: "Think not that I came to destroy the law or the prophets; I came not to destroy but to fulfill," Matt. 5: 17.

The early Judean and Galilean ministries of Christ were of an informal character, without any definite announcement or program, altho the spirit in which He sought to labor among His people was clearly evident. It is quite probable that he desired to learn something of the feeling with which different classes of the people expected the coming of the promised Messiah, and also to work himself into His real ministry gradually before beginning His work in earnest. It is likely that He moved about alone, as the disciples He had gathered seem to have returned to their homes for a while to follow their usual occupations.

"Immediately after the call of Matthew Jesus and His five disciples went to the feast at Jerusalem, probably the feast known as the Feast of the Trumpets, the beginning of the civil year in Israel. The healing of the man at Bethesda brought Jesus into conflict with the rulers of the Jews, and besides forecasting the final passion, emphasized the need of active, earnest work, if His mission was to be fulfilled. On His return to Galilee the disciples were called to a permanent fellowship, and He began His extended Galilean ministry by a proclamation of the principles of the Kingdom of God in the Sermon on the Mount.

"The twelve disciples were from Capernaum (John, James, Peter, Andrew, Matthew, James the Less and Jude), Bethsaida (Philip), Cana (Nathanael), an unknown city, (Thomas), Kerioth in Judea (Judas Iscariot.) They were chosen that they might be witnesses of His message and His power, and that He might send them forth as His messengers. At least five were fisherman, one was a public official. All were obscure and most of them poor. Yet these poor unlearned, even uncouth men formed the raw material out of which Jesus could develop His helpers. They were conscious of their weakness and willing to be taught. Jesus chose them not because of what they were, but because of what He could make of them." He can use any human material in His work for men, the only condition is that they yield themselves entirely to Him and follow His leadership. Without this condition the most intelligent and wealthy disciple becomes worthless, and with it even the poorest and most unpromising becomes capable of the greatest and most lasting service.

The central thought of the Sermon on the Mount is the Kingdom of Heaven and its Righteousness. It is not a new idea that Jesus brings to His people, but the fulfillment of something already there, and contained in the law and the prophets of the Old Testament, as the blade, the stalk of grain and the ear are contained in the seed-grain. What He says is simply the outgrowth and the completion of what Moses and the prophets gave their people. The righteousness He preaches is such that it permeates the entire life and character. Conceit and hypocrisy have no place whatever in any one who would have a part in His kingdom, and it will place others first rather than self, and it is the doing of the words of Christ alone that has value.

It is impossible to give an idea of the fullness and the beauty of the Sermon on the Mount in so short a compass. That will require earnest and prayerful study. In undertaking such a study the following analysis (quoted from the Advanced Quarterly) will be found of great value.

1. The citizens of the Kingdom and their mission in the world. Matt. 5: 3-16.
2. The high standard of righteousness in the Kingdom. 17-20.
3. The righteousness of the Kingdom contrasted with the teaching of the synagog, 21-48.
4. The righteousness of the Kingdom contrasted with the prevailing practices of the day, 6: 1-18.
5. The kind of service God demands, 19-34.
6. Judgment of others forbidden, 7: 1-6.
7. Trust in God enjoined, 7-11.
8. The Golden Rule of Conduct toward others, 7: 12-27.
9. The practice of righteousness rather than a mere profession only enjoined, 13-27.

German Missionaries in India

Continued from Page 4

is of the opinion that our old congregations ought to be made dependent upon themselves and predicts great progress if they would venture to continue on their own responsibility. They suggest that a union with the National Hindoo Church would be possible. This good man evidently does not even know his own people, and is certainly an optimist. To date the National Church of India has not materialized and an affiliation with that body is therefore out of the question.

Then again they occasionally publish remarks worthy of notice. For instance: "The entire secret of German wealth and ability may be expressed by one word: Disciplin." We are ready to accept this statement. Particularly noteworthy is a remark made by the bishop of Trapani, who traveled thru his diocese and gave voice to the statement that it was not so much a question of having God on our side, but instead we should be sure that we are on God's side. No doubt this will prove the real issue for all people engaged in this war.

The Harvest Field, which endeavors to take the correct view of the situation of German missionaries without denouncing the English point of view, publishes an article written by the interned president of the Basel Mission, A. Schosser, regarding the history of their work, and accompanies it with warm words of endorsement. It propounds the question as to which mission has closed its activity of the past century under more tragic conditions than the Basel mission. The editor sympathizes heartily with the interned brethren. "We know with what heartache they had to relinquish that which is dearer to them than their own life. Tho the clouds are dark, they have a silver lining, and in God's own time these clouds will part and pour upon the churches His blessing, and God's sun will again shine down upon the mission fields which now are deserted. We earnestly pray that the day may not be far off when God himself will establish that peace and enable His servants to return to their beloved work." The Church Missionary Review, which is the mouthpiece of the missionary society of the Anglican Church, and usually treats matters in a strictly political light; referring to Dr. Axenfeld's paper in the daily Rundschau, expresses the hope that the German missionaries may return to their field of activity after the war. Such is the view of many people of high standing in English missionary circles.

The Harvest Field also relates that the English government has undertaken to do for the German missionary societies all that the "representative committee" of the Indian missionaries could accomplish for them. As the idea prevailed at that time that the departure of the Germans would be only a question of days, this commission sent each missionary who was supposed to return to Germany or was destined to remain in Ahmednagar a letter of sincere sympathy. It is also interesting to read a letter reproduced by the same journal, written by a German missionary in reply to an English missionary who demands the deportation of all Germans. This letter was written in opposition to the demand that a decisive stand be taken against German "militarism." The editor finally remarks relative to this letter: "We believe that the above letter expresses the spirit of the German missionaries, and do not believe that their removal from their mission field in India will prove beneficial to the advancement of God's kingdom. Native Christians as well as heathens are unable to understand the motive of the government, and we are still in hopes that it may be found possible to retain some of their workers in this field, and confidently look forward to the time when these faithful workers may be returned to us."

GES. Tr.

Religious Needs of South America

Concluded from Page 6

not go far afield if, in this spirit, he emphasizes the supreme importance of high moral character among the youth of a nation, and the indispensable contribution of the religion of Jesus Christ in achieving such character. He will be wise in refraining from references to the glory and greatness of his own nation, and in abstaining absolutely from attacks upon any form of religion.

Those Anglo-Saxon people who have been most successful in winning the confidence of Latin American students have quickly established points of contact in the study of English, athletics, social life and love of country; participation jointly in these exercises and in discussion of the claim of patriotism has opened the way naturally for reading the Bible, the abandonment of practices that cripple physical efficiency, and for heart to heart talks about the life and mission of our Lord.

A Call to the Best we have to give

That there are obstacles in the way of making Latin American universities truly Christian no one can deny. That the obstacles are insuperable no one dare affirm. The response of students and professors to a sympathetic approach is most encouraging; the generous backing offered by individuals and governments to efforts for the moral and religious welfare of students challenges our admiration. Thousands of thoughtful students and professors are waiting for friends who will show them that belief in God and immortality is rational, that religion is to be incorporated in daily life, and to manifest its power in transformed lives and communities.

The people of North America should not overlook the opportunity to interpret the best in their civilization to the two thousand students in the United States from all parts of Latin America. They are studying here for a few years, and will soon return to positions of influence among their people. They should have no occasion for feeling that the "Yankee" is selfish and provincial. Every facility should be placed at their disposal which will acquaint them with the best homes, with agencies and organizations seeking the welfare and uplift of the people, and above all, they should come into personal touch with the ablest students and professors who are earnest Christian men, disposed to share their religious convictions.

Over one hundred Latin American students enjoyed the hospitality of the North American Christian Student Movement as guests at the summer conferences last June. The possibilities of such fellowship are thus stated by one of the wisest leaders in Christian work in Latin America:

"I am just finishing twenty days of work in the Latin American section of the student conferences. In the eleven years of my residence in Latin America I have never experienced anything that has brought me such certainty as to the ultimate success of the task we have in hand in these Latin republics. I have always been confident; now I am sure. I have seen in the last three weeks young men from the best classes, the leaders of their peoples, yielding themselves not only to the influences of friendship, but to the highest work of the Holy Spirit. I have seen men transformed from agnostics to fervent disciples, from relentless partisans to apostles of a New Brotherhood, from careless seekers of selfish pleasure to resolute warriors for honesty, purity, and kindness. I attended the conferences for the full time at Eagles Mere and at Northfield. At these two conferences a total of thirty-four men, exclusive of the leaders, attended. They represented the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, Cuba, Mexico, San Salvador, Costa Rica, Colombia, Brazil, Paraguay, Argentina and Spain. Many came for the good time they would have, resolved to skip all they could of Bible study, etc. Several rebelled at the start, and I believe were only held to the system of the Conference by their sense of the duty of a guest. One started a theosophist and a distorter of the Bible and ended a Christian, eager to learn all that the Bible contains. One man, caught in the grip of the habit that meant the destruction of his mind and eventually of his life, found most joyous release.

"At Northfield, church difference, international jealousy, and personal aversion to piety, threatened to disrupt the Conference. Within two days of the end of the Conference, in a discussion class, a dispute arose which threatened to lead to international complications at every point and delayed the session an hour. This seemed to be the final explosion of the pent-up feelings of men who had been fighting for self-control for a week. The very next evening was marked by a deeply spiritual discussion on "What Does It Mean to be a Christian?" The decision meeting held on Sunday was the most moving I have ever attended. Every man present voluntarily signed a contract to follow and serve Jesus Christ as Master and Lord, and to read the Bible and pray. Those who had been open and flagrant in opposition frankly confessed their sin and begged forgiveness.

"The results are far-reaching. One representative of a splendid family said he was going home to be a Christian engineer and a promoter of Christian work for young men. Another, a brilliant graduate in engineering, offered a month's salary whenever Christian work can be opened in his city, one of the unopened student centers of South America. One, a brother of the president of a republic where the Christian Association has never had a welcome, declares it as his intention to use his influence to introduce the Association there."

In the past, selfish motives and the desire for gain have too largely determined the attitude of North American people toward Latin America. Commercial congresses and trade commissions are desirable and necessary, but Christian people of all nations should accompany with their most earnest prayers the congress on Christian work in Latin America now being held in Panama. May it mark the beginning of genuine co-operation of the Americans in great moral and religious enterprises! It will certainly recognize the important relation of the universities to the spread of Christianity, and will adopt plans which will result in the centers of learning becoming sources of moral and spiritual enrichment for all the people.

A most instructive volume dealing with the people of South America and their needs in detail is "South American Problems," by Robert E. Speer, 75 cents. It was published last year for the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions and may be ordered of Eden Publishing House, St. Louis, Mo.

Robert J. Thompson

American Consul, Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany.
(Resigned)

England and Germany in the war

Letters to the Department of State

127 pages with the Author's portrait

Net Postpaid $1.00

This book comprises a series of letters addressed to the Secretary of State by Mr. Robert J. Thompson, recently American Consul at Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany, who resigned from his post, as the letters explain, purposely to be free from official restrictions in reporting facts of the European war situation as he has found them.

Thompson's letters were first printed serially in the Chicago Tribune, from February 14 to February 21, 1915. This great newspaper claimed for that period the largest circulation it had had since the beginning of the war, attributing this gain to Mr. Thompson's letters. They created a sensation and much comment.

The letters set forth that their author is not pro-German by predilection or inclination; rather that ties of blood, friendship, sentiment and intimate personal relation bind him to England and France; in view of which he submits that his conclusions in favor of Germany were forced upon him directly against his personal inclinations.

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.,
202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CHANGED ADDRESSES

Rev. Max. Hoeppner, Gladbrook, Iowa.
Rev. M. Lienk, Tolleston Sta., Gary, Ind.
Rev. A. Walton, 1017 W. 10th St., Oklahoma City, Okla.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also we were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 5

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., FEBRUARY 24th, 1916

NUMBER 8

Segregation of Negroes

On February 29th the voters of St. Louis will vote on an ordinance providing residential segregation for Negroes, i. e., that Negroes shall not live in a block, the majority of whose residents are white people, and vice versa. The matter is being widely discussed, but the discussion, in many quarters, seems to be generating more heat than light, and a very large proportion of the intelligent voting population is apparently undecided as to what to do. We believe that this uncertainty is largely due to the fact that the fundamental principles which ought to govern a proper decision in questions of this kind are not sufficiently clear.

So far as we have been able to observe the discussion has largely centered around the question of the desirability of having Negroes live in the same block with white residents, and those who favor the policy of segregation do so because of the injurious effect of the presence of colored people in any section of the city upon real estate and other business interests, and also because of the inherent race prejudice that is so strong an element in human conduct. It is no doubt disagreeable to have Negroes in too close proximity to the homes of white residents, altho it should be remembered that there are certain classes of white people whom most of us regard as just as disagreeable neighbors. Nor can it be denied that even a small number of Negro residents in any section of the city works immediate and usually considerable injury to the business interests of the neighborhood. Both these considerations are natural and legitimate and cannot be excluded from any proper discussion of the subject.

It seems, however, that Christian people, who are at least supposed to be familiar with the highest ideals of righteousness and justice, should not, in their discussion of the question confine themselves to such considerations as those we have mentioned. If there is anything that distinguishes the Christian from others it should be the broad and kindly sympathy toward the needy, the unfortunate and the neglected which made the Master ready to minister to the Samaritan and the Canaanite as well as toward the Jew. While the presence of the Negro residents in blocks, the majority of whose residents are white, undoubtedly work an injury to legitimate business interests, it may also be expected that the restriction of Negroes to the neighborhoods now occupied by them will work a hardship upon them as a class and injure their legitimate interests. It is urged by those who oppose the segregation ordinance, and we think justly, that should the ordinance become a law, the neighborhoods in which Negroes reside in any appreciable numbers would be speedily given over to them, with the very probable result that, under such conditions, the streets would be permitted to get out of repair, lighting would be poor, sanitation bad, police protection would lessen and general conditions would become intolerable because of the neglect. It would be difficult to arouse public sentiment sufficiently to change conditions because "only Negroes (would) live there." Insurance rates would probably be higher than in other sections of the city, which would very naturally add to the rent Negroes would have to pay. Landlords would be slow to repair or decorate property because Negroes could live nowhere else. The districts would speedily become congested and because of the inability to seek residence elsewhere, the health and morality of the whole neighborhood would be endangered. It is also to be expected that the neighborhoods immediately adjoining would attract the most questionable class of white residents, and the Negro ghetto, with this "fringe" of low-class white residents, would soon become the resort of crime and vice with all their evil consequences not only for the neighborhood but also the entire city. Being able to live only in the ghetto Negroes would in all probability be charged exorbitant prices when buying or renting property, and be at the mercy of the corrupt and vicious of every kind, to say nothing of the fact that the deserving and progressive members of the race, who desire to rise to better conditions, would be disgraced and stigmatized with the basest of their number.

In view of all this the question naturally arises whether the policy of segregation is justifiable from the Christian point of view. It was the greed of the white man that brought the Negro to this country, and the lowest passions of the white man, just as much as his own weaknesses, have kept him in a degraded condition. The reconstruction policy forced upon the Nation by the post-bellum politicians stimulated the worst qualities of the race, instead of giving him the opportunity to prepare himself for intelligent citizenship by education and industrial training. As a result of such a history the Negro in the United States is what he is to-day. And the way to improve his condition is not to segregate him to where he will be out of the white man's way, and then leave him to himself, but to educate him so that he may become a fit neighbor for the white man, and to give to the most intelligent and progressive the opportunity of possessing the same civic and economic advantages that the white man enjoys. There are those who think that segregation will work toward this end. We do not think it will, because it will shut him out from the opportunities to which he is entitled as a human being, and while we are far from condemning a vote for segregation as un-Christian, we hold that Christian sympathy and justice should endeavor to give the deserving Negro all the opportunity for civic advancement and moral development that the white man possesses. The outstanding social wrong of the day is the prevalent idea that the rights of property enjoy precedence and determine legislation and the conditions under which men must live. This is a pagan notion, a remnant of Roman jurisprudence and feudal conditions. The Christian ideal is that human life and human rights are pre-eminent, and should therefore determine the relations of men to each other. If Christians generally would apply this criterion to public questions, they would experience little difficulty in discovering where to take their stand.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

The law of worthy life is fundamentally the law of strife. It is only thru labor and painful effort, by grim energy and resolute courage, that we move on to better things.—Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. Brandeis and the Supreme Court

In nominating Mr. Louis D. Brandeis to the United States Supreme Court Mr. Wilson has surprised the country. We shall not waste any time in wondering why he did it, tho the character of this nomination is, in our opinion, far above that of most other nominations he has made. We shall rather endeavor to give an idea of Mr. Brandeis' character and achievements and state the reason why we think the Senate should confirm the nomination.

Mr. Brandeis is a Jew, a native of Kentucky and is in his sixtieth year. His father was an abolitionist and the boy experienced some of the trying experiences which usually accompanied such convictions. He studied in Germany, but German paternalism "got on his nerves," as he says. He graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1877, and at the age of thirty had a large law practice in Boston, giving himself largely to public work. His appearance before a committee of Congress in a tariff hearing as a representative of the consumer elicited laughter and jeers. He created enmity in Boston by his fight for the city's control of its transportation lines. He provided the so-called sliding scale for the regulation of gas rates in Boston, by which for every five-cent reduction in the rate to the consumer below the standard gas company was entitled to an increase of one cent in the dividend. This ingenious plan resulted in lowering the price of gas and increasing the income of the gas company's stockholders—a proof that public service may be made consistent with success. He did much to bring into being the Massachusetts saving bank insurance system. In the Pinchot-Ballinger controversy Mr. Brandeis acted as the counsel for Mr. Glavis, whom Mr. Ballinger had dismissed; and it was due to Mr. Brandeis as much as any one that the continuance of the Ballinger regime was made practically impossible. What most contributed to his National reputation was his conduct of the examination of the railway officials and eminent engineers and managers before the Inter-State Commerce Commission, in which he opposed the increase of rates on the ground that by scientific management the railways could save enough to give adequate compensation. What many will regard as his greatest legal service was rendered when he proved to the satisfaction of the Supreme Court, in the famous Oregon laundry case, that it is Constitutional to have a State law to protect women from overwork. He proved this not by legal deduction but by presentation of the facts of life.

Mr. Brandeis has thus been for many years what might be called "an attorney for the people," and we believe that it is just this which makes the President's appointment especially commendable. This statement does not reflect upon any members of the Supreme Court, but merely expresses the desirability of strengthening just this state of mind, which is not commonly regarded as judicial, in the highest tribunal of the country, which finally passes upon the constructive legislation of the states and the Nation. Naturally those whose financial interests have been opposed by Mr. Brandeis are not friendly to his appointment, and it is expected that a strong and persistent opposition to his confirmation will develop.

Neither the fact that Mr. Brandeis is a Jew nor that he has quasi-Socialistic sympathies should be urged against his appointment. We see no objection to having the three most prominent religious faiths of the country represented on the Supreme Court bench. Mr. Brandeis' familiarity with the conditions of the wage-earner, and his sympathy with their point of view, should add greatly to the constructive value of future Supreme Court decisions.

The fact that Mr. Brandeis has had no judicial experience upon the bench need not militate against him; Mr. Justice Hughes was never on the bench until his appointment as Associate Justice, and John Marshall, the ablest judge this country has ever known, had never occupied a place as judge in any court until he was appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. In the great Garment Workers' strike in New York, it should be remembered, Mr. Brandeis' ardent temperament and intense convictions did not prevent him from acting as arbitrator with signal efficiency and success, so that it would be doing him an injustice to regard him merely as an advocate or a reformer. We regard the appointment of Mr. Brandeis as one of the few really good ones President Wilson has made and earnestly hope that the Senate will confirm it.

Eating the Bread of Life

"I am the living bread that came down out of heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever; yea, and the bread which I will give is my flesh, for the life of the world," John 6: 51.

In using the term "bread of life" to describe His mission in the world Jesus is saying nothing less than that He desires to nourish the spiritual life of men, just as in our every-day language the word "bread" stands for the food we need for the nourishment of our physical life. And when we speak of bread we mean that which is absolutely necessary to sustain life. When we pray for "our daily bread" we do not mean the luxuries that we could do without, but the things that we must have in order to keep body and soul together. Just so Jesus Christ, in calling himself the "bread of life" represents himself as the one necessary nourishment of the spiritual life. A great many things, such as education, culture, science, art, music, etc., can minister to the spiritual life, and are valuable for that reason; but they are luxuries that one can do without if need be, and that most of us must do without. Jesus Christ, however, is the essential spiritual nourishment, the staff of life for the soul, without which there must inevitably be spiritual famine, suffering and starvation.

Whether or not the bread we eat actually nourishes the physical life depends upon the process of assimilation. If our food is not assimilated, or is poorly assimilated, it brings on disease rather than strength and health. In assimilating food the body not only receives but absorbs nutriment, and converts it into blood and tissue, so that it becomes a part of its life, its being and its activity. In the passage quoted above Jesus makes the eating of the living bread which came down out of heaven a condition of receiving eternal life. In order to get all the benefit of the bread of life which His personality, His life and His work represents, there must take place some process of assimilation like that which accompanies the eating of our regular daily food. This can only mean that Jesus Christ and that which He stands for must become a part of our very life and enter into our very being and every activity, just as the food we eat becomes a part of all our life, being and activity. Just as bread that is not eaten is useless as nourishment, the bread of life that is offered in Christ Jesus cannot afford spiritual life and strength and growth unless it is assimilated.

How Jesus Christ becomes a Part of our Life

Jesus has been leading up to this point since the beginning of His discourse. When He was asked, What must we do, that we may work the works of God? His answer was, This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent. Belief was the first step necessary in obtaining the blessings He was to bring, the one condition on which He was able to help. The centurion at Capernaum believed that Jesus could and would save His servant, even tho he was not worthy that Jesus should come under his roof. The things he had heard and seen had convinced him that Jesus possessed supernatural power. Because of this belief Jesus could say to him, Go thy way, as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee. The people of Nazareth, on the other hand, would not believe until they saw a sign. The words of grace which proceeded out of Jesus' mouth, and the things they had heard done at Capernaum, only aroused their unbelief; they were not open to conviction and Jesus could not reveal His glory among them. What we know of Jesus Christ and His life and His work is such that it will incline anyone whose mind is open for the truth to heed His word as he would heed those of no other person. As soon as they hear who Jesus Christ was and what He did, those who are unprejudiced against Him will be ready to believe that He could do and give what no one else can do and give. And this is the first step in receiving Jesus Christ as the bread of life.

Those who believe in Him will naturally be ready for the second step, that of coming to Him. This is what the nobleman and the centurion did, and when Jesus was asked, Lord, evermore give us this bread, He answered straightway, He that cometh unto Me shall not hunger. The people He was addressing had followed Him for miles, and had found Him, and were speaking to Him, but they had not yet come to Him. To come to Him meant more than than merely being near Him; it meant approaching Him with a trusting and submissive spirit; to acknowledge Him as Lord, and to accept Him as their Lord; to commune with Him as one friend does with another, and to say to Him, "I am Thine, Thine most gladly, Thine forevermore." That is how John, Andrew, Simon, Philip and Nathanael and all the other disciples came—except Judas; the woman who was a sinner came to Him in that way, and so did Mary and Martha, and many others who ministered unto Him of their substance. In no other way can there come about that intimate personal relationship that brings into our life the tender, heavenly purifying influence that can make men and women turn away from the wide gate and the broad way that leadeth to destruction and enter the narrow gate and the straightened way that leadeth unto life. Those who believe on Him shall never thirst, and they who come to Him thus shall never hunger, because the deepest desires of their lives have been satisfied.

A Personal Matter

And then comes the third step, "If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever." It is not by talking about our food, nor by looking at it, and admitting its appearance and its nutritive value, but only by eating it. And eating is something which each one must do for himself. No other person can eat for us. Each one of us must take Jesus Christ for himself, believe and trust in Him and learn to love Him with all his heart and with all his soul and with all his might. Each one of us must receive Him into his own life, must let Him become a part of our nature and our being, so that, just as the food we eat is distributed, without our own will or effort, to every part of the body, giving light to the eye, strength to the arm, making bone and sinew, nerve or blood vessel, so Jesus Christ becomes our very own, and the life He brings suffices for all the needs of human nature and human duty.

And back of this matter of eating is that of appetite. The man who has no appetite for food is ill. There is something wrong with him that needs to be set right before even the simplest and most necessary food can help him gain strength and health.

Have you an "appetite" for Jesus Christ?

The Old Hampton Place

BY HILDA RICHMOND

III

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS. Thomas and Cordelia Hampton, brother and sister, victims of a city boarding-house, receive news of the death of an eccentric old bachelor uncle, supposed to have burned to death in his barn. They attend the funeral and while enjoying the hospitality of a neighbor, become enamored of country life. After consulting a lawyer Thomas decides to take possession of his deceased uncle's farm and undertakes to make the neglected house habitable.

"Then he should have left a will, Sis. We'll go over his things very carefully and if we find a will anywhere that says it is to go elsewhere we'll vacate. But for the present we're the legal owners."

By night a roaring bonfire had devoured the brush, the old clothes, the doubtful food supplies, the shoes, the hats and several of the moth-eaten old carpets. Mrs. Gross and Grace came over again after dinner to lend a hand, and it was really wonderful how much of the worthless trash had gone up in smoke when it was time to stop working. Every scrap of paper had been carefully laid aside but the trash had been torn out with ruthless hands. Thomas left the work of hacking down shrubbery to help the ladies, and when they all went home tired and dirty they felt that great things had been accomplished.

"If this house had a few more windows I really feel that I could live here and be happy," said Cordelia taking a survey of the clean and almost bare living room, kitchen and pantry. "I declare it looks very clean and inviting if there is little to do with."

She was surprised by a vigorous hand clapping behind her. "That's what I've been working for all day, Sis," said Thomas wiping his heated face with a dirty handkerchief. "I want to stay right here. Mr. Gross thinks there are possibilities in this neglected farm and I'd like to try what we can do."

"But we haven't anything to farm with, Thomas?" "Not yet, but all that will come in due time. We'll get a cow and some chickens this fall and next spring pitch in in good earnest."

"Well, we can try it," said Cordelia doubtfully.

"If we don't like it we can sell out and go back to town, I suppose."

"And that's what you'll be doing before three months," said Grace positively. "Living in the country in winter is no joke, I can tell you."

So vigorously did Cordelia and Thomas work that before the end of the week they were settled in the cleaned farm-house fairly comfortable and perfectly happy in spite of many drawbacks. In fear and trembling they had gone to the city to settle up their affairs and withdraw their scanty savings from the bank to buy the cow and the chickens, as well as to have a little surplus on which to live during the winter. As Cordelia received the one hundred and nineteen dollars that represented so much painful effort to save on her part she felt that it was almost criminal to spend it for anything short of sickness, and Thomas felt almost as depressed at taking out his three hundred and five hard earned dollars. They felt certain that by spring every penny would be gone, and they knew they were undertaking new and unknown tasks, but in spite of all the drawbacks they had the dogged Hampton determination to at least try. It was easy to pick up their few personal effects and say goodbye to their friends, so that by night they had burned every bridge behind them and were farmers in deed and in truth.

"For mercy's sake! Thomas! Look!" cried Cordelia lifting the shade as she entered the kitchen one exquisite fall morning to get the breakfast. "What does it mean?" She pointed to the teams assembled in their barn-yard and the men silently conversing in little groups. "What has happened?"

"Hello! Ready for work? Want to hire a gang of helpers? Don't you know it's high time to get to work?" The merry chorus that greeted their ears assured them that there was no need for alarm. "We've come to lend you a hand," said Mr. Gross as the two Hamptons hurried out. "What shall we begin on, the fields or the barn yard?"

To their amazement and great relief it turned out that the neighboring farmers had come to help them. Cordelia and Thomas did not know that it was the country custom when anyone fell ill or was in trouble of any kind that the neighbors came in and did what work they could in a day or several days. It was all new and strange to them. Mr. Gross explained that they were all so glad to get a chance at the Hampton weeds which had seeded their farms year in and year out that they wanted to put in a full day at work. He suggested that the fields be made ready for wheat and then in the spring they could sow clover on them and put them down to grass so that, having little in the way of machinery or live stock, they could realize the most for their work and get the quickest returns. The grateful "farmers" on the forlorn sixty acres were glad to take his advice, and before the end of an hour six fine teams were turning under weeds, briars and small undergrowth in the neglected fields. A gang of men trimmed out and cleared away the larger bushes, and the stout teams made short work of the roots and stubble.

"And you don't need to worry about feeding us!" called back Mr. Gross to Cordelia. "The women folks will be here presently with plenty to eat."

"Let's spread the tables out of doors," suggested Grace when the ladies had filled the kitchen almost to overflowing. "There's more room out there."

"Do you have these lovely times often?" said Cordelia fingering the velvety dahlias in the broken pitcher. "I never had such a good time in my life."

"Yes, but the young folks never go," said Grace carelessly. "I came to-day on your account, and you'll not see another girl here."

"Why not?"

"What's the use?" said Grace. "I don't see anything to cooking and eating a big dinner and washing the dishes afterwards."

"You don't? Why, I think it's perfectly splendid. I wish some of the young people would come. Would they if you'd ask them?"

"Why, yes, I suppose they would. I'll run home and telephone to six or seven of them. Please tell mama where I am if she misses me."

When the people were all seated except the young ladies who were to wait upon the table Cordelia whispered to Grace: "I feel just exactly as if I were having a party. I never went to a party in my life but I can easily play that it is my first one."

"And the men in their shirt sleeves!" said Grace.

"I don't care for that," said Cordelia stoutly.

"Couldn't you ladies get up a dinner like this for my sale?" asked a man who had dropped in to see Mr. Gross on business and had been invited to stay for dinner. "I'll guarantee you a hundred dinners if you'll undertake it. Usually a man comes out from town with his little lunch wagon and sells wooden sandwiches and ancient pie, but a dinner like this would draw a crowd."

"I don't believe we could," said Mrs. Gross doubtfully, "with pickling and canning coming on."

"Couldn't we do it?" suggested Cordelia. "It seems to me it would be a fine way to make money."

After some whispering among the young girls they made known their plan and the man said he would be delighted to have them try it. "You are welcome to the use of my tenant house," he said. "Don't get up anything elaborate. Just give the men plenty of baked beans, coffee, doughnuts and such things, but have them fresh and good like these. I haven't had such a dinner as this for years and years."

The older people lingered so long over their pie, doughnuts and coffee that the girls felt almost starved, but Cordelia hastily cleared her kitchen table and set out warm food on that. Presently the young men came strolling in two and two, and such fun and frolic rang out in that old kitchen as had not been known for years and years. Instead of being stiff and formal with the new-comers the country young folks were as cordial and friendly as heart could wish and presently they were deep in plans for the sale dinner and wondering what to do with the money it would bring.

"Let's organize a singing school if we make anything on the dinner," said Frances White above the merry din. "Why didn't we think of that long ago?"

"Don't count your chickens before they're hatched," warned her brother Fred. "It may rain on the day of that sale and you won't make a cent."

"The sale will be held rain or shine. Mr. Hunt said so!" retorted Frances. "Don't pour cold water."

"Why can't you all meet here to-morrow evening to make plans for the dinner?" said Cordelia hospitably. "We'll be glad to have you."

"Better meet at our house," said Emily Fisher. "We're more centrally located."

"Shall it be a chicken dinner or—"

"Boys! Boys! We don't like to disturb you but it's three o'clock," said several ladies behind them. "We'll have to get into the kitchen so we can wash the dishes and go home. It's too bad to break into your dinner, girls, but it's getting late."

"Three o'clock!" gasped the young men. "Are the rest in the field? Why didn't you call us?"

By five in the evening the mothers had all gone home but the young folks remained. A various and varied collection of eatables was stored in the pantry and the kitchen was once more in good order. Forty acres of tough weedy soil had been turned over and seeded to wheat out where the evening sun was slanting its tender rays, and hundreds of rods of decaying rail fence had gone up in flames. The farm was now one big field with a dilapidated fence shutting it off from neighboring farms, but not one division fence on it all. The only good sod had been saved for pasture until cold weather and for corn land next spring, so that everything was much improved. The worthless trees had been turned into firewood and several of the best sheds and outbuildings straightened up and patched. Altogether the farm had received an overhauling such as it had not known for years, and the results of the day's work were good to look at.

"Let's set out a lunch for the men so the tired ladies will not have to get supper when they get home," said Cordelia. "There is plenty of food and it will be an easy task."

But some of the middle aged farmers declined the invitation and drove homeward about five thirty while the young men gladly stayed. With Mrs. Gross to chaperone the crowd they lingered over the remains of the noon-day meal until the moon rose high over the trees.

"Martha, this has been a good day for our neighborhood," said Mr. Gross to his wife as they sat under the old apple tree listening to the fun and frolic. "I believe it was a lucky day when these young people came to live in this old house. I'm sorry Richard Hampton had to go as he did, but I feel sure his heirs are nothing like him."

"Maybe if they get to having good times together Grace and John won't want to run off to town to work," said Mrs. Gross. "I hope so, tho it's almost too good to ever come true."

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

The Only Flower

The Violet's had its season,
The Rose has had its day;
The flowers of autumn stayed awhile,
Then softly sped away.
Now 'twould be weary waiting
With wintry skies above,
Had God not known and sent us
A little flower called "Love."

The world is gay with blossoms
In summer, autumn, spring;
But had the heart no garden,
Ah! what would winter bring?
But Love blooms on forever,
Tho' seasons flutter past,
The only flower in all the world
God wills shall always last.

Leonard Cooke.

Just Their Ways

She came in to see me a while this afternoon, my small neighbor who nurses grievances, and as usual, she had one that was full-grown.

"I can't understand why all you people in this neighborhood feel called upon to kill a duck and make a fuss generally over that Mrs. Neely every time she appears on the scene. I am living in the same house she used to occupy before she moved out to Edgewood, and Mrs. Dart, for one, never sets foot in it, except with her bonnet on and armed with kid gloves and a cardcase. Yet I am told that she used to run in and out in the most neighborly fashion when Mrs. Neely lived in it. It isn't that I care at all about Mrs. Dart's not visiting me—I never have approved of these women who have a dozen outside interests and neglect their homes so outrageously—but I can't help noticing the difference. And people say Mrs. Dart is so awfully clever, too, and I know Mrs. Neely isn't intellectual at all."

There were a dozen things I was bursting to say, but by dint of much self-repression I managed to remark affably that I knew Mrs. Neely wasn't brilliant—her best friend couldn't claim that for her, tho she did have a rare gift of being interested and seeing the best in people, so that after one had been with her, one always felt a little better and happier—it just was a peculiar little way she had with her that made her popular.

My lady of grievances sniffed a bit, and murmured something about "these easy kind of folks," and then when she went away she managed to leave the usual discomfort behind her—my attention had been called to the heinous fact that the covers of two new magazines hung by a single thread—my Tommy's doings—and she let me see that she noticed the imprint of a sticky little hand on the front door. And I could not get away from the feeling that she would have delighted to point out other things equally dreadful, if she could have discovered them without making the search too evident.

If it had been Mrs. Neely, now, she would have had eyes only for the vase of scarlet dahlias on the library table just beside those mutilated magazines; and she would have been more impressed by the view of a wreath of climbing rose over the front steps than by those finger-marks—that unintellectual Mrs. Neely, who isn't clever at all, but whose occasional visits to her old neighborhood are cause for a friendly ovation! This other visitor, poor soul, is just a lonely, sad little individual, who is persistently misunderstood by all of us forsooth, and left cruelly out of the heart and inner circle of things.—Susie Bouchelle Wight.

Snow-Flakes

BY MARY RICHARDS BERRY

A snow-storm is raging; "a young blizzard," we call it. The snow-flakes come whirling down, crying out to the pedestrians in a blustering voice, "Out of our way! Out of our way! We are going to be a great snow-storm!" Coat-collars are turned up and shelter is eagerly sought, when lo! the sun suddenly breaks forth and there is nothing left of this young blizzard but a wet pavement!

Have you not seen people exactly like such snowflakes: people blustering about the great projects they intend to launch; people who cry to the meek onlookers, "Out of our way! We are the important people; we are going to astonish the world!" Then as the onlookers patiently watch for the result of all these noble plans, lo, they suddenly melt away like the snow-flakes, and only the memory of the boastings remains.

Take those fairy snow-flakes which we all delight so much to watch as they dance thru the air and sunlight, like winter butterflies. Have you ever tried to follow one such snow-flake in its progress? It is most teasing, for it dances here and there; just when you think it is about to alight on a shrub, whisk! the wind takes it floating up again to sparkle in the kisses of the sunbeams.

Are not that kind of people just as fascinating; those who come dancing and skipping thru our lives? It may be just as impossible for us to follow them in their progress thru life as it was to follow the dancing snow-flakes, for they are here, there, and everywhere, dipping into one fad, then off to touch ever so lightly another interest or pleasure elsewhere. These worldly butterflies, what becomes of them? We do not know, except that they are probably carried up to sparkle in the social sunshine once more while we turn our eyes to watch the more practical snow-flakes.

The large, feathery snow-flakes which fall leisurely down and pile up in such nice, soft heaps, are they not like the comfortable people, those who are never in too great a hurry but what they can stop and listen to another's troubles, or soothe another's perplexities by their kind advice and encouragement, those who heap up soft words to ally the angry ones, or who snow down rare sympathy to cover up the unsightly spots and make the world warmer, purer and brighter with such a covering?

"It is not snowing very hard, but it looks as if it meant to keep it up all night!" we exclaim as we gaze out of the window at the falling snow. There is no wind, the snow-flakes are not large, nor do they fall with great rapidity. But quietly, gently, steadily, they come down, until by morning the ground is not only covered, but we wake up to find the snow many inches deep, the walks are impassable, traffic is tied up, and communication with the outside world is cut off because the overlaid wires have snapped under their burden of snow.

"What a surprise!" every one exclaims. "Who thought that such a gentle snow-storm would work such a havoc!"

Yes, and who ever thinks that these gentle, quiet, unostentatious people will ever amount to anything worth while?

We feel sorry for this one or that one, because they are so shy and retiring and will never push themselves forward upon the world's notice. Nevertheless, they do not annoy us with their blustering boasts, which come to naught, nor do they allow themselves to be turned aside and blown into drifts by the winds of public opinion, nor to be melted by the scorching fires of tribulation. These are not tossed about by the frivolities or latest fads and fancies until they go floating off into space. But instead, do we not always find them gently and steadily pursuing the "even tenor of their way," fitting into the assigned duties, and the snow-flakes fall to their assigned places on the ground? They create no furor, it is true, but, on the other hand, they cause no uncomfortable disturbance by the performance of their work.

And when the storm of life is over, do we not always find the same unexpected results—not havoc as in the case of the quiet, steady snow-flakes, but countless good deeds heaped evenly thruout their lives; other's paths filled in with the little kindnesses "which most leave undone or despise"; our daily business checked because we miss the helpful encouragement we so eagerly sought, and our interest in the outside world cut off because of the grief which has temporarily stopped the wires of our energy.

Ah, but is not the world more beautiful when we gaze out upon it in the morning with its pure covering of fresh snow? And is not a life made much sweeter that has been covered with such gentle snow-flakes?

Denominational

Church Extension Board Offering

In 1 Cor. 12 St. Paul compares the Church with a body, of which Christ is the Head. It is shown there how all the members are dependent on one another. The Evangelical Synod is also such a body connected by various branches of activity. One of these branches, which has proven itself vigorous and fruitful is the Church Extension Fund. This Fund is a medium whereby small and needy congregations are enabled to erect or procure a church home. By this means very many of our congregations have become self-sustaining, and at present there are over 100 congregations which enjoy the aid of loans from the Fund at the most favorable rates. But still too many must be put off or denied aid entirely, because there is not money enough to meet all requests for assistance. Therefore the congregations of the Synod are called upon to contribute an offering towards the Fund on Reminiscere Sunday, (Ps. 25: 6), March 19th next, which is heartily recommended to the benevolence of all our people, for "if one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it."

By order of Board for the Church Extension Fund.
F. J. Buschmann.

New York District Buffalo

Sunday, January 23rd, 1916, Pilgrim Evangelical Church dedicated its new and beautiful solid stone church building to the service of the Most High. Altho a large building, with a seating capacity of eight hundred, there was not nearly enough room for all the Evangelical Christians who had come from near and far to rejoice with the rejoicing.

In the morning service the Rev. W. Schild of St. Stephen's Evangelical Church preached the sermon, and in the evening service, to which all Evangelical congregations of the city had been invited, the undersigned delivered an address. Other pastors who took part in the services were,—the Revs. J. R. Graf, C. Loos, T. F. Bode, P. R. Zwilling, H. L. Streich and M. P. Davis. Forty-eight new members had expressed their desire to affiliate with the church and were received into membership at the close of the morning service by the pastor, Dr. G. P. Michel.

With so imposing a house of worship, located in a very desirable section of the city, surrounded by large German Protestant churches, and with so wide-awake and able a leader, it is not surprising that Pilgrim Church has doubled its membership within the past year, and that the prospects for the future are very bright indeed. —O. E. Wittlinger.

West Missouri District Boonville

The 6th of February will long be remembered by the members and friends of the Evangelical church at Boonville, because of the reopening of their church, which had been renovated, the dedication of a new addition which was erected for Sunday-school work, and the dedication of a new and beautiful pipe organ.

The three services held on that day were interesting and inspiring. In spite of the heavy snow, which had fallen during the previous night, there was hardly room for the large number of people who came to hear of the great things which God had done for the congregation. The morning service was conducted in German. The pastor, Rev. R. Hinze, in the dedicatory prayer, dedicated the new Sunday-school Hall, the baptismal font, a present of Mrs. J. P. Neff, the altar, a gift of Mrs. Muehlshuster and Mrs. Dengolesky, and the organ, a memorial by Mrs. Gmelich to her late husband, to the service of the triune God. Rev. J. Sauer of Kansas City, Mo., preached the sermon which was followed with rapt attention, and Rev. F. C. Klick of St. Joseph, Mo., and Rev. D. Baltzer of Florence served at the altar.

Lunch was served by the ladies of the church, and in the afternoon a special service in the interest of Sunday-school work was held during which Revs. D. Baltzer and E. Berlekamp of Billingsville, Mo., preached able sermons.

After again partaking of the good things which the ladies had prepared, a third service was held during which Rev. Baltzer read the Scripture and Rev. Klick preached the sermon. The choir and several soloists added very greatly to the attractiveness of

Concluded on Page 8

CONCERTED ACTION IN THE BROTHERHOOD

The Claim of the larger Work of the Kingdom. The five Cardinal Points of Evangelical Benevolence. Keep all Departments moving steadily forward. Advertise the Brotherhood Idea by Brotherhood Work and a Brotherhood Life

III

No Christian man, however, who has caught the vision of Christian stewardship will be content with even the most liberal support of his local church alone, just as Jesus Christ himself was not content with ministering only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, but sent His disciples out to preach the Gospel to all the world. The Church of Christ has taken up the world-work into which Jesus sent His disciples, and both loyalty toward Him and the Church demands vigorous and continuous support of its many branches. Men who are animated by an earnest personal loyalty toward Jesus Christ as their Lord and Saviour cannot, in fact, they will not want to do anything short of their best in helping to promote everything connected with the advancement of God's kingdom, and as faithful stewards of Christ they will distribute their offerings between their local church and the larger things of the Kingdom in such a manner that each one receives a fair proportion of the whole amount they are able to give for these purposes from year to year.

What are "Obligatory Offerings"?

In order that Evangelical people may have no difficulty in determining what branches of church work are most important, and which ones therefore deserve their first and most earnest support, the offerings for the benefit of these branches have been made obligatory upon all Evangelical churches as the most urgent needs of all the enterprises for the Kingdom. The purposes for which these offerings are to be devoted ought to be so well known among all our members, that a special announcement by the pastors would hardly be needed. The fact is, however, that perhaps only a few church members are able to even name the obligatory offerings to which they are expected to contribute. A guessing contest in the Brotherhood meetings in order to make all the members familiar with the offerings and their purposes might be a very interesting and instructive exercise! No matter to what causes the prevailing ignorance in so many of our churches in this direction may be due, it is high time that the rank and file of our church members learn to know all these offerings and the reasons for them, so that they may be able to take an intelligent interest in the work they represent. We do not doubt that the better these different branches of our Church's work become known, the more loyally and faithfully our people will learn to contribute to them.

A well-trained Ministry a primary Essential

No work of the kingdom of Jesus Christ can be carried on without the preaching of the Gospel. "Who soever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in Him whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent? Even as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that bring glad tidings of good things!" Rom. 10. 13-15. The Evangelical Church has always insisted on an educated ministry, and altho education alone will never make a true preacher of Jesus Christ, the wide-spread indifference, unbelief and even hostility to the truth of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, make an educated ministry more of a necessity to-day than ever before. This fact makes the Educational Institutions in which the ministers are trained who are to bring the Gospel of Christ and His salvation to the sick and the well, the old and the young in our churches of the utmost importance. No other work is more fundamental to the whole work of the Church and to the life of every congregation, because all the members of every church depend upon the service of the pastor in preaching the Word of God. We need more ministers, and we need more teachers to instruct them and more buildings to accommodate those who want to enter the ministry. We need help for those who would enter the ministry but cannot do so because they are not able to pay for it. Our educational institutions are therefore always in need of our most generous and hearty support, so that all their needs may be met.

And since it requires all the free will offerings to cover only the running expenses of Eden Seminary and Elmhurst College, thus making a special offering necessary whenever new buildings are to be erected, a sufficient and permanent endowment should be provided, the income from which is to take care of the cost of new buildings or new institutions in other parts of the country. The obligatory offering specified is that for Eden Seminary on Reformation Day (every anniversary of the date on which the German Reformation was inaugurated serves as a special reminder of the blessings we enjoy in possessing the Word of God in all its purity), but the need includes Elmhurst College and the Evangelical Academy at Ft. Collins as well, since all of these minister directly to the work of educating Evangelical pastors for Evangelical churches. The Evangelical Brotherhood could undertake work of no greater importance to the Church, nor more worthy of Evangelical manhood than that of establishing a permanent endowment that would take care of the cost of extending the educational system of the Church to meet the needs of the day. The voluntary offerings could then be kept intact to provide for the running expenses of the institutions.

The Missionary Obligation

The missionary work of the Church is another branch of work that is of fundamental importance, since it is being done in obedience to the direct command of Christ himself, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to the whole creation." The offerings for Home and Foreign Missions are therefore classed as obligatory. Home mission work, as is well known, seeks to bring the Gospel to the unchurched, the indifferent and the neglected in North America, notably to those of German blood, while foreign missions is the work of evangelizing the heathen world, more particularly the Chattisghar district of the Central Provinces of India, where our own mission field is situated. Both these branches of our work are constantly in need of the earnest and active support of all members, the foreign work especially so at this time, because of the abnormally difficult conditions created by the war. The Church Extension Fund is really a part of the home mission work, as it aims to help the smaller and needy churches to secure the necessary buildings by advancing them money at the most favorable rates.

The Denominational Running Expenses

The District offering has been placed among the obligatory offering because the affairs of the denominational organization must be well provided for if the work and the business of the Church is not to suffer. The District is the denominational unit of organization, and the money secured thru the District offerings pays the expenses which the District officers must incur in performing their duties, as well as for other miscellaneous items coming under the jurisdiction of the District, for which no other funds are provided. One third of the District offering goes to the General treasury to help defray the expenses of the General officers.

"Remember them that spake unto you the Word of God"

Ministerial Pensions and Relief aims to keep the aged and infirm ministers and their families out of want by providing for them an annual income, graduated according to their term of service. The pastors themselves are required to furnish the larger part of the funds for this purpose by fixed annual dues ($20 during the first thirty years of service; $15 during the next ten years and $10 for the remaining years of service), but the duty of the churches to assist seemed so clear that the General Conference made an annual offering for this purpose obligatory upon all the churches.

A definite annual Increase

It is the aim of the different boards entrusted with the supervision of these various branches of work to extend and strengthen them from year to year. This can only be done if the means for doing so are available. Owing to the failure of the churches to provide the money needed for going constantly forward along definite and necessary lines of effort, the boards have been unduly limited and hindered in their work, and the Church has lost wofully both in prestige and in membership, because it could do little more than hold its own. An effort is being made to establish a budget, with specific annual appropriations for each branch of work, setting forth in advance what is required for maintaining and extending the work in hand. It would be quite an easy matter to carry out this plan, if the Brotherhoods, who represent the manhood and therefore the financial strength of the Church, were to take it upon themselves to raise just a little more money for these several purposes every year. The amounts necessary from year to year are being made known to every church, so that it is not easy to learn the apportionment allotted to each in proportion to its membership and ability. If each member of the Brotherhood will increase his own contribution to these purposes every year as much as he may be able there will be no trouble in raising revenue to keep every department of Evangelical church work spreading out and getting new results for the Master and new blessings for the contributors.

Detailed information as to the present special needs of all these kinds of work will be found regularly in the columns of this paper, and in an annual resume in the Evangelical Year Book (eighteen cents a copy, postpaid, from Eden Publishing House, or fifteen cents at your pastors). Evangelical Brotherhoods who want to know their share of their work to which their devotion to Jesus Christ and His great world-work calls them, should be fully informed as to all these matters of vital importance to them and their church.

Regular Church Attendance

Some years ago everybody concerned with church work was confronted with the puzzle, Why Don't Men go to Church? and dozens of reasons were given in explanation. The Brotherhood movement has awakened a new interest in religion on the part of the men of the churches, because it has shown the splendid possibilities of Christian manhood when it has found its place in the work of the Church. And wherever Brotherhoods have been well organized and properly conducted the answer to the puzzle has been discovered as if by magic. The Brotherhood has brought men into church as few things has ever done before. Wherever the Brotherhood idea has been properly understood and applied men have found their way into church who had not been inside its walls for years, and their coming has brought a transformation in their lives and in their homes. The inspiration received, the associations formed and the blessings experienced thereby have shown many thousands of Evangelical men that it is worth while to go to church.

And if it is worth while to go to church often, it is still certainly more worth while to go to church regularly. If there is inspiration and blessing in going to church once a month or so, there will certainly be more inspiration and more blessing in going every Sunday, and it ought to be the goal of every Brotherhood to exert such an influence on its members that they will want to go to church just as surely and regularly as Sunday follows week-day. If there is to be anything in personal loyalty and devotion to Jesus Christ it must be constant and continually on the increase; if Bible study means anything to the spiritual life it must be diligent and regular, and if church-going is to mean anything for the strengthening and development of the inner man, it must not be intermittent and irregular but must become a steady and inviolable custom. If the Brotherhood aims to lead men to Jesus Christ it will tie them up to Him and His Gospel of life and salvation in such a way that by and by it will be unthinkable for them to pass a Sunday without having joined in a service of worship to their Saviour and Lord. The Brotherhood that would do most for its members will cultivate such an atmosphere that none of them will feel right on Sunday without having attended church, unless some unavoidable and real cause makes it necessary to stay away. It will not do to establish an iron-bound law that members of the Brotherhood must be in church every Lord's Day morning, but if the Brotherhood is conducted in the proper spirit the members will all want to be there regularly, even if the pastor is not a born orator. And the pastor who appreciates the

Continued on Page 8

THE KINGDOM OF GOD WITHIN

By JOHN S. NOLLEN

In the hidden Chambers of the Inner Life are the Sources of Spiritual Power, the Motive for Unselfish Service

A hundred years ago when it was still possible for Humboldt to cover the whole field of human knowledge, it was not unthinkable for the heroes of fiction to live thru the sum of all human experience. Goethe created two such microcosmic heroes in his drama "Faust" and his novel "Wilhelm Meister." The latter especially inspired many an attempt of like nature, none more interesting than Novalis' "Heinrich von Ofterdingen."

This unfinished novel, by the most gifted of German romantic poets, was intended to be a complete imaginative expression of all human life. The hero, after compassing all the world of past and present activity, should return as a home-coming wanderer "into his own spirit," and there find the eternal realities. "The world becomes a dream, the dream a world." For us prosaic children of the age of steam and steel the vision of such a poetic idealist seems somewhat fantastic. Nevertheless even we, external and accidental tho our lives may be, become aware now and then that we cannot get away from ourselves; and possibly in certain moods, we may even yearn to devote the powers we now use externally to the exploration and cultivation of our own neglected souls.

An Age of Outwardness Challenged by Christ

Yet during the last half-century the final quest of Novalis's hero has not had much interest for men. Outwardness rather than inwardness has been the rule. The gospel of James, with its emphasis upon efficiency, has suited this practical age far better than the gospel of John, which seeks out the hidden things of the spirit. And yet even the experimental learning that has brought forth the material marvels of our time might have taught us as in a figure the lesson of inwardness; for has not physical science been busy tracing motion, or energy, to its ultimate abode. It has traced it all the way from the revolving suns of our planetary systems to the shooting ions of an infinitesimal atom. To every soul, sublime atom in a universe of life, this symbol of universal nature says: "The kingdom of God is within you."

The age into which Jesus came was in many ways not unlike our own. It was an age of enterprise and organization (for when was there a more extensive or more effective organization than the Roman empire?), an age of comparative peace, of commerce and great material wealth, of world-intercourse, of high tide in political and practical life; an age when even religion was externalized, and this nowhere than among the Jews, the "peculiar people" who boasted sole access to the true oracles of God. Into this practical, complacent, commercial, conformist age Jesus came, like a romantic poet, calling men to return home into their own spirits, to find there the saving truth that should make them free. "The kingdom of God," He taught them, "cometh not with observation—for lo! the kingdom of God is within you."

Jesus told the "successful men" of the age that it was impossible for any who trusted in riches—or in power or in organization, He might have added—to enter into the kingdom of God; and so startling was this doctrine that even His own disciples were astonished and terrified by it. Jesus took up and amplified the wise saying of the ancient sage, that out of the heart are the issues of life, and thru it He passed keen and destructive criticism on the conventional, emasculated morality and religion of His countrymen. With inexorable logic He traced all evil to the secret lair of sin in the inmost recesses of the heart. And when it came to choosing between the never so faithful and loving service of hospitable hands, and the intentness of a soul forgetting all in eagerness to learn the lesson of heart-obedience, He could not but say that Mary had chosen the better part, which should endure forever.

The Human Spirit the Place of all Worth

People like Martha, of a practical and energetic disposition, have always been not a little puzzled and offended by the apparently quietistic tendency of the Gospel of Jesus. They expend themselves in hazardous exegesis of the patient and almost negative virtues of the beatitudes; they shy away from the behest of non-resistance; they catch eagerly at the denunciation of the Pharisees and the whip of small cords that drove the traffickers from the temple. And they are surely right in deprecating any attempt to make out that Jesus' character was nothing more than meek—right in insisting upon the heroic quality of His nature. But they forget too easily the pregnant symbolism of Elijah's experience—when the voice of Jehovah was not in the great and strong wind that rent the mountains, not in the earth-quake, not in the fire, but in a "sound of gentle stillness." In the splendid prologue to Goethe's "Faust," the arch-angels read the glory of God in His creation, its vast power, its wondrous energy, its irresistible natural forces; but the climax of their praise is this: "Thy angels, Lord, revere the quiet progress of Thy day."

We see that Jesus, true poet and great teacher that He was, spoke His truth oftenest in figures. And how persistently His metaphor repeats this great truth: "The kingdom of God is within you." How the call to inwardness sounds to the manifold symbolism of the parables—the kingdom is like unto seed, sown in rocky places, or among thorns, or in good ground; the kingdom is like unto leaven hidden in meal till all was leavened; the kingdom is like unto a precious treasure or a pearl of great price—there is surely emphasis upon intrinsic value! When Jesus speaks of himself as the "bread of life," and calls both himself and His disciples "the light of the world," these figures again lay stress upon the intimate quality of the heart out of which are the "issues of life."

And so it is with the highest and richest words of the Christian vocabulary: "Righteousness," the great keyword of Jewish doctrine, restored by Jesus to its pristine value and raised to a higher potency ("except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven"); "peace" and "joy" (the peace that "passeth all understanding"—"not as the world giveth, give I unto you," said Jesus); "faith," the inward power that recreates the life and the world, whose full mystery Jesus could not explain even to the pious Nicodemus; "truth" "truth in the inward parts," as the psalmist said; "love," the greatest of all, the best to express the inmost being of God himself. Truly did the Master say that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God"; and these great words, uttered by God's prophets and apostles, the very message of His Son, are instinct with the fullest, the noblest, the most beautiful life; they are the essence of eternal life, the divine law of the "kingdom that is within you."

The Liberty of a Soul free with Jesus

The law of the kingdom is a law of liberty, of inner liberation. That was the hardest lesson, perhaps, for the early disciples to learn and to enforce. How Paul, for example, wrestles with this conception and triumphantly vindicates its truth and its blessedness! Nothing in his own experience, evidently, gave him such exaltation, such a sense of freedom and power, as the revelation of this truth: "Christ is the end of the law unto righteousness unto every one that believeth"; "Love is the fulfillment of the law."

And here lay the secret of the wondrous illumination of Jesus' own preaching. Even the untrained multitude, much as they might balk at the parables and the direct statement of profound spiritual truth, felt that this Teacher spoke "as one having authority, and not as the scribes." It was only the scribes themselves, Janizaries of traditional regularity, who demanded any other than this evident inner authority. It was the "sweet reasonableness" of Jesus' preaching, as Matthew Arnold says, that made such a direct appeal to the hearts of His hearers. "He put things in such a way that His hearer was led to take each rule or fact of conduct by its inward side, its effect on the heart and character; then the reason of the thing, the meaning of what had been mere matter of blind rule, flashed upon him."

Continued on Page 8

Religious News

Baptist Fund for Ministerial Relief

Within the last eight months Baptists have given $500,000 for permanent relief of aged Baptist ministers and their families. This is a start on a fund of $2,000,000 which Baptists are asked for toward relief of this kind. The time given for the raising of the entire fund is five years. It is explained that this is not a movement in the direction of Baptist pensions. The question of pensions is to be taken up by Baptists later on. There are 13,000 ministers and missionaries in the Northern Baptist Convention, and among them some 600 cases need relief and support. The present fund is for such emergency.

It seems that Baptist ministers, outside of the large cities, receive salaries on the average of $1.87 cents per day, and it is known that salaries of Southern Baptist and Colored Baptist ministers are even less. The missionaries who are to benefit by the new relief fund are both those working abroad and at home.

Salvation Army Expects more Help from U. S. and Canada

The chief secretary of the Salvation Army in the United States, Col. William Peart, returning from England and conferences with General Bramwell Booth there, reports that the Army and its friends in the United States will hereafter be expected to provide workers and money for the Army's foreign work in greater measure than in previous years. The work has heretofore been supported almost entirely from England, but owing to the war England is unable at this time to supply the foreign fields with workers and only with a limited amount of money. Officers of the English Salvation Army are themselves in thirty training camps in England, and with troops throughout Belgium, France and even Egypt.

General Booth has assigned to the care of Americans the China Salvation Army work, which is just opening, that in Korea, which is well established, and Japan where work has been carried on for ten years. In Java a hospital for the treatment of eye diseases has just been opened and Salvation Army nurses and doctors are working among the lepers of Java. Americans will be expected to maintain in part this work. General Booth says he hopes the United States will furnish this year at least one hundred foreign workers and will contribute $250,000 to help maintain the foreign work.

In England Col. Peart reports the Army never more prosperous. Everybody in England is working, who is able to work, and in consequence the number of dependents and men and women in need is reduced fifty per cent. Many working people are contributing small sums to the Army's general fund, which is larger than ever. The Army in Australia, New Zealand and Canada have, thru the English headquarters, sent seven auto ambulances, fully equipped with nurses and doctors into Belgium, France and Egypt. The Army in England is getting funds steadily for its work among the troops in the trenches.

In this country the Salvation Army and the Y. M. C. A. join in working forces in the raising of $500,000 for the General William Booth Memorial Training Schools, two in number, one to be located in Chicago for the preparation of Army workers in the West, the other in New York, for workers in the East. Two years ago, when the Y. M. C. A. put on their $4,000,000 campaign in New York, the Salvation Army had preparation under way for a campaign. The Army stepped aside and the Association took the field. Owing to financial conditions the Army put off its campaign, but now takes it up in April, C. S. Ward of the Association directing it. Most of the money is to be raised in New York and Chicago, where the schools are to be located.

These memorials were decided upon almost immediately that General William Booth, the founder of the Army, died. The reasons were the known wish of the late General that there might be provided more trained workers, and that in America in particular workers are sadly needed. The war has much delayed similar memorials in Europe, where the Army has had to turn its attention to field relief. The Army in England is even drawing upon America for help in both funds and workers. The two schools, costing $250,000 each, will be expected to graduate 500 workers each year, or nearly twice the number at present provided.

Roman Catholic Foreign Missions

The Roman Catholic Society for the Propagation of the Faith, the Board for Foreign Missions of the Catholic Church, for the first time since it appealed to Catholics of America for funds, has just issued a report in which only American gifts are mentioned. This is due to the fact that large supporters heretofore have been Catholics of Germany, Austria and France. All of them at war, American Catholics have come to the rescue, a fact that the report just out acknowledges. Conditions now and one hundred years ago, at the close of the Napoleonic wars, are paralleled in many ways, and now as then, owing to war, missionary conditions are desperate.

Reports from European givers are wanting, but American Catholics gave last year some $40,000 more than in the previous year, making America's contributions more than a quarter of a million dollars. The Arch-diocese of New York alone gave $191,600, making it next to France in normal times in its support of Catholic foreign missions. The fear is expressed that lack of European support because of the war will seriously cripple the entire work. The effect will be little felt this year, since alone of all missionary societies, Catholics collect money one year and spend it the next. During 1916 and 1917 the situation is said to be grave indeed. The work involved is in Asia, Africa, and the South Sea Islands.

For the first time also the Catholic report makes mention of Protestant foreign mission support from America, and its tremendous growth within the last century. It also mentions the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and the fact that twice as many men as six years ago attend these conventions at their own cost. During the year, so the report says, American Catholics helped, thru the Society, the distressed Catholics of Mexico to the extent of $6,500.

The Catholic Society of St. Paul the Apostle has just dedicated at Brookland, Washington, a College of St. Paul, the first building of its kind to be owned by the Society. It is located on grounds adjacent to the Catholic University, and the college is affiliated with the university. In such affiliation it is one of many houses of studies and colleges, together going to make of the University a great centre of Catholic education. One of the earliest houses there was that of the Franciscans, at which American young men were gathered in and trained for services in the Holy Land, where Franciscans serve at the Catholic shrines.

The Society in question, usually called Paulists, was made up at first of converts from Protestant bodies, but of late years it has had priests not converts as well. Its chief parish is that of St. Paul, New York, but its work is missionary, especially in the holding of preaching missions. It was instrumental in founding the Catholic Missionary Society, of which Cardinal Farley is the president, and the Apostolic Mission House, also at Brookland, for many years trained missionaries to work in dioceses, in largest numbers throughout the South. The House in question was in charge of, and was largely provided thru the efforts of, the late Rev. Alexander P. Doyle, a leading Paulist. The Paulists were the first to affiliate with the Catholic University, and thus to help carry out the ambitions of the Pope and of Cardinal Gibbons to create the Catholic educational centre at the National capital.

Statistics of American Jewry

The American Jewish year book, just out, shows the following American cities to be the largest centres of Jewish population, viz. New York, 990,000; Chicago, 215,000; Philadelphia, 160,000; Boston, 65,000; and so on down to San Francisco with 28,000. The cities between these are, in order, Cleveland, Baltimore, St. Louis, Pittsburg, Newark, Detroit and Cincinnati. The estimate of Jews in the United States is 2,500,000, and throughout the world 13,500,000. No other single centre in the world contains so many as the 990,000 in New York.

There are three general organizations of Jews in respect to religion, viz. Reform, Orthodox and Conservative, and the number of rabbis of organized congregations are in order named, Reform forty-six, Orthodox 120 and Conservative 207, the Conservative having as many as both the others together. It is estimated that there are 121 other rabbis who do not belong to any of these three conferences. Therefore, there are no fewer than 500 rabbis for the whole 2,500,000 Jews in America. An explanation of this showing is, however, that there are many provisional congregations, holding services on holidays only, which are served by educated Jews who are not ordained, and who, during the rest of the year, are business and professional laymen, many of them also are teachers in colleges and universities.

The year book shows a tremendous increase in the growth of the Zionist movement. In the last six months there have been formed thirty new general organizations, and because of the war the whole number has doubled. Less than two years ago there were 14,000 shekel payers. Last June there were 36,000, and the estimate is made that by next June there will be 120,000. There were formed in 1915 twenty-six new Jewish congregations in the whole country.

In the history of Judaism in all the world, probably never were Jews in such large numbers so thoroughly organized as they are in the United States at this moment. The motive is the solution of the Jewish problem, which long antedates the great war, but the cementing of Jews together in this remarkable fashion has been possible only because of the war. There is soon to be held a preliminary Jewish Conference. It will be in charge of the Congress Organization Committee, and before it the American Jewish Committee will lay its plan, perfected last year, to hold a restricted conference in Washington. The Congress Committee will adopt such part of the program as it desires, it is said, and probably provide for the Jewish Congress to be held either in New York or Washington this coming fall.

In seventy-two cities in this country every Jewish organization is now joined in the Congress Organization Committee. These organizations include the Zionist societies, a movement which has made rapid progress in membership among young Jews since the war began. The aims of the Congress will be to speak the mind of the greatest Jewish population in the world, and say to the nations that once for all Jewish political and commercial discrimination must cease. Meanwhile, efforts are making to instill into the minds of American Jews the two facts that democracy alone will furnish a solution of Jewish difficulties, and that upon American Jews must fall the burden of initiative and of expense, since the Jews of Europe are in no shape to help. The foremost leader in all of this work is Louis D. Brandeis of Boston.

World Conference on Faith and Order

The plans for a world conference on faith and order worked out by the commission of the Protestant Episcopal Church which had received a severe setback by the breaking out of the European war, were moved forward somewhat by a conference held at Garden City, L. I., the first week in January. While we doubt somewhat whether the cause of Christian unity can be greatly advanced just now by any scheme that includes the Roman Catholic and Greek Churches, the discussion as to Christian fundamentals which the proposition of a world conference on faith and order will cause in all the denominations can only have a wholesome effect.

No one was admitted to the Garden City conference who had not been officially designated by some denomination. There were no Roman or Greek Catholics in attendance—Cardinal Gibbons having declined a personal invitation to attend. A letter from the papal secretary of State, however, expressed the Roman pontiff's thanks for the fact that the projectors of the conference "had thought well to request his aid and support, who, as the one to whom all men have been given over to be fed, is the source and cause of the unity of the Church."

The judgment of the conference was unanimous in favor of going forward with preparations for holding the proposed world conference as soon after the close of the present European war as possible. The place favored for this great gathering is New York. Hitherto the Episcopalians, with whom the plan originated, have borne the brunt of promoting the idea, but the Garden City meeting made provision for a joint interdenominational council which shall carry executive responsibility hereafter.

Stripped of its ecclesiastical terms, the four cardinal doctrines set forth at Garden City as basis for future work toward union were: 1. The Divinity of Christ; 2. the Atonement; 3. the accuracy of Revelation; and 4. a visible Church, established by Christ to be the material organization for the propagation of an invisible faith. No statement is made as to the character of the visible Church, but simply that it exists. A plan of work has been agreed upon, but nobody pretends to say when the world conference will be held.

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

Mar. 5, 1916. Quinquagesima Sunday

Installation of Officers and Teachers

St. John's Sunday-school at Sharpsburg, Pa., held its annual installation services of officers and teachers Sunday, January 23. It was an earnest impressive service. The necessity and importance of the work of the Sunday-school was presented to the congregation and the twenty-two co-workers of the pastor received public recognition of their splendid work and pledged themselves to a faithful discharge of their duties in the new year. The pastor spoke on "The Qualifications of a Sunday-school worker," and based his sermon on 2 Tim. 2:15; "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Sunday School Institute

Sunday, February 6, two meetings were held at Cape Girardeau and Jackson, Missouri, in the interest of the Sunday-school and young people's work in the Cape Girardeau-Jackson district. The meetings were held under the auspices of the Missouri District Boards for Sunday-school and Evangelical League work, and were conducted by the Revs. J. H. Horstmann, H. Katterjohn and Th. Mayer.

A great benefit was derived, especially by Sunday-school teachers, both, in being able to hear the talks and suggestions offered by these leaders of the Sunday-school work, and thru exchanging ideas and experiences with one another. The majority were not only willing, but anxious to have Teacher-Training classes started. Thirty-six teachers and League workers took part in the meetings.

A permanent organization was formed with the following officers: president, Fred A. Schneider, Jackson; vice-president, William Meier, Tilsit; secretary, Clara Drusch, Cape Girardeau; treasurer, A. W. Roloff, Jackson. Clara Drusch, Sec'y.

Sixth Annual Session of the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations

The Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations held its Sixth Annual Meeting in Richmond, Virginia, January 25, 26, 27, 1916, and the meeting was one of the most successful ever held by the Council.

The attendance was the largest since the organization of the Council, and there was a definiteness, force, and vigor in the program that held the interest of every member of the Council from the first to the last.

There were three special themes treated in the Council. The Rev. B. S. Winchester, D. D., Assistant Professor of the School of Religious Education, Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, read, an interesting and illuminating paper on the topic of "The Teacher of religion—His Task and His Training," which was discussed by Rev. John W. Shackford, Nashville, Tenn., and Dr. William E. Chalmers, Philadelphia, Pa.

Rev. Edward S. Lewis, D. D., Cincinnati, O., read a strong paper on "Religious Education in the Public Schools." Dr. Lewis expressed his views fearlessly and vigorously, which views were not always in harmony with the common thought of the Council, but Dr. Lewis took the position that there should be an absolute separation between the work that belongs to the State and the work of religious education that belongs primarily to the family, and secondarily to the Church. The discussion that followed this paper was participated in by Miss Margaret Slattery, of Boston, Mass.; Dr. A. J. Rowland, Philadelphia, Pa.; Dr. D. V. Thompson, Gary, Ind.; Dr. E. Morris Ferguson, Philadelphia, Pa.; Dr. Rufus W. Miller, Philadelphia, Pa., and others.

The question of the "Religious Life of the Rural Community," was discussed in an able paper by Mr. Jackson Davis, Assistant Superintendent of Education of the State of Virginia, and "Experiments in the Rural Sunday School," were presented by Rev. Matthew B. McNutt, D. D., Wooster, O.; Rev. Charles A. McConnell, Lakeville, O.; and Rev. J. T. Watts, Richmond, Va.

Dr. Edgar Blake, of Chicago, the President of the Council, in opening the first session delivered a strong address setting forth some of the things that should immediately engage the attention and effort of the Council. Two propositions were made by him.

First, that the denominations in their co-operative effort should devise some plan by which the existing agencies in undenominational Sunday-school work should be more fully utilized for the prosecution of the plans of the denominations represented in the Council.

His second proposition was, that the Council should, in the near future, devise some method by which co-operative institutes might be held in the various centers of the country, in order to educate the great army of Sunday-school workers in the best methods of prosecuting their work.

The report of the secretary was interesting because of the statement of denominational progress in Sunday-school work. The statistics presented by him showed that in the twenty-eight denominations associated with the Council, the total enrollment in the Sunday-schools amounts to 18,129,968, with four denominations yet to be heard from. The present net increase for the year is 965,305. There is no doubt that when the four denominations that have not yet reported send in their figures the increase will exceed the million mark during the year. This is regarded as a most gratifying showing, and all of the denominations report progressive methods and increasing interest.

The Council elected as its officers for the ensuing year: president, Rev. I. J. Van Ness (Southern Baptist); vice-president, Rev. Sidney A. Weston (Congregational); secretary, Rev. George T. Webb (Northern Baptist); treasurer, Mr. D. M. Smith (Southern Presbyterian.)

Our own Evangelical Sunday-schools were represented at this sixth annual session of the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations by the General Secretary, the Rev. Theodore Mayer, and by the Sunday-school Editor, the Rev. H. Katterjohn.

In order to make the presence of these two representatives of Evangelical Sunday-school work profitable to the local school, a rally of the Sunday-school workers of St. John's church had been planned for Thursday evening, January 29. Rev. Theodore Mayer presented the workers and teachers the vision of an ideal Sunday-school, in organization, aim and equipment. Rev. Henry Katterjohn presented the need of an Evangelical consciousness and pressed home the importance of Evangelical literature in developing this consciousness in the children and youth of our Sunday-schools.

During the days of the Council sessions the representatives of our Evangelical Synod were the guests of the hospitable pastor of the St. John's Church, Rev. O. Guthe, and his sister. Their hospitality was of the true southern variety, which considers only the comfort of the guests, and deems no sacrifice too great.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson Material for the Second Year: New Testament Studies—the Messianic Era and the Apostolic Era.

Lessons for the First Quarter, 1916

- Lesson 1. Jan. 2. Between the Testaments; Dan. 2:31—45.
Lesson 2. Jan. 9. The Origin and purpose of the Gospels; John 1:1—14; Luke 1:1—4.
Lesson 3. Jan. 16. The Growing Jesus; Luke 2:40—52.
Lesson 4. Jan. 23. The Voice Crying in the Wilderness; Matt. 3:1—12.
Lesson 5. Jan. 30. At the Gateway of Service; Matt. 3:13—17; 4:1—11; Mark:9—13.
Lesson 6. Feb. 6. Beginnings in Judea; John 2:13—25.
Lesson 7. Feb. 13. A Woman Lost in Sin; John 4:27—30; 39—42.
Lesson 8. Feb. 20. Beginnings in Gallilee; Luke 4:14—31.
Lesson 9. Feb. 27. Teaching with Authority; Matt. 5:1—16; 7:28, 29; Luke 6:20—26.
Lesson 10. Mar. 5. Miracles of Jesus, I; Luke 8:22—56.
Lesson 11. Mar. 12. Miracles of Jesus, II; John 5:17—31; 20:30—31.
Lesson 12. Mar. 19. Parables of Jesus; Matt. 13:10—17.
Lesson 13. Mar. 26. The Arising Opposition; John 6:60—71.

Lesson 10. The Miracles of Jesus

- M. Feb. 28. Mark 1:21—45. A Day of Miracles.
T. Feb. 29. Luke 8:22—56; John 21:30, 31. The Marvel of Jesus' Miracles.
W. Mar. 1. John 4:48—53. That thou Mayest Believe.

- T. Mar. 2. 2:9—12. The Greater Miracle.
F. Mar. 3. Luke 18:35—43. A Reward of Faith.
S. Mar. 4. John 5:25—36. A Witness of the Father.
S. Mar. 5. Luke 10:17—24; Mark 16:17—20.

Lesson Key:—"How God anointed Him (Jesus of Nazareth) with the Holy Spirit and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil," Acts 10:38.

The miracles of Jesus played a most important part in His ministry and as such deserve the most thoughtful and prayerful study. With many they have become a real stumbling-block to their faith, because with the development of science and the growth of knowledge of the laws that govern the phenomena of nature, miracles have come to appear unreasonable. Many antagonists of Christianity base their opposition to it chiefly upon the so-called—"fairy tales" of the Bible, alleging that "reason" can never countenance such an interference with the ordinary course of nature, and that either the miracles recorded in the Bible are mere legends that have crystalized about the great character of Jewish history in an age of ignorance and superstition, and have no real basis in fact, or that they represent preposterous claims on the part of these men, which the light of present-day knowledge makes entirely untenable. An approach to the study of miracles in an unprejudiced state of mind, however, and an intelligent view of the place they occupy in the whole scheme of God's revelation, will lead to a very different result.

To fairly appreciate the character of miracles it is necessary to understand the nature and the significance of the laws by means of which God governs His world and human life. Any intelligent view of nature and human life, and especially the Christian view, requires some uniform government of the universe. Any conception of the world that leaves human events and human action to mere chance or accident is unworthy of serious consideration. As far as men have been able to discover there are three sets of laws governing as many distinct departments of life and action. The laws of nature—by nature we mean the "sum total of the mechanical and chemical forces of the universe"—govern the behavior of inanimate things. The laws of psychology, the soul or mind, life in its widest sense, govern the development and the conduct of living things, while the laws of the spirit operate in the supernatural realm, the sphere to which man is related thru his highest and purest desires and ambitions. It should be remembered in this connection that, altho man has made great strides forward in the discovery and understanding of these different sets of laws, those who have searched most deeply, openmindedly and earnestly for the truth are not at all ready to say that they have even approached the point where they can comprehend the whole scheme of any one of them. "The work of the true man of science," says Sir Joseph Norman Lockyer, the eminent English astronomer and physicist, "is a perpetual striving after a better and clearer knowledge of the planet on which his lot is cast, and the universe in the vastness of which that planet is lost." It is a perpetual striving because those who have gone farthest see most clearly that the end is not yet—if it is ever attainable to the human understanding. Any claim therefore on the part of any one to speak with finality in regard to any of the laws referred to above is superficial and arrogant on its very face. This being the case it is clearly evident that the mere incomprehensibility of any phenomena by no means justifies the declaration of its unreasonableness, but is rather an incentive to further, deeper and more unprejudiced study.

The miracles of the Bible are extraordinary events with a definite Kingdom purpose at the time of their occurrence. They are miracles to us only because we are not able to grasp all the laws that have been in operation. To the untutored savage of the tropics the story of frost and ice is entirely unbelievable, and to vast numbers of civilized and intelligent people the things accomplished by means of the electrical current seem as the tales of the Arabian Nights. A wider knowledge and a more complete experience than we are now able to attain might very easily explain all that seems miraculous. Many miracles of the Bible are entirely natural occurrences, the miraculous element being the fact that they occurred just at a time when they best fitted into the things God was accomplishing.

If we believe in a Supreme Being who has laid down the laws of the universe and of life, such a Being must also have the power to suspend the laws He has laid down in the event that this should be necessary for carrying out any of His plans. A Supreme Being who would be mastered by His own laws would be unthinkable. How often, for instance, does a father or mother set aside the usual and customary order of their home for the sake of introducing something that will be of especial benefit to their children. How often does the teacher make some surprising and apparently unbelievable statement in order to stimulate the thought of his pupils, or to show them a new side of an old truth. No teacher has ever had better occasion, or knew better how to use these occasions to the best advantage, than Jesus Christ, and the miracles He performed were but special methods employed, not for the sake of glorifying himself, or like those of an ordinary magician, for merely impressing an ignorant and superstitious people, but with the purpose of arousing His people to an appreciation of the importance and the meaning of His teachings. He performed no miracle of any kind that did not have a clear and definite relation to the character or the promotion of the kingdom of God.

It is from this point of view that the miracles of Jesus should be studied, each one for itself, and then all of them together in their relationship to the ministry of Christ. The chronological arrangement of the thirty-five recorded miracles of Christ as found in the Advanced Quarterly will be found very helpful for this purpose, and we reprint it herewith.

Miracles of Jesus in Chronological Order

1. Water made wine. John 2: 1—11.
2. Heals the nobleman's son. John 4: 46—54.
3. Draught of fishes. Luke 5: 1—11.
4. Heals the demoniac. Mark 1: 23—26; Luke 4: 33—36.
5. Heal's Peter's wife's mother. Matt. 8: 14—17; Mark 1: 29—31; Luke 4: 38, 39.
6. Cleanses the leper. Matt. 8: 1—4; Mark 1: 40—45; Luke 5: 16—16.
7. Heals the paralytic. Matt. 9: 1—8; Mark 2: 1—12; Luke 5: 17—26.
8. Healing the impotent man. John 5: 1—6.
9. Restoring the withered hand. Matt. 12: 9—13; Mark 3: 1—5; Luke 6: 6—11.
10. Restores the centurion's servant. Matt. 8: 5—13; Luke 7: 1—10.
11. Raising of the widow's son. Luke 7: 11—16.
12. Heals a demoniac. Matt. 12: 22—37; Mark 3: 11; Luke 11: 14, 15.
13. Stills the tempest. Matt. 8: 23—27; 14: 32; Mark 4: 35—41; Luke 8: 22—25.
14. Casts devils out of two men of Gadara. Matt. 8: 28—34; Mark 5: 1—20; Luke 8: 26—39.
15. Raising of the daughter of Jairus. Matt. 9: 18, 19, 23—26; Mark 5: 22—24, 35—43; Luke 8: 41, 42, 49—56.
16. Cures woman with issue of blood. Matt. 9: 20—22; Mark 5: 25—34; Luke 8: 43—48.
17. Restores two blind men to sight. Matt. 9: 27—31.
18. Heals a demoniac. Matt. 9: 32, 33.
19. Feeds five thousand. Matt. 14: 15—21; Mark 6: 35—44; Luke 9: 12—17; John 6: 5—14.
20. Walks on sea. Matt. 14: 22—33; Mark 6: 45—52; John 6: 16—21.
21. Heals daughter of Syrophenician woman. Matt. 15: 21—28; Mark 7: 24—30.
22. Feeds four thousand people. Matt. 15: 32—39; Mark 8: 1—9.
23. Restores one deaf and dumb. Mark 7: 31—37.
24. Restores a blind man. Mark 8: 22—26.
25. Restores a lunatic child. Matt. 17: 14—21; Mark 9: 14—29; Luke 9: 37—43.
26. Tribute money obtained from a fish's mouth. Matt. 17: 24—27.
27. Restores ten lepers. Luke 17: 11—19.
28. Opens the eyes of a man born blind. John 9.
29. Raises Lazarus from the dead. John 11: 1—46.
30. Heals the woman with the spirit of infirmity. Luke 13: 10—17.
31. Cures a man afflicted with dropsy. Luke 14: 1—6.
32. Restores two blind men near Jericho. Matt. 20: 29—34; Mark 10: 46—52; Luke 18: 35—43.
33. Curses a fig tree. Matt. 21: 17—22; Mark 11: 12—14, 20—24.
34. Heals the ear of Malchus. Luke 22: 49—51.
35. Second draught of fishes. John 21: 6.

West Missouri District Continued from Page 4

all these services and the playing of Prof. A. H. Santer upon the new organ brought out the beautiful qualities of the instrument.

The Sunday-school Hall contains ten class rooms, the pastor's study and choir room. The organ, with an electric motor, was built by Kilgen of St. Louis and cost about $2,500.

The pastor and congregation are to be congratulated upon the success of their work, for they now have a beautiful and modern church home, which should inspire them to work even more earnestly for the coming of the Kingdom in their midst. F. C. K.

The Kingdom Within Continued from Page 5

Such was the manner of the presentation, "full of grace and truth." And its substance was just such spiritual truth as could only be expressed in this gracious form—the "law of liberty," freeing men from the obsession of all that is imposed from without—whether ceremony, or formal obedience, or traditional conformity, or superstitious fear—establishing the regnancy of the vital principles enthroned in a heart transformed by the grace of God, the loyal citadel of the kingdom within.

This is indeed a necessity involved in this law of liberty; but it is not "laid upon us," in Paul's phrase; rather does it grow out of our very being. The true gentleman, after all, is one in whom gentleness, courtesy and cultivation have become essential qualities—not mechanical or conventional, but natural. So no one can be a true Christian by virtue of mere conformity. The best conformists of Jesus' day were His fiercest enemies, and the name "Pharisee" has borne a stigma ever since. "The kingdom of God is within you," and unless it be within you, it cannot exist for you at all. The cry "lo here" and "lo, there" shall lead only deluded souls to the pursuit of a phantom.

The Spur of Unselfish Service

Now it shall not be denied that there are dangers involved in the inwardness of the Christian religion. There is such a thing as abnormal and perilous introspection—as witness the anguish of the timid soul convinced that it has committed the "unpardonable sin." But there is not much need in this age and this place for a warning against such an aberration of contrition. It may be pertinent, however, to insist that it is not an idle or a selfish inwardness to which Jesus calls His disciples. Mere contemplation, no matter how saintly, can never meet the tests that Jesus applies. The words of Christ are active as well as spiritual, with an activity that is constant because it is vital. "My Father worketh even until now and I work," He said to the Pharisees who charged Him with Sabbath-breaking. The light must shine; the seed must grow and multiply; the leaven must work; the truth must be proclaimed in all the earth; the bread of life must feed the hungry; faith must do more than move mountains; love must win the world to the God of love. The gospels are full of the energy of ceaseless beneficent activity, and Paul, the greatest of Christians, was also the greatest adventurer, the most untiring laborer, the most inexhaustive moral force of his day. Verily the kingdom cannot find lodgment in the heart of a sluggard.

Again, it is as plain as emphatic words can make it, that there is no place for self-seeking in the kingdom. Even James and John must not ask for heavenly preferment; if they do, they shall draw a sharp rebuke instead of a promise of reward. The rich young man goes away unaccepted and sorrowful because he cannot surrender the power and pleasure of his great possessions. And the whole bitter tragedy of the loneliness and defeat of the selfish, as well as the blessedness and high reward of sacrifice, is condensed in the marvelous words of the Master, "Except a grain of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth by itself alone; but if it die, it beareth much fruit." The kingdom of God is indeed within you; but being of God it is sure to have the highest and largest efficiency, thru heart and mind and hands establishing righteousness in all the earth.

The citizen of the kingdom, then, does not seek for preferment; he does not work for wages. His service grows out of an inner loyalty and energy that must express themselves as naturally and inevitably as the seed germinates and the plant grows and the fruit matures.

Concerted Action in the Brotherhood Continued from Page 4

opportunities—and the responsibility—of his great calling will make it his greatest concern and his most important business to have a vital message for the men of his church, and to make the services attractive and helpful for all of them. Men want life and reality in the preacher's message, and they will come to church with increasing regularity wherever the minister seeks to give the best he has.

Boost the Brotherhood

In view of what the Brotherhood can do for men and the Church, as outlined above, it will be the most natural thing in the world for men who want to do something for other men and for their Church to promote Brotherhood ideas and principles in every way possible. The movement is but in its infancy, and comparatively few Evangelical churches have grasped its value and its significance. There is need of continuous, earnest, enthusiastic agitation of the Brotherhood idea to the end that the principles and ideals for which it stands, as well as the results it can accomplish, may become better known and more generally applied. There will be another National Evangelical Brotherhood convention sometime, somewhere, during the coming year, and the preparations for that gathering afford a unique opportunity for advertising the Brotherhood wherever it is unknown or untried. Let all those who have discovered something of the Brotherhood blessings, make it their business to tell somebody about it who has not yet had such an experience. Talk and write Brotherhood whenever opportunity offers. Help to make a Brotherhood grow where none could grow before. Gather together the Brotherhoods that are scattered abroad, that their united influence may reach farther and deeper and higher than that of one or two. Above all, live the Brotherhood life in whole-hearted devotion to your Lord, in cheerful and earnest service to your congregation and your Church, so that men may see the good works of the Brotherhood and glorify your Father who is in heaven. And, by the way, a fine way to advertise the best and biggest thing for which the Brotherhood stands is to send copies of this and the two preceding issues of this paper to as many men of your acquaintance as you can think of, who are, or ought to be, in the Brotherhood somewhere. It will be sure to help the men themselves, the Brotherhood movement and the Evangelical Church.

It is said that Napoleon once had need of a soldier for a military feat so hazardous that in all probability it would cost the man his life. Standing before his army he explained the situation fully. Then turning his back and folding his arms in characteristic attitude, he cried: "If there is any man in my army willing to lay down his life for France, let him step out of the ranks." Facing about, his countenance fell, for the ranks were unbroken as before. But his marshal, saluting, said, "Sire, the whole army stepped forward."

When once all the men of the Evangelical churches have caught something of what the Brotherhood may mean to themselves, their Church and the kingdom of God on earth, will not the whole great army of Evangelical manhood step forward?

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

By RAY CLARKSON HARKER

60 pages. Paper cover

Only Ten Cents

There are earnest souls who are desiring to know the truth. There are perplexed people who are hesitating, wondering and hovering between two opinions. It is for the help of the sincerely perplexed and hesitating that we speak.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 5

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., MARCH 2nd, 1916

NUMBER 9

The Message of Lent

Lent stands for the most momentous fact in human history, the atoning and redeeming death of Jesus Christ. There are other momentous facts in human history, events and achievements that have been of far-reaching significance to the whole race. The confusion of tongues, the giving of the Law from Mount Sinai, the destruction of Jerusalem, the invention of movable type and of gunpowder, the discovery of America, of steam and electric power, and other things that might be mentioned, have all meant so much to the development and the enrichment of human life that even the countless volumes that have been written about them have not exhausted their ultimate and final meaning to the world. But none of them, nor even all of them together could for a moment be compared with the profound and infinite significance of the death of Jesus Christ. Great men and good have died before He did, and many more since then, and their passing away has left the world poorer, as men have missed the force of their personality, the influence of their character or the good deeds they accomplished or inspired. But the death of Jesus Christ has not left the world poorer but richer, because it gave to mankind something which it could not otherwise have gained, something which not even His matchless life, sublime and perfect as it was, could have given. With the death of Jesus Christ as the climax of His life there has been set to work in the world and in the lives of men a force that could not have been set free in any other way, a power for righteousness and truth, for joy and beauty, for peace and uplift, such as no human mind could have conceived.

For two millenniums the greatest human minds have sought to express in the deepest, most brilliant and most convincing language something like a fitting appreciation of the fundamental, eternal importance of this momentous fact in human history, and yet, if we had no other means of ascertaining the length and the breadth, the height and the depth of what this fact has meant to individual human beings, to whole nations and races and to all mankind, we should be forever groping in the dark. It is only when we look at the results that have been accomplished thru the influence of this remarkable fact thruout the centuries in every land under the whole heavens, that we are able to understand something of its divine and eternal meaning. The death of Jesus Christ has done what no power on earth could have accomplished. It has brought life out of death, given beauty for ashes, made barren lives fruitful, regenerated what seemed beyond hope of recovery and transfigured and glorified what was despised and rejected of men. The influence of the cross of Christ on the lives of men has been the standing wonder of the world from the day when it transformed a Saul, breathing threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, into the most powerful Christian teacher and missionary, down to the last convert of the rescue mission from a degraded outcast of society into a humble, penitent and fruitful Christian. No wizard of science or invention has ever brought forth anything that is at all comparable to what the Word of the Cross does for the world every day.

And the death of Jesus Christ has become the most momentous fact in human history because it met in the only possible way the greatest human need. Ever since "man's first disobedience" there has been active in the life of men a force that perverted human aspirations, poisoned human ambition, defiled the imagination, obscured man's vision of better and higher things, weakened his character and strengthened his baser impulses and passions. The force set free then has kept on working thru countless ages and generations with increasing momentum, except as those whose hearts were open to God's revelation have steadfastly and courageously worked together with Him in the conquest of this evil tendency. It was man's free will that set this force in motion, but man's free will has been unable to stop it tho he has tried again and again in every conceivable way. The evil that was done when Adam and Eve disobeyed the divine commandment passed out beyond their control into the whole race and all the world with an influence, the extent of which they had never suspected, which no one can ever measure and which none can arrest. Just as, pulsing out from the sun goes the light which is reaching the nearest fixed star, in the Centaur, after three and a half year's travelling, and then will go on and on, reaching different systems years and centuries after, so the sin they committed was as a little ray of lurid light: it passed out into an infinite universe of life, travelled and is still travelling thru countless individual lives. No one can ever arrest it and none can undo it. It is done, and it attaches to humanity for ever. And every

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Be noble, that is more than wealth;
Do right, that is more than place;
Then in the spirit there is health,
And gladness in the face. —Selected.

individual human being has become as it were, a distinct and separate center for radiating this perverting, debasing, poisoning and weakening influence, each one adding his larger or smaller share to the sum total of human wrong-doing. The things in our own lives which ought to have been and might have been better, the things we knew were wrong, the things which we cannot forget and cannot undo, are a picture in miniature of the vast mass of iniquity and corruption that has been piling up thru the ages and oppressing humanity with a terrible burden of guilt, tears and heart-ache, misery, wretchedness, suffering, disease and death. Mankind knows no greater and no more imperative need than that of conquering and abolishing this ceaseless and relentless evil influence which we call sin.

It is this need which the death of Jesus Christ meets fully and perfectly. God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not reckoning unto them their trespasses—for all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God; being justified freely by His grace thru the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: whom God set forth to be a propitiation thru faith, in His blood, to show His righteousness because of the passing over of the sins done aforetime, in the forbearance of God."

Such is the message of Lent to men, a message with a meaning so deep and far-reaching and so sublimely important to every side of human life that it cannot be preached, taught and published too insistently. And so the Evangelical Church, in its aim to be actually evangelical and really evangelistic, continues to emphasize the observance of the Lenten season, not as an outward form but as a means of spiritual growth; not in fasts, rituals or ceremonies, but as a period of quiet meditation for the sake of a fuller, a deeper and a larger personal Christian experience.

The South and Child Labor

Generally speaking the people of the South have not been enjoying an enviable reputation as to their attitude toward social progress in general and child labor laws in particular. The recent conference held by the National Child Labor Committee at Asheville,

N. C. has made it quite plain, however, that the people of the South, if they are given an opportunity to express their sentiments, are just as anxious to advance their social conditions as are those of the rest of the country. The report of the conference in The Survey makes it quite clear that child labor is not an issue between the North and the South, but between forward-looking people everywhere and the mill-men and the people who are supposed to represent the South in the state legislatures and in Congress.

Naturally the Southern cotton manufacturers were not silent: the greater part of the discussion related to them. But it was from this very discussion that the delegates learned who is boss in the South. For, if the lady from Alabama who said so feelingly, "In all our fight for a better law in Alabama our single opponent has been the cotton men," and the representative of Asheville's trade unions who said, "This State has been bossed by the cotton lobby long enough," and the doctor from Asheville who said, "If there was ever a time when it was necessary for little children to work in North Carolina, that time is past," knew what they were talking about, there is a large body of people in the South who resent the attempts of an industry to represent itself as the sole hope and stay of the poor people of that section.

A spirited exchange of telegrams between representatives of the Southern Textile Association and the chairman of the conference showed a deplorable and almost unintelligible lack of information as to the purpose, meaning and results of child labor and mothers' pension legislation on the part of the Association. Congressman J. J. Britt, representative of the Asheville district, has long been regarded as a friend of child labor legislation, but he voted against the Federal child labor bill on February 2. So he addressed a packed house at the conference to explain his opposition to the bill. Congressman Keating of Colorado, sponsor of the bill, was present to give his side.

Mr. Britt talked for an hour and the audience did not miss a single word of his unconscious support of the exploiters of children while saying he was a friend of child labor reform. He said he opposed the bill on two grounds, first, that it was unconstitutional, and second, that it would be harmful to the children. It was unconstitutional, he said, because it dealt with manufacture which cannot be regulated by Congress, and it would harm the children because it would take them out of industry and turn them into idlers on the streets.

The subsequent replies to Mr. Britt by Southern men and women indicated that they felt he had taken the wrong ground, and that the South really favors the Keating-Owen bill.

The Rev. R. F. Campbell, of Asheville, said: "It is not so much Mr. Britt's fault as yours and mine, my friends, that he voted against the bill when we wanted him to vote for it. We didn't tell him what we wanted, but the cotton mill men did. Let us tell our senators what we want before it is too late."

The next day, in the Auditorium, the largest hall in Asheville, Mr. Keating made his reply. He cited Supreme Court decisions that tended to prove the bill constitutional and showed that if Mr. Britt opposed the Keating bill on the ground that it would throw children out on the streets, he ought to have opposed the more stringent Weaver child labor bill which was defeated in the state legislature last year, but which Mr. Britt emphatically declared he had supported. "The Charlotte Observer says this morning, that Mr. Britt flayed me last night," said Mr. Keating. "I will not flay Mr. Britt. I leave that to his constituents."

THE LORD'S SUPPER

Prophecy and Fulfillment

"He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood abideth in me, and I in him," John 6: 54-56.

As the bread of life come down out of heaven Jesus claims to be the one indispensable spiritual nourishment, without which the inner life of the soul must inevitably suffer. Just as the food nourishes the body only by being absorbed and assimilated, so the bread of life offered to men can nourish the spiritual life only by becoming a part of our very life and being and of every activity. This process of assimilation is something which every one must do for himself, a very personal matter and one of the greatest importance, because upon it depends the life and the growth of the spiritual man, the development and the fruitfulness of the new life that is from above.

Jesus Christ is the living bread that came down out of heaven, because in His life there was that which brought true and actual life, strength and growth, yea, even the only true and real life, because it alone was in direct touch with the one Source and beginning of eternal life, and because it did not need to be nourished by perishable and temporary earthly food. But it was the death of Christ on the cross as the climax of the life He lived and the work He did that made Him the bread of life in the fullest possible sense. Just as the plants and animals that serve as our food do so only after their death—in a very real sense they suffer physical death that our physical life may be fed—so Jesus becomes the nourishment of the spiritual life in the highest and most complete sense when, as the crucified Lamb of God He gave His life as a ransom for many. With this in mind He says, "The bread which I will give is my flesh, for the life of the world." In dying He becomes the true Bread of Life, because in dying He—and in Him there dwelleth the fullness of the Godhead bodily—shares with mankind to the uttermost; in dying He bears our sorrows and our sins, and makes clear that only His absolute love for men and His absolute submission to God were the moving forces of His life. "Such was His life, and by the cross He made it ours. The cross subdues our hearts to Him, and makes us to feel that self-sacrifice is the true life of man."

All the Way

There is thus a distinct progress in the change from the term "bread of life" to the words "flesh" and "blood" which are used in the latter part of Jesus' discourse. The flesh of Christ can only mean His human form as the manifestation of God's love for men, the visible material of His sacrifice. His blood can mean nothing else than the source and essence of His life, which was shed for men to prove the utter and unreserved surrender with which He freely gave himself, even to the last drop of blood. No one ever went as far as He did in giving himself, and none could do more than He has done. In giving His flesh and shedding His blood Jesus Christ has gone all the way in self-surrender and self-sacrifice, and when He says, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood, ye have not life in yourselves," He expects us to go all the way in our response to His self-surrender and self-sacrifice. Not only His life with the truth, the righteousness and salvation which it embodies, but also His death, with the love, the sacrifice and the redemption for which it stands, are to become a part of our own lives by eating and drinking. The living Christ was a unique and an irresistible power among His people; the crucified and risen Christ is a world-force to whom all authority is given in heaven and on earth; the living Christ was Teacher, Example, Friend, Physician and Shepherd; the crucified and risen Christ is all this and in addition to it Saviour, Redeemer and Head of the body which is the Church and Prophet, Priest and King. To eat His flesh and to drink His blood means to receive and accept Him as such, and to make all that He stands for in His life and His death an essential part of our whole life, character and conduct.

The Prophecy

As we think of the deep and eternal meaning of His words we can hardly help remembering those so similar in form and meaning uttered in that upper room at Jerusalem on the same night in which He was betrayed, when He said to His disciples, "Take, eat, this is My body, which is given for you; this do in remembrance of Me," and "Drink ye all of it, this cup is the New Testament in My blood, which is shed for you for the remission of sins; this do ye, as oft as ye drink it in remembrance of Me." It was the one aim of His life to transform sinful persons into His own pure and perfect image, to make human hearts and lives Christlike, so that His faith might become our faith, His love our love, His life our life, and all our emotions, thoughts and deeds might breathe His spirit. His flesh and His blood which He has given for the life of the world stand for the sin-conquering power of His purifying and inspiring life and His atoning and redeeming death. The memorial supper which He institutes on the last occasion where He is with His disciples in the flesh is to be a continual reminder of the need of eating His flesh and drinking His blood. To the followers of Jesus every celebration of the Lord's Supper is a profession, not only that Jesus Christ has died, but that He has died for them. We thus proclaim the atoning death of Christ and bear witness that we lost and condemned sinners could not be saved except thru His death, and thru the offering of His life we receive forgiveness of sins.

Tho the Jews strove with one another, saying, "How can this man give us His flesh to eat?" Jesus ignores their striving. The question as to how the assimilation takes place is of secondary importance to those who long for spiritual strength and growth, just as the question as to how the food one eats feeds body, brain and nerve is of little importance to the hungry man seeking strength for his labors. All the answer the Jews got to their striving is another and a more emphatic statement that the eating of His flesh and the drinking of His blood is indispensable to securing eternal life, and that therefore His flesh is meat and His blood is drink indeed. To His hearers the words were a prophecy of the significance of His death, to us the Lord's Supper is a memorial; to his hearers the words were a standing invitation to the closest imaginable relationship and communion with Him and the Father, to us it is the essential nourishment of the new life, the constant renewal of the communion with Christ as Saviour and Lord, and with all believers, and a continuous testimony of Jesus' death for us.

Thus the feeding of the five thousand and the divinely deep discourse that followed became a prophecy of the Lord's Supper and its wealth of spiritual blessings. As the Lenten Season approaches we cannot do better than to meditate upon the infinite richness of our redemption thru Christ and to utilize the best advantage the spiritual gifts which the sacrament of the Lord's Supper holds for us.

The Old Hampton Place

BY HILDA RICHMOND

IV

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS. Thomas and Cordelia Hampton, brother and sister, victims of a city boarding-house, receive news of the death of an eccentric old bachelor uncle, supposed to have burned to death in his barn. They attend the funeral and while enjoying the hospitality of a neighbor, become enamored of country life. After consulting a lawyer Thomas decides to take possession of his deceased uncle's farm and undertakes to make the neglected house habitable. They also bring a new spirit of sociability into the neighborhood.

"Help get ready for a social!" said Pauline Gross who was visiting her cousin. "I thought you told me, Grace, that you never had anything going on out here."

"Everything is different this winter, Pauline," said Grace turning red. "Hurry up! We have the tables to set and everything to do."

"But I want to know all about it," said Pauline with provoking slowness. "I went with Aunt Hattie to a social—a church social—out here one time and you said it was as dry as dust. I do not remember that it was a solemn occasion, but we had a good supper. There were about nineteen people there."

"Well, you put on your wraps and you'll see something different," said Grace, laughing. "We're progressing."

It was a bitter day with the snow whirling in every direction, and the young girl, who was a stenographer from the city, was not anxious to leave the comfortable sitting room to walk to a social, however near it might be, but politeness and the fact that the Gross family wanted to go dragged her out. She felt like a martyr, but before reaching the Old Hampton place the cold bracing wind had given her a different feeling.

"This place looks different," was her comment as they entered the yard; "I remember you said it fell into the hands of two young city people. The cream colored house with the background of evergreens is quite pretty."

"Papa says Thomas and Cordelia have added twenty dollars per acre to the value of the farm by putting in those extra windows and painting the house. It took all their money, but if they want to sell they will get it all back, Papa says."

Pauline Gross had been brought up on a farm and was used to seeing comfortable and beautiful country houses, but she decided quickly that no person of her acquaintance had ever made the best of a few little things in the way her young hostess had done. The dainty curtains at the windows looked like little girls' frocks, the blossoming plants were in full bloom, the few books and cheap ornaments were placed to show to the best advantage and the old solid furniture had been polished till it shone. It was evident that a very little money had been spent on the place, but never had money been spent to such good advantage. Everything was in harmony and everything was speckless and spotless.

Thomas Hampton had undertaken to feed sheep "on shares" for several farmers and it kept him busy running from one old shack to another to care for them, but he tore himself away from his chores long enough to set up the tables in each of the downstairs rooms and then the girls went to work to arrange them. Acting on the advice of Mr. Gross he had husked all the corn he could, taking his pay in fodder, and then he secured a number of sheep to feed on shares. The old sheds were not warm enough to take any other kind of stock, but the sheep did well with the rough shelter, as their heavy coats made snug barns too warm for them.

"And do you play games?" gasped Pauline who was bidden to sit by the fire and number a collection of pictures which were to be used in a little contest.

"We certainly do, and we have music and all sorts of good times. Cordelia has a little surprise for this evening so you must not tell it. She found an old melodion in the attic and we're going to bring it in after the supper is served and give an old-fashioned concert. You'll have to help. I brought along an extra bonnet and shawl and we can easily fit you out. We always have to serve the supper first so as to have plenty of room. The young men quickly carry out the tables once we are thru eating and then the fun begins. You'll see."

"Where do you get your food?" asked Pauline all interest now.

"Every one of us brings something, but not in the old way. Church socials used to be burdensome things because the ladies had to spend so much time getting ready, but come out to the kitchen and see how we manage now. It was Cordelia's idea."

Pauline deserted the game and flocked with the others to the kitchen. There on the big stove large kettles of chicken were stewing while the oven was piled full of clean potatoes and sweet potatoes of even size. Under the potatoes was a big pan of oysters and on the back of the stove were several granite pans filled with vegetables.

"Each lady sends her food and the young girls cook it," said Frances. "It makes socials very easy. We have a big basket of old dishes and that basket makes the rounds wherever there is any kind of entertaining. Some day we girls are going to buy a number of matched plates and cups and glasses, but for the present these do very well."

"There they come!" cried Grace. "I'm glad. This cold weather makes me ravenous."

In less than half an hour the people gathered, young, old and middle aged, until there were fifty-nine in the big farm house, exclusive of the twelve young people who were to serve the supper. The evening chores had been done early so that six o'clock found them hungry and happy. For the sake of the little children early hours had to be kept and all the guests were ready for the hot supper simmering on the cook stove.

"If we had good times like this back in our old neighborhood I might be there to-day," said Pauline with tears in her eyes as the whole company rose while the minister said grace. "Why, this is actually fun!"

The waiters flew to their tasks and a procession of hot chicken, potatoes, oysters and sweet potatoes was soon moving toward the living rooms. "If Richard Hampton could see all the people he never neighbored with eating in his house he'd certainly lose his mind," whispered Grace to Frances as they filled plates together in the kitchen. "Of course I'm sorry for his death, going the way he did, but isn't it nice for our community that this place fell into such good hands?"

"It certainly is, Grace, and papa says he thinks Thomas and Cordelia will succeed. They are both so teachable and so grateful for advice. I think they have both done wonders for the neighborhood. I got my check for my fancy work from the Women's Exchange to-day and it was eleven dollars and fifty cents."

"And mine was nine-forty. Of course we had a great deal of company last month but this month I have done better. And the boys are making some good money too, shipping produce direct to consumers. We might have thought of those things years ago, but we never did. Cordelia says that ten dollars a month when you're at home in the country means as much as forty in the city."

"Now for the desert," said Fred Dillon. "Even the kiddies can hold no more chicken."

The simple desert of gingerbread and fresh apple sauce went round and then the waiters sat down to eat their food. The older ladies and some of the men carried out dishes and tables while several people hastily washed the dishes, and by the time the waiters were thru with their supper the living rooms were in good order.

"Isn't it lovely that we always have food that requires few dishes?" said the minister's wife looking up from her task of packing the community dishes in a basket. "Where we lived before it always took several hours to clear away and wash the dishes and then it was time to go home. This way we have just enough food for all with none wasted and the dish-washing can be done in less than an hour. But then everything is different in this neighborhood," she added happily. "It used to break my heart to see the empty seats in the country church, but now we have fine congregations."

"Don't tell her about last year and the year before," whispered Grace. "They have only been here since October."

"And do you go to Sunday-school?" asked Pauline. "You told me—"

"Of course I told you a lot of foolishness," broke in Grace. "I not only go to Sunday-school, but I play the piano—we have a piano if you please—and I teach a class. Our neighborhood has turned over a new leaf as you'll see presently. This is your first day here and you can't be expected to see all the wonderful things that have happened."

"Time for the concert!" whispered John loudly. "Ladies dress in the front bedroom upstairs and men in the old guest room. Hurry up! Things are lagging in the parlor."

Presently down the back stairs stole a wonderful procession of girls in hoop skirts and scoop bonnets, young men in linen dusters of bygone days and impossible silk hats rescued from garrets and barns, several little children decked out in the quaint costumes of nearly one hundred years ago and even Mr. Gross wearing his grandfather's wedding suit of moth-eaten broadcloth. Pauline led the way demure in a wedding costume of ashes-of-roses silk with a veil gathered over the scoop of her quaint bonnet with its bushel of roses in the brim and her silk mitts and high-heeled slippers, and John brought up the rear clad in a buckskin hunting shirt to represent the pioneer period. The melodion was quickly set up and the group gathered about the wheezy instrument.

"Sing 'Should Auld Acquaintance Be Forgot?'" called the minister quickly.

"Sing, 'Lily Dale'" called another.

"Silver Threads Among the Gold!"

One and another clamored for old time favorites, but into the midst of the merry tumult the old melodion gave forth the tune of "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," and everyone was satisfied. Perhaps the singing was not what it might have been as to time or melody, but it was quite satisfying to the assembled company and they sang heartily in spite of the big supper in which they had just indulged.

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

Opportunity

A New Version

They do me wrong who say I come no more
When once I knock and fail to find you in;
For every day I stand outside your door,
And bid you wake and rise to fight and win.

Wail not for precious chances passed away,
Weep not for golden ages on the wane;
Each night I burn the records of the day,
At sunrise every soul is born again.

Laugh like a boy at splendors that have sped,
To vanished joys be blind and deaf and dumb;
My judgments seal the dead past with its dead,
But never bind a moment yet to come.

Tho deep in mire ring not your hands and weep,
I lend my arm to all who say "I can."
No shamefaced outcast ever sank so deep
But might arise and be again a man.

Dost thou behold thy lost youth all aghast?
Dost reel from righteous retribution's blow?
Then turn from blotted archives of the past
And find the future's pages white as snow.

Art thou a mourner? Then rouse thee from thy spell!
Art thou a sinner? Sins may be forgiven;
Each morning gives thee wings to flee from hell,
Each night a star to guide thy feet to heaven.

—R. B. Malone.

A "Hired Girl's" Experience

Usually it is the man who is commended for working his way from lowly estate to a comfortable position in life. But few men have had to contend with the discouragements which meet a young woman, forced to earn a living by housework, who aspires to better her condition. How one woman succeeded is told by a physician's wife who writes to a Chicago newspaper:

"I am a married woman, 45 years old, have two grown sons, both away at college now. My husband is a physician with a good practice and we are in very good financial circumstances; own our beautiful home and have an automobile. I keep one maid and a man to work about the house and could spend more money and put on lots more 'style' than I do if I wanted to.

"My parents died while I was a child and my relatives beat me out of the little money that was left. At the age of 11 I hired out to a neighbor as a nurse girl, receiving $2 a month, with room and board. When I was 13 she raised my wages to $4 a month. I did all the light housework and tended the babies.

"After I was about 15 I hired out as a 'regular' domestic. I learned from my mistress to make my own clothes, trim a hat and the like and was able to save a few dollars each month. My wages ranged from $6 to $8 a month.

"I always wished that I could go to school and learn how to write (I could read a little), but I did not see my way clear until by mistress suggested night school. After going to night school for a time I got a place where I could work for my room and board and $4 a month and attend a day school. After I was 18 I took a county teachers examination, and to my surprise received a second grade certificate. Thru the kindness of my mistress I secured a position in the country school at $35 a month and the following three years in a country town at $50 a month.

"During vacation, after spending three or four weeks in a summer school, I hired out again, doing general housework at $12 a month, and at one of these places I met my husband, who was the family physician there.

"I remember how I resented his quizzical look, and try as he would I would not get familiar with him, but kept my place and made him keep his.

"He knew my whole history, and in spite of my extremely plain looks and the objections of his family—especially his three sisters—he married me.

"We have been married now twenty-two years, live happily and are contented. I think my ability from the very first to cook my husband a good, square meal, keep the home sweet and clean, and my habit of saving money has been the means of our success and happiness."

The Blessing of a Sense of Humor

"The best fence against care is ha! ha! Wherefore take care to have one all round you wherever you can." So wrote Thomas Hood, who often, during his troubled career, had occasion to prove the truth of his own words. His prescription was in line with that of the Bible sage who said, "A cheerful heart is a good medicine." And these two authorities were rightly interpreted by the clerk at a particular nerve-racking post of labor who had pasted by his side the genial motto, "Keep Smiling."

What gift of nature is more genuinely to be prized than a healthy sense of humor? The man or woman who has the power of exacting fun from every situation has a real weapon against the ills of life. To be able to laugh with honest mirth is a saving grace which we may well covet. The one element lacking in many a noble soul is just this. We feel instinctively how much happier and more interesting many good people would be if they could respond to the ludicrous side of some of life's most trying experiences. It was one of the qualities that made great-souled Martin Luther so sane and so immensely effective that he could, amid his great cares, laugh and play, on occasion, like a schoolboy.

Humor is a gift that may be cultivated. Children may be trained to look upon the funny rather than the doleful side of their experiences. A little boy who fell from a tree and had his leg broken did not complain. While the surgeons were setting the limb he kept brave and cheerful. Afterwards his mother, who was outside his room because she could not keep back her tears when she saw his suffering, heard a faint sound and went to his door, thinking he was crying. "Did you want something?" she asked. "Oh, no, nothing," the boy said, "I didn't call, I just thought I'd try singing a bit," and he went on with the song. It would help us all to get more of this spirit into life. —Exchange.

Homes for the Homeless

One of the most gratifying signs of the times is the emphasis social workers and public officials are placing upon the value of home life in social rehabilitation and the development of character. No other human institution can equal the Christian family in the force and the extent of its influence upon the physical, the social and the religious life of its members. There is no greater need than that of a home, and none can give more than those who give a real home to those who are in need of one. We commend the following announcement to all who may come within its provisions:

Do you want to take a boy into your home and give him the advantages of natural home life and a chance to make something of himself? If so, apply to the Board of Children's Guardians of the City of St. Louis, as they are looking for homes for twenty boys ranging up to fifteen years of age. Some are brothers, and, if possible, must be kept together in one home. A few of the boys are at work and can pay most of the expense of keeping them, and in the case of the younger boys the Board of Children's Guardians will pay for their supervision and care. The Board has several girls to be placed out, three of them being over fourteen years of age and available as assistants in simple household duties. As a rule it is easier to find homes for girls than for boys.

The Board of Children's Guardians is a municipal body appointed by the Mayor, and they have charge of all the homeless children of St. Louis. It is their experience that children boarded out in good private families under this method, develop much more satisfactorily than when kept as formerly in an institution.

Every application is thoroly investigated before a child is placed in a home and references must be given. Regular school and church attendance is required and the religion of the foster home must correspond to that of the child. No child is placed more than fifty miles from St. Louis, so that they can be supervised with reasonable regularity.

People interested may get additional information by writing or applying at the office of the Board of Children's Guardians, 237 Municipal Courts Bldg., St. Louis.

Denominational

Church Extension Board Offering

In 1 Cor. 12 St. Paul compares the Church with a body, of which Christ is the Head. It is shown there how all the members are dependent on one another. The Evangelical Synod is also such a body connected by various branches of activity. One of these branches, which has proven itself vigorous and fruitful is the Church Extension Fund. This Fund is a medium whereby small and needy congregations are enabled to erect or procure a church home. By this means very many of our congregations have become self-sustaining, and at present there are over 100 congregations which enjoy the aid of loans from the Fund at the most favorable rates. But still too many must be put off or denied aid entirely, because there is not money enough to meet all requests for assistance. Therefore the congregations of the Synod are called upon to contribute an offering towards the Fund on Reminisce Sunday, (Ps. 25: 6), March 19th next, which is heartily recommended to the benevolence of all our people, for "if one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it."

By order of Board for the Church Extension Fund.
F. J. Buschmann.

Weal and Woe

Of Retired Evangelical Pastors and Widows of Deceased Pastors

In the good old by-gone days when letters were written with home-made quills, typewriters and night messages being unknown, it was customary to add to every long letter one or more postscripts. These were usually read first because they generally contained the latest and best news. It might seem to some as if the editor of the Weal and Woe column were returning to the old custom, for to the original communication he is adding one postscript after another. This time he again has a number of them to add to the former articles and the kind reader has the privilege to read first whichever one he wishes.

From Indiana we received the following letter:

"From your article we see that you would like to give a larger appropriation to all who are dependent on the Relief Fund. We are heartily in favor of this and therefore send our gifts for this purpose. The joyous Christmas festival has reminded us of our obligations and shown us the right spirit of giving, and we desire to obey His voice. His ways are often different from ours, but we should always say 'Thy will be done.' May His blessings rest upon all our institutions for charity, upon those that receive and those that give and may the number of the latter increase.

With best wishes

R. & M. P.

Another response came from New Brighton, Pa.: "Enclosed find a donation for the Pension and Relief Fund." Our hearty thanks to the kind donor, who did not sign his name. From St. Louis we also received a gift from an "old friend" and from one of our pastors' widows the following letter:

Dear Pastor:—

Very often I have thought of responding to your kind request, to tell you how you are getting along, but until now I have neglected to do so. To-day I read in the church paper that some readers do not like 'Jeremiades,' and so I have decided to let them have the songs of praise and thanks that I have to offer. When I think of what the Evangelical Synod has been doing for me thru the Pension and Relief Fund, I am impelled to sing only such songs.

"When my dear husband was suddenly and unexpectedly taken from me I was almost without means with five children between the ages of two and twelve. I had to move to the city in order to secure an income by renting out rooms and taking in boarders. I chose this method in order to keep my children together. After we had found a home and bought the most necessary furnishings, the little sum we had saved was all used up. With a family of seven to provide for on a salary of $350.00 and a few incidentals, a pastor cannot save very much.

In the beginning I was not very successful in finding boarders and my heart was often burdened with cares. The day, on which the rent must be paid always came so fast, it seemed. The Pension Fund however came to my relief. Often I should have not known where to get the money, if the Synod had not so generously granted me a pension, altho my husband was not able to give his services more than eight years. I can not tell you how grateful I feel toward those men whose hearts were moved by God to sympathize with the widows so that they instituted the Fund we now have. Words will not express the gratitude I feel toward the kind donors who are helping to supply the necessary funds.

God bless all of them and the Evangelical Synod for such love. What would have become of me and my children if they had not helped me! I am sure that many more widows feel as grateful as I am.

"With best wishes for the Board.

A Grateful Widow."

After all these postscripts we are now ready to take up our line of thought where we left off, but for this time we have no more space and therefore close with the words "To be continued." If in the meantime any one has any suggestions to make or sends us interesting data to communicate to the friends of the cause, they will be cheerfully accepted.

With kind regards

J. Schoettle,

Chairman, Soliciting Com.

432 Kellum St., Scranton, Pa.

"INTO ALL THE WORLD"

How Saul of Tarsus became the Persecutor of the Church. Was he trying to kick against the Goad as, during the long Journey to Damascus, he meditates upon his past Experiences?

I

With the International Uniform Sunday-school lesson for Mar. 5 there enters upon the stage of the Acts of the Apostles the figure that soon becomes the hero of the entire story. The importance of that figure for the inner and outward development of Christianity, as well as the example of unflinching zeal roused the Jews, especially those in the Hellenist synagogues, where he, as himself a Hellenist, had chiefly preached. This teaching marks a forward step for the whole Church. Stephen was not disowned by the Apostles, tho he was more radical than they, and believers generally seem to have recognized him as uttering the mind of Christ. His trial and execution, and devotion even unto the bitter end which his life affords, make a study of that life, always interesting, especially timely. In view of the fact that practically all the International Uniform lessons for the coming year deal with the life and work of the "young man named Saul," the first and the greatest of a long and glorious line of Christian missionaries and teachers, it seems well worth while to attempt at least an outline of a connected view of his life, his spiritual development, and of his monumental work. The study may also serve as a kind of historical background for a number of later articles on the past and the present of the Near East, which has again become the scene of a mighty struggle between two opposing civilizations, Islam and Christianity, and where, as many think, the great war is to bring forth a new and a better order of things that will profoundly affect the future of the Kingdom of God on earth.

Present-day Tarsus

With the appointment of the seven deacons, Acts 6: 1-7, there had begun a period of great activity and rapid growth for the church of Jerusalem. Especially, no doubt, since "a great company of priests were obedient to the faith." The term "were obedient" may have been carefully chosen: these converts to the teachings of Christ merely added the laws of Christ to the strict Hebrew ritual, which is all the more probable as the lower priests were mainly Pharisees, in contrast to the Sadducee chief-priests. The Church could still be mistaken—and no doubt often was—for a mere school of Judaism.

The "Young Man named Saul"

Stephen burst these bonds. His teaching that the Temple and the law of Moses were merely temporary, outwardly at least, seem to have followed the forms of the law, so as to give to his death the appearance of a judicial execution. According to the law Stephen was taken outside the camp, Lev. 24: 11; the witnesses cast the first stone at Him, Deut. 17: 7, preparing for the active work by taking off their upper garments and giving them in charge to the "young man named Saul," who was no doubt a person of some consequence in spite of his youth, and was apparently in charge of the whole proceedings. He may have been especially delegated for this task as an "unofficial" representative of the Sanhedrin, who for reasons of its own may have preferred to let the matter take the form of a popular uprising, rather than that of official action.

The entrance of this "young man named Saul" marks a new epoch in the history of Christianity, for thru his influence the persecution of the Christians, begun as an isolated incident in the death of Stephen became general in the city, so that the members of the Church were scattered abroad thruout Judea and Samaria. Saul thus became the first real persecutor of the Church. And his conversion a short time later is one of the most striking incidents recorded in the Bible. No greater transformation ever occurred thru the work of the Spirit of Jesus Christ than that of which made of this youthful fanatic who "verily thought that he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth," Acts 26: 9, "a chosen vessel unto the Lord, to bear His name before the Gentiles and kings, and the children of Israel," 9: 15.

According to his own words, Acts 22: 3, Saul was a native of Tarsus in Cilicia, "no mean city," 21: 39, the "son of a Pharisee," 23: 6, "circumcised on the eight day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of Hebrews," Phil 3: 5. Being "Roman born" his father must have been a Roman citizen, which would indicate that he was a man of influence and perhaps of wealth.

"No Mean City"

The city of Tarsus is said to be nearly 3,000 years old, and at the time of Paul's youth was indeed no mean city. Beautifully situated amid romantic scenery, with the Taurus mountain range piling up its snow capped peaks in the distance northward, it was the key to the large and fertile agricultural region to the east and northeast, and was early the center of trade for south-eastern Asia Minor. The Cydnus, now called the Tersus, a powerful mountain stream, which rushed thru the city on its way to the ocean, was the stream in which Alexander, when on his way to conquer India, took the cold bath which nearly cost him his life, and the effect of which is said to have weakened him so that he succumbed all the easier to his dissipations. The city is said to have been founded by Asurbanipal in the seventh century B. C., and what is said to be the ruins of his burial-place are still standing, a huge massive square of masonry, with walls nearly fifteen feet in thickness. It is probable that the place was one of the chief shrines of the pagan tribes of that region, who worshipped the sun-god with wild orgies as late as the first century A. D.

Thru the famous mountain pass, the "Porta Cilicia" there came to Tarsus the trade of a large inland region, and in his boyhood the future Apostle no doubt was very familiar with the sight of caravans from Galatia, Asia and Pontus and the other provinces, as well as with the ships from every port on the Mediterranean. His advice to the Roman centurion, Acts 27: 10, seems to show some familiarity with the sea, due no doubt to what he had heard in the streets and the basars of his native city. And when we think of his eagerness to go forth into new and strange countries to preach the Gospel he had learned to love, we may well imagine that Gal. 1: 15 refers to a fondness for travel and adventure which had early filled his mind, a kind of "wanderlust" which his devotion to Christ had consecrated for the purposes of the Kingdom. How often, when he met his countrymen from the distant inland towns, may he have longed to visit them and learn their ways of living. Now Tarsus is a comparatively insignificant city of barely 20,000 inhabitants, its trade demoralized by centuries of Turkish misgovernment.

The Boy Saul

In his youth Saul seems to have received the usual thoro training of the Jewish boy. After going thru the school under the care of the synagog at Tarsus, he was sent to Jerusalem to complete his education, and also no doubt, in order to remove him from the temptations to which the pagan festivals as well as the flourishing institutions of heathen learning exposed him. At Jerusalem he was brought up "at the feet of Gamaliel and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers," Acts 22: 3, and the use he makes of the Old Testament Scriptures show that he was intimately acquainted with their contents. His quotations from three comparatively obscure Greek poets show him quite well acquainted with Greek philosophy and literature. In contrast to Christ, who was very much in the country, and drew His illustrations from country life chiefly, Saul was a man of the city, who sought the city and drew his illustrations from them.

We know nothing of Saul's family except that he had a sister who lived at Jerusalem, 23: 16, and other relatives who lived at Rome, Rom. 16: 7, 11. The weaving of tents from cloth made of the hair of the Cilician goats, which were especially numerous in the mountains north of the city, was one of the important industries of Tarsus, and in accordance with the old Jewish proverb that "he who teaches his son no trade, teaches him to be a thief," the boy's father had him learn the trade of a tent-maker. Little could he know how grateful his son would one day be to him for having taught him a trade by which he could support himself, Acts 18: 3; 20: 34; 1 Cor. 4: 12; 1 Thess. 2: 9; 2 Thess. 3: 8. How earnestly the young boy learned to obey the law of Moses appears from 23: 1 and 24: 16, where he claims a "conscience void of offence toward God and men always."

Saul the Persecutor

As Saul cannot well have been more than ten years younger than Jesus, and may have been still at Gamaliel's feet during our Lord's public ministry, he may well have known Jesus "after the flesh," tho such knowledge did not end in any saving interest in Him.

On the contrary Saul seems to have been led into a deep antagonism to Christ and His cause, so that, as a "Pharisee of the Pharisees" he came to regard Him as the enemy of all that was most sacred to Jews. Tho a pupil of Gamaliel, Saul did not follow his master in his tolerant course, 5: 33-40, but with the fiery ardor of youth, was ready to undertake a crusade against the Christian cause. He was essentially a man of action, and when Stephen had obtained the crown of martyrdom, he was not content to let the matter rest there, but sought and secured authority from the chief priests to hunt down the Christians at Jerusalem and in other cities. Acts 26: 10, where Paul states that he voted against many of the saints when they were shut up in prison or put to death, may mean that he was, in spite of his youth, a member of the Sanhedrin at the time. The new faith seemed to him the climax of foolishness. Nothing could be more senseless to his mind than to expect the salvation of the world from a dead man, and it seemed all the more senseless as Jesus had died the shameful death of a criminal. For every educated Israelite the verdict of the Law was clear and to the point: "For he that is hanged is accursed of God," Deut. 21: 23. If the new sect looked to one as its leader who was cursed of God, it was plainly the duty of every loyal Israelite to use every means in his power to stamp out the wicked heresy.

Saul led into Damascus

The thoroughness and fierceness with which Saul went to work must have meant a reign of terror for the Christians at Jerusalem. He laid waste the church, entering into every house, and dragging men and women, committed them to prison, so that all the members of the Jerusalem church, except the apostles, were scattered abroad thruout the regions of Judea, Acts 8: 1-3. Those who did not seek safety in flight were sure of being discovered and cast into prison or put to death. Many a Christian family, deeming themselves safe in their concealment were suddenly visited by the secret agents of the persecution and dragged forth to captivity or death. No age or sex was spared, and no entreaties could move Saul's heart of iron. Imprisonment did not seem cruel enough, not even scourging was sufficient, Saul's fanaticism was such that slaughter, Acts 9: 1, was the only fitting description of his conduct.

On the Road to Damascus

And when the awful work had been well done at Jerusalem, the same zeal that later would not let him rest as long as he could bring the Gospel to some region hitherto unreached now made him seek other cities for his cruel work. It was an easy matter to secure letters to the synagogs in Damascus from the high priest, that any men or women who followed the new way who might be found in that ancient city were to be brought bound to Jerusalem. Damascus had a large Jewish population, for Josephus tells us that during the Jewish wars from ten to fifteen thousand Jews were massacred at Damascus in one day! It is quite likely that large numbers of Christians fleeing from the wrath of Saul, had found refuge with their countrymen there, and that the new teaching was already making rapid progress in the synagogs, since the city, because of its distance from Jerusalem, seemed safe from persecution.

It was a journey of about eight days from Jerusalem to Damascus, and the road led past Capernaum in Galilee, where the Man from Nazareth whose work he was seeking to destroy, had spent the greater part of His life, and thru a quiet wilderness and mountain region where he had time to think of what he had undertaken to do. And it would have been strange indeed if he had been able to forget the sight of the innumerable Christians he had lately seen holding firmly to their faith in the midst of persecution, and even in the face of cruel death itself. They did not reproach nor revile those who dragged them from their homes and cast them into prison, and even the tear-stained faces of the women seemed transfigured by the joy of coming into the presence of their Lord. Their faith and hope never seemed so firm and triumphant as just when, in the usual course of events, human hopes are dashed to pieces.

What was it that made these people able to die thus? Saul could not help asking. Would his own trust in Moses and the Law and the Temple be able to bear him up thus in a similar situation? And the way in which these people pointed to the Scriptures to prove their convictions was disconcerting in the extreme. In answer to his strongest argument, that every one is cursed who hangeth upon the tree, they quietly pointed to Isa. 53 and asked, "Behooved it not the Christ to suffer these things, and to enter into His glory?" Luke 24: 25, 26. It was only natural that thoughts like these should have brought on the beginning of an inward conflict, and the despairing outcry, "Wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me out of the body of this death?" may have formulated itself in his heart during this journey to Damascus. But like a stubborn ox he was trying to kick against the goad, and for a man of his strong convictions it required a compelling personal experience to make him see the way his Lord would have him go.

How it happened

It was the last day of the journey. The snow-topped heights of Hermon lay behind them and the countless lofty spires and the beautiful palm gardens of the ancient city were already visible in the distance. Suddenly, at midday the whole party was startled by a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining around them. And out of the dazzling brightness that has thrown them all prostrate on the ground, there sounds forth a voice: "Saul, Saul! why persecutest thou me?"

"Lord who art Thou?" he answers in fear and trembling.

"I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest; it is hard for thee to kick against the goad."

So it was true after all! This Jesus of Nazareth was not a dead man, but a living person. There could be no deceit here. The light and the Voice were too plain. Those whom he had persecuted into prison and death were right. And he was wrong! what had he done! He had persecuted the Messiah, the Son of God! The one for whom he himself and every devout Israelite had been waiting for centuries! Now he saw it all very clearly. And hardly able to speak, trembling in the dust, he can only ask, "What shall I do, Lord?"

And the answer was only, "Arise and go into Damascus, and there shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do."

Dazed and unable to utter a word the men who had accompanied Saul had witnessed the strange sight. They heard a voice, they saw the brightness, but they understood nothing and saw no one. And when their leader arose from the ground his eyes were blinded by the dazzling light, and they were obliged to lead him the rest of the way into the city. But worse than the blindness were the two thoughts that tormented Saul: "He lives! and all that the Christians have said is true," and "I have persecuted Him!" He felt at once that this experience must give a new direction to his whole life.

MISSIONARY CONDITIONS IN INDIA

Revolutionary Movements in India more numerous than is usually supposed. Natives apparently determined to secure a much larger Measure of Self-Government. All Missionary Work suffering more or less

I

The Evangelical mission field in the Central Provinces of India is only a small part of the great missionary work carried on by many European and American agencies among the 300,000,000 people of that country. Those who are interested in the progress of our own work there will quite naturally want to know something of the general conditions in India as they affect the whole missionary enterprise in that great empire. In its January issue the International Review of Missions presents what may be called a picture of the whole Indian missionary work amid the conditions prevailing during the year 1915, which we desire to give our readers. In some places it has seemed desirable to add sidelights on the statements made for the sake of better information. These additional notes have been kindly furnished us by Pastor Nottrott, of Bistrampur, India, now on an enforced furlough in this country, whose long residence and distinguished service on the field in India make his presentation especially valuable. Pastor Nottrott's contributions are distinguished from the original articles by quotation marks.

The war has touched India at many points. The loyalty of the people, and notably of the educated classes, to the government has found widespread expression, while it has been accompanied by unmistakable expectations that the people of India will after the war be granted new liberties and privileges and a larger place in the counsels of the empire. At a meeting of the imperial legislative council at Simla, Sept. 22, a resolution was unanimously adopted to be sent to the secretary of state urging that India should in the future be officially represented in the imperial conference. The viceroy stated that he was authorized by his majesty's government to give assurance that, while preserving their full liberty of judgment and without committing themselves either as to principles or details, they would give the most careful consideration to an expression of opinion from the imperial legislative council in the sense of resolution, as expressing the legitimate interest of the imperial council in an imperial question. In many ways the bonds uniting the two races have been drawn closer, and the presence of territorial regiments (a military force organized primarily for home defense) in India has increased the number of Englishmen who have had personal touch with the country, and special efforts have been made by the Young Men's Christian Association to care for the welfare of these troops and to enable them to learn something of the real problems of Indian life and of missionary work. Mission classes and lectures have been organized, and hundreds of men have been taken to see the work being done at mission stations. Work of a similar kind has been undertaken at several of the Anglican dioceses.

India and the War

In spite of the general loyalty, however, there has been some local unrest. An Indian regiment mutinied at Singapore in February. In March the fanatical Moplahs on the Malabar made an attack on a district collector. There was trouble with the Mohmands on the north-west frontier in May and again in August, and with the Bunerwals and Swatis in August. The most serious case of anxiety was the Hardayal conspiracy in the Punjab, which found expression in various dacoities (robbery committed or attempted by five or more persons conjointly) and a premature and unsuccessful outbreak in February. A Defense of India act was passed by the viceroy's council in March and subsequently applied to Bengal and the Panjab.

Apart from the few outbreaks of a more serious nature, wild rumors have occasionally found credence with the common people and caused temporary excitement and restlessness. "The number of revolutionary movements mentioned is worthy of notice, however, and will be rather surprising to those who are dependent only on the daily newspapers for their information. The International Review of Missions is published in England and altho the editor evidently aims to state the facts, he is naturally inclined to view them rather more hopefully than they may appear to the impartial observer. The price which India expects for her loyalty in the war is a larger measure of self-government, and the things most desired by the Indian population are: 1) More Indian officials in the civil service; 2) Hindu representation in the provincial and imperial councils—the latter being the all-India legislative body which meets at Delhi—and in the Indian Office at London. Under present conditions the Central Provinces, for instance, in which our mission field is located, sends three representatives to the imperial council, two of these being appointed and one elected by persons paying at least Rs. 5,000 in taxes, which means that about one in 10,000 has a vote. Two-thirds of the imperial council are native Indians, but their jurisdiction is merely advisory. Instead of this the people desire legislative authority, like that exercised by Canadians. There would undoubtedly be a sufficient number of educated natives to supply all official positions, even tho applicants are now required to make their civil service applications at Oxford or Cambridge, instead of in India, as should be the case."

A resolution of the governor-general in council has initiated an important extension of local self-government. The provincial governments are prepared in varying degrees to expand the electoral element in the constitution of local bodies, to extend the employment of non-official chairmen in the municipalities, and to allow local bodies a considerably increased freedom in regard to finance. The panchayats and other village communities are to be encouraged, with a view to the revival of an ancient form of local autonomy, which has suffered decay amid the great economic and administrative changes wrought by the development of British rule. "The village panchayat is a native institution, somewhat resembling a police court, and consisting of five members, before whom cases of only local significance—especially cases involving a breaking of caste rules—were tried. These courts were suspended by the British Indian Office, but there is a strong movement on foot to secure their reinstatement. What these courts may mean in facilitating the administration of justice may be inferred from the fact that Bistrampur, for instance, is fully thirty miles from the nearest court of justice."

Revolutionary Movements Kept quiet

"Many things are happening in India which are not advertised in the daily press. Quite an excitement was created by the condemnation of fifty-seven Hindus in Lahore, who, together with four others, were indicted for treason and conspiracy. Hardyl Singh, who is the leader of this conspiracy, is supposed to have agitated in Canada and the United States ever since 1913 against the English government in India. At the outbreak of the war the revolt began in India proper, especially among the students. Weapons and bombs were manufactured and attempts made to blow up and destroy railroad tracks and bridges. Altho the court proceedings did not disclose any connections between this revolutionary movement and England's enemies, the public opinion places the responsibility at the door of German agents and even thinks that the German government was connected therewith. Twenty-four of the accused were sentenced to death and twenty-seven condemned to prison for life in a foreign land. The remarkable part is that nearly all of these conspirators, with the exception of two or three, belonged to the Sikhs, who, in 1857 proved the best support the English government had. Brahmins did not take part, as they have not the necessary courage for such activity. Their work lies in underhanded methods thru the press. Naturally the press took the part of the accused, but was unable to accomplish anything. The activity of Mrs. Annie Besant, the distinguished leader of the Theosophists, is becoming rather unpleasant for the English government. In these days she talks more than ever, and as long as her tirade was directed against the Germans it was quite welcome. This old lady appears to be able to make good use of present conditions for her cause. Patriotism naturally had a short pull with the native population, so she made use of the agitation of the press against German missionaries to include missionary work of every character, and especially condemned mission school work. This failed to have the proper effect upon the Hindus. She was therefore forced to strike in a third direction, and now agitates for the self-government of India, naturally under British sovereignty, a kind of talk that appeals to the Hindus. Naturally this theme is not the most pleasant in the eyes of the British at this time. The utmost care is desirable in certain circles. We read: "Calcutta (where Mrs. Besant intends to close her lecture tour) needs no agitation. We hope the local government will give Mrs. Besant the proper hint." It is most peculiar that even the most advanced Hindus are not in sympathy with such a movement. In the Indian Social Reformer we read about her lecture in Bombay: 'It was a parody on the well-known Scripture passage: Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all other things will be given you, but for the kingdom of God she substituted self-government. No doubt this eminent lady labors under the delusion that India merely needs to declare for self-government and it will come to pass. Of course this is true, and not a novel idea either, but how many things will come to pass before India will unanimously declare itself in this manner.' The Reformer is surprised that Mrs. Besant has not expressed herself along these lines, and is pleased with the remarks of the chairman who introduced her (a prominent Hindu) in which he stated that he could not coincide with her views. On this matter the lady had no experience. The well-known national congress considers the political agitation of Mrs. Besant as an interference with the well laid plans which would be frustrated by the demand for self-government."

Modern Religious Movements

A notable contribution to our knowledge of the religious life of India is the publication of Mr. J. N. Farquhar's Modern Religious Movements in India. "Mr. Farquhar is the author of 'A Primer of Hinduism,' which has come to rank as an authority in its field, and also of 'The Crown of Hinduism,' in which he takes the ground that Christianity should adopt and assimilate the best in Hindu philosophy rather than conquer or destroy it." His latest book describes the living forces which during the past century have been most potent in the religious development of the people and are at the present day the most vigorous expression of their spiritual aspirations. This sober record of historical facts is a remarkable testimony to the influence of Christian missions, which, apart from any numerical success that they may have achieved, have been a powerful means of stimulating new religious forces and effecting profound changes in the spiritual outlook of the educated classes.

In this connection attention may be called to a proposal for a reformed Hinduism put forward by Sir S. Subrahmanya Iyer. Its interest lies in the fact that the author has thruout his long life been a trusted leader of orthodox Hinduism. The occasion of the present pronouncement is a Hindu agitation in defense of child-marriages. Sir S. Subrahmanya Iyer recognizes that Hinduism is doomed if it adopts an attitude of uncompromising conservatism. 'The conditions of Hindu society to-day,' he writes, 'are, it is not to be regretted, such as to make the hope of the future lie, not in any tinkering with this and that part of the existing structure in its present dilapidated state, but in removing with an unsparing hand the poisonous weedy growth of the entire debris under which lie the primeval foundations of Hinduism, and upon them to erect a new and simpler edifice of just such proportions and utility as are needed for our present demands. The reforms which he proposes include the abolition of polygamy, child-marriage and caste. That such revolutionary social changes should be advocated by an outstanding representative of Hindu orthodoxy is a striking evidence of the extent to which the foundations of Hinduism have been shaken by the impact of western ideas.

German Missions

The outstanding event of the year from the missionary standpoint is the disaster which has overtaken the work of German missions. In the early months of the war a considerable number of German missionaries were interned, but others,—notably the Gossner missionaries in Bihar and Orissa—were allowed to continue their work under parole. On June 23rd the Secretary for India stated in the House of Commons that of German missionaries in India, Protestant and Roman Catholic, 115 were interned under

Continued on Page 8

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

Mar. 12, 1916. Invocavit Sunday

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

CAUSES OF FAILURES

- M. Mar. 6. Timidity. Exod. 3: 10-14.
T. Mar. 7. Self-confidence. Josh. 7: 1-5.
W. Mar. 8. Selfishness. Hag. 1: 1-11.
T. Mar. 9. Materialism. Luke 16: 1-13.
F. Mar. 10. Dishonesty. Jas. 5: 1-8.
S. Mar. 11. Drunkenness. 1 Kings 20: 13-21.

Sun., Mar. 12. Topic—The Causes of Failures in Life. Prov. 10: 1-32.

Suggestions to the Leader

Our topic gives us an opportunity to take stock of our society, and ourselves individually. What do we mean by taking stock, and why do we take stock?

By taking stock the business man seeks to ascertain how much money he has spent during the past year, how much money he has received, and how much merchandise he still has on hand. His attention is directed especially to the stock on hand. What is the value of that stock? How much of it is good, saleable? How much of it is "dead" stock?

Let us "take stock" of our society. How does our work compare with that of last year? How does it measure up to our conception of an ideal society? How can we transform "dead" members into live members? What are the reasons for our failures? How can we get out of certain ruts or away from bad habits? It pays to look for defects in our work and organization. The successful man is always on the lookout for defects. The experienced driver of an automobile is always listening for defects in the mechanism of his machine. Every defect is immediately registered in the change of the pitch of the purr of the running engine. When that "purring" noise shifts and varies, the driver knows something is wrong, and he immediately begins to look for the cause. Let us listen to the "purr" of our society engine. Is there something wrong? Where is the defect? What caused it?

The Topic Presented

We do not want to fail. But the only way to prevent failure is to know, and to follow carefully the way leading to success. On his way to the Holy City Christian, in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, is told that there is but one road to the New Jerusalem, but that there are many roads leading from the one road, and that he must constantly consult his guide book, heed the advice of guides sent out to show him the way, and to be himself watchful in prayer, lest he be led from the right way to the wrong path that leads to destruction.

There is but one right road leading to success, but branching off from this right road are many roads and paths. The difficulty is that there where the roads fork, both roads seem to be right. There is no difference, and only complete knowledge of the direction we must travel will help us to choose right.

Temptations to sin do not differ from righteousness at the beginning. Sin seems to be right, and it is only when we stop to consider the direction a certain action will lead us, that we can determine the inner quality of that deed. A deed must be measured by its ultimate consequences, and not by the immediate appearance.

1. Little leaks are the main causes for failures. Thru them our vitality and effectiveness is drained. The sacred writer calls them "little foxes" that destroy the vineyard. A bit of selfishness, a bit of over-confidence, a bit of false timidity that will venture nothing, a bit of intemperance, self-indulgence, a bit of dishonesty, these and many more little "bits" gradually destroy our inner character and undermine our spiritual strength.

2. Wrong principles bring about defeat. Why have you organized as a society? What is your aim and purpose in life? What is your motive in all your doings? Have you organized simply to form a compact organization, a religious club, to enjoy the religion your society offers, the music that adorns your meetings, the fellowship with kindred minds? Too many of our societies are "close corporations." They do not care for the "outsiders" and do not reach out in helpfulness to those in need.

Are you seeking your own welfare, your own personal interests? Who comes first in your judgment? Where selfishness reigns love and mercy depart.

3. Lack of motive power is the main cause of failures. A defective engine, lack of steam or gasoline, or electric current, will cause the engine to fail you at a trying moment. What is your motive power? Is it your own planning? Your own will? Or are you trusting on that most efficient of all motive powers, the strength of God? There is no real success without God's help, all other successes are but seeming successes, and will eventually end in failures.

"Did we in our own strength confide,
Our striving would be losing."

This was the experience of Saul, David, Solomon, Martin Luther, and all men of God. No man can hope to succeed unless his life conforms to the Divine will and is prompted in all things by Divine principles.

Examine at this time the work of your society carefully. Point out your failures. Seek to ascertain the reasons for these failures. But do not fail to point out the way to ultimate success. A failure is a guide-post to success if the lessons of the failure are heeded.

Some Questions on the Topic

How can the failure or success of a life be determined?

Where are the causes for real failures, outside of ourselves, or within?

Why is humility necessary for success?

Why is God's blessing the great essential for success?

What ought to be our real motive in all things?

Some Questions on the Topic

Prov. 11: 18; Jer. 2: 37; Prov. 14: 22; Job 11: 20; Psalm 66: 3; 62: 10; 119: 10; 119: 21, 118; 19: 13; James 3: 2; 1 Tim. 6: 21; 2 Tim. 2: 18; Mark 10: 21; Acts 26: 28, 29.

A Prayer

Not unto us, but unto Thee, O Lord be all the praise for the successes we have achieved. Thou didst strengthen us in all our faculties, to do Thy will; Thou didst guide our wilful spirit, to follow Thy way; Thou didst bless our planning and our efforts that, tho weak and frail, we were yet able to do much for Thee and Thy kingdom.

Not unto Thee, but unto ourselves, O Lord, do we ascribe our failures. Thou alone knowest how much we might have accomplished, had we always obeyed Thee implicitly. We too often sought paths of our own choosing, and in our sinful wilfulness did what as we determined. Do thou make our eyes bright and keen that we may see the defects and failures, quicken our hearts that it may surrender itself in complete obedience to Thee and Thy will, guide and determine our actions, that greater things might be done for the world, thru the extension of Thy kingdom. Guide us, O Lord, lest we err, and stray from the right path. Thou, O Christ, art the way, the life, the truth. Guide and protect us in all our ways. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson Material for the Second Year: New Testament Studies—the Messianic Era and the Apostolic Era.

Lessons for the First Quarter, 1916

- Lesson 1. Jan. 2. Between the Testaments; Dan. 2: 31-45.
Lesson 2. Jan. 9. The Origin and purpose of the Gospels; John 1: 1-14; Luke 1: 1-4.
Lesson 3. Jan. 16. The Growing Jesus; Luke 2: 40-52.
Lesson 4. Jan. 23. The Voice Crying in the Wilderness; Matt. 3: 1-12.
Lesson 5. Jan. 30. At the Gateway of Service; Matt. 3: 13-17; 4: 1-11; Mark: 9-13.
Lesson 6. Feb. 6. Beginnings in Judea; John 2: 13-25.
Lesson 7. Feb. 13. A Woman Lost in Sin; John 4: 27-30; 39-42.
Lesson 8. Feb. 20. Beginnings in Gallilee; Luke 4: 14-31.
Lesson 9. Feb. 27. Teaching with Authority; Matt. 5: 1-16; 7: 28, 29; Luke 6: 20-26.
Lesson 10. Mar. 5. Miracles of Jesus, I; Luke 8: 22-56.
Lesson 11. Mar. 12. Miracles of Jesus, II; John 5: 17-31; 20: 30-31.
Lesson 12. Mar. 19. Parables of Jesus; Matt. 13: 10-17.
Lesson 13. Mar. 26. The Arising Opposition; John 6: 60-71.

Lesson 11. The Miracles of Jesus (Concluded)

- M. Mar. 6. John 5: 17-31. The Work of God.
T. Mar. 7. John 6: 22-35. Work the Work of God.
W. Mar. 8. Matt. 12: 38-45. The Sign from Heaven.
T. Mar. 9. John 5: 2-14. A Solemn Warning.
F. Mar. 10. John 9: 13-39. A Glorious Promise.
S. Mar. 11. John 9: 1-5; 11: 1-4. To the Glory of God.
S. Mar. 12. Luke 17: 11-19. Give me a Thankful Heart.

Lesson Key:—"Rabbi, we know that Thou art a Teacher come from God; for no one can do these signs that Thou doest, except God be with Him," John 3: 2.

Our Catechism tells us that one of the ways in which Jesus Christ revealed himself as the Redeemer even before His death was by means of His miracles, "which were all works of life to abolish misery and death." These words very plainly and briefly describe the nature and the aim of all the miracles which Jesus performed. They were not, as we have seen, merely wonderful deeds by which He sought to gain notoriety, or impress people with the fact that He could do more than they; they were rather extraordinary events with a definite Kingdom purpose, some incident or experience beyond the grasp of human reason and knowledge, thru which God sought to transmit a blessing or impart a revelation. In line with this definition the miracles of Jesus always endeavor to accomplish one or more or all of the following: 1. To help those in distress; 2. To reveal the glory of God; 3. To lead men to know themselves; 4. To win men for the kingdom.

The miracles Jesus performed were first of all an expression of His sympathy with the needs of men. He could not be satisfied with mere assurances of sympathy that left the suffering or distressed victim where he was before. He was like the good Samaritan who not merely pitied the man who had fallen among thieves with words easy enough to utter, but felt constrained to do something that would help immediately. And just as the good Samaritan carried with him the means to help, which the injured man did not possess, so Jesus possessed the power to heal and to help all who came to Him by drawing upon the infinite power of God. He knew that the only way to reach the hearts of men was to cure their physical ills, and He did this so freely and so cheerfully and sympathetically that all who suffered in any way, be it in body or in mind, were continually attracted to Him. And most of them were willing to be led upward from the bodily ills to the spiritual ones which were far more important. The more the Church uses all her means and power to help relieve the physical needs of men, the more will she be able to do for them spiritually.

In helping those who needed His aid He revealed to them and to all who witnessed His deeds something of the glory of God. The glory of God is His goodness and mercy that brings His infinite power to bear upon the affairs and matters of human life. For the Old Testament dispensation God was the exalted Ruler and Judge, the Holy One of Israel, whom the sinner could only obey, but with whom he could not commune. Jesus revealed the glory of God's love, which inspired confidence and courage rather than fear and trembling, and thus gave men an altogether different conception of God and His purpose with men. If God could help as well as command and punish, if He cared for men and their affairs enough to go about doing good and healing all those who were oppressed of the devil, then it was so much easier to heed and obey His will. Christians would count for more in the world if they sought the glory of God more and their own glory less.

Jesus' miracles taught men the truth concerning themselves. When Peter saw the miraculous draught of fishes, he realized as he never had done before that he was a sinful man and unworthy of being in the Master's presence. The signs and mighty works Jesus had done in Capernaum, Chorazin and Bethsaida were so many appeals to their inhabitants to think deeply upon the claims of the wonderful Man who dwelt among them, and of their own great needs, to forsake their sinful ways and turn to Him for salvation. They did not heed His words any more than they did His words—to their own sorrow and suffering. Jesus must weep over Jerusalem because she did not heed His words and works and learn from them the things which belong unto peace. And all our knowledge of Jesus' miracles and their meaning to the people of His day will not help us unless we recognize and take to heart their meaning for ourselves.

Jesus' miracles attracted men to Him so that He might influence their lives. The crowds of men who came to Him every day of His ministry were important to Him not for the fame they brought Him, but for the opportunity they gave Him to sow seeds of divine truth into their hearts. They saw or experienced for themselves the good works He did, every one of them for others, and it made them want something of His spirit. Their hearts were opened for the Kingdom and its righteousness and they experienced that hunger and thirst for better things which will not be satisfied until Christ had been made the Lord of the life.

Missionary Conditions in India

Concluded from Page 6

military control at Ahmadnagar, 70 were compulsorily residing in a specified place under civil control, and 442 were at liberty but on parole and subject to general civil supervision. A few weeks later, however, the government of India decided that it was necessary for political reasons to repatriate (i. e., send back to Germany) all German and Austrian subjects except men of military age, who are interned at Ahmadnagar, and this policy has been carried into effect. The government further determined that the grants for educational and philanthropic work which the German missions had been receiving prior to the war should be withdrawn. Official statement published in Madras Mail, 1915, Aug. 14. From later information it would appear that, if arrangements can be made for placing the educational work under the management of bodies from which all German control has been excluded, the government grants will be continued. The German Protestant missions affected are the Basel Society (which tho having its headquarters in Switzerland is mainly German in its personnel), working in the southern part of the Bombay Presidency and in South Kanara, Coorg and Malabar; the Leipzig Mission among the Tamils in the south of the Madras Presidency; the Hermannsburg and Schleswig-Holstein (Brekum) Missions among the Telugus in the northern half of the same Presidency; the Gossner Mission in the province of Bihar and Orissa and in Assam; and the West Himalayan Moravian Mission. The number of missionaries connected with these missions is about 240 men and 50 single women and the Christian community about 150,000. Prior to the general order for internment and repatriation, the work of these missions suffered serious interruption thru the removal of many of the missionaries and the curtailment of financial resources. In North India only one member of the Gossner Mission had been interned up to June 30. In South India, however, a large majority of the Basel missionaries were interned, the Hermannsburg Mission was left with two missionaries, and all missionaries were removed from the Jeypore and neighboring districts. Many Indian agents of the missions had to be dismissed thru lack of means of supporting them. For the relief of the missions in South India a Continental Missions Continuation Committee was formed, and thru it considerable sums were received from America. The Madras Representative Council of Missions also appointed a committee to co-operate in rendering assistance, and this committee issued an appeal to all missionaries in South India for subscriptions in aid of the German missions. It was found, however, that in view of the internment of many missionaries the expenses of the missions were considerably reduced, and that the remittances which began to come from Germany, with the subsidies furnished by the Lutheran churches in America, were sufficient to meet the needs of the missions. The appeal for additional funds was therefore withdrawn. The National Missionary Council issued a similar appeal. In North India the Bishop of Chota Nagpur, with the co-operation of the Bihar and Orissa Missionary Council and the National Missionary Council, devoted his energies to the help of the Gossner Mission and was able to supplement the remittances received from Germany by subscriptions which in April amounted to more than Rs. 26,000.

The temporary care of the work which the German missionaries have had to relinquish will tax to the utmost the resources of the Indian Church and of the missionary body. The Leipzig Mission has asked permission from the government to transfer its work to the Swedish Church Mission, which has worked in co-operation with it and been responsible for one of the dioceses. The American Lutheran Missions are attempting to care for the needs of the Schleswig-Holstein and Hermannsburg Missions, and special funds for this purpose are being collected by the Lutheran churches in America. The Basel Mission is attempting to carry on its work with the few remaining missionaries of Swiss nationality. The Bishop of Chota Nagpur with the goodwill of the German missionaries has undertaken the temporary charge of the Gossner Mission, and has been remarkably successful in securing help for the discharge of these new responsibilities. The extent of these responsibilities will be evident when it is stated that there are 308 schools (including 52 boarding schools) to be carried on, and 477 Indian workers to be supervised and provided for. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel has promised the aid of eight men; three missionaries on furlough or retired agreed to come out at once; the Bengal Mission of the Church Missionary Society supplied two men, and the Cawnpore Brotherhood and Dublin Mission have also given workers. The English Baptist Mission has undertaken the temporary charge of one station. The government has consented to continue the special grant for schools which it was previously making to the Gossner Mission. As regards the pastoral work, the Bishop intends that the Lutheran pastors shall remain in charge, and while help and council will be given them, no attempt will be made to alienate the people from their ecclesiastical allegiance. The Statesman, 1915, Aug. 13; Pioneer Mail, 1915, Aug. 21. "Since the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel began its work at Chota Nagpur in opposition to that of the German Gossner Mission, the meaning of the words 'with the good will of the German missionaries' is rather dubious."

The War and Missionary Work

Other missions besides those from Germany have suffered thru the war. Financial stringency has in the greatest majority of missions postponed all plans for extension and stopped building operations which are not absolutely essential. In some instances itineration in the district has had to be curtailed and Indian workers have had to be dismissed. Many missions have to do without expected reinforcements from home. American as well as British missions have been affected, but the rise in the value of the American dollar in exchange has in some instances compensated for reduced allocations. As against the general restriction of work a few advances have been made in spite of war conditions. Thus the English Baptist Society has in view of an urgent opportunity opened a new station at Angul in Orissa; the C. M. S. College at Gorakhpur has been raised to the B. A. standard; a new extension of the Northwick School for girls in Madras was opened by the Governor in August; the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists in the Khasia hills and the plains of Sylhet report considerable development of their educational and medical work, etc.. Medical missionary work has been temporarily affected by the considerable number of British missionary doctors who have felt it their duty to offer for medical service with the military forces. The language schools at Lucknow and Bangalore have had to be closed. The language school at Calcutta and Poona have, however, been continued. The starting of a union Hindi language school at Jubbulpore is under consideration. As regards the effect of the war on the accessibility of the people to the Christian message, there is little definite evidence. A point on which several correspondents lay emphasis is the striking way in which women have thrown themselves into the various relief organizations connected with the war. This is regarded as marking a new stage in the development of Indian women and an enlargement of their horizon which opens new and important missionary opportunities.

"Missionary activities in India have been seriously disturbed thru the war. The poison sown against the German missionaries has had the effect that the press has taken the stand against mission schools in general, especially against biblical instruction. It is gratifying to note the protest made by some of the better educated Hindoos and their warnings as to the possible consequences. They call attention to the fact that the discontinuation of biblical instruction would detract from the usefulness of these mission schools in the eyes of the mission workers at home, which would cause the total elimination of all mission schools. And then they put the following question: Are the opponents of mission schools ready and willing to step in the breach and to do that for the education and culture of our people what missionaries have done heretofore? For the present this question may be the last word in this direction.

"Another consequence of the war is more far-reaching and painful. The editor of the Reformer writes in an editorial: 'The present war issues a warning which is not to be ignored by any thinking missionary, namely, that it might be wise to lay less stress upon the fruits of Christianity in the future and to emphasize its superiority.' Non-Christian religions may have been more successful in fighting the beastly nature of man than the Christian religion. Jesus' teachings are of high value, and those of other religions also, but as to the results of Christianity regarding civilization and the uplift of a people we must remain silent in the future. A missionary has taken up the gauntlet at once, but his argument, which is a rather timid one, will undoubtedly gain few adherents. He contends that this war has not disturbed Christian ethics; it merely accentuated how far the world had been affected by Christian morals. He submits that it is now clear what terrible results anti-Christian ethics would produce if they were to gain the upper hand over German militarism. He contends that the fruits of Christianity have not failed us but that the so-called Christian world is insufficiently Christianized. No doubt this question will be argued for some time. The British-Indian government will have another painful taste as a result of the war. The loyalty shown by the rulers and the people of India in general in sacrificing their lives and property has delighted the government, but attention is now being called to the fact that a debt has thus been created which will have to be repaid some day. India will claim greater rights and privileges and it would be unjust for England to refuse these. Some well versed Christians, well-intentioned toward India, think that to meet such demands at this time would prove still more unjust; for India has not ripened morally and politically sufficiently to govern itself, and refer to the remark made by Sir Herbert Edwards after the Indian revolt of 1857: 'India will be freed and will shake off slavery as soon as it is impregnated with the spirit of Christianity.'"

People talk of "giving up," when they become Christians, as if they were to be losers, but the promise is of added riches.—Drummond.

Statement of money received by the General Treasurer, or by the treasurers of the different boards and institutions for the various branches of denominational work carried on by the German Evangelical Synod of N. A. from December 1, 1915, to February 15, 1916.

General Treasury.....	$ 696.01
Educational Institutions.....	854.55
Eden Seminary.....	4,992.71
Elmhurst College.....	1,319.64
Ft. Collins Academy.....	392.24
Home Missions.....	4,842.26
Immigrant Missions.....	327.87
Church Extension (Building Fund).....	803.17
Foreign Missions.....	5,429.88
India Orphans.....	780.32
Native Helpers.....	318.65
Leper Missions.....	221.47
Senana Missions.....	37.80
Ministerial Pensions and Relief.....	4,597.47
German Red Cross.....	1,783.30
The Jubilee Fund.....	20,405.04
City Mission, St. Louis.....	30.00

Total.....$47,828.78

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716-18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also we were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV.

ST. LOUIS, MO., MARCH 9th, 1916

NUMBER 10

Help the Small Church

What would you do if you were one of ten or fifteen Evangelical families in a certain locality who feel that they ought to have a church home of their own, but see no way of getting it because they have neither the money to pay for it at once, nor the credit to borrow money at the local bank at a reasonable rate of interest? Between the two impossibilities the chances that this particular community, and many others like it, will soon have a church building of their own by means of which to encourage the growth of spiritual life, Christian living and neighborhood fellowship and service seems quite remote, do they not? And the set-back which the higher aspirations of these families and the community in which they live receive thru such a failure to obtain advantages and facilities that every community needs and should enjoy will mean loss and perhaps failure in many a life, both young and old, for generations to follow. One does not often think of what the absence of a church with all it stands for means to the people of a neighborhood, nor of the possibilities in Christian character that might be unfolded and developed wherever the preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ secures a foothold. And yet that is a consideration that Christian people should be especially quick to appreciate, and which they should be especially in earnest about meeting in the proper spirit.

Perhaps a goodly number of Evangelical people are not aware that their Church has long ago provided a means for helping small and struggling congregations to secure a property of their own and thereby a regular ministry of the Gospel. In 1889 the General Conference established the Church Extension Fund for the purpose of assisting struggling Evangelical churches in acquiring property and erecting the necessary buildings. From this fund (which consists of offerings raised in the churches for this purpose) advances are made to the congregations upon sufficient security at a very low rate of interest. The importance which the General Conference attaches to this means of helping weak or young churches is apparent from the fact that the offering for this purpose has been placed among the "obligatory" offerings, i. e., offerings that are required of every Evangelical congregation for the good of the whole Church and the Kingdom in general. Reminiscent, the second Sunday in Lent, this year March 19th, has been set aside for the taking of this offering, and Evangelical people everywhere should see to it that the offering is not only taken in their church, but that the members of the congregation are aware of its importance to thousands of their fellow-Christians all over the country. The purpose for which the offering is used deserves a generous gift.

The funds contributed for this purpose are administered by a Board chosen by the General Conference, regularly incorporated and having competent legal advisers. They are invested only by being put to work to help the small church which can get help in no other way. Many churches now supported by the Home Mission Board could support their own pastor without assistance, if the Church Extension Board could advance them the money needed for a building, or even only a part of it, but about one out of every three applications cannot be met because there is not sufficient money available. Applications for assistance are growing more numerous every year. Many of these cannot be considered, as they are outside the plan and purpose of the Board's work. The payments of old debts, or loans for the purpose of making repairs or improvements should not be considered a part of the Board's work.

Those desiring a loan should make themselves familiar with the instructions under which the Board is required to work before making their request, and should then forward their application to the secretary, together with the opinion of the District home mission board. According to the revised instructions repayments on the principal advanced must be made in ten annual and equal payments. Congregations borrowing money from the fund are required to give ten notes for the loan, all of them covered by mortgage, one of the notes becoming due every year. They bear interest at two percent, if promptly paid, otherwise four percent. All repayments are promptly advanced to other churches on the waiting list. We have no doubt at all that if this matter is brought to the attention of the churches sufficiently, the people will readily respond in a way that will enable the Board to extend its helping hand much farther than is now possible. Remember the Church Extension Board Offering on Mar. 19.

A THOUGHT FOR LENT

Lord, as to Thy dear cross we flee,
And pray to be forgiven,
So let Thy life our pattern be,
And form our souls for heaven
—John H. Gurney.

A Double Standard in Industry

A recent issue of the News Letter of the Illinois State Federation of Labor contains an article that touches the fundamental grievance of labor under existing industrial conditions. The article, the salient points of which we reprint herewith, is from the pen of Mr. John H. Walker, president of the Federation, and we recommend it to the thoughtful attention of our readers.

"According to the double standard the working man, no matter what his trade or calling, may not ask from his employer a wage or return for his labor that exceeds the employer's conception of the value of his labor. Indeed, it is accepted generally that he must not ask even all that his labor service was actually worth.

"If the worker demands a wage equivalent to the value of his labor, he is immediately told by his employer that he is unreasonable. The people generally agree that the employer is right under these circumstances. If the worker, by any chance, under any circumstances, presumes to ask a wage in excess of the value of the service rendered, and the employer can show that to be true, then everybody universally condemns that worker for being nothing short of a thief. That is one side of the present double standard—the side used to judge the worker.

"The other side of the present standard, the method by which the employer is judged, is exactly opposite. When the remuneration of the employer, his wage or profit, is under consideration, the value of his labor or of the actual service he renders is not given much thought. In fact, all the employer concerns himself about is: "How can I, by hook or crook, perform my function in a manner that will enable me to get the largest possible returns for myself, regardless of the value of the services I render?"

"The more an employer, or business man of any kind, is able to get for the least service or work performed, the more successful he is considered. Instead of being condemned and branded as a thief (like a working man who asks more than his labor is worth) the business man is given credit for being exceptionally shrewd and smart. To be considered a shrewd and smart business man, even under such circumstances, is, in the estimation of our people, a high honor, instead of a mark of dishonor.

"When a boy is being trained to start in life as a business man, the question of the exact value of his services, and teaching him to ask for that amount and no more, and how to get it, is not even considered, let alone taught. He is told that being successful in business means that he shall accumulate wealth. The question of the value of his actual services in relation to the amount of wealth that he accumulates is not thought of. He is taught the different methods by which men make money thru business manipulation.

"He goes to school to get a training to fit him for the express purpose of becoming an expert in all the different methods of manipulation, so that when opportunity offers itself he may get the largest amount of money or wealth possible, regardless of the value which he gives in return. . . .

"On the other hand, the worker is taught that above all things he must be honest, and that beyond and above everything else he must do no dishonest act to bring disgrace upon himself, and on the name of the family. He must not ask for anything he is not entitled to. He must not take anything that he has not actually earned.

"His school books teach him this lesson. His school teacher repeats it to him, and the minister and priest never fail to bring it home to him. Newspapers, books, his fraternal society, every civic organization, every influence that reaches his life from boyhood up, remind him of it. It becomes a sort of a religion—with the worker.

"With the business man or employer, however, it becomes almost a religion to take everything that he can get hold of, just so that the law is not violated and that accepted business methods are used. The actual honesty of the methods used, or the value of the services rendered, have nothing to do with it.

"Because this double standard has become accepted as being right, not alone by the employers and business men, but by a considerable portion of the workers themselves, and because these are the ethical laws governing business and economic life, the never ending conflict goes on. No business man or employer can get wealth that they did not actually and honestly earn, without taking it from some man or woman who had earned it. As long as that kind of thing obtains, there can be no peace—there should be no peace. Honest men must fight.

"If we could lay down a standard by which the employers and business men would get just what they are actually entitled to, on the basis of actual service which they personally render, and make that standard apply to all workers as well, there is no question but that the most of our economic ills would disappear, and that we would have very little trouble between employers and working men, or between the consuming public and merchants or business men.

"There never will be peace with justice, until that kind of a standard is adopted, and until the boys and girls are taught that it is right.

"We cannot expect absolute honesty, as between man and man, either in business life or between employers and workers, and when boys or girls are being taught in their early life that the ethics in the present day business world are proper.

"If we could, by any means, establish one standard that would mete out economic justice between man and man without regard to their positions in life, we would have gone a long way towards establishing the only basis on which the industrial brotherhood of man can be founded.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Personal Relationship with Christ.

"Jesus said therefore unto the twelve, Would ye also go away? Simon Peter answered Him, Lord to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. And we have believed and know Thou art the Holy One of God." John 6: 67-69.

The multitude had come to Jesus with the expectation that He would satisfy their earthly and physical needs. They had seen signs and had eaten the loaves and were filled, and there were those who desired to take Him by force and make Him king. They sought Him for material advantages or for political ends, and His true and proper work is in danger of being lost sight of. It is for this reason that He has been emphasizing the spiritual meaning of His work and telling them that He was the bread of life, the living bread which came down out of heaven, and that the eating of His flesh and the drinking of His blood would bring eternal life. This discourse, as Jesus well foresaw, would make clear the supreme purpose He had in mind, as well as sift the crowds who had followed Him. The things He said could be acceptable only to truly spiritual men, all the others, who sought political privileges or advancement or the satisfaction of merely physical needs, would call Him an impractical dreamer and turn their backs upon Him. Many therefore of His disciples, when they heard His sayings about eating His flesh and drinking His blood, and of abiding in Him, and of His abiding in them, said, "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" It was something entirely foreign and unintelligible to their carnal earthly minds, and they had no desire to exercise their wits in trying to understand it, especially since it offered no easy way of getting a living nor suggested any way of securing freedom from Rome. Many sought the earth and did not care to have heaven thrust upon them; they realize that Jesus is not the person for their purposes and they turn away disappointed, and many walk no more with Him. The great crowds melt away and only His original following of twelve men remains. His months of teaching and of toil seem to have been in vain, and there may have been indications that even the twelve might forsake Him.

Making the Test

Hence Jesus puts the matter directly up to them by the frank question: "Would ye also go away?" He would do nothing to hinder them if they were minded to leave Him, but the time for a decision is at hand, and Jesus is entitled to know how they stand. Peter answers for the twelve, evidently spontaneously and on the spur of the moment, and his answer shows clearly the character of the personal relationship that bound the faithful few to their Master. They realized that Jesus satisfied their deepest spiritual wants, that no one else could give them the eternal life, and above all, they believed and knew that He was the Holy One of God. The reasons that first brought them into fellowship with Him may have been not wholly spiritual, but they had learned enough to understand that they could not now leave without sacrificing the purest and the best that had ever come into their lives. And so they are ready to stay with Him, even tho the others leave Him, because they feel that the best and highest interests of their lives are bound up with him. The relationship that has been established between them and Him has become so close and so vital that they cannot think of giving it up just because it is in danger of becoming unpopular. To be associated with Jesus has come to mean so much to them that they are ready to risk something for the sake of staying with Him. Peter probably did not realize even a part of what his decision might cost him, and many of the other disciples would probably not have been able to say just what Peter said; nevertheless Peter no doubt uttered what was in the hearts of all the rest, even if they had not arrived at so clear an idea of what Jesus was to them. And no matter what Peter's special weakness may have been, the intense devotion which speaks from these words, and which finally led him to give up even his life for his Lord, is so beautiful and at the same time so fundamental to true discipleship that it may well be made the test of that personal relationship thru which alone Christ's spiritual blessings become available.

Only in Christ is Life

It is quite evident that Peter had not been listening to Jesus' discourse in vain. Tho he could not answer the question which the Jews asked one another, How can this man give us His flesh to eat? his answer proves beyond a doubt that he has actually been doing what they deemed impossible, and had received and accepted Christ, with the truth, the righteousness and the salvation for which He stood; that Jesus Christ had already become a part of and was nourishing his very life and being, just as the food he ate became a part of and nourished his physical life. And what is even more, Peter had not only eaten of the bread of life but was even hungry for more. He had found in Christ provision for his whole nature, and had learned the truth of His saying, "He that cometh to me shall not hunger." The words the disciples had heard fed their spirit, quickened a new life, gave new thoughts about God, His Kingdom and its righteousness and had stirred hopes and feelings of a new kind, so that he could not think of giving up the satisfaction he had experienced. This was all the more true as Peter realized that what Christ offered could be obtained nowhere else. It was either Jesus Christ or nothing, and he saw clearly that there was no other way of getting possession of what Christ alone could give him than thru a permanent personal connection with Him as King and Lord of Life. In this way he had come to believe and know that Jesus was the Christ, the Holy One of God. The life they had seen Jesus lead from day to day had given them a revelation of God, and they felt that to turn away from Him whom they had found so holy in all circumstances and scenes would be to turn away from God himself. Of whatever else he may be doubtful or ignorant, by means of personal experience and conviction he is absolutely sure that a life like that of Jesus Christ must be divine. It was not His miracles they admired, nor the authority with which He spoke His message, but the consecrated and perfect life they had seen under the most varying and the most trying conditions.

It is a personal relationship like this based upon personal conviction like that of Peter that opens the channels of Christ's blessings in the Lord's Supper. It is not what we have been taught about it that counts, nor what we may have come to believe in regard to it after much earnest and serious meditation. All the attempts to make the spiritual nourishment conveyed in the sacrament a matter of scientific definition and of pure doctrine are vain and worthless because they miss the point entirely. Jesus did not come to teach doctrines or to give definitions; He came to give life, and that alone. And we receive that life only as we enter into the closest personal communion with Him, and continue this communion in the Lord's Supper which He has instituted that the new man may receive the body and the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ as the nourishment of the new life.

The Old Hampton Place

BY HILDA RICHMOND
V.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS. Thomas and Cordelia Hampton, brother and sister, victims of a city boarding-house, receive news of the death of an eccentric old bachelor uncle, supposed to have burned to death in his barn. They attend the funeral and while enjoying the hospitality of a neighbor, become enamored of country life. After consulting a lawyer Thomas decides to take possession of his deceased uncle's farm and undertakes to make the neglected house habitable.

"I believe that's Grandmother Frisbie's wedding dress," said Mrs. Dillon touching the folds of the ashes-of-roses silk with reverent fingers. "I declare it doesn't seem just right to parade it out here in this careless way."

"Anna, anything is right that gives us such a happy evening and makes our children content with farm life," said her husband quickly. "I wonder why nobody wore Grandfather Dillon's velvet vest and high hat."

"There they are over there, papa," said little Nellie Dillon. "Joe Parker has them on."

"If I had known of all this I'd brought out great-grandmother Thompkins' silk shawl and her hoops and her polonaise," lamented Mrs. Gross. "I wondered what the children were whispering about behind my back all the time."

"Why couldn't we give an old time concert in the grange-hall and have a big crowd?" said the minister's wife. "These young folks ought to have their pictures taken. Who is that in the blue and silver brocade? Is it really Dorothy Parker? She looks like a queen."

"And isn't Cordelia sweet in that little old blue dress?" said another lady. "That blue bonnet is beautiful if it is years out of style."

"They must have their pictures taken," said Mr. Dillon. "I declare this is the prettiest thing I've seen for years."

One after another the old time favorites were sung, the older people joining in at will, and then to cap the climax some rollicking songs for the little people. Of course every one was in the mood to laugh but the concert was really delightful to all. At nine-thirty the elderly people began to get ready to go home, tho the young folks begged them to stay, saying it would break up the party if they went, and as spring was rapidly approaching festivities would have to slacken. It was late in March, so spring work would soon open for all.

"You young folks stay a while longer," said the ladies indulgently. "You can't count on many more good times before spring and you'll want to be making plans for that old time concert Mrs. Ashley suggested. There's a great deal of food left on the kitchen table and you can have another lunch. You'll need it after your work."

So the young people easily persuaded Mr. and Mrs. Gross to stay with them and the impromptu supper was spread on the kitchen table. It was not as inviting as the first one had been as to looks, but the hot food was appetizing and there was plenty for all. It was always the aim at socials to have just enough, but on account of the cold weather a few people had been forced to stay away.

"Are you really happier out here than you were in town?" asked Pauline incredulously as she found herself by Cordelia dishing up chicken for the hasty supper. "Aren't you lonely?"

"Not a bit! You couldn't hire us to go back to town. Of course it's different with us, for we never had a real home in years but had to live in a boarding house."

"When the novelty wears off you'll be longing for the excitement of the city," said Pauline positively.

"Excitement, Miss Gross? If you don't call it excitement rushing around doing chores and thawing pails and feeding chickens I don't know what you'd term it. I'm busier now than I ever was in town. I have no time to get lonely and neither has Thomas. We're real farmers, not agriculturists, remember."

"Well, I don't know that I care for that kind of excitement," said the city girl. "Life is too strenuous on the farm for me. But I must say," she added graciously, "that I wish we had enjoyed good times like these back on the farm. Since I've been here I've been sorry I didn't try to get up something of the sort in our old crowd, but then you couldn't do anything in that dead alive place."

"That's exactly what we once said," said Grace coming up for some pickles. "But you see what's happened in one dead alive place, don't you? Come to supper, every one of you. Come while things are hot."

Thomas was about to dip the old-fashioned silver soup ladle that had been in the Hampton family for years in the chicken and gravy to serve liberal helpings to the guests when a noise at the back door attracted the attention of all.

"Somebody's forgotten a robe or a basket and is coming back for it," said Grace easily. "Please don't stop serving, Master Host, we're starving for that good chicken. Singing is strenuous work."

"Is there a light out there, Cordelia?" asked Thomas.

"Yes, several of them. The lantern is on top of the old cupboard."

But the first plate was just going down the table when the back door burst open angrily and an elderly man stood on the threshold surveying the motley crowd at the big table. The young people had not changed their costumes, so it was rather an odd gathering which might have arrested the attention of the intruder. Thomas and Cordelia looked up in mild amazement thinking the man who burst in without ceremony might be a neighbor whom they had never met and who was in need, but on the faces of the others terror was depicted.

"What's the meaning of all this?" demanded the intruder harshly.

Thomas rose at once to explain, thinking the man must be crazy, but a dozen hands pulled at the queer linen duster he wore. "It's your Uncle Richard!" whispered hoarse voices. "Your Uncle Richard or his ghost!"

It soon flew round the neighborhood that Richard Hampton was not dead at all, but had merely been spending the winter in California to escape the cold weather. The neighbors were much chagrined, tho relieved, to find out that they had buried old Dr. Hampton's office skeleton in the Hampton lot that beautiful September day. Along with a lot of other old traps the skeleton had been stored in the barn where Richard Hampton kept it to frighten boys and prowling tramps. The old gentleman had thought it no one's business when he wanted to go out West, and he now said so in unmistakable terms. He took possession of his altered house and premises and pitched his young relatives' clothes out of the windows without ceremony. Then he carried them to the pike and dumped them there, leaving Cordelia and Thomas to gather them up more or less damaged.

"I'll just say one word to you and then I'm done forever," said the irate gentleman as they tried to explain how sorry they were that they had ever intruded on his premises. "I'm going to make my will this very day and you'll not get a penny—not a penny. I'll leave it to the feeble minded.—No, I can't do that for then you and my dear neighbors would share in it. Look at the way you've destroyed my fences and haggled up my house! If you were worth the salt that goes into your bread I'd sue you for damages. There was a time when I had a little privacy, but look at that yard! The next time I want— But the two young people had hurried away leaving him to splutter and fuss alone in his ruined yard, as he termed it.

"Don't go back to the city!" begged Grace and John when Thomas and Cordelia returned with their few personal effects from the stormy interview with their uncle. "Stay here!"

"But our money's all gone," said Thomas. "We have to get to work."

"And there isn't any work around here that we could do," said Cordelia. "Don't make it any harder for us. We want to stay."

"I've just been over to see old Mr. Parker," said Mr. Gross entering the sitting room at that moment. "He's been wanting to move to town these five years but he never was satisfied with anyone who wanted to rent the farm. He didn't give me a definite answer, but he said you should come and see him, Thomas. He wants somebody to take the farm on shares and he doesn't want to give a very big share. You could have the use of his machinery, which is old and out of date, but you'd have to make your money mostly off the chickens and cows. It doesn't look like a gold mine, to be frank, but since you both like the country you could make a good living and work up to something better. And then we don't want to lose you," he added frankly. "You are both very desirable citizens and we want you to stay."

"That is very kind!" said Thomas cordially. "I am sure it is nice to be liked, particularly when we've done so little to deserve it. If we do have to go back to town to work we'll never forget your kindness."

After going over the subject thoroughly Thomas and Cordelia decided to try a summer at least on the Parker farm. The elderly people moved away leaving them the old fat horses and the ancient cows and hens, and they also left enough old fashioned furniture to make the house comfortable. The share that fell to the young farmers was small indeed, but they hoped to add something to it in various small ways such as selling vegetables and raising many young chickens. After all they had only taken it for the summer, or until the crops were harvested, so they could not lose a great deal, they thought, particularly when they remembered that situations in the city were not so easy to get as they had been the year before and they might have to wait some months for an opening.

"Aren't you glad we didn't go in debt for that tombstone for Uncle Richard?" said Cordelia for the hundredth time as they talked over the event that still seemed so startling to them. "Of course I'm glad he did not burn up in the old barn, but if he had not been so cranky and unneighborly all this might not have happened. We've lost our places in town and lost every penny we had saved, all for the sake of a foolish whim in keeping apart from the neighbors. By the way, Thomas, I could not find the little old

Concluded on Page 8

✱ For the Heart and the Home ✱

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

The Sunrise Never Fails.

Upon the sadness of the sea
The sunset broods regretfully;
From the far, lonely spaces, slow
Withdraws the wistful afterglow.

So out of life the splendor dies;
So darken all the happy skies;
So gathers twilight, cold and stern;
But overhead the planets burn.

And up the east another day
Shall chase the bitter dark away;
What tho your eyes with tears be wet?
The sunrise never failed us yet.

The blush of dawn may yet restore
Our light and hope and joy once more.
Sad soul, take comfort, nor forget
That sunrise never failed us yet!

—Celia Thaxter.

A Living Sacrifice

The pastor in an eastern city was pleading for a needy field in the West. The banker there on the left looked listless and the merchant over on the right examined his watch more than once. The church officers passed down the isles with the collection plates.

Back there, sitting alone, was a little girl of a poor family. Her crutches had been bought for her by friends and were her great comfort. She said, "How I wish I might give something. But I haven't anything to give, not even a copper left." A very soft voice seemed to say, "There are your crutches." She gasped to herself, "Oh, my crutches? I couldn't give up my crutches; they are my life." And the voice answered quietly, "Yes—you could—and some one would know of Jesus—if you did—and that would mean so much to them—He's meant so much to you—give up your crutches."

The struggle was over. Maggie, in her childlike simplicity, lifted her crutches and tried rather awkwardly to put them on the collection plate. The usher turned back and walked slowly up the aisle toward the pulpit, carrying the plate in one hand and steadying the crutches on it with the other.

And the people commenced to look. Eyes quickly dimmed. Everybody knew the crutches. Maggie—giving her crutches! The banker reached for his pencil and the merchant reached out to stop the man returning up the aisle. The pastor said, "Surely our little crippled friend is giving us a wonderful example." The plates were called back toward the pews. Somebody paid $50 for the crutches and sent them back to the end pew.

When the offering was counted it contained several hundred dollars. She had obeyed the inner voice. And her gift, small in itself, touched with sacrifice, became worth several hundred dollars in its earning power.—S. D. Gordon, in "Quiet Talks on Service."

Letting Go at the Right Time

BY HILDA RICHMOND

"Yes, these clothes will do the Joneses some good, but land, how much better it would be if they wasn't moth-eaten and out of style at least five years!" So claimed Mrs. Donovan, the kind-hearted laundress who had solicited help from the lady for whom she washed, in behalf of a poor neighboring family, to whom disaster had come in the way of fire. Tired in body, Mrs. Donovan now stood surveying the garments which had been donated in answer to her appeal, and under the weight of which her arms had ached on the way home.

"These things will keep them warm in this winter weather, but 'pears like some folks don't know anything 'bout givin'. Oh, well," she added more cheerfully, as she put the clothes where they would be in readiness for the Jones children when they should come, "some folks never did know how much good there is in just letting go of things, so maybe they ain't so much to blame."

Unconsciously, Mrs. Donovan had stated a great truth, and one that will bear repeating very often. Just to let go of things, and to let go at the right time would help in so many ways, if we could but keep it in mind. Somehow there are people who cling to cast-off garments year after year, thinking they will get a little more wear out of them, and when these clothes are hopelessly out of style, faded and moth-eaten, then they bestow them upon the poor with the virtuous feeling that they are still good enough for that purpose. Often donations given at holiday time and in response to public calls to help the needy are really nothing more than rubbish, and the donors get their old trash carted away for nothing by giving it "to help the poor." Magazines are hoarded until nobody wants them, garments drop into holes, shoes are decayed by long standing, and other contributions are rendered worthless simply because somebody did not know how to let go in time.

But there are other things far more important than mere clothes that may be considered in connection with this subject. "The life is more than the meat, and the body than the raiment." There are people who profess to forgive others, but who cling to the old grudge and talk it over and hold it up to light and carefully lay it away, just as stingy housekeepers examine old garments and finally decide that they are too good to throw away. Many a moth-eaten, faded, dirty garment is looked at every spring and fall, and hung back to wait a little before it is given away, and just so moth-eaten, disreputable old grudges are looked over many times by people who profess to be Christians.

Then there are people who hold back every word of commendation and praise and good-fellowship, when people are just starving for appreciation. Such people are to be pitied, for showing one's interest and good will and uttering words of hearty cheer bring such a rich return that really the giver is better off than at first. It is like the beautiful charity that enriches the donor more than the one who receives, yet there are young people who will not learn to be ready with a cheery word of praise. Oh, they like to be praised themselves, and own the inspiration received from hearty commendation is the very breath of life to young people, but they refuse to say such words themselves. "It's too much like flattery!" said a young man abruptly, when asked why he did not praise the work done by a friend. "I'm not that kind of a person."

Blessings on the young people who have learned the right time to let go! They are the leaven that will some day leaven the whole lump, and at present they are the joy of all with whom they associate. They give freely and happily and they give at the right time, so their gifts are worth more than the ones grudgingly handed out. They consider life too full of work and of joy to hang on to every petty slight and grudge, so they put all these behind them and go on to better and nobler things in life. To know how to let go has been the secret of many a successful life, and it is not hard to believe that in the future even more than in the past the test of real religion will be found in this necessary duty of life.

—Selected.

Be An "Is-er"

A certain shopkeeper is reported to have placed this sign over his door where it might be read by all passers-by: "We are not a 'Has-Been,' or a 'Once-Was,' or a 'Going-to-Be,' but we are an 'Is-er.'"

Many people stopped, read and puzzled over that strange sign, but it was just another way of expressing a phrase often used in business, such as "We are up-to-date in our line." This tradesman meant to say that he was not attempting to do business on past reputation or future promises, but that he was "right there with the goods all the time"; that he made it his business to keep the best of what his customers wanted. In other words he was "on the job."

Are you an "Is-er"? Are you in the habit of doing the duty at hand at the proper time and in such way as to meet with the approval of your own conscience or of others who may be concerned in your affairs?

Then, too, what about those church and Sunday-school duties? Are you an "Is-er" there, too? Are you on time in your place every Sunday, or at such time as your Christian obligations call you? Can you always be depended upon when others are failing? The world and the Church alike need a great company of "Is-ers"—and besides it is the "Is-er" who succeeds when the "Has-beens" and the "Going-to-bes" are making miserable failures all around us. Be an "Is-er."

Denominational

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Installations

In accordance with the instructions of the respective District presidents the pastors named below have recently been installed in their new charges:

January 9, 1916

Pastor John Kurz at Tangier, Okla., by Pastor Paul Brink.

Pastor C. Nauerth at St. John's Church, Noble Township, Cass, County, Iowa, by Pastor W. Kreis.

Pastor W. J. Hausmann at St. Martin's Church, Lick Run, Cincinnati, O., by his brother, Rev. P. Hausmann.

On Jan. 11, 1916, Pastor F. G. W. Fuhrmann at Bayonne, N. J., by Pastor F. E. C. Haas.

Applications for Admission to Membership

Pastor Philip Spaeth, 208 Maston St., Buffalo, N. Y., a member in good standing of the Evangelical Association, has made application to the undersigned for admission to membership in the German Evangelical Synod of N. A., announcement of which is hereby made in accordance with paragraph six of the By-laws.

Pastor Spaeth is at present serving St. James Church, Buffalo, N. Y., for which the recommendation of the committee on examinations of the New York District and the consent of the honorable President General has been asked for and secured.

Persons having knowledge of valid reasons why Pastor Philip Spaeth should not be admitted to membership in the German Evangelical Synod of N. A. should communicate with Rev. R. Vieweg, Pres. New York Distr.

Elmhurst College

Until the time of writing we have been permitted to do our work according to program, and study and recreation periods have alternated in the usual order. Our Christmas vacation has come and gone, and the larger portion of the students spent the holidays at home or with friends and relatives, some forty, however, remaining in the institution and taking part in our large family celebration. The occasion was observed in a beautiful and fitting manner, which was made possible by the generous Christmas gifts of our many friends, to whom we would herewith express our sincere thanks.

On Jan. 4 the second semester began. The health of the students has been most satisfactory so far, with the usual exception of passing ailments of one kind or another. In the early days of January one of the students was obliged to undergo an operation, which necessitated a two weeks' stay at the hospital. He has returned to his work grateful and entirely restored.

During the winter months we enjoyed a concert and a number of lectures. On Thanksgiving Day the Athletic Association held its annual concert, which was a most successful affair. A German evening was given early in December under the auspices of the Schiller Society. The offering taken on this occasion was for the benefit of the Physicians for Germany fund. Shortly after an organ recital was held; in January Dr. Banks gave an illustrated lecture on Armenia, which was followed soon after by one of Dr. Eugen Kuehnemann's famous lectures on Schiller and on Goethe's Faust. All this was very interesting and instructive, and our readers will see that we are endeavoring to vary the regularity of student life in every way possible.

In closing we would announce that we are ready to receive applications for admission for 1916-17. The Elmhurst yearbook and application blanks are gladly sent to any address. For the new school year we shall be in a position to welcome a large number of new students. The writer will cheerfully give any information in regard to the school and the courses of study.

D. Irion, Director.

Annual Meeting of the Central Board for Home Missions.

It was just midnight of Feb. 10 as the closing prayers for the three days' session of the Central Board for Home Missions was spoken. Were the bells of the tower clock of Eden Seminary that rang

Concluded on page 6

"INTO ALL THE WORLD"

How Saul of Tarsus found the Work for which God had fitted him. How Conditions were shaping themselves to help his Work, and how he found his "Base of Operations"

II.

Saul saw nothing of the beauties of Damascus, nor of the busy scenes and the gaily dressed throngs that crowded its main thoroughfares. His companions turned this way and that until they came to the street called the straight and reached the house of Judas, probably the Jewish khan or tavern which Saul had made his headquarters. The street, which has retained its name until to-day, is now narrow and crooked, but recent excavations have revealed stately columns which apparently bordered a wide thoroughfare, so that we may infer that the street was at that time one of the show places of the city. He was brought into one of the chambers of the tavern and left to himself. As evening came the soft breezes played thru the palm and cypress groves and the cooling fountains played in the courtyards, but Saul had no ears for the sound, nor any desire to quench his thirst. At the appointed time the servant came with the food, but Saul was not hungry for earthly bread.

Saul of Tarsus in the prime of manhood (Raphael)

For three days, i. e., until the second day after his arrival, he remained in this condition, and we can only conjecture what occupied his thoughts. It must have been a great sorrow that possessed his soul, and a searching repentance at the discovery of his awful mistake, as well as a deep feeling of unworthiness at the overwhelming grace and mercy of the Lord whom he had persecuted. The Lord Jesus had actually appeared to him, 1 Cor. 15: 8, and tho he had persecuted His followers, yet He had not despised and rejected him, but had rather deemed him worthy of doing something for Him. And as the joyful conviction that he had obtained mercy came to him, "who was not meet to be called an apostle," it began to dawn upon him that henceforth his life belonged to his Lord. The terrible mistake he had made must be made good by the preaching of the Gospel of Christ. He began to feel himself a debtor to his Lord as well as to all who had not yet heard His Gospel, because "necessity was laid upon him, for woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel," as he says later, 1 Cor. 9: 16, 17, and amidst the conflicting emotions that beset him, he took refuge in prayer for light and salvation unto the God of his fathers.

Saul Consecrated

On the third day a stranger came to him. It was Ananias, who had been commissioned to visit Saul. Ananias, who may have been one of the refugees from Jerusalem, knew very well why Saul of Tarsus had come to Damascus, and we do not blame him for needing especial assurance from God in regard to this man, of whom he had heard so many terrible things. At Ananias' touch there fell from Saul's eyes as it were scales, and he received his sight, and he arose and was baptized, Acts 9: 10-19. We are not told what passed between the two afterward, but we may be sure that Ananias had to tell his new found brother many things. And who will say what Saul's feelings were as he heard the message Ananias had received, "He is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before Gentiles and kings and the children of Israel; for I will show him how many things he must suffer for my name's sake." It is quite safe to say that Saul in that hour pledged full and complete surrender to his Lord and the great life work which He had given him to do. And no man has ever kept a pledge more faithfully than Saul did, from the hour when the hands of Ananias rested upon his bowed head, to that other hour when that same head had to bow beneath the headsman's axe in distant Rome.

Saul's natural energy, intensified by his new enthusiasm and devotion, would not permit him to be idle, Gal. 1: 16, and he immediately began evangelistic work in the synagogues of Damascus and pursued it with great success. Nor was it long before persecution set in, as the Damascus Jews, who knew why Saul had been sent to their city, were naturally incensed at the turn affairs had taken. Aided by the governor of the city, 2 Cor. 11: 32, they plotted to kill him, but Saul escaped, Acts 9: 23-25. Instead of returning to Jerusalem, however, he went to Arabia, Gal. 1: 17, where he seems to have spent some time. The reason for this was no doubt primarily to avoid the fierce opposition of the Jews wherever he went to preach, which made it desirable that he should spend some time in retirement in order to escape their vigilance. Saul also needed additional preparation of mind and heart for his great work. As a thinker he needed to look upon all sides of the Gospel which he was to preach to the Gentiles. He also desired to understand the Scriptures, tho he doubtless knew them by heart, as pointing toward Christ, which would mean a complete readjustment of his whole attitude toward the law and the prophets. This process of readjustment very likely led him to formulate, at least in the rough, the magnificent system of Christian doctrine which he afterwards presented to the churches in his letters. From Arabia Saul returned to Damascus, and three years later to Jerusalem, Gal. 1: 17, 18; Acts 9: 26-29, where the Christians feared him because of his former reputation, until Barnabas, with that generosity of mind which ever characterized him, introduced him to the apostles and related the story of his conversion and changed life. In Jerusalem, as at Damascus, he preached fearlessly and earnestly, directing his efforts especially toward his old friends, the Greek-speaking Jews, who, however, at once began to plot against his life, so that it was necessary for the brethren to send him away to Tarsus via Caesarea, Acts 9: 29-30; Gal. 1: 21. Saul left all the more willingly as the Lord had appeared to him in a vision in the Temple telling him distinctly that his mission was to the Gentiles, Acts 22: 17-21. He desired to visit Peter in order that his work might proceed in unison with that of the original apostles. His stay was but fifteen days, as he was commanded to depart quickly, and he went to Tarsus to engage in such work as might be open before him.

Getting Ready for the Task

Saul's stay in Tarsus is practically a blank to us. It seems to have lasted six or seven years, and he may have engaged in missionary work and founded the churches in Cilicia which are mentioned in Acts 15: 41. It is more probable, however, that he spent the time in quiet meditation and further preparation for his future work. Tarsus was one of the centers of Stoic philosophy, and if Saul ever came under the influence of this movement, as his speech at Athens seems to show, it must have been at this time. But the philosophy of his day can hardly have made a very deep or favorable impression, as 2 Cor. 1: 20 and 2: 1 show. The wise men of the day were not true philosophers, but professional speakers and debaters, sophists, bent on popular approval or pecuniary gain, whom a man like Saul could only despise. We may imagine that Saul devoted himself to his old trade of tent-making in order to gain a livelihood, while he waited for the hand of God to point out the place where he should begin his work.

And even while he waited things were shaping themselves in the great outside world in such a way that a most important and suitable place for him was naturally developing. The wanton cruelty and shameless licentiousness of the Roman emperor Caligula, who nevertheless claimed to be a god and demanded divine honor, made thoughtful people everywhere long after a new message. Disgusted with the open hypocrisy of the pagan priesthood and the flagrant corruption and immorality which was rapidly permeating all classes of society, the minds of the best people when the Roman province of Syria was erected 64 B. C. Its population was chiefly Gentile, tho not a few Jews lived there. It was the third largest city of the world, and men of all nations thronged its busy streets. Refugees from Jerusalem brought the first tidings of Christ to some of the Jews there, thru whom it spread to the Gentile population also. The hand of the Lord was clearly evident in the rapidity with which the Gospel gained a foothold, Acts 11: 21, and the first Christian church among the Gentiles was a fact almost before those who had helped to bring it about were aware of it. When the apostles at Jerusalem heard of it they sent Barnabas as a delegate to investigate the situation, and a more suitable person of a long and severe struggle for the highest and the best things of the Spirit. Into this period, which we may well call the prime of his life, the fine picture by Rafael seems to fit best. These days at Antioch were undoubtedly the springtime of his ministry. The details of his labors here have not been preserved for us as have those of his missionary journeys into all the world, but it must nevertheless have been a great and stirring period for him. For it was here that the foundations were laid for his later work; it was here that the young eagle gained the strength for his later lofty flight. It is here also where he most probably received the glorious vision and revelation, when he was caught up into Paradise and heard unspeakable words which it is not lawful for a man to utter, 2 Cor. 12: 4. During his entire later life he was a persecuted man, and the story of his work abroad is one of continued danger of many kinds, 2 Cor. 11: 23-28; here however, we find no trace of all this, because here the Church for the first time left the narrow confines of Judaism, and because here Saul did not have to deal with Jews. The people of the great heathen metropolis were liberal-minded, ready to "live and let live" any one who came, and no hindrance of any kind seems to have been placed in his way.

It is no wonder then, that under such favorable conditions the energetic and consecrated ministry of Saul and his co-laborers should have been highly fruitful, Acts 11: 26. It was a faithful and intelligent group of men that wrought together in order to prepare the way for the Gospel of their Lord in this vast city: Barnabas, loyal, devoted, eloquent; Symeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, perhaps one of the first members of the church; Manaen, the foster-brother of Herod and educated with him at the royal court, and head and shoulders above them all Saul, the mighty, Spirit-filled personality, whose constantly growing influence made itself felt everywhere. We must not seek the church members of Antioch in synagogues or in any buildings when they held their services of worship. Antioch was a southern city, and open air preaching was no doubt the favorite method of addressing those who desired to hear, and Saul and his helpers may very likely have been found in many of the favorite and frequented public places of the city, amid the laurel, myrtle and orange groves in the parks, in the places of public amusement, or even in the streets themselves, especially in the larger avenues, which were wide with spacious and shaded walks for pedestrians, and undisturbed by the noise and clamour of the heavier traffic. We are safe in assuming that all these opportunities to reach the people of the city with the Gospel of Christ were constantly used by those earnest workers, so that "much people" could be added unto the Lord and taught. That the Gentile followers of Jesus were at once ready to contribute to the needs of their Hebrew fellow-believers at Jerusalem in the time of famine, Acts 11: 27-30, indicates the feeling of fellowship and charity, and the lack of race or national prejudice. Here there was truly "neither Jew nor Greek," but all were one in Christ Jesus.

"Enlarge the Place of Thy Tent"

It could hardly have been otherwise, also, than that Saul should often go out to the extensive wharves of the great city, where ships from every port on the Mediterranean were constantly landing or weighing anchor. Very likely he became acquainted with many of the seamen or merchants from distant parts, and it would have been strange indeed if he had not longed to go out and bring the glad tidings of his beloved Lord to the distant lands whose representatives he saw before him there. And we may well suppose that a man like Saul did not keep such thoughts to himself, but told others of the vision of new opportunities, and that more than once he reminded the disciples of Antioch of their missionary obligations towards the nations of the earth. As a Pharisee he may often have sought to understand the strange fate of his people so different from that implied by the promise to Abraham, "In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." Why the captivity and the dispersion? Why the yoke of Rome and the humiliation which it brought? Why was there no indication of the King's coming into His own? Here at Antioch was the answer. Was not Israel fulfilling its world-mission by the very destruction it had suffered? Would this world mission ever have been fulfilled if Judah had remained an earthly kingdom with Jerusalem as its capital? Was not the Jewish people, in their disper-

Continued on Page 8

Present-day Antioch in Syria, where the disciples were first called Christians everywhere were open for something better than the world had ever known, for a Saviour who could actually save, and a new age of truth and righteousness and love. Saul of Tarsus beheld all this and in his newly-gained, tremendously earnest conviction that salvation for man could be found in Jesus Christ alone, he was anxious for the opportunity to fulfill the obligation Christ had laid upon him. While he was quietly engaged in tent-making at Tarsus, he was thinking over and working thru the great thoughts of God revealed in the Scriptures and combining them with the revelation of Jesus Christ into that wonderfully deep and harmonious message that was to make him in due time a teacher of all the world.

How God Paved the Way

And in the great busy world outside things were rapidly shaping themselves so that the field for which Saul was best fitted was soon ready for him. The persecutions which he himself had begun at Jerusalem had forcibly reminded the church there of its missionary duty and scattered the disciples of Jesus over all Judea and Samaria and the regions beyond. Every refugee from Jerusalem had, as it were, become an apostle, and a great host of nameless missionaries had carried the good news of the Gospel into hundreds of cities, towns and villages into Syria and along the entire east coast of the Mediterranean, even unto Cyprus and as far as Cyrene in northern Africa, Acts 11: 19, 20. But wherever the joyful tidings had been preached, the messages had, by common consent, confined themselves to the Hebrew synagogues. Salvation came from the Jews and was, so it seemed to the Jews themselves, a treasure which Gentiles could hardly be expected to appreciate. And even if Peter had recognized the open door among the Gentiles, Acts 10, and the Church at Jerusalem rejoiced at the fact, no one took the matter seriously enough to give especial attention to the great task that God wanted done, until God himself prepared the place and appointed the instrument.

It was the city of Antioch in Syria where the conditions most favorable for this great step forward in the Kingdom of God were shaping themselves. This city of northwestern Syria, twelve miles from the Mediterranean on the Orontes, had been founded in 300 B. C. and had soon become a large and important place. It was the metropolis of Syria under the Macedonian-Greek dynasty and had remained the capital for the purpose could hardly have been found. A Cyprian by birth, he was familiar with Greek views and culture and therefore brought far more sympathy and understanding to the Gentile church at Antioch than would have been possible for any Palestinian Jew. He rejoiced at the results that had been already gained but no doubt still more so at the splendid opportunity that Antioch presented for missionary labors. His enthusiasm was such that he took hold of the work himself immediately, but the greatness of the task made an associate necessary. And the work required an extraordinary man. None of the apostles at Jerusalem seemed to fit into the conditions at Antioch, and it was nothing short of an inspiration that made him think of Saul of Tarsus, whom he had introduced to the disciples at Jerusalem a few years before. It was only a short journey by boat from Antioch to Tarsus and if he went to seek Saul on the second day of the week, he might be able to have him in Antioch when the next Lord's day came.

The Right Man in the Right Place

It was probably in the year 43 that Barnabas, perhaps after some searching of the city before he found Saul, walked into the weaver-shop where his old friend was employed. We can imagine how long and earnestly they talked the matter over, and how gladly Saul consented to come. Here was what he had been waiting for, and it was unmistakably a call from the Lord himself. Arriving in Antioch Barnabas no doubt gathered the leading disciples together and presented his friend, who was welcomed with open arms. And for Saul also the day must have been one of joyful importance, since the church that greeted him was the first church that he could call his own, the first Gentile church! How pleasant it must have been to him to think of the throng of earnest disciples of his Lord in contrast to the vast heathen city with its greed and its pleasure, its idolatry and corruption! How uplifting must have been the joyful psalms of thanksgiving voiced by the followers of Jesus as compared with the wild and immoral pagan songs that might be heard in all the public places. It must have been a sacred joy for him to work together with Barnabas and the other devoted brethren in Christ at so great a task as he now saw before him.

Saul may have been about forty years of age when he began his work at Antioch, and he brought to it a character and a manhood that was the ripened fruit out the midnight hour an "Amen" to our prayer? Was it an admonition to be doubly mindful of our missionary duties and obligations, like the midnight cry to the wise virgins, "Behold, the bridegroom! Come ye forth to meet Him!"? The members of the Board took it to mean both. The times are evil in the world, and it will not do to let weariness and sleep get the upper hand, and permit the work of our Lord to suffer. But we may nevertheless rest assured that the "Amen" of divine benediction will not fail us wherever God's work is done in the consciousness of human weakness, sinfulness and imperfection, but in faithful service and confident trust in His help. Therefore we take up the Home Mission duties of the new year with the motto, "The Lord will provide."

Annual Meeting of the Central Board for Home Missions

Continued from Page 4

By Way of Preparation.

It is the secretary's business to get the reports together and in shape for the meeting of the Board. The questionnaires sent out during November and December are to be filled out by the missionary and returned to the secretary of the Central Board, with the comment of the District Board, "not later than the second week in January." That is what the blank says. And so the secretary waited with his pen in readiness for what was to come. But the "second week in January" passes by like any other. But hold on! Here is the report from the Atlantic District! Hurrah! The first swallow to herald the approach of spring. But that seems to be all, with the exception of here and there a report during the two or three weeks following. But then all come at once, no longer like swallows in early spring, but like a swarm of mosquitoes that brings the heat of summer. And the work will be warm, because the time is so short. Two days before the Board meeting one important District is still missing, and from some of the others supplementary reports come in with some item that has been forgotten or omitted. "Excuse my delay, dear brother," they say, "but with your proverbial patience," etc. Yes, if all the secretary had to do was to pack the sheets he has received together and take them to the meeting, it would not make much difference. But there is that large volume into which he must transcribe the important items from each of the reports—this year there are 137, each one with thirty-seven questions and many more sub-questions—so that the Board may have a true picture of the development of each field from year to year. Then an extract must be prepared from this report for the members of the Board, so that they may see at a glance the condition and the needs of the different fields. And they ought to have this extract at least a week before the meeting, so as to have leisure to study it. For there must be no "unpreparedness" among Germans, not even in their church work. But how is this possible when the reports from the field come in so slowly, or not at all? Under such circumstances not even one complete report is to be thought of. Finally, with the friendly aid of a sympathetic Sunday-school teacher, the 10,000 items are entered, and the secretary can rush for the night train that is to take him to the meeting. And there the treasurer tells him, "I am in the same boat in regard to the receipts." But this is poor consolation; a far better one would be "Next year all the reports shall be in by the second week in January." And if this outcry has helped to bring such a thing to pass, it will have been time well spent.

Financial Conditions.

From the very interesting report of the treasurer, Pastor Ludwig, we gather the following: for 1915 the voluntary offerings amounted to $23,176, or $1,847 less than in 1914. The income from Eden Publishing House was the same as last year, $4,450. The share going to Ft. Collins Academy was $349, or $628 less than in the preceding year, but the institution received $2,756 from the Home Mission Board. Under these circumstances it is quite self-evident that the Central Board agrees with the resolution of the Colorado Mission District and the Board of Control for the Academy, to the effect that the institution be turned over to the Board for Educational institutions. Now that the Academy has been established, and is visibly prospering under the supervision of Director Jans, the carrying out of the

Concluded on Page 8

MISSIONARY CONDITIONS IN INDIA

The Problem of Missionary Co-operation is being gradually worked out. Plans for the Promotion of Education are going steadily forward

II.

In the Anglican communion the proposal to establish self-governing synods has encountered legal difficulties, and it has been found necessary to restrict the plan to the formation of councils, diocesan and provincial, without the coercive authority which the synods would have had. A council has already been inaugurated in the Bombay diocese, and steps are being taken to ascertain the opinion of the church regarding the formation of a provincial council. Among the other Christian bodies, the movement for the federation of churches has been advanced by the preparation of a revised scheme, which has been accepted in principle by the bodies that are favorable to the idea of federation. The clause about which there was difference of opinion now runs as follows: "The Federation shall not interfere with the existing creed of any church or society entering its fellowship, or with its internal order or external relations. But in accepting the principle that the Church of God is one, and that believers are the body of Christ and severally members thereof, the federating churches agree to accept each other's discipline, to recognize each other's ministry, and to acknowledge each other's membership by a free interchange of members in good and regular standing duly accredited, welcoming them into Christian fellowship and communion as brethren in Christ." The negotiations with regard to union which have been going on between the South India United Church and the churches connected with the Wesleyan Mission and the Basel Mission have for the time being been suspended.

Owing to the effects of the war, the synod of the Basel Mission has been unable to meet. The statement submitted by the joint committee appointed by the Wesleyan Mission and the South India United Church was provisionally accepted by the General Assembly of the latter body and approved by the church councils. On the Wesleyan side, the resolutions passed in the four district synods made it evident that any proposals for early organic union would meet with strenuous opposition; the Provincial Synod therefore went no further than offering to await any fresh proposals from the General Assembly of the South India United Church.

Stimulated by the example of Japan and China the South India United Church has made plans for a vigorous and well-prepared evangelistic campaign. Other bodies in South India are co-operating, and the Madras Representative Council of Missions is helping to make the interest widespread. Arrangements were made for the training of Christian workers during the summer, and a special week of simultaneous evangelistic meetings was held in September. About one-fourth of the communicant members of the South India United Church took part in the effort, including a number of high school teachers. The workers, more than half of whom were voluntary, numbered 7926. Addresses were given in 3718 towns and villages in the Tamil country, 8443 persons expressed a desire for further teaching and 6317 a determination to follow Christ. An active part was taken by women. In Madras City alone 330 Christian women went out to work and reached 3400 of their Hindu sisters. Good work was done and the Assembly has resolved to set apart a week annually for special evangelism. On September 25th Mr. Eddy began a series of conventions in nine large centres, followed by city campaigns in Vellore, Madura and Palamcottah.

An event of far-reaching importance is the initiation of a thoro survey of the entire Indian mission field with a view to gathering such information as will guide the societies and the Indian Church to a duly co-ordinated policy for each part of the field, and as will enable the Church in India and at the home base of missions to realize, in outline at least, the nature and extent of the task committed to it. The survey, which is expected to take at least two years, is under the direction of the Rev. W. H. Findlay, for eighteen years as a missionary in South India and for ten years one of the secretaries of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, who was appointed to this special work by the National Missionary Council. After spending some months in preliminary study of the problems and in personal conference with the missionary societies in Great Britain and America, Mr. Findlay reached India last November.

The Government and Education.

Much interest has been aroused among the educated classes in India by the appointment of an Indian, Sir C. Sankaran Nair, to succeed Sir Harcourt Butler as the member for education in the Viceroy's Council. In pursuance of its determination to place the formation of character in the forefront of its educational policy, the government has made plans for the establishment of residential and teaching universities of a new type at Patna, Dacca and Nagpur. Provision is being made for the co-operation of missionary bodies.

The government has given its consent to the establishment of a Hindu university, the bill for this purpose being passed in October. While the government reserves the right to interfere in certain emergencies, the practical control and management of the university is entrusted to the Hindu community. Like the proposed government universities at Dacca and Patna, the university will be residential, and there will be compulsory religious instruction for Hindu students. The university is welcomed by the government as one solution of the problem of finding 'some means of infusing religious and moral ideas into the swiftly onrushing intellectualism of the day.' The private contributions to the fund for the university exceed $1,600,000.

The education of girls is making steady, though slow progress. A deputation from a committee, recently formed in London with Sir Krishna Gupta as chairman, for the promotion of the education of Indian girls was received by the Secretary of State for India in October. Mr. Chamberlain stated in reply that the movement for the education of Indian women must be a spontaneous one, fostered and helped by government, but truly arising from the people of India themselves. He held out little hope of the government initiating new measures in the near future, and emphasized the necessity of securing better trained teachers before any scheme was launched which would sweep large numbers of girls into schools. The chief hindrance according to a recent government statement is the lack of women teachers, the need being urgent in every province. An event of special importance is the opening of the new Christian College for Women in Madras under the principalship of Miss Eleanor McDougall. In this institution twelve missionary societies are co-operating, six British, one Canadian and five American, and its aim is to make the largest possible contribution from the standpoint of Christian ideals to the education of the women of India.

Christian Literature.

A band of scholars, composed of both missionaries and Indians, is engaged in the preparation of three new series of books. The first under the general title of 'The Religious Quest of India' has as its aim the scholarly and scientific study of the teachings of the non-Christian religions and a careful comparison of these teachings with Christianity. The first two volumes of this series were published in the course of the year. A second series entitled 'The Indian Religious Life Series' deals with the sects of India, and the third entitled 'The Heritage of India Series' consists of small volumes designed to bring home to the ordinary man all that is best in the ancient literature, philosophy, biography, fine art and music of India.

The translation of the whole Bible has been completed in Nepali, the language of the Gurkhas, and in Santali. Gospels have been published for the first time in Ho, a dialect in Chota Nagpur; in Tinan, a dialect of Lahuli, spoken on the borders of Tibet; and in Chin, the Kamhow dialect in Burma. There has been a record circulation of the Scriptures in India during the year. The total number of sales effected by the British and Foreign Bible Society amounted to 983,000, over 314,000 copies being disposed of by colporteurs. During 1914, 10,800 Scriptures were presented to students in the Indian universities. The National Bible Society of Scotland reports a circulation of 274,164 Scriptures during 1914.

Concluded on Page 8

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

Mar. 19, 1916. Reminiscere, second Sunday in Lent

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

Power from our Pledge.

M., Mar. 13. Keeping covenant. Num. 30: 1, 2.
 T., Mar. 14. Israel's covenant. Exod. 34: 28.
 W., Mar. 15. Power thru remembering. Num. 15: 37-41.
 T., Mar. 16. Power from devotions. Eph. 1: 17-23.
 F., Mar. 17. Power from service. 2 Tim. 2: 1-15.
 S., Mar. 18. Power from faithfulness. Luke 19: 11-19.
Sun., Mar. 19. Topic—Getting Power from our Pledge. Ps. 25: 1-14. (Honorary Members' meeting.)

Suggestions to the Leader

The Young People's Society dare not become isolated and an organization apart from the adult members of the congregation. The different organizations of the church are the units of the work of the church, which must retain their solidarity with the church as such. Therefore it is eminently fitting, and absolutely necessary that from time to time the older members of the congregation be invited to attend the meeting of the young people's society. We would recommend that this meeting be held on Sunday evening, at the hour of the evening service. Plan your program carefully, provide for a spirited song-service, for two or more brief addresses, one of which ought to be given by one of the older members of the congregation.

In view of the importance of confirmation for which a number of our young people are in preparation, it is urged that a special invitation be extended to them, and that special seats be reserved for them. In the addresses and remarks the need of a confession of Christ, and of a special pledge to guide us in our Christian life ought to be emphasized.

The Topic Presented

The word pledge as used in our topic refers primarily to the Christian Endeavor pledge, a promise or covenant exacted from the members of the societies that bear this name. A pledge is a promise or covenant. We give to God definite promises as to our future conduct and life,—in return God bestows upon us the assurance of His good-will and His blessings.

In our confirmation we made a confession of Jesus, assuring the assembled congregation of our earnest endeavor to lead a Christian life. Thruout our life we are placed again and again in critical positions where we feel our own incompetency and inability to cope with present difficulties. Then we turn to God with promises, asking in return relief from our difficulties. Promises are only a source of strength when we remember them. Forgotten and broken promises are a source of weakness.

1. The Sacredness of Promises.

Promises are sacred because they are mutual agreements. We receive something definite in response to our promise. A broken promise implies receiving something under false pretenses, and that is but a form of theft. God's promises are sure, why should our promises not be considered sacred, and observed inviolably.

2. Promises Strengthen our Will.

They express the ideals which we hope to attain and to realize in our life, guide and direct our actions in the pursuit of these ideals, spur us on to renewed efforts when we fail in our purpose thru innate weakness. They are the rod of the pilgrim, the staff of the cripple, the compass of the traveler, the star of the mariner.

3. Promises must be Progressive.

We dare promise all to God, but we must be content with a gradual progress. We dare not expect to become perfect in our life at the very beginning of our pilgrimage. Christian perfection is the accumulation of Christian experiences. Every day brings its defeats, but every day must be marked by advances, which outdistance the defeats. Every day we dare go one step farther, because we have gathered new strength, and received new visions. Be ware of promising all at the very beginning, but you are perfectly safe in promising an earnest endeavor to lead a Christian life, and doing all what is involved in the Christian life.

4. Promises require the partnership of Jesus Christ.

The man who trusts his own will-power only leans on a broken staff. At the crucial test the staff will fail to give support. Christ is the foundation of our pledge. "Did we in our own strength confide, our striving would be losing." This means, that we will daily compare our conduct with the example Jesus has given us in His own life; that we will ever seek the presence of Jesus, who has given us the assurance, that "He will be with us always," that we will be guided absolutely by the divine truth, and never trust our own judgment. Thus our judgment will gradually be made to conform to the will of God and right-doing will become a habit, the result of constant right-thinking. Daily communion with Jesus Christ gives us power to do His will.

Some Questions on the Topic

1. Why is a broken promise a theft?
2. How do broken promises weaken character?
3. How can a broken promise strengthen character?
4. Why is the communion with Jesus absolutely necessary to right-living?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Gen. 8: 22; 22: 17; 28: 20, 21; Ex. 23: 22; Deut. 4: 4; Psalm 145: 5-9; Isa. 25:4; 31: 1, 2; 33: 15, 16; Matt. 5: 45; 1 Cor. 16: 2; Psalm 76: 11; 66: 13, 14; Eccl. 5: 4-6; Nahum 1: 15; Jacob's vow—Gen. 28: 20-22; Hannah's vow—1 Sam. 1: 11; David's vow—Psalm 132: 2.

A Prayer

We thank Thee, heavenly Father, that Thou hast surrounded us with every safeguard in our spiritual growth and inner development. Thou dost accept pledges and promises, even tho coming from weak men and women. Thine hand is ever reaching out after the struggling ones, to strengthen those who are weak, to guide those who are erring.

We pray, that we may strive more earnestly after the fulfillment of our promises. Help us to remember that broken promises will weaken our spiritual life, unless we seek strength in the presence of God for our future course. We would therefore remember the Passion of our dear Lord, who bore our sins for us on the cross. Dying to our old sins, we would live with Jesus unto the perfect life of the childhood of our Father in heaven. Amen.

The Advanced Bible LessonsLesson 12. The Parables of Jesus.*Daily Bible Readings.

M. Mar 13. Matt. 13: 1-23. Jesus Speaking in Parables.
 T. Mar. 14. Matt. 13: 24-43. Parables of the Kingdom.
 W. Mar. 15. Matt. 13: 44-53. The Treasure of the Kingdom.
 T. Mar. 16. Luke 15: 1-31. God Loves to the Uttermost.
 F. Mar. 17. Matt. 20: 1-16. Laboring for God.
 S. Mar. 18. Matt. 22: 1-14. The Joy of the Kingdom.
 S. Mar. 19. Matt. 25: 1-30. A Warning of the Judgment.

Lesson Key:—"I will open my mouth in parables; I will utter things hidden from the foundation of the world." Ps. 78: 2.

One of the most striking things about the ministry of Jesus Christ is the manner in which He knows how to make use of all that can help Him drive His teachings home into the lives of men in the most effective manner imaginable. We have seen how He used His divine power over nature and its laws so as to arrest the attention of men and make them realize the fundamental truths of the Kingdom. And in the same way as He used His extraordinary power to work miracles in order to make men heed the message He had for them, He also uses the common and ordinary things of every-day life to impress Kingdom facts and truths upon the minds of His hearers. We see this especially in His parables, those comparative narratives drawn from life and from nature for the purpose of revealing some hidden truth which His followers needed to know. These parables of Jesus are not only gems of literature whose classical beauty is unsurpassed, but also vehicles for a multitude of the most vital and precious religious truths. They are at once models of simple, effective, popular style and the highest kind of moral and spiritual thought and teaching.

By means of His parables Jesus secured better attention for what He wanted to teach than if He had written a shelf-full of books, or made use of the most perfect and powerful eloquence. Thru them He brought His thoughts down to the level of the unlearned people and made their simple every-day world live with the truths of God. The things that were going on about them every day, and which had seemed to them mere earthly drudgery, were suddenly transfigured into messengers of great divine truths which put an entirely different aspect upon life in general and their own life and work in particular. The work of building, of sowing and reaping, of baking bread and attending to business, friendship and service, the relation of employer and servant, of father and child, in short, practically everything that concerned them, was filled with a new meaning for them as it served to bear its divine message. Those who had heard some of the parables of Jesus could not help becoming more thoughtful and serious as they went about their every-day business, because that business, whatever it might have been, was brought closer to the work of God in the world. Thus people learned to think the thoughts of God, and learning to think the thoughts of God always lifts the mind upon a higher level, cleanses and purifies it of the thoughts of earth, and opens hearts and minds for God's truth and righteousness. From the fact that so many of the parables of Jesus were remembered by His disciples, tho no one thought of writing them down until long afterward, we see how deeply the things Jesus had taught, and even the expressions He had used, sank down into their hearts and left an impression that was practically ineffaceable. And when we consider the vital importance of what Jesus taught by means of parables—take, for instance, the ideas conveyed in the parables of the wise and foolish builders, Matt. 7: 24-27, or in those of the rich fool, Luke 12: 16-21; the leaven, Matt. 13: 33; the unmerciful servant, Matt. 18: 23-25; the good Samaritan, Luke 10: 30-37; the prodigal son, Luke 15: 11-32; the good Shepherd, John 10: 1-16, and the Pharisee and the publican, Luke 18: 9-14, and many others—the advantage of this method of teaching is very evident.

If Jesus wanted His disciples to know and to understand these truths, He desired to keep many of them from His enemies. There was danger that many of His teachings, such as those in regard to the Kingdom of heaven, would be wilfully misunderstood by those opposed to Him and a conflict brought on prematurely. If at any time His enemies turned and were converted their minds would be opened to an understanding of Jesus' teachings; for the present, however, it was concealed from them and revealed only to the spiritual-minded. The others heard the story but did not fathom its meaning.

No kind of study is more fruitful than that of each and every parable of Jesus with a view to obtaining an insight into its full meaning. It is a good plan to commit them to memory and ponder their meaning for our own personal spiritual life. In becoming familiar with the general range of Jesus' parables and each one in particular, the following list in the Advanced Quarterly will be found most helpful.

The Parables of Jesus.

1. The wise and foolish builders. Matt. 7: 24-27; Luke 6: 47-49.
2. The two debtors. Luke 7: 41-47.
3. The rich fool. Luke 12: 16-21.
4. The servants waiting for their Lord. Luke 12: 35-40.
5. The barren fig tree. Luke 13: 6-9.
6. The Sower. Matt. 13: 3-9, 18-23; Mark 4: 1-9, 14-20; Luke 8: 5-8, 11-15.
7. The Tares. Matt. 13: 24-30, 36-43.
8. Seed growing secretly. Mark 4: 26-29.
9. Mustard seed. Matt. 13: 31, 32; Mark 4: 30-32; Luke 13: 18, 19.
10. The leaven. Matt. 13: 33; Luke 13: 20, 21.
11. The hidden treasure. Matt. 13: 44.
12. The pearl of great price. Matt. 13: 45, 46.
13. The dragnet. Matt. 13: 47-50.
14. The unmerciful servant. Matt. 18: 23-25.
15. The good Samaritan. Luke 10: 30-37.
16. The friend at midnight. Luke 11: 5-8.
17. The good shepherd. John 10: 1-16.
18. The great supper. Luke 14: 15-24.
19. The lost sheep. Luke 15: 3-7; Matt. 8: 12-14.

20. The lost piece of money. Luke 15: 8—10.
21. The prodigal son. Luke 15: 11—32.
22. The unjust steward. Luke 16: 1—9.
23. The rich man and Lazarus. Luke 16: 19—31.
24. The importunate widow. Luke 18: 1—8.
25. The Pharisee and publican. Luke 18: 9—14.
26. The laborers in the vineyard. Matt. 20: 1—16.
27. The pounds. Luke 19: 11—27.
28. The two sons. Matt. 21: 28—32.
29. The wicked husbandmen. Matt. 21: 33—44; Mark 12: 1—12; Luke 20: 9—18.
30. The marriage of the king's son. Matt. 22: 1—14.
31. The fig tree leafing. Matt. 24: 32; Mark 13: 28, 29.
32. The man taking a far journey. Mark 13: 34—37.
33. The ten virgins. Matt. 25: 1—13.
34. The talents. Matt. 25: 14—30.
35. The vine. John 15: 1—5.

Annual Meeting of the Central Board for Home Missions

Concluded from Page 6

resolution is also in harmony with the action of the General Conference.

The amount appropriated for 1915 (including additional appropriations during the year) was $42,775, of which $34,542 was paid out. The decline in voluntary contributions was more than made up by the Board's share in the Jubilee Offering. In view of the prosperous condition of the Board, for which we are exceedingly grateful to our Evangelical fellow-Christians, it was decided to increase the maximum salary of married missionaries with numerous families in larger cities without a parsonage from $1,000 to $1,100, and also to provide a sliding scale by which competent unmarried workers may be encouraged to remain in the service of the Board by regular increases in salary from time to time. The District boards will in due time receive complete information as to the provision of the resolution.

The sum set aside for 1916 was in round figures $40,000, the largest appropriation ever made at one time, but fully justified by the conditions of the work.

In General.

A resolution that all missionaries should know is the one providing for a free supply of Evangelical literature for propaganda purposes ("back numbers" of periodicals, Year Book, tracts, etc.). Those in need of such material should apply directly to Eden Publishing House, which will send the desired articles free of charge.

A new and favorable contract has been made with the Montana Ranchers' Co. (Billings Colony). Pastor Maurer is at present in the service of the company (under the Board's supervision) in order to be better able to push the colonization work to better advantage. He will gladly tell about this work to any church desiring the information, without charge to the church, and the Board would encourage all congregations interested to take advantage of this offer. In order to avoid unnecessary expense it would be best for the District boards to arrange a lecture tour for Pastor Maurer in their territory, as has already been successfully done in the Minnesota District.

Pastor Nuesch was the only member of the Board who was prevented from being present at the meeting. A heavy snow-storm had delayed him in the mountains, so that he was obliged to return to Los Angeles. The Board could, on the other hand, enjoy the presence and the counsel of President General Baltzer, and Pastor Freund, president of the Washington Mission District, and a number of other brethren who had local problems of one kind and another to discuss. The round of hard work in the meeting was pleasantly interrupted by a lecture before the student body by Pastor Reller, chairman of the Board.

It would be wrong to omit mention of the very pleasant way in which Pastor and Mrs. Schneider, as well as Director Becker discharged the duties of hospitality and made the members feel at home in the Seminary. Eden Seminary and home mission work! May these two twin sisters always be richly blessed to the upbuilding of God's Kingdom and the glory of His name.

Statistical.

Now for the "dry" but nevertheless very interesting figures. Five churches became self-sustaining in 1915: Elkton, Minn., supported since 1905 with $1,626; Royal Oak, Mich., supported since 1908 with $1,602; Highland Park, Ill., supported since 1909 with $1,951; Crystal Lake, Ill., supported since 1906 with $1,992, and Columbus, O., (St. Paul's), supported since 1907 with $3,270.

For 1916 103 parishes with 137 churches are being supported, twelve parishes and thirteen unorganized churches more than last year at this time. These are divided among the different Districts as follows:

District	No. of Parishes	No. of Churches	Amount
Atlantic District	6	6	$ 7,029.00
Indiana District	8	12	8,029.00
Kansas District	6	8	8,067.00
Michigan District	5	7	10,146.00
Iowa District	4	7	7,198.00
Minnesota District	6	8	5,052.00
Missouri District	6	7	13,252.00
Nebraska District	3	4	2,328.00
New York District	2	2	2,893.00
North Illinois District	9	10	8,700.00
Ohio District	2	2	7,272.00
Pacific District	8	9	9,627.00
South Illinois District	3	4	4,001.00
Texas District	6	14	6,604.00
West Missouri District	1	1	140.00
Wisconsin District	5	8	7,509.00
Colorado District	9	12	20,521.00
Washington District	6	6	16,864.00
Canada District	4	5	12,708.00
Montana District	4	11	6,862.00

The total amount expended on these fields is thus $164,802, an average of $1,600 per parish, or $1,200 per church. The value of the property is $466,007, with an indebtedness of $177,188. The value of the paid up property is larger by $75,000 this year than it was in 1914, which is certainly worth noting for a year of financial depression. The number of families served is 2,218, with 2,018 individual members. Deducting the figures for the churches which have become self-supporting, this is a loss of 181 families, but an increase of 1,679 individual members, a substantial gain, equalling approximately four churches with a membership of 200. The largest membership is found in Colorado (313 families and 109 individual members); Atlantic (300 families and 138 individual members); Wisconsin (172 families and 402 individual members); North Illinois (153 families and 261 individual members), and Minnesota (173 families and twenty-six individual members).

In general, including particulars not mentioned in this report, these figures show that 1915 has been a year of substantial progress, and that the divine blessing has rested upon the faithful and diligent labor of our workers. To God above the glory, with a full measure of appreciation for the earnest men and women who have, mostly amid great sacrifices and many hardships, served the Master in His vineyard.

Alfred E. Meyer, Sec'y.

"Into all the World"

Continued from Page 5

sion all over the world, preparing the way for the Word of the Cross as nothing else could have done, as the uncounted thousands of Hebrews passed along the world's highways of trade, leaving everywhere some knowledge of God and some hope of a coming Redeemer?

And at no time were conditions more favorable for spreading the tidings of great joy among all the peoples. The unity of government that prevailed in the vast Roman empire, the peaceful condition that had been established by the iron hand of that government, and the fact that the Greek language was understood from Babylon to Rome and in southern Europe as well as in northern Africa, made the times especially auspicious for a great world-wide missionary effort. Under such conditions it is not at all surprising that, in the fasting and ministering, in the effort of the church at Antioch to learn the will of the Lord in this matter, that the Holy Spirit should indicate Barnabas and Saul as the men to be sent forth unto the work for which they were especially called, and which has become a matter of Church and of world history in the three missionary journeys of the Apostle Paul.

The Old Hampton Place

Continued from Page 3

album this morning that has papa's and mamma's pictures in it," she broke off suddenly. "I thought it was in that old suit case that we had not brought from Mrs. Gross's but it isn't there. If that is gone I'll have to go back and ask Uncle Richard for it."

A thoro search of all the belongings that had been dumped into the pike that day failed to reveal the old fashioned album which was their dearest treasure for what it contained, and Cordelia set out that afternoon determined to beard the lion in his den and demand her property, no matter how much the old gentleman raged. She hoped the few weeks and the fine weather had cooled him down and she meant to be as gentle and considerate as possible, but she must and would have that little book that was so precious to both of them.

She rang the front door bell three times and then made her way round the house. In spite of her determination to be brave she childishly left the front gate standing wide open so as to get out in a hurry in case her uncle was very angry. She knocked and even called without getting any response, but finally thought she heard a groan inside. The cold chills crept down her back but she bravely opened the door.

"Why didn't you come in long ago and not stand there hammering at the door?" demanded a voice in the darkness. "I'm going to die and you'll be glad of it, but you won't get my property. Don't stand there with your mouth and eyes open. Get me a mustard plaster or something hot. Didn't I tell you I'm dying?"

ALEXANDER CRUDEN, M. A.

A COMPLETE CONCORDANCE

to

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES

of the

OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

Forming a dictionary and alphabetical index to the Bible.

With a concordance to the proper names of the Old and New Testaments and the books called Apocrypha. To which is added a sketch of the life and character of the author.

Cloth, 856 pages ten$1.00

REVISED EDITION.

SMITH'S

Pronouncing Bible Dictionary.

Beautifully illustrated with over 500 fine engravings and 16 handsome full-page illustrations, several from photographic views taken in the Holy Land.

Containing more Scriptural Words than any other medium-sized dictionary published, to which is added

THE NEW

Analytical and Comparative Concordance to the Old and New Testaments. This concordance contains nearly 100,000 references, was compiled, especially for this volume, and is strictly up-to-date.

A History of each book of the Bible. 4,000 QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS on the Old and New Testaments.

Chronological index to the Bible.

Seven beautifully colored lithographic Maps of Palestine, etc.

A larger mass of information for Bible Teachers and Students than ever before bound in one volume.

786 Pages.

CLOTH $1.50

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., MARCH 16th, 1916

NUMBER 11

Are they Ready for Independence?

It is a most fascinating, tho pathetic report that comes to us from New York, where in a little Broadway "rathskeller" spokesmen for 407½ million submerged peoples told their tale of oppression and exploitation running back to the crusades. Lest citizens of these United States be inclined to thank God that they are not as the rest of men let us bear in mind that the odd 7½ million were our own wards in the Philippines.

The Lithuanians demanded that the United States should appear as the representative of disinterested humanity at the peace congress that follows this war and insist that wherever people of one race or language be gathered in sufficient numbers to make a state, they be given autonomy. The cry of the Slovaks was for some stronger arm to protect their men from robbery and service in alien armies, and their women from the lust of the Hungarians in time of peace as well as in war. According to the speaker they would prefer to be taken in under the wings of their neighbors and kinfolk, the Bohemians. The Bohemians expressed the hope of real autonomy, independent of Austria-Hungary and probably Germany, as the speaker feared, and looked forward eagerly to the day of settlement. The Ukrainians want the help of America in coming into their own. The Hindu spoke for the 300 millions of his people who deny that England holds India for India's sake, and the member of the Finnish parliament told of the marvelous revolution brought about by the Socialists who fill more than forty percent of the seats in the single democratic chamber elected by the whole people regardless even of sex. The Filipino said that his countrymen wanted freedom rather than only the home rule and fair treatment they were getting from the United States. They felt that they were fully entitled to it and were going to keep everlastingly at it until they got it.

As to how far the speakers at this informal gathering actually represented the sentiment and the ideals of their races is of course open to question, and while there is no doubt that each speaker really had the best interests of his people at heart, most of us are not so sure of the extent to which they may have been able to realize what actually constituted the best interests of their countrymen. They were full of their respective fatherlands, but apparently had no definite idea of what they wanted it to be like. What animated them was the natural and legitimate longing for independence and the opportunity to work out their own salvation. To that opportunity they are certainly entitled, and the United States could perform no greater service to these peoples and the world than that of helping to secure it if it should in any way become possible to do so. But whether absolute independence of the Filipinos, for instance, is the best way of giving them that opportunity is, we believe, a very serious question to the minds of most Americans. Political freedom carries with it a great responsibility, and the discharge of responsibility involves education of both the mind and the heart, and a certain consciousness of the common welfare which even a large proportion of American citizens still seem to lack. The uneducated person is an undeveloped person, and the individualist is inclined to be narrow-minded and selfish, all of which tends toward unfitness for the numerous and weighty responsibilities which political freedom carries with it. Tho the idea of political guardianship is repugnant to the American mind, it somehow seems to be pretty generally accepted that neither the Filipino nor the Hindu, or any one of Europe's submerged races, are ready for autonomy until the world has seen some evidence of their sense of unity and their mental and moral fitness for the task. Without such fitness independence would be a curse rather than a blessing.

The Conference for National Defense

If big headlines in the newspapers, plenty of fiery eloquence, smart-set dinners and drastic resolutions indicate a successful meeting, the Conference of Mayors on National Defense which met in St. Louis Mar. 3 and 4 was an eminently successful gathering. The New York advocates of preparedness to the limit sent some of their biggest social and financial lions right into the "enemy's country," and the poor St. Louis folks who will not be happy unless they wear clothes bought in New York, or who get their business instructions from Wall street, fell all over themselves to do just what their distinguished guests wanted done. The capitalists and militarists had everything their own way, and resolutions were adopted urging Congress to authorize a navy which will be superior to any other, with a fleet in the Atlantic Ocean equal

A THOUGHT FOR LENT

"I am the good Shepherd; the good shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep,"

John 10: 11.

in strength to that of any other Power on that ocean, and one to make us the first naval power on the Pacific. The resolutions also demand the immediate authorization by Congress of the building program of the General Board of the Navy of July 30, 1915, with necessary changes. They also call for the manning of the coast defenses as recommended by the General Staff, enlargement of the army with universal military training, standardization of war materials, establishment of citizens' military camps, and proper equipment and location of arsenals. It is no wonder that the New York delegation went home well pleased with what had been done. We can almost imagine how Mr. Morgan, who thru his interest in the iron and steel industry has a rather firm hold on the armor-plate and munition factories of this country, and also of Great Britain, smiled as his sister reported to him the splendid way in which the good society folks of St. Louis came around to look at things the way they appear in New York, especially on Wall street. For while the men and women in St. Louis who did the shouting, may have momentarily forgotten that a fleet in both the Atlantic and Pacific oceans that will equal or surpass that of any other Power on those oceans will require a good many tons of armor plate, to say nothing of the other provisions of the building program of the General Board of the Navy of July 30, 1915. Mr. Morgan and his accomplices by no means forgot such a beautiful scheme. In fact, it was just this that he and the other benefactors of the Navy League, the Security League, and all the other preparedness and defense organizations have been working for ever since the war began. The longer the war lasts, and the more nations are entangled in it, the more munitions are to be shipped and the bigger the bloody war profits which Mr. Morgan's concerns are piling up. And if the war in Europe should really stop, why, here is your old Uncle Sam who can be scared almost to death so that he will easily buy any war material or arsenal equipments that Mr. Morgan and his crowd may want to sell him. And a Mayor's conference or anything by any name that will help to bring about such a splendid opportunity for piling up millions by the hundred is a fine thing.

But we rather opine that it will take "some" urging before Congress will consent to authorize such a military or naval program, especially if the common people take it into their head to urge the other way and point out that this is an election year where the "boys back home" are paying a little more attention than usual to what their representatives in Washington are doing. It is hardly probable that Congressmen will quickly forget the manner in which they have been hearing from home during the past two weeks. It is an open secret that the sort of telegrams some of the Middle West Congressmen have received was not to be mistaken for billets-doux, and the impression they made was expressed in the attitude of Senator Stone and Speaker Clark at their conference with the President. President General Baltzer, Dr. Jungk of the "Friedensbote," and the editor on Mar. 3 sent the following telegram to Senator Stone, Speaker Clark and Representative Meeker of the tenth District of Missouri:

"GENTLEMEN:—

"In view of the grave possibilities that may arise from the present political situation, the President General of the Evangelical Church in America, and the editors of the denominational periodicals, the "Friedensbote" and the "Evangelical Herald," feel it their Christian and patriotic duty to raise their voice in the interest of real neutrality and national peace. We are convinced that, as far as we can see, no reason exists for a strained relationship between the United States of America and the Central Powers of Europe, and therefore earnestly request our representatives in Congress to use their whole influence in maintaining neutral and friendly relations between these Powers and the United States, and in protesting most emphatically, in all sincerity and by sane legislation, against the artificial, un-American and unpeaceful tendency of the day, even tho they should be obliged to oppose executive policy."

That neither the press of the country nor the action of the Senate and the House has seemed to reflect the pressure thus brought to bear is easily intelligible. The Democratic party organs are not anxious to humiliate publicly the first president their party has elected for many years, and the Republican papers are evidently "putting up a job" to make President Wilson as unpopular with the country as possible, while the natural tendency to conceal domestic political dissensions from foreign observers has helped to moderate Congressional dissatisfaction with the President's course in antagonizing the Central Powers. On the whole, however, the situation does not seem discouraging, altho it is still unsatisfactory. The President has seen, however, that the people are not in accord with his policy, and it may be hoped that he will find a way to modify his dangerous course. The situation is aggravated by the fact that, for pecuniary or other reasons, so many of our papers are pro-British in their sentiments. How large the number is may be inferred from the fact that some years before the war Lord Northcliffe boasted openly that British capital then controlled eighteen influential American newspapers—since then the number has increased if anything—which sufficiently explains the kind of war news the country has been getting. The danger to the country of such an influence in the press, on which the people must depend for the information on which to base their opinion, is so evident that every citizen owes it to himself and his community to inquire where the ownership of the local newspapers really rests, and to expose any foreign or un-American influences that may be discovered. The people of the United States are patriotic and American enough to oppose emphatically both the preparedness mania and the "chip-on-the-shoulder" policy of the administration.

THE LORD'S SUPPER

An Ever-Present Help

"The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not a communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not a communion of the body of Christ? Seeing that we, who are many, are one bread, one body: for we all partake of the one bread."

1 Cor. 10: 16, 17.

In discussing "the things offered unto idols" and Christian liberty, in chapters nine and ten of his first letter to the Corinthians, Paul points out how he has practised self-denial, even to the renunciation of his just rights and claims, not only for the sake of the Gospel and of other men, but for his own sake also. All men are apt to rest in the fact that they are Christians and to shrink from the arduous life which gives that name its real meaning. He seeks to fix this in their minds by means of two illustrations: their own games, in which they saw that not all who entered for the race obtained the prize, and the history of Israel as proving that not all who began the journey to the promised land found entrance into it. The Israelites who left Egypt were "baptized unto Moses," ch. 10: 2, by their acceptance of his leadership in the exodus, and by leaving Egypt and following the guidance of the pillar of cloud they expressed their willingness to exchange a life of bondage, with its security and its occasional luxuries, for a life of freedom, with its hazards and hardships. But "with most of them God was not well pleased: for they were overthrown in the wilderness." They accepted the position of God's people but failed in the duties which that position implied. They were willing to be delivered from bondage, but they found the responsibilities of a free life heavier than they cared to bear. They had the best things men need possess, and yet failed to use them.

Old Testament Types

And as the Israelites had thus a baptism similar to one Christian sacrament, so they had a spiritual food and drink in the wilderness that corresponded to the Christian communion. They were not left to their own resources when they left Egypt. If they failed to go forward as God's people should have done the fact was not due to any neglect on the part of God. The same God who had encouraged them to enter on this new life was also prepared to uphold them in it and carry them thru. And, the Apostle argues, it is the same way in spiritual things. "Wherefore," he continues, "flee from idolatry." The cup of blessing which was blessed as all partook of it was the communion of, or the participation in the blood of Christ, the symbol of everything for which Jesus Christ and His whole life and death stood. It represented His presence among them, His relationship to them and His spiritual blessings for them. And with that thought in mind idolatry must of course be out of the question, since it meant a relapse into the old condition. In the same manner the bread which they broke was a communion with the body of Christ, the eating of the bread of life, the absorbing and assimilating of the spirit of truth and righteousness and love that His life and work exemplified. Having thus made Jesus Christ a part of themselves, as it were, it was of course unthinkable that they should want to think or do anything that was opposed to His spirit. They would, rather, be constantly under the restraining, strengthening, guiding and uplifting influence of His life and power.

The new man who receives the body and the blood of Christ as the nourishment of his new life is the man born again and possessing a new and different life in place of the old natural life. Since God gives the new life in holy baptism, which also signifies the admission into the Christian Church, unbaptized persons cannot be admitted to the Lord's Supper. Actual participation in the blessings of the Lord's Supper is possible only where the new life has been consciously and voluntarily accepted in true faith, for it is thus that the new life established in holy baptism is realized. The Church can admit only such persons to the Lord's Supper who can be assumed to possess Christian knowledge and a conscious faith-life, Gal. 2: 20; unconfirmed persons can therefore not be permitted to take part. Since it is impossible to judge any one's spiritual condition, the Church must necessarily content itself with judging by outward standards, but these, however, must be strictly adhered to.

In the Lord's Supper we receive the body and the blood of Jesus Christ. It is given to us as a gift that we have no power to change, than we can only receive as that which it is, the outward sign to which is added the Word of God. It does not depend upon our faith or our piety whether we receive the body and the blood of Christ in the bread and the wine, but it does depend upon our faith whether or not we receive a blessing from it.

How the Lord's Supper Helps

In the Lord's Supper the new man also sustains and confirms the communion with Christ and all believers and proclaims that the Lord has died for him. By partaking of the body and the blood of Christ we enter into communion with Him. It was to draw us upward from the world and receive us into His communion that He came into the flesh, and it is His constant aim to draw men closer and closer to Him and to make us members of His body, Eph. 5: 30. He is the vine and we are the branches, John 15: 4. Just as the branches wither and die when they are separated from the vine, our spiritual life ceases when our communion with Him is ended. We sustain and confirm the communion with Him thru the faithful use of His Word, and we deepen it by partaking of the Lord's Supper. Jesus could not express the need of this communion with Him more plainly than He did by saying: "Take and eat, this is My body; Drink ye all of it, this is My blood."

The longer a tree's roots have been in the ground, the firmer its growth becomes, and the oftener we renew the communion with Christ, the deeper we grow into it, until at last the tie is so firm that nothing at all can break it. It is thus a Christian's duty to partake of the Lord's Supper regularly. Those who neglect it or do not partake at all thereby separate themselves from Him more and more, for even tho we can maintain communion with Him thru prayer and in His Word, yet a continued disregard of His command, "This do in remembrance of Me," cannot but weaken and paralyse the spiritual life.

Holy Baptism admits to the communion of the whole Christian Church, and partaking of the Lord's Supper sustains and confirms this communion. It is usually administered in the public service where all classes of believers, rich and poor, high and low, educated and uneducated, eat of the consecrated bread and drink of the consecrated cup at the same altar. All distinctions and differences are thus done away with and all become equal. Mutual love is thus fostered and the communion of the saints encouraged.

Every celebration of the Lord's Supper thus reminds us that Christians should be at peace with each other, so that no hatred and malice should separate those who would partake of Christ's love feast. 1 Cor. 11: 26. The Lord's Supper should be celebrated with the congregation, and even when it is given to the sick relatives, friends or church officers should take part besides the sick person.

Every celebration of the Lord's Supper is a profession not only that Jesus Christ has died, but that He has died for us. We thus proclaim the atoning death of Christ and bear witness that we lost and condemned sinners could not be saved except thru His death, and thru the offering of His life we receive forgiveness of sins.

The Old Hampton Place

BY HILDA RICHMOND

VI.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS. Thomas and Cordelia Hampton, brother and sister, victims of a city boarding-house, receive news of the death of an eccentric old bachelor uncle, supposed to have burned to death in his barn. They attend the funeral and while enjoying the hospitality of a neighbor, become enamored of country life. After consulting a lawyer Thomas decides to take possession of his deceased uncle's farm and undertakes to make the neglected house habitable. The presence of the two young people brings a new spirit of sociability into the neighborhood, when, in the midst of a pleasant social gathering, the supposedly dead uncle suddenly reappears—it was only an old office skeleton that had been found in the ruins of the barn—and violently ejects them from his property.

Cordelia was too startled to know that a man who could talk with such energy was far from dying, but she did not lose her wits entirely. She rushed to the disorderly kitchen for the mustard she knew she had left nothing of the sort there, but as she did so a sudden thought struck her. A man was passing in a buggy and she rushed out to ask him to get a doctor and ask Mr. and Mrs. Gross to come to her assistance. Then she hurried back to heat water and do what she could for the grumbling man on the untidy bed.

"That's right! Burn a man with a hot stove lid! Have you got gumption enough to hunt up the hot drops back of the kitchen stove? There was a time when I could lay my hands on everything in this house, but nowadays everything is in confusion. What made me sick? Overwork, of course! I've been working tooth and nail to get my belongings together in this crazy house and I overdid the matter. Get another hot lid, right away! This one is actually helping me, tho I never thought it would. For a girl you really seem to know how to obey. Not that way! Put down that blind! Don't you see that the light hurts my eyes!"

Cordelia was almost worn out trying to do two or three things at once when the doctor arrived. "He isn't seriously ill," whispered the doctor in one of his trips to the kitchen for a spoon. "I've examined him thoroly. He's only eaten something that didn't agree with him. It won't do him any harm to think he's going to die. Maybe he won't be so peppery. I'll give him something to quiet him and he'll be all right in a few days."

"Doc, do you think I've been poisoned?" asked the sick man feebly. He had raged and scolded so much that he really was getting weak and helpless. "You know how they tried to declare me dead once and bury me, so I wouldn't be surprised if somebody poisoned my eatables."

"Nonsense!" said the doctor sharply. "You're not very ill, Mr. Hampton. What you need is good food and regular meals. This living out of tin cans is enough to upset anybody's digestion. If you lived like other people you never would have had that funeral last fall."

"They had to pay for it all right," said the old man with sudden energy. "And they don't get a cent of my money. I haven't a great deal but I'll see to it that they don't get it."

"I think they're able to take care of themselves," said the doctor quietly. "Now, shall I send out a nurse or will you have your nephew and niece take care of you?"

"I don't need anybody," said the patient irritably. "Very well. Then stay alone. If you die to-night or to-morrow you can thank yourself." The young man was preparing to leave as if it was very little of his concern.

"What will a nurse cost?" asked the man on the tumbled bed as a fresh burst of pain struck him.

"Thirty dollars a week. You'll need somebody to look after the housework too."

"Everybody is determined to rob me," groaned the miserable man. "Stop and ask James Gross if he won't stay the night with me. He won't charge anything. When you come back in the morning we'll see how I am if I'm alive. And say, Doc, send out Fred Perkins, will you? I've got to make my will in case anything happens. I've been so busy and I didn't calculate on dying so I kind of put it off. Tell him I'll pay the bill right away."

So James Gross ate an early supper and with a lunch in a basket set out to spend the night at the lonely farm house. Like most people who have never been ill in their lives, Richard Hampton imagined that he was much worse than he was. He wanted hot applications and he wanted medicines oftener than the directions called for, and he wanted to be rubbed with a fiery liniment, and he wanted so many attentions that poor Mr. Gross was nearly worn out. He had worked hard in the field all day and was tired to start out, but before midnight he decided that a nurse would earn thirty dollars a week caring for Richard Hampton, whether the doctor was right in saying he was only slightly ill or not.

But along about three o'clock Richard Hampton settled down a little and his amateur attendant thought it might be possible to snatch a wink of sleep. "Don't leave me!" implored Mr. Hampton as Mr. Gross silently made his way to the closed up parlor to lie down on the slippery lounge. "I want to talk to you."

With a weary yawn the tired farmer gave up his idea of resting and sat patiently down by the bed. "I'm going to tell you something I've never told a living soul," he said "Maybe I won't live till morning, and I kind of feel that I ought to tell it. People say I wasn't satisfied when the property was divided and that made me queer, but it wasn't that at all. I've been working on patents all my life, but none of them ever came to anything. I've hired lawyers to get them thru the Patent Office and they've led me to believe they'd come to something in time, but I know now that they never will. I used to dream that I'd make some great discovery and benefit all mankind, but I see now that I'd better have done like other men and not lived as I have."

"Maybe your patents will amount to something yet," said Mr. Gross, thinking his patient must be delirious. "I wouldn't worry about them."

"No, they never will. I told the lawyers I had no more money and they said they didn't think there was any use to go on. When I put it at them they admitted that there never had been much use trying to patent my contrivances. You see, Gross, a fellow can't shut himself away from the world and do anything successfully. The world goes right on without him and he's soon behind the procession. I found that out in California last winter."

"Once I was engaged to marry Sally Crawford," he went on musingly, "but I figured that a wife and children would interfere with my chances for success and I gave her up. I put aside everything thinking I would make up for it when I had made my fortune. I might have had more sense, but I—O dear! I'm worse than ever. Go and get one of grandfather's old doctor books and read what to do for this terrible misery. I never opened them because I was always well, but maybe you can find something to do. No, don't leave me," as Mr. Gross reached for his hat to go and telephone the doctor. "I'd die if I was left alone."

Mr. Gross obediently found the index to the many leather-bound volumes and by the light of the dirty oil lamp looked for the volume dealing with stomach troubles. At last on the top shelf of the tall old-fashioned book-case he found the book and hastened back to the living room with it. As he did so a long legal-looking envelope dropped from the musty book and he hastily laid it aside while searching for some remedy.

"Last will and testament of Richard Gordon Hampton," he read aloud as his patient demanded between groans to know what the envelope contained. "It isn't sealed—that is, it looks as if the seal had been broken by lying so long."

"Read it!" commanded Richard Hampton getting easier with the hot application on his stomach. "I always supposed grandfather's will was in the county court house."

The ink was faded and the writing poor, but Mr. Gross managed to make out that the farm went to Gordon Hampton while sundry other properties were left to David Hampton. The personal property was divided and the will went into details as to various little belongings such as books and furniture.

"Then this farm belongs to Gordon's heirs and not to me," said Richard Hampton when he had finished. "The date on that paper indicates that it was written shortly before my grandfather's death. I suppose they'll turn me out to go to the poor house—Gordon Hampton's heirs."

"Now, don't excite yourself!" said poor Mr. Gross at his wits' end to know what to do. "I know Cordelia and Thomas well enough to feel sure they will not turn you out."

"I turned them out, James. But the reason I was so angry that night was that I was afraid they would find out about my patents and tell it to the neighbors. I came home to wind up my affairs and go to California to live but it made me angry to see that pack of folks in my house. There's that pain again. I wish it was morning."

"So do I!" echoed Mr. Gross fervently.

And morning did come at last. Never did the dawn look more glorious to the tired watcher than when he warmly covered the worn-out patient and tiptoed to the open door. Richard Hampton was sleeping at last, worn out with the pain and the worry and the fear that he was about to die. Mr. Gross forgot that he had not eaten the carefully prepared lunch and that he had lost a night's sleep as he looked at the splendor of the dewy fields and the wonderful beauty of the sunrise. All his life he had thought he loved nature and had rejoiced in the wide expanse of beauty that his home afforded, but never

Continued on Page 8

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

By and By

By REV. I. MENCH CHAMBERS.

We shall read the lessons better
In the blessed by and by,
When our Saviour is the Teacher,
And we see with tearless eye.
We shall miss no word nor accent,
Neither shall we lose the place,
When we read life's harder lessons
With the Master face to face.

We shall read life's lessons better,
We shall learn them one by one,
In the city of the ransom'd,
Where the crown of life is won.
We shall know about the crosses—
Yes, the loneliness and tears.
We shall read with God the meaning
Of the trials which fill'd the years.

There's a passage in His volume,
Where our losses are explain'd,
And a page we oft have studied,
When our souls were sorely pain'd.
We shall read it over yonder—
But how different it will be,
When the light of home shall guide us,
Thus our Father's thought to see!

Christian Observer.

The Unseen Guidance

We went for a drive yesterday, Curly-head, the Man and I. I was not in a happy frame of mind, and when his cheery voice called up to me to wrap the baby and come, I was tempted to hatch up an excuse. But it has to be a very awful mood indeed that will make me give up a precious quiet hour with the Man, so I went—tho slowly and reluctantly, my heart rebellious at things as they happened to be.

How hard I had tried to idealize my daily life, how resolutely endeavored to keep the atmosphere of the home nest beautiful and high, for the sake of the young lives we were setting forth from it; and yet how hard, how discouraging this everlasting tug to make ends meet!

I was ready to yield to the temptation to wrest myself out of the steady in and out of every day, resume my well-paid old vocation of music teaching, and make all sorts of changes. And this in spite of the fact that the Man and I had thrashed out this very matter more than once, and decided against it!

Presently I was distracted by seeing the tiny hands of Curly-head grasping the reins. He flapped them manfully over Mollie's sleek back, and twisted up his red mouth adorably to cluck and make her go faster. We came to a place where the traffic was dense, and the Man gently put his strong hands over Curly-head's.

The little fellow went into a tantrum. He kicked and cried, and before we were out of the thick of it again he had retired into a sulk, and was only pacified when he thought he was driving again—tho, unseen by him, the Man's hands still guided us along the quieter street.

The lesson came stunningly home to me. I, too, was a little peevish human thing, crying to drive, and fretting at the Master's touch that was directing my life's appointed way! I looked at the strong, muscular hands of the dear man that—still unsuspected by Master Curly-head—were keeping us safe and steady amid passing trucks, buzzing automobiles and hurrying cars, and my eyes blurred with tears of gratitude to my heavenly Father for His guidance that I could and must trust to keep me in the right way and the right place. Susie Bouchelle Wight.

The Art of Talking

Talk is the one social accomplishment to which nearly every human being is eligible; it is the one with which the fewest number of distracting circumstances need interfere. A girl who was tempted once to study the harp, decided not to for this reason: "There are very, very few homes that have a harp. When I wished to give pleasure with my playing I should either have to express my delicate instrument ahead of me, or else confine my playing on it to my own house. Everyone has pianos. If I study the piano I shall be able to serve pleasantly on a hundred-fold more occasions."

It is astonishing that in the choice of accomplishments which may tend toward social favor and a happier time among one's fellows, more persons do not elect to study the fine art of talk. For the ability to talk well is a prized accomplishment always and everywhere.

There was a woman once who loved music very, very dearly, and wished with all her heart she knew how to sing or to play. "How much pleasure I could give my world, if I knew how to sing!" she would say. But she never had opportunity to learn. What she did learn, without cost of money, without interruption of her other busynesses, was to talk. And it came about that people used to count it a red-letter day when they met her even for a few moments' chat as she was finishing her luncheon in a restaurant or going home on a car. She had a way of clothing even dull, commonplace subjects with bright raiment of good humor and quaint expressions. "You always put me in love with life again," people would say to her. And she was grateful for her accomplishment. "For I couldn't startle restaurants and street cars with a song," she said. "I guess talk is a pretty happy gift, after all."

Now there is only one school where one can learn to talk, and that is Life's school to which we all go. But—! It is difficult to learn to talk, to acquire "talkability," as it has been happily called, if the happiness of knowing how has never been borne in upon one until he is grown or nearly so—which too frequently happens. This is parents' fault. Most parents encourage their children to chatter ceaselessly, at first. Some allow the chatter to continue; others tire of it and take refuge behind the "seen but not heard" dictum. Both extreme are bad. Our social intercourse is as sadly cursed with chatter as with awkward inexpressiveness. Children should be taught conversation at home, from their earliest years; and particularly should they be bred to the fine pleasure of good table talk. Yet in how many homes that any of us know is there table conversation that educates the children to think, to express themselves, to show interest and respect for the opinions of others? Father is lost behind a newspaper. Mother is fussed and fretted by the negligence of the maid or the faults of the children or the extortions of the butcher. And the children chatter among themselves, unless father orders them to make less noise and not disturb his reading. And after an evening meal in most homes, what happens? Is there a general gathering in the living room to talk over the day's events and the topics that take hold on the larger life, on to-morrow? Or is there a scattering, each to his studies or games or novel or magazine?

Out of homes where the value of talk is never considered, come the multitude of persons we all encounter who can, perhaps, chatter with some one of their acquaintance who is of similar tastes, on a subject familiar to both; but who have no remotest conception of the value of talk as a real medium, an open sesame to the treasures of other minds, as a never-failing, way of sharing with others the treasures of thought and experience that life has brought to them.

—Clara E. Laughlin.

Ashamed

"Moving-picture shows? Well, hardly! What should I care about them? I hope my taste is a little above that sort of thing."

"But your Johnny and Betty go, don't they? It seems to me I heard them teasing you for nickels just the other day."

"Of course they go—they're only children and such things appeal to them. But for me with my club and study circle—why I'd be ashamed to be seen in such a place!"

"It seems to me you ought to be ashamed not to!" The speaker was hitting straight from the shoulder now. "Wherever your Johnny and Betty go, ought you not to be ashamed not to have been first? How can you tell whether the films are properly censored and fit for your children to see unless you've seen them yourself? You can afford to miss your club or study circle better than the picture show your boy and girl attend."—Selected.

Denominational

New York District

Gowanda.

On the evening of Feb. 9 the Nika Bible class of Trinity Church observed its seventh anniversary with a splendid banquet. Toasts, speeches and musical numbers made up the program. Rev. H. L. Streich of Buffalo was the chief speaker. He spoke on "The Power, Place and Purpose of the Bible." The class numbers over seventy members. Compared with the size of the church it is one of the largest in the district. Rev. Carl Haas is teacher.

Buffalo.

Feb. 6th marked the twenty-ninth anniversary of Bethlehem Church. This congregation has grown from a small number of members to one of the largest in the city. Its small chapel has been replaced by a beautiful, large edifice, located at an attractive park corner. The pastor, Rev. August Goetz, organized the church when still a student, and has served ever since. Besides the pastor Rev. A. Hills spoke at the anniversary services.

Calvary is the second wholly English church in Buffalo (Pilgrim being the first). It was formerly Golgotha. Under the efficient and tireless efforts of Rev. J. Graf this church has been revived and built up wonderfully. The remodeled building was dedicated Sunday, Nov. 14. The main speaker was Dr. W. Werheim of St. Luke's. During the week of Feb. 6-13 evangelistic services were held every night. Dr. Thomas of New York was speaker. Much good came from these meetings. Calvary has a very bright outlook.

From Feb. 27 till April 2 meetings and services in the interest of our educational institutions, Elmhurst College, Eden Seminary and Ft. Collins Seminary, will be held in every one of the eighteen Buffalo churches. The speaker at all these gatherings will be Rev. S. A. John, the representative of our schools. Three mass meetings have also been arranged; one for young people and Sunday-schools, one for men, and one for women. Much more interest and larger giving will, no doubt, result from this campaign.

Wisconsin District

Ellsworth

St. Paul's of Ellsworth, which is considered the most English congregation of Wisconsin, was greatly blessed on Sunday, Dec. 5, 1915. On that ideal December day we dedicated a splendid modern edifice to the services of our God.

The services commenced in the old church and were continued in the new. The prayer of dedication was rendered by the local pastor. Splendid sermons were delivered by the Rev. E. C. Grauer of Wausau, Wis., and Rev. Bock of Oak Grove. Following this beautiful service, a sumptuous dinner was served in the basement to about 500 guests.

In the afternoon-services, which were entirely in English, the audience was even larger than in the morning-service. It exceeded by far the capacity of the church and filled even the aisles and every available corner, and still a hundred or more were left outside. The main speaker in the afternoon was Rev. J. J. Merzdorf of our St. Paul's Church in Milwaukee. The other churches of Ellsworth were strongly represented and gave expression to the spirit of unity which exists here among the various churches. This is especially noteworthy.

The building which we dedicated is a model in many ways. It has a high and cheerful basement of quarried rock. The church proper is constructed of a highly polished brick, lined with a softer one and tiling. The beautiful art-glass windows are donations of societies and of members of the church. A rolling curtain separates the Sunday-school room from the main auditorium. The colors of the interior are of a quiet, artistic effect. The building is heated by a large hot-air furnace. The bell, pulpit, altar, and baptismal font have served in the old church, but had been kept in good condition. The solid oak pews and a splendid vocalion organ of the Estey make are gifts of the Young Ladies' Auxillary, which boasts of being the second largest in the state, and at that it is only a year and a half old. The Ladies' Aid Society, which contributed so generously to the new church, however, celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary four years ago. And in 1917 the congre-

Concluded on page 6

"INTO ALL THE WORLD"

Ten Years of Missionary Labor that revolutionized the World. How the indomitable Apostle gained an incorruptible Crown in spite of Perils, Persecutions and Imprisonment

III.

The three great missionary journeys of Saul of Tarsus, or Paul, as he now comes to be called, are described at length in the Acts, and the various important incidents will form the subject of the International Uniform Lessons thruout the year. We shall therefore content ourselves with a brief outline of the journeys, the places visited and the significance of the work accomplished on each journey, and giving rather more attention to the later period of Paul's life and the significance of his life and work to his own age, of the Church and to the Christian Church in general.

With these journeys of Paul, the importance of which he himself probably did not fully realize, the scene of action in the development of the Christian Church shifts from the Jewish to the Gentile world, and portrays the great struggle thru which Paul and his followers—and all who devote themselves to this task after them—were obliged to pass. Paul himself immediately comes to the front and his remarkable devotion, leadership, ability and persistence completely dominate the entire narrative. During the ten years which the three journeys probably occupied, Paul traveled about 8,100 miles, perhaps much more, as there evidently were side-trips which are not recorded, Rom. 15: 19 and 2 Cor. 11: 24-27. Luke's narrative, which is wonderfully concise and graphic, shows how, in accordance with the command and promise of Christ, the knowledge and power of the Gospel was spread, beginning in Jerusalem, thru Judea, and Samaria, thruout the heathen world, and Church and world history tell how these journeys have been possible to cross the mountains into Cilicia, and so go directly by way of Tarsus back to Antioch in Syria, as their route had followed a rough circle. Desiring, however, to place the new churches on a firmer basis, they retraced their steps, in each place organizing the church and encouraging the disciples.

Thru Cyprus and Galatia (Acts 13: 1-14; 28)

That the Christians at Antioch were very much in earnest about the matter of spreading the Gospel into the regions beyond is evident from the fact that the prophets and teachers at Antioch "ministered unto the Lord and fasted" in the effort to learn the will of God in the matter. When the answer was duly made known to them by the Holy Spirit, Saul and Barnabas were consecrated to their divinely appointed task and immediately departed, Acts 13: 4. They were accompanied by John Mark, a nephew of Barnabas.

Cyprus, the home of Barnabas, was naturally the first place visited, all the more so as there were many Jewish communities there, and Christians seem to have been connected with it before Stephen's martyrdom. The first place visited was Salamis, now Famagusta, from which they passed thru the island from east to west to Paphos, the seat of the worship of Venus, which was carried on with the most degrading ceremonies. It is here that we first meet with the name Paul, perhaps the name by which Saul went as a Roman citizen. From here the missionaries took ship across the Mediterranean to Perga in Pamphylia, Asia Minor, where John Mark, apparently discouraged by the hardships of the journey, left the company and returned to Jerusalem.

Antioch in Pisidia, the next destination, was a good-sized city with a large Jewish population directly north of Perga. Paul's address here is worth study because it is the first of his sermons of which there is any record, and doubtless shows the usual way in which he began work in the synagogue. At Iconium in Lycaonia the missionaries came into contact with a people of strange ways, among whom their ministry was attested by signs and wonders. There is no mention of a synagogue at either Derbe or Lystra, their next stopping places, and Paul and Barnabas came into direct touch with pagan priests and worship. At Lystra Timothy was probably converted, Acts 16: 1; 2 Tim. 1: 2; 3: 11. It would and so go directly by way of Tarsus back to Antioch in Syria, as their route had followed a rough circle. Desiring, however, to place the new churches on a firmer basis, they retraced their steps, in each place organizing the church and encouraging the disciples.

Paul at Ephesus. Acts 19: 19

Thus was completed the first Christian missionary tour. It may have occupied about three years and covered about 1,400 miles. It covered the regions next toward the west of those already occupied by the Gospel, very probably because all the other territory that might have been open to missionary effort was already occupied (see Rom. 15: 20).

The First Church Council

But the success of Paul's work among the Gentiles led to a controversy within the Church, Acts 15: 1, as the strict Jewish party would not abide by the divinely sanctioned method of receiving Gentiles without the observance of the Mosaic law, Acts 10: 1-11: 18. The conference at Jerusalem in which this question was settled is described in Acts 15 and Gal. 2: 1-10. Both accounts, tho written from a different viewpoint, are nevertheless quite harmonious. It was really a great crisis and the whole future of the new Church depended on the outcome. But the result was a triumph of Christian loyalty and charity. It was resolved to heartily recognize the new converts from the Gentiles as brethren, but to direct them to avoid certain practices which were specially offensive to the Jews. The church in Jerusalem stood by Paul against the "false brethren," and James, Peter and John gave him the right hand of fellowship, he to go to the Gentiles, they to the Jews. Thus Paul retained fellowship with the other apostles while at liberty to go on his own divinely appointed mission. The unity of the church and the liberty of the Gentiles was preserved, altho Paul's attitude earned him the bitter and permanent hatred of the stricter Jewish element. The way was open for carrying the Gospel to all peoples, unencumbered by Jewish prejudice, and a practical adjustment was made by which reasonable Jewish prejudice was conciliated. The incident mentioned Gal. 2: 11—21 is a brief reminder of the conference and probably occurred soon after.

From Syria to Macedonia (Acts 15: 36—18: 22)

Not long after the council at Jerusalem Paul proposed a second missionary journey to Barnabas. He was unwilling, however, that John Mark should accompany them, which led to the final separation of the two great missionaries. Paul thereupon took with him Silas, a prominent member of the church at Jerusalem, who had accompanied Paul to Antioch to communicate the decision of the conference. They first visited the churches in Cilicia and Syria, then passing northward thru the Taurus mountains, to the churches founded on the first journey. At Lystra Timothy was invited to join the party, which he did. The movement of the party from Lystra is not quite clear, the common view being that the travelers moved northeastward from Pisidian Antioch into Galatia proper; that on the way Paul was temporarily disabled by sickness, which led him to improve the opportunity, sick tho he was, of preaching here and so founding the "churches of Galatia," Gal. 4: 13—15. The Spirit was directing the missionaries into Europe, and in some mysterious way they were forbidden to preach in any other places in Asia Minor. Of this long journey thru Asia Minor, its perils and difficulties, of the rejoicings of the former converts when they saw Paul again, and of many interesting facts and incidents we have only a glimpse, Acts 16: 6—12. At Troas there appeared to them the vision of the man from Macedonia, and the party, now joined by Luke himself, immediately proceeds across the Aegean Sea, the first Christian Missionaries to the continent of Europe.

Philippi will be forever memorable as the first city in Europe in which a Christian church was established, Acts 16: 12—40. The city is now in ruins, which are extensive, consisting of a theater, columns, etc., the most interesting being a gateway, supposed to be that by which the Apostle went out to the riverside. No one now lives on the spot, but there is a Turkish village, Bereketli, in the immediate vicinity. Thessalonica, now Saloniki, and an important objective in the present struggle for possession of the Balkans, was next visited. It was a great commercial center, inhabited by Romans, Jews and Greeks. Berea was a secluded inland city, where the Jews, contrary to Paul's usual experience were very ready to receive the Word of God. Athens was the most cultivated city of the old world; "a statue was set upon every corner and an altar in every street." Paul's sojourn there was rather disappointing and is memorable chiefly for the address before the philosophers on Mars' hill, in which Paul showed his appreciation of the truths which the Gospel had in common with Stoicism, while he yet faithfully proclaimed to a critical audience their duty to God and what God required them to believe. At Corinth, where he next went, he remained eighteen months, and his work was most successful. Here he also wrote the two epistles to the Thessalonians warning them against practical and doctrinal perils with which they were threatened. In both the Acts (18: 9, 10) and in 1 Corinthians the deep determination of the Apostle is evident to proclaim in Greece as elsewhere only the simple Gospel of the crucified Saviour and Lord.

From Corinth Paul returned to Ephesus, thence to Caesarea, apparently making a hasty journey to Jerusalem, and, having saluted the church there, returned to Antioch, thus closing his second missionary tour. This journey of about 3,200 miles extended over about three years, and was not only the greatest which Paul achieved, but perhaps the most momentous recorded in the annals of the human race. "In its issues it far out-rivalled the expedition of Alexander when he carried the civilization of Greece into the heart of Asia, or of Caesar, when he landed on the shores of Britain, or even the voyage of Columbus when he discovered a new world." To this journey Europe to-day owes her intellectual advancement and Christian civilization. Had the Gospel failed to meet the wants of all sorts and conditions of men, there could have been no further triumphs for it.

Organizing and Strengthening the Churches

The first journey of Paul was comparatively near home; the second was a review of the work done in the first and a pushing on into new work in Asia Minor and the larger conquest in Europe. The third journey is a review visit to the churches of Asia minor, a long stop at Ephesus, and a review visit to the churches of Macedonia and Achaia which had been organized upon the second missionary journey. For Paul was not only a missionary preacher, but also an organizer and a leader of men. The churches formed were visited again and again; messengers were sent to them to instruct, to chide and encourage them; circular and special letters from Paul's own hand were dispatched to them whenever occasion required. On this third journey he was already planning to go to Rome, Acts 19: 21, and wrote an epistle to the Romans announcing his coming.

Paul at Rome. Phil. 1: 13

Ephesus, where Paul spent between two and three years, was favorably situated as a center from which he might exercise intelligent oversight over all the work he had previously accomplished. In Paul's day it was by far the largest and busiest of all the cities of proconsular Asia. The temple built by Alexander the Great to Diana was the most magnificent religious structure in the world. For centuries it had been a great center of pilgrimage and people came from all parts of Asia to visit the famous shrine. The speech of Demetrius perhaps exaggerates the effect of Paul's work upon the worship of Diana, but it should be remembered that the Gospel took firm hold of this religion from a very early period. Paul's letters tell us of churches in Ephesus, Laodicea and Colossae, and Revelation adds those of Pergamos, Smyrna, Thyatira, Sardis and Philadelphia to the list. Half a century later Pliny, the noted Roman naturalist and writer, tells us that in this region the temples were deserted, and the sacrificial victims were unsold. During his long stay in Ephesus Paul doubtless received many delegations and visitors from the churches formerly organized by him. The entire journey occupied about four years, and about 3,500 miles were traveled. This period was prolific in masterly writings, the first and second letters to the Corinthians and Galatians being written from Ephesus, and Romans from Corinth.

The return journey was made via Troas, Miletus and Caesarea to Jerusalem, where Paul was at first well received by the brethren, who glorified God when he had related his work among the Gentiles. Paul's effort to dispel the evil reports circulated about him, as tho he was unfaithful to Moses, by joining four men who were at that time performing a Nazirite vow in the temple, were in vain, however, as certain Jews from Asia raised a tumult which caused a riot, in the course of which Paul would probably have been slain if the commander of the Roman garrison, Claudius Lysias, had not hastened with soldiers to quell the uproar and taken Paul prisoner. Seven and one-half chapters of the Acts, or nearly as many as describe the preceding life and work of the Apostle, are devoted to the story of Paul's captivity and the journey to Rome, and Luke's purpose probably was to show, with the full connecting incidents, how clearly and strongly Paul testified, to the Jews in the temple, 22: 1—23, and before the Roman tribunal, 25: 13, 14, 26; 26: 1—32, that Jesus was the Christ. The seven last recorded speeches of the great Apostle are a striking feature of this period. They show his faith after it had been tested and tried in the toilsome years of missionary labors, and reveal the courage and character of the man in that they were given when he was in bonds and in imminent peril of his life.

"An Ambassador in Chains"

During the two years' imprisonment of Paul at Caesarea we have no account of any letters written by him. But after his arrival in Rome he again begins to indite those writings which have made his name so famous. From his prison in Rome he sent out the letters to the Colossians, to Philemon, the Ephesians and the Philippians, which stand unequalled as profound expositions of the Christian doctrines, lofty ethical teachings and tenderness of feeling.

While it is hardly possible to give an accurate chronology of the life of Paul, the following figures are probably the best results of careful study and comparison.

Death, resurrection and ascension of Christ

A. D.	30
Conversion of Paul	35(?)
First subsequent visit to Jerusalem	37
Paul at Tarsus	37—43
First missionary journey	46—48(?)
Council at Jerusalem	50
Second missionary journey	51—53
1 and 2 Thessalonians	52
Third missionary journey	54—58
Galatians	55
1 Corinthians	56—57
2 Corinthians	57
Romans	57—58
Arrest at Jerusalem	58
Imprisonment at Caesarea	58—60
Accession of Festus	60
Paul comes to Rome	61
Colossians, Philemon Ephesians	61—62
Philippians	62—63

The Acts closes with the account of how after three days he summoned the chief of the Jews, related the reason of his presence in the capital, and on an appointed day expounded to them the Gospel; but that, when they, like their countrymen elsewhere, disbelieved, Paul again declared that he would turn to the Gentiles. His imprisonment, therefore by no means prevented his missionary activity. The last verses of the Acts tell us that for two whole years he received all who came to him and preached the Kingdom of God and the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ without hindrance.

The epistles written during his imprisonment at Rome throw still more light upon this period of Paul's life, and show that he had many faithful friends working with him: Timothy (Col. 1: 1; Phil. 1: 1; 2: 19; Philem. 1); Tychicus (Eph. 6: 21; Col. 4: 7); Aristarchus; John Mark—with whom he must therefore have again become reconciled, see Acts 15: 37, 38—and Luke, Col. 4: 10, 14; Philem. 24. His friends had unhindered access to him, and they acted as his messengers to the churches and also to his co-workers in Rome, thus making the imprisoned Apostle the center and head of the Gentile Christian work thruout the empire. The epistles also show the personal activity of the Apostle's life. With great zeal and success he preached the Gospel in spite of his bonds. He was "an ambassador in chains," Eph. 6: 20; he desired his friends to pray that God would open for him a door of utterance, Col. 4: 3; in Onesimus the runaway slave, we see an example of the fruit of his labors, Philem. 10; he wrote the Philippians, 1: 13, that the things which had happened unto him had fallen out unto the progress of the

Concluded on Page 7

MISSIONARY CONDITIONS IN INDIA

Miscellaneous Items that throw added Light on social, religious and political Conditions in India

III.

National and Provincial Missionary Councils.

The national and provincial missionary councils, created by the Continuation Committee conferences in 1912-13, have been steadily engaged in completing their organization and laying down the main lines of their work. Some interruption has been caused by the war. The National Missionary Council held its second meeting at Matheran in November, but the report of its proceedings is not available for the present survey. One of the most important matters before the Council was the consideration of a statement on comity among missions, prepared by the committee on comity and dealing with such questions as arbitration, the division of territory, and the transfer of mission agents and of church members. The provincial missionary councils have devoted their attention to such subjects as Christian education, Christian literature, mass movements, the Indian Church, comity and missionary survey. One or two points of special interest have arisen in the Panjab Council. In spite of an expression of opinion from the Executive of the National Missionary Council that all action by the newly constituted councils should be advisory and not mandatory, it unanimously reaffirmed its decision that the recognition of standards of comity should be a condition of the admission of a mission to membership in the council. The Council has further decided that the thana shall be the basis of territorial delimitation, and has asked the missions represented on the council to furnish a list of the thanas claimed by them with a view to determining exactly the recognized sphere of each mission. The council has laid down that the primary purpose of its existence is to try to solve definite problems which have been found difficult of solution by individual societies, and has invited the missions to refer such problems to it.

The Mid-India Council is undertaking an investigation into the grades, training and pay of Indian workers in the various missions with a view to securing greater uniformity of practice.

As has been pointed out in previous years, the mass movements towards Christianity among the depressed classes are at the present time the dominating fact in the missionary situation in India. The American Methodist Episcopal missions in North, West and South India report nearly 30,000 baptisms for the year 1914-15, while baptism was refused to 40,000 people because no provision could be made for teaching them. The number of inquirers in these missions alone is said to be 150,000. Two years ago the Methodist missions appointed a mass movement commission, which is making plans to meet the opportunity and issues a small magazine, entitled The Mass Movement Era, for the discussion of the work and its needs. A summary of the chief problems arising out of mass movements, as stated in the replies of fifty correspondents, was presented to the Panjab representative council of missions by its sub-committee on mass movements.

Roman Catholic Missions

Roman Catholic missions have suffered severely thru the war. Missionaries of German and Austrian nationality have been interned or repatriated. The work chiefly affected is that of the German Jesuits in the dioceses of Bombay and Poona. From the French missions in the dioceses of Pondicherry, Mysore, Coimbatore and Madura forty missionaries have been recalled to serve with the army, while the supply of funds has been greatly reduced. The work of the French Salesians in Vizagapatam and Nagpur and of the Paris missionaries in Burma has been affected in similar ways. The Capuchin missions in North India and those of the Carmelites in Travancore and Cochin, which derive much of their support from Belgium, have been deprived of a large part of their income. The diocese of Calcutta, including the numerically successful mission among the Kols, is under the care of the Belgian province of the Jesuit order and has suffered in the same way.

Other Events

Among other events of interest may be mentioned: the death at a comparatively early age of Mr.

Gopal Krishna Gokhale, in whom India has lost one of her ablest leaders, whose public career was marked by a singular disinterestedness and rare devotion. "Mr. Gokhale's chief service to India was the organization of the 'Servants of India Society,' the objects of which are to train national missionaries for the service of India, and to promote, by all constitutional means, the true interests of the Indian people. The branches, of which there is also one in the Central Provinces, consists of ordinary members, members under training and permanent assistants who engage both in propagandist and active work of political, educational, social, agricultural and philanthropic character. The work is supported by contributions from Indians, rich as well as poor. According to the Indian Year Book (1912) the Society has enlisted about twenty-five workers, most of whom are university men of considerable standing."

The report of the committee, consisting of an Indian and a European, on indentured labour in British colonies, deals with the condition of Indian immigrants in Trinidad, British Guiana, Jamaica and Fiji and in the Dutch colony of Surinam. It reveals a grave moral situation, arising out of the great numerical preponderance of men over women. The position of Indian immigrants in British colonies is receiving close attention in India. At a meeting in connection with the South African Indian Fund it was resolved to devote the balance of the fund, nearly Rs. 150,000, to maintaining the interests of Indians in all British colonies and foreign countries and to form an association for safeguarding the interests of Indians out of India. The free emigration of Indians to self-governing colonies, notably to South Africa, has given rise to a problem of great difficulty. From the Indian standpoint there are two grievances: 1. the immigration laws of the colonies discriminate against Asiatics with unreasonable severity, and 2. those Indians who are settled in the country are denied the status of citizenship, and are subjected to vexations, restrictions as to residence, etc. Toward the end of 1913 conditions in South Africa led to rioting and continued disturbances. There are over 4,000 Indians in British Columbia, and as Asiatic immigrants may be excluded from the province on failure to prove a "continuous journey" from the place of embarkation, (no shipping company issues thru tickets from India to Vancouver), many of those settled there have experienced great difficulties in bringing their wives and children to join them. The Indian residents in British Columbia complain that in practice more consideration is shown to Chinese immigrants and Japanese than to them.

The first meeting of the All-India Conference of Indian Christians was held in Calcutta in December 1914. Committees were appointed to consider the present laws relating to Indian Christians, the encouragement of technical and industrial education among them, and the establishment of an Indian Christian organ for the whole of India. In a paper on the present status of village Christians in the Madras Presidency it was stated that over 250,000 Christian children of school-going age were not provided with any means of education.

Twenty-five churches and missionary bodies have presented a petition to the vice-roy relative to the disabilities of the Indian Christian community under the existing state of the law with regard to divorce. Under the existing law no relief can be obtained by an Indian Christian whose spouse has proved unfaithful, if the marriage took place before conversion in accordance with non-Christian rites, or if the non-Christian wife (or husband) of a convert consents to live with him (or her) and subsequently proves unfaithful. Further, there are hundreds of converts who were married in childhood and, being separated from their spouses and in some instances not knowing whether these are alive, are condemned to live a celibate life. The petition also requests that a simpler, quicker and less expensive method of divorce be provided for Indian Christians. "It is easy to see the complications and the intolerable conditions to which this situation may lead in mission churches, in view of the almost prohibitive expense of the divorce proceedings. Roman Catholic and Anglican influence is opposed to granting any divorce under any conditions. The condition is an evidence of the shortsightedness of British colonial policy in many particulars, which seeks to apply English ideas with little if any regard for the differing social conditions. For decades Indian Christians have sought to change these conditions, but without avail."

Denominational

Continued from Page 4

gation expects to celebrate its golden jubilee, together with the 100th anniversary of the Evangelical Church of Germany and the 400th of the Reformation. It was founded in 1867, built the first church in 1872, the first parsonage in '75 and the second in 1910, and 1915 marks the dedication of the second church.

On the Sunday immediately following the dedication, confirmation services were held with a class of thirteen, who had been instructed for two summers. On the day of their confirmation this class planned to give an alumni banquet to the former confirmands of the present pastorate. And it proved to be a commendable success. All the former confirmands were invited to attend the confirmation and communion services in the morning, remain for the dinner to be served in the basement, and to take part in the afternoon program. The fifty-three confirmands that responded to these invitations met in the basement before church and marched up by classes, singing the strains of the hymn: "Saviour, like a shepherd lead us, Much we need Thy tender care." They were assisted in their singing by the choir in the choir loft. In the seats, which had been reserved for them, they witnessed the confirmation ceremonies, listened to the reunion sermon, and then went as classes to the Lord's Supper, followed by the rest of the congregation.

At the dinner table short informal talks were given by several members, some of a profoundly thankful nature, others contained reminiscences that happened in confirmation school. Following this dinner the classes of the different years had separate meetings to plan for something that each class might do by way of improving or beautifying the church premises. And after this year's class was photographed in the church as the first class in the new church and as a remembrance of the day, all the classes met again in the basement, where they were addressed by an able outside speaker and by the president of the congregation. At the end of this meeting it was, that all the classes reported their decisions, each to plant a class-tree on the church premises, and that they all pledged themselves to maintain their interest in the church by contributing one cent a week to the church for the first year, two cents a week for the second, three for the third, etc. From each class one member was appointed to have charge of these contributions, to gather them in by the envelope system and to hand the amount over to the church treasurer at the New Year's meeting. In that way we hope to keep the confirmands in touch with the church and to help solve the problem that perplexes so many churches, that eighty percent of the young people are lost to the church and only twenty percent become full-fledged members at maturity. To the God who blessed us in the past, we commend also our work in the future.

Items of Interest from India

Our readers will be glad to learn the news conveyed by the following letter from Pastor Jost, who was compelled to leave his post at Chandkuri, India, by the British government:

"With a grateful heart I can now state that we arrived here at the home of dear relatives in Berlin, on January 14th, after having passed thru many hardships after a sad farewell from our poor Christians. On Nov. 15 we were compelled to leave our congregation and arrived here on Jan. 14. We have been in great danger, but the dear Lord, our great missionary King, has helped us wonderfully and carried us safely thru. We praise and thank him for this. We also wish to thank you and the missionary board for the many kindnesses shown us and our mission work. God's inexpressible mercy has permitted me to serve this cause thirty years, while Mrs. Jost has been active for twenty-six years and our beloved daughter for seven years. This is indeed an act of mercy and we hope and trust that our work has not been in vain. We are certain that He will

Concluded on Page 8

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

Mar. 26, 1916. Oculi, third Sunday in Lent

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

GREAT HOME MISSIONARIES

- M. Mar. 20. The man that said, "No." Jonah 1: 1-17.
 T. Mar. 21. A shepherd-missionary. Amos 7: 14-17.
 W. Mar. 22. Philip. Acts 8: 26-40.
 T. Mar. 23. Peter. Acts 10: 9-20, 44-48.
 F. Mar. 24. A nameless woman. John 4: 27-42.
 S. Mar. 25. Timothy. 1 Tim. 1: 1-20.
Sun., Mar. 26. Topic—Great Home Missionaries.
 Luke 10: 1-20.

Suggestions to the Leader

The history of America is the history of home mission work. Columbus ventured on his voyage because he hoped to win new nations for the Church. The early settlers were driven to this country because of their confirmed religious convictions, which could not find their proper, unhampered expression in the old homeland. America was the haven of refuge for all oppressed in conscience. Later on it became the land of opportunity for those who could not progress in the old world. Economic reasons for emigration were always second in importance to religious reasons.

When the great West was settled that territory was made habitable by the home missionaries. The great West and Northwest were added to our national domain because of the home mission work of Marcus Whitman. The great states of Illinois, Missouri, Indiana, Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, have made such marvelous progress because of the sacrificing work of men who took possession of the land in the name of Jesus Christ. This meeting therefore, offers an opportunity for a study of the development of the great West.

Ask some member to give a historical review of the history of that part of our country, showing how the States were gradually acquired, and added to our national domain. Then have some other member read up and report on the work of great home missionaries. Ask a third member to show the intimate connection between the material progress of our country and the home mission work. Finally in closing, the leader ought to point out the work which the local society and church can do.

The Topic Presented

In the "Endeavorers' Daily Companion" the leading characters among the early missionaries of our country are briefly treated, as follows:—

NOBLE HOME MISSIONARIES

William Duncan, a glorious home missionary, single-handed, civilized and Christianized the Metlakatla Indians of British Columbia, and built up with them a beautiful Christian community.

Charles H. Cook, a consecrated city missionary in Chicago, was impressed with the feeling that he should go as a missionary to the wild tribe of Pima Indians in Arizona. He went without money, and in a marvelous way has won them to Christ and made a civilized nation of them.

Marcus Whitman, impressed with the great importance of Washington and Oregon, with splendid heroism led immigration thither, founded missions, and by a wonderful ride across the continent reached Washington and persuaded the government not to surrender that vast territory to Great Britain.

Joseph Ward, the great missionary to Dakota, the founder of Yankton College, became the most influential man in the Territory. Said the Governor, "I have not a tithe of his power here."

John M. Peck, a home missionary in Illinois in 1824, was a leader in the work of saving Illinois from slavery and preventing the adoption of that giant evil in the State constitution.

When Chicago was only Fort Dearborn, the first sermon was preached there by a home missionary, Jeremiah Porter, in 1833, from the prophetic text, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." In three months Mr. Porter organized the first church in Chicago, with 27 members. Mr. Porter reached the age of ninety, and his pioneer text was used for the funeral discourse.

The famous Iowa Band was a company of eleven consecrated young men who went together to that new territory, and labored faithfully all their lives to take it for Christ. Their arrival in Iowa in 1843 was the most notable home-missionary event up to that time in the West.

The Yale Dakota Band consisted of nine young men who went out to that Territory in 1880 and did valient service. The Yale Washington Band were six young men of the class of 1890, who did a noble work in that most distant Territory.

OUR EVANGELICAL HOME MISSIONARIES.

The series of articles from the pen of our General Treasurer, Rev. Henry Bode, that appeared in the Evangelical Tidings last Fall offers abundant information as to the early missionaries of our Church. The men who drafted or helped develop the principles of the Evangelical Church, the Revs. E. L. Nollau, H. Garlich, K. L. Daubert, G. W. Wall, J. J. Riess, John Gerber, Joseph Rieger, Jacob Knauss, C. H. Bode, Adolph Baltzer, John Will, etc., were home missionaries of the truest type. Our Evangelical Church gained its strong foot-hold in the Central states because of their heroic efforts.

Our Evangelical Church has continued to the present day her efforts to win the people of the home land for Christ and His Church. The report of the Central Board for Home Missions, which body of men is in charge of this important part of our work, shows that in 1916 there are 137 churches supported either in part, and in a great many cases all together from its treasury. The appropriation for 1916 amounts to $40,000.00, the largest appropriation ever made for this work at one time. New opportunities are presenting themselves constantly. The work among the Russo-Germans is very promising and encouraging. God has given these people, who originally came from Germany, and have retained their Evangelical faith in spite of persecution and oppression, into our care. Let us measure up to the great responsibility.

Some Questions on the Topic

- What does home mission work include?
- Why is the progress of the country dependent on home mission efforts?
- Name the pioneer home mission leaders.
- Name the pioneer pastors of our Evangelical Church, and tell something of their work.

Some Scripture on the Topic

Matt. 28: 19; Matt. 18: 3, 4; Isa. 32: 15-17; 56: 7, 8; Joel 2: 28, 29; Matt. 13: 31-33; Phil. 2: 10, 11; Heb. 8: 11.

A Prayer

Grant, O Lord, that we may truly love our brethren. Thou hast taught us that all who are in need are our brethren. Those in need of Thy Gospel are perishing for want of Bread. Make us ready to break unto them the Bread of Life, that their souls might be restored. We thank Thee, that our Evangelical Church has ever had the Home Mission vision. We pray that our society and our congregation may study and consider carefully the needs of our community, and be ready to answer every call for help. Guide us in this work, we pray, and help us build Thy Kingdom. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson 13. Opposing Jesus

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Mar. 20. John 6: 60-71. The Followers of Jesus Tested.
 T. Mar. 21. John 3: 1-14. The Honest Seeker after Truth.
 W. Mar. 22. Luke 11: 14-36. The Danger of Opposition.
 T. Mar. 23. Matt. 12: 22-45. The Eternal Sin.
 F. Mar. 24. Matt. 12: 46-50. The True Kindred of Christ.
 S. Mar. 25. John 15: 11-21. Friends of Jesus.
 S. Mar. 26. Matt. 25: 31-46. The Real Enemies and Friends of Jesus.

Lesson Key:—"And the scribes that came down from Jerusalem said, He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the demons, casteth out the demons."

Mark 3: 22, 23.

If there is anything that the Bible makes plain concerning the nature of man it is the fact that he is a free moral agent, i. e., that he is not bound to act along certain lines or in certain ways, as are the animals, but is at liberty to choose his course as he pleases. Man is not a machine which works automatically in the manner designed by the inventor, but an individual personality, each one distinct and different from every other, with ways and desires of his own, and each one responsible for what he makes out of his life.

It was this fundamental fact that made it necessary for Christ to accomplish His work of salvation in the way he did. It was impossible to save men regardless of their own free will; to give them something which they did not want was just as useless as to give them something which they did not need. It was necessary to provide salvation for all, so as to give all the same opportunity, but to leave the acceptance of salvation to the free will of the individual, for only a voluntary acceptance could bring about the results that were desired and needed. Hence it does not take very long before Jesus' teaching arouses opposition. The people to whom he preaches the Gospel of the Kingdom have their own ideas as to what the Kingdom ought to be, and the manner in which it should be realized, and these ideas differ entirely from those which Jesus represents. Since it is impossible that He should give up the principles according to which the salvation of the world has been planned from times eternal, the only alternative is that they should give up theirs, which cannot agree with His own. Refusing to do this must necessarily lead to the rejection of what He has to offer.

The fact that many in Israel opposed the spirit and the method of Jesus' work came to the surface in many different ways from the very beginning of His ministry. When He cleansed the Temple at His first passover in Jerusalem the Jews, i. e., the official representatives of the Jewish nation, immediately rebelled and demanded proof of His authority, because they would not believe in such a way of doing things. But tho many believed on His name, seeing the signs which He did, He did not trust himself unto them. In His own boyhood home He was rejected, because the people would not hear the truth from His lips. And when the multitude that had been so wonderfully fed were told that He had not come to give them the food that perisheth, but that which abideth unto eternal life, and when He explained to them just what it meant to eat the bread of life come down out of heaven, even those who had hitherto been closest to Him, called it a hard saying which none could hear, and went back and walked no more with Him. They could not grasp the Master's meaning because it did not fit in with their earthly expectations, which they could not thin, did not desire to give up. While they possessed the liberty to change their opinions and ideas concerning Christ and the kingdom He had come to establish, they made no use of it, but only of their liberty of deciding against that which Jesus had held up to them as His mission.

It may be that many of these, as they pondered upon what they had heard, learned to see their mistake and returned to Jesus, or at least to faith in His Gospel. The fact that people have turned away from church or from religion does not necessarily condemn them; there is always hope of their returning at a later time under more favorable conditions. In the end however, a decision will be reached as was the case with Simon Peter on the one hand and Judas Iscariot on the other. It is quite likely that a period of doubt had existed in the minds of both these men as to what they would do. Peter had wrong notions as to the character of the kingdom Christ was to establish, and Judas evidently must have had some higher spiritual longings or he would not have followed Jesus in the first place. What made the difference in the conduct of the two men? Simon Peter was of the truth, and therefore he heard Jesus' voice; Judas thought most of the world and the things that are in the world, and therefore the love of the Father was not in him.

Is your decision in regard to Jesus Christ that of Simon Peter?

"Into all the World"

Continued from Page 5

Gospel, so that his bonds were manifest in Christ thruout the whole praetorian guard and the rest, and he sent greetings also from them of Caesar's household, 4: 22. His imprisonment was only God's way of enabling his ambassador to fulfill to the uttermost his chosen mission. The epistles also show how the Apostle exercised continual spiritual supervision over the churches. New heresies had arisen, and Paul gives his ripest instructions concerning the person of Christ and the eternal purpose of God revealed in the Gospel, while the practical directions which the epistles contain disclose his firm grasp on the ideals of Christian duty and the fervor of his own Christian life.

Did Paul Reach Spain?

Altho the Acts leave Paul a prisoner at Rome, there is ample reason to believe that he was released after about two years and resumed his missionary journeys. The apparent emphasis upon the fact that no one hindered his work does not give the impression that the end of his work was near. Moreover Paul fully expected to be released, Phil. 1: 25; 2: 17, 24; Philem. 24, and the treatment he had always received at the hands of Roman officials seemed to justify this expectation. Nero's persecution had not yet begun, and when it did begin it was a sudden outbreak preceded by no official ill treatment of the Christians. The Christians were as yet considered merely a Jewish sect, whose liberty to maintain their religion was fully recognized. When Paul therefore came before the Roman tribunal, he was very probably acquitted of any crime of which Roman law could take cognizance. There is also reason to suppose that the report of Festus was favorable, Acts 26: 31, and the Jews seem to have sent no accusers to appear against him in Rome, 28: 21.

On the other hand the tradition that Paul was released and resumed his journeys is an early one, and while it is not strong enough to be absolutely authoritative, it is strong enough to confirm the rest of the evidence, especially since no sufficient counter-evidence can be adduced. There is, furthermore, no question that the epistles to Timothy and Titus are from Paul's pen, but no place can be found for them in the story of Paul as related in the Acts. They must therefore have been written later, which practically compels us to accept the statement of Eusebius, the first real historian of the Church, that "after Paul had made his defense, he was sent again on the ministry of preaching, and a second time having come to Rome, he suffered martyrdom."

The subsequent movements of the Apostle can, however, only be inferred from the allusions in the epistles to Timothy and Titus, and from tradition. Apparently he went to Asia and Macedonia, leaving Timothy in charge of the churches about Ephesus, and Titus in charge of the churches of Crete. If we accept the early tradition that Paul went to Spain, it is most probable that he did so after having been in Asia and Macedonia, and that, upon his return from Spain he stopped at Crete and left Titus on that island, then returning to Asia, from which place he doubtless wrote the epistle to Titus. But while the closing period of the Apostle's life is somewhat uncertain, the epistles then written show that he occupied himself, in addition to the evangelization of new regions, with the perfecting of the organization of those already existing.

It is impossible to tell how Paul came to be re-arrested. Perhaps he was informed against as a leader of the now proscribed sect by the Alexander mentioned 2 Tim. 4: 14. Wherever he may have been arrested he was sent to Rome for trial. It may be that he was finally condemned to death simply because he was a Christian in accordance with the policy begun by Nero in A. D. 64. Tradition relates that he was beheaded, as became a Roman citizen, on the Ostian Way.

Accepting the release of the Apostle from his first imprisonment as a fact, the chronology of this later period would be as follows:

Release from first Roman imprisonment...63

1 Timothy64-65

Titus65-66

2 Timothy67

Death of Paul67

It is practically impossible to gather into one picture the many features of so wonderfully versatile a character as Paul certainly was. It was Paul's work to interpret authoritatively to the Gentile world, in action and in writing, the mission and the message of Jesus Christ. He was raised up to explain to the world the Saviour in whom it was invited to believe, and the work which the Saviour had done. He had the courage and the devotion to apply to practical life the whole range and depth of Christian truth, and the faith and the zeal to show to men the eternal and universal significance of the Gospel. It is not possible to understand Christianity unless we unite with the teaching and work of Jesus Christ the interpretation thereof furnished by His Apostle Paul.

The Old Hampton Place

Continued from Page 3

had the charm of a summer morning so impressed him as it did that day when he sat waiting for some passer-by to carry a message to his home.

"Well, still alive and you felt sure you were going to die," said the doctor cheerily as he greeted his patient that morning.

"Yes, but I might as well be dead," rejoined Mr. Hampton ungraciously. "I'm out of a home."

Richard Hampton might be queer and cranky, but he was just and honest so he sent for Cordelia and Thomas early in the day. With Mr. and Mrs. Gross for witnesses he unfolded the great news and told them he intended to move away as soon as he was able.

"The poor house is always open to receive people with no means," he wound up. "It is a great blow to me to leave the house where I was born and where I expected to die, but I'm a Hampton and I shall ask no favors. I have at best but a few years or days to live and where I go will concern no one."

"You can stay right here, Uncle Richard!" said Thomas heartily. "In fact we want you to. As to that old will we found it last winter while we were rummaging in the old book-case, we thought it was safe after—after we moved where we are, for if you didn't find it all these years we thought you never would. You just hurry up and get well and stay right here. We're getting along first rate and we don't want your house."

"Well!" sighed Richard Hampton as he dropped back on his mussy pillow. "Well, it really looks as if there were two Christians in the world—three including James Gross, and I thought there were none."

Items of Interest from India

Concluded from Page 6

also cause this terrible experience at the present to revert to the good of our cause and that it will prove a great blessing for us and our dear Christians. We commit you to His care. With kindest regards to you and all our missionary friends from us all, I am gratefully, yours in the Lord,

Joh. Jost."

As brother Jost repeatedly expresses his gratitude towards the Lord in this brief communication, let us also not forget, as friends of missions, how grateful we should be for His tender care of our missionary brethren and workers.

There should be no doubts in the minds of any Sunday-school workers as to their active stand towards an offering during the Lenten season for home and foreign missions. Last year 205 Sunday-schools participated in this offering and used 23,200 mite boxes. A few of these Sunday-schools did not open their boxes until their mission festivals in summer, but from reports already published the aggregate amount received was $9,428.80, which gives each branch of our missions $4,714.10. The entire expense connected with this enterprise, to cover the cost of the boxes, postage, advertising, and agitation in general, was $531.22, or about 5½%. Our mission treasury therefore was the beneficiary of nearly $9,000.00 and those who so cheerfully worked to attain this end, have the satisfaction of having taken part in the work, and the certainty of God's blessings for their efforts. Why can we not increase the 205 Sunday-schools who did this in the past year to 500 in the coming year?

As part of the jubilee collection was diverted to our treasury, our treasurer was enabled to send the amount due on the first quarter out to India and in addition could pay back $200.00 borrowed in this country. If donations would only come in freely enough that we would not have to go into debt again.

A letter from Rev. Hagenstein received to-day, (Feb. 7) is very encouraging and reports uninterrupted work. "I am not in any hurry to take my vacation. Thanks to God, I am quite well at present, and can remain on my feet all day long without growing tired. As to furnishing me a substitute, any one of the brethren is agreeable to me. Naturally it would be preferable to have one who delights in school work, has some knowledge of medicine and can supervise farm work:

"Our Christmas celebration was a very pleasant one, and God only knows the amount of blessing imparted to each one of us. The services were well attended thruout. Even the distribution of presents was quite satisfactory. As a usual thing all teachers who formerly attended our orphan asylum, visit us with their families on Christmas day, and celebrate with us. Many of them are now parents, some of two to four children. The heathen teachers also visit the services. Hardly one of these so-called heathens is at heart still a heathen. The drawing teacher of the school is a Brahmin of the highest caste, but conducts himself as a Christian. He rises with the congregation and attends services oftener than many Christians. He even took water from my hand and drank it in the presence of many other teachers. On Christmas Eve he brought a pretty picture of Christ, framed, and drawn by himself; also two small mottoes. Another teacher, a former orphan boy, brought me a pair of shoes worth about Rs. five. When I told him how much I appreciated such a present, but that I could not expect a man in his position to go to such an expense, he said, 'You have done many a thing for us too.'

Pastor Hagenstein also refers to the sending out of new men. As much as he desires an increase in the force this warning must be indorsed by all friends of our mission: "No man should be sent out here unless he comes out of pure love, first for the Saviour, and secondly, for the poor deluded heathen fellowmen, who live in darkness and in need of salvation. Without this he would surely be more of a hindrance than of usefulness." And yet, we can not do otherwise than continually pray that the vacancies may soon be filled and new workers may enter the field. For the present we would urge all our mission friends to pray the Lord to give strength and health to our present force and to endow them with wisdom, and ability to perform their work effectually.

Word has also been received that the Misses Wobus and Baur have arrived safely in India on Mar. 4.

The news that St. Peter's Church, Pittsburg, Rev. John L. Ernst, pastor, has decided to regard Pastor Feierabend as their missionary, and to supply his salary, will no doubt be very welcome, not only to Pastor Feierabend, but to all our friends. We are sure that the church itself will be richly blessed as a result, and can assure it and the pastor that their example just at this time is particularly encouraging. The prospects of sending out new workers have also become a little brighter, and we trust that we shall soon be able to report more definitely.

P. A. M., GES. Tr.

OUR EASTER LIST 1916

has been mailed to our customers.

If you have not received it, write for one, we mail it

FREE OF CHARGE!

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716-18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 5

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., MARCH 23rd, 1916

NUMBER 12

"Religious Instruction and Public Education"

was the general theme at the thirteenth annual meeting of the Religious Education Association held in Chicago Feb. 28—Mar. 1, and the general tenor of the discussion was that every American child was entitled to religious training under proper auspices, and that the Church and the home were entrusted with the primary duty of providing such instruction. The discussions of the complex problems involved in co-ordinating two such seemingly divergent things as public education and religious instruction were frank and to the point, and the declaration of principles which the delegates adopted showed that Protestants, Catholics and Jews were substantially agreed that a united movement for the instruction of American youth in religious fundamentals was possible and desirable.

Some of the delegates scented danger in any proposition which seemed to throw the teaching of religion into the public school curriculum. Dr. E. S. Lewis, associate editor of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday-school literature, warned the convention that any plans with this object either directly or indirectly in view, tho they had made progress in twenty-one states, and tho they brought some beneficial results, must not be tolerated, as they threatened to endanger the fundamental principle of religious liberty. To many this seemed to express the fear that any concession made in this direction from the present method of keeping religious instruction and public education entirely separate, might be utilized in some way by the Roman Catholic Church in its active and persistent propaganda for securing public funds for its parochial schools.

The answer given by the convention to this warning was that the Church and the State are always to be regarded as distinct institutions, which co-operate not in any official manner but only "thru the agency of their common constituents, in their capacity as individual citizens." The division of the child's time, so as to give opportunity for religious education during school hours, is not to be reached by any formal agreement between the State and the Churches as institutions, but by consultation between parents and the local public school authorities. Religious training must always be done in the home, the church or the private school, never by the public school itself, nor in any official connection with it.

A question intimately bound up with the idea of week-day religious instruction is that of the Church's competence to give this extended religious instruction with public school efficiency. Mr. Chas. D. Lowry, assistant superintendent of public instruction in the Chicago schools, thought there was no question as to the Church's potential competency as soon as the size and the value of the opportunity was understood, altho for the present the fact must be recognized that the school is better organized for teaching than the Church. "In the day school," said Mr. Lowry, "the pupils get their lessons, but tho I have been a Sunday-school teacher for thirty years, I have never known a Sunday-school class to get its lesson. Individuals have studied, but classes have failed to come up to the standard of the day schools." The remedy, Mr. Lowry thinks, lies in a return to the methods and customs of the past generation, when children got their Sunday-school lessons because they were taught in the home.

"The work of religious education," he continued, must depend for its interest and quality, not upon recognition by the public school authorities, but the recognition of its importance by the people themselves in the home, the church, the private school and the college. Success in training will receive great impetus from adoption of a schedule which shall include systematic use of week days as well as Sundays for religious instruction, with employment of such methods as the Gary church plan; from adoption of sound educational principles for a systematic scheme of instruction which shall include every portion of the work of education of the local church; and from adherence to a comprehensive method of giving adequate training to teachers in religious education."

As soon as the addresses delivered at the convention have been published, we expect to give our readers some of the most important contributions made by the speakers to the discussion of this highly important subject.

A THOUGHT FOR LENT

Christ, the life of all the living,
Christ, the death of death, our foe,
Who, thyself for us once giving,
To the darkened depths of woe,
Patiently didst yield Thy breath
Man to save from sin and death:
Thousand, thousand thanks shall be,
Blessed Jesus, unto Thee!

—Ernst Chr. Homburg

The Panama Congress

Recent developments in Mexico have renewed and intensified public interest in Latin America and made a correct analysis of the religious, social and political conditions, especially in the countries nearest to the United States, Mexico, Cuba and Central America, doubly desirable. We are convinced that religious and social problems are an important factor in nearly all the difficulties that have arisen between the United States and these countries, and believe that a proper adjustment of these difficulties can be reached only as the people of the United States arrive at a better understanding of real conditions in these countries. What Mexico, Cuba, Central America and all the Latin American countries need most of all is the enlightening and uplifting influence of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which so far has been practically an unknown quantity to them. Enlightened and progressive popular government in these countries will come only as the people come in contact with the force and the freedom of Protestantism, which alone have made of North America what they are to-day. And the chief aim of the Congress on Christian Work in Latin America was to pave the way for bringing the Gospel to these peoples in a more direct, systematic and satisfying way than had ever been attempted before. On another page we have outlined some of the outward results of this important gathering; below we add, from a report in The Continent, some of the deeper and larger things which the Congress brings home to American Christianity:

"It has demonstrated the possibility of the evangelization of the whole western hemisphere, if evangelical Christianity will attack the task in co-operation and not in competition.

"It has frankly faced the facts of the present and the faults and failures of the past; and the result is the naked truth that if evangelical Christianity is to prevail in the tropics and farther south, we must offer on that altar the best of the talent and treasure our churches possess. What is not good enough for the homeland is much too poor for the far South.

"It has shown the almost, if not quite, criminal folly of having half a score of, anemic and despised churches or schools or theological seminaries or houses of publication, each struggling for existence, and to exploit an unwelcome creed or ritual form of baptism, when, if the denominations would combine their funds and energies, there could be built one or, where needed, more churches, schools, seminaries or publishing houses that would command the respect of a people to whom denominational schism and ecclesiastical varieties are strange and unlovely.

"It has confessed the futility of attempting the religious conquest of Latin America solely by absentee generalship and a foreign born and bred Christian soldiery, however unselfish and consecrated. An early and permanent to-the-manor-born ministry; a native leadership, trained not abroad, but on the field of battle; and an advisory, if not chief executive, council near the battle fronts—these are conclusions compelled by this Congress.

"It has taken due and timely notice of such stubborn facts as growing national consciousness, race pride and prejudice, the universality of human nature's sympathy for the attacked and its hatred of everything that remotely resembles Pharisaism. Its members have gone home determined to govern themselves accordingly. Therefore, to the extent that these delegates can influence their churches and mission boards, future missionaries deployed on Latin American fields will boast not at all of the superiority of their homeland, but will respect the patriotism of the peoples whose eternal weal they would serve—will wisely content themselves with overcoming evil with good, not chiefly by vociferous denunciation of the errors in existing faiths, but by benevolent manifestation of the finer fruitage of the truth. They will be capable, cultured and courteous enough to teach the verities with convincing authority and yet with alluring considerateness and charity.

"It has stood aghast and humbled to a new attitude of dependence on God, who giveth the increase, in the awful presence of the Latin American need and the Christian church's duty to meet it without pretense, heroically and at once. Recognizing the miracle of the much that has been wrought by the few men and women that our churches have sent to these countries, the delegates to Panama have sat for ten terribly solemn days at the feet of these pioneers and their Spanish and Portuguese speaking converts and very competent co-workers, and have confessed their ignorance and lack of faith and zeal."

It is gratifying to learn that even while the matter of a better understanding and closer relationship between the people of the United States and the Latin-American nations is being earnestly considered, a step has already been taken which will be most helpful in bringing about such a good understanding. At the recent Pan-American Congress Dr. Ernesto Quesada, of Buenos Aires, asserted that Pan-Americanism should be established thru intellectual interchanges rather than thru political, diplomatic or commercial relations only. In line with this sane and progressive idea Harvard University has now established a chair of Latin-American history and economics, and its first incumbent is to be the very Senor Quesada who spoke at the Pan-American Congress.

Senor Quesada has paid much attention to comparisons between the conditions in his own and other countries. His Harvard duties are to cover the first half of the college year 1916-17, and his lectures should count for much in increasing our knowledge of Latin American peoples and in understanding their point of view. Without this we shall not be able to present to them intelligently the Protestant conception of Christian truth and religious liberty.

THE LORD'S SUPPER

The visible Signs and Means

"For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death till He come," 1 Cor. 11: 26.

In accordance with a custom of the day Christians in Corinth, as well as in Jerusalem, formed associations, clubs or guilds, the members of which partook of common meals once a week, once a month, or even daily, if practicable. The members, of course, differed in social standing as well as in material prosperity, and one of the aims of these associations, which, by the way, antedated Christianity and were political, religious or industrious in character, was to emphasize the equality of all and make provision for the less fortunate without humiliating them by offering them charity. All members had an equal right at the table and the property held by the society was supposed to be equally distributed to all. It thus became a prevalent custom for Christians to eat together, and the meals were called love-feasts and soon became a marked feature of the early Church. On a certain day, generally the first day of the week, the Christians assembled, each bringing what he could as a contribution to the feast: fish, poultry, meat, cheese, milk, honey, fruit and wine and bread. Sometimes the proceedings began with the partaking of the consecrated bread and wine, sometimes the physical appetite was first appeased by partaking of the food provided, and after that the bread and wine were passed around. This mode of celebrating the Lord's Supper became popular all the more easily as it resembled closely the original celebration by the Lord and His disciples, which was at the close of the Paschal supper, which was meant to satisfy hunger as well as commemorate the exodus from Egypt.

A Memorial of Christ

In the course of time, however, as had doubtless been the case with similar pagan associations, the Christian love-feast became liable to many corruptions. The wealthier members took the best seats, kept their own delicacies without waiting for any common distribution, each one looking after himself regardless of how the others at the table fared. It was a common occurrence, that while one was hungry and had received nothing, another had eaten or drunk too much, so that these love-feasts, instead of exhibiting Christian charity and temperance, became scandalous scenes of selfish conduct and greedy excesses. Thus arose the disorders of which Paul had heard and which he rebuked so severely in 1 Cor. 11: 17-34. It is worthy of note, however, that, to remedy the evil, he neither proposes to separate the religious rite from the ordinary meal, nor prohibits the use of the wine or counsels a less frequent communion, either one of which might have seemed advisable under the circumstances. The method he does propose is quite simple: he would merely have every man remember to what purpose the Lord's Supper was instituted and what it stands for. Altho Paul had not been privileged to be present when the Lord's Supper was instituted by Christ on the night in which He was betrayed, he had nevertheless received a direct revelation in regard to it and could therefore speak with authority. The words of institution as given by Paul are substantially the same as those given by Matthew, Mark and Luke; if there is any real difference it is in the emphasis Paul seems to place upon the words, "This do in remembrance of me," which he uses twice, and the substance of which he repeats in the passage quoted at the head of this article. It is significant, however, that this emphasis, if it is intentional, does not prevent the Apostle from insisting, as do the three gospels, that "this is my body," and "this cup is the new covenant in my blood." There is no doubt whatever in the Apostle's mind that the bread and wine which are given in the Lord's Supper as the visible signs and means of the sacrament actually stand for the full meaning of the body and the blood of Christ.

A Spiritual Food

It is significant that Jesus made use of natural articles of food as the signs and means of the spiritual gifts He intended to convey. The one essential thing about the Lord's Supper is that it is the nourishment of the new life thru the memory of the Lord's death. It was instituted on the occasion of the Jewish Passover, which was observed annually in memory of the sparing of Israel's first-born, when the first-born of Egypt was slain at the time of the exodus. Thru the blood of the Passover the Israelites were cleansed of the corruption and iniquity of the Egyptians, and in the eating of the meal each one accepted personally the cleansing thus effected. Thru the death of Christ and the shedding of His innocent blood we too are cleansed from sin and delivered from its guilt and bondage, and we partake of the Lord's Supper that each one may personally acquire the blessed gifts of redemption and reconciliation. It is a memorial of Christ's death, a recognition and acceptance of Christ and of that which His life and death mean to men. The eating of the bread and the drinking of the cup as visible signs and means of the body and the blood of Jesus Christ, thus brings us into the most intimate personal relationship with Him.

The body of Jesus Christ was broken and His blood shed in order to secure remission of sins for us. Forgiveness of sins is available for any one at any time we choose to accept it. It has been vouchsafed to us in holy Baptism, but since we sin again and again every day and hour we need the renewed forgiveness which faith in Jesus Christ, a faithful use of the Word of God and the Lord's Supper, in which we assimilate as it were, all that Christ accomplished for us, can give us. Forgiveness of sins brings life and salvation, John 6: 53, 56, the inner spiritual life which we can have only by Christ's dwelling in our hearts, Gal. 2: 20; John 15: 5. Jesus Christ alone is the new life, and when we partake of the Lord's Supper in a worthy manner His life penetrates our own life and being and stimulates it so as to bring forth fruit in practical service.

With forgiveness of sin the peace of God enters the heart, Rom. 8: 31, and where the heart has found peace in Christ there is happiness, joy and the beginning of salvation. The partaking of the Lord's Supper increases and confirms this joyful and happy hope, which has given rise to the custom of giving the sacrament to the sick and dying, not as tho it could in some magical way automatically cleanse from sin and give salvation, but because it strengthens faith in the forgiveness of sins thru Christ and the hope of eternal life. That only those who sincerely and fully trust in Christ Jesus as their Saviour and Lord can enjoy these or any other blessings of His redemption ought to be so self-evident that it needs only to be mentioned.

To neglect partaking of the sacrament for years, or even for only one year at a time is therefore a wrong and an injury to the spiritual life, just as lack of proper food weakens the physical life. There must, however, be no attempt at compulsion, nor should any one come from mere force of habit or in obedience to custom, but only with the sincere purpose of nourishing and strengthening the spiritual life. The self-examination which a worthy partaking of the Lord's Supper implies, and which will be dealt with next week, is in itself a great blessing, a furtherance of self-knowledge and a strong incentive for more faithful fellowship with Christ.

The Old Hampton Place

BY HILDA RICHMOND

VII.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS. Thomas and Cordelia Hampton, brother and sister, victims of a city boarding-house, receive news of the death of an eccentric old bachelor uncle, supposed to have burned to death in his barn. They attend the funeral and while enjoying the hospitality of a neighbor, become enamored of country life. After consulting a lawyer Thomas decides to take possession of his deceased uncle's farm and undertakes to make the neglected house habitable. The presence of the two young people brings a new spirit of sociability into the neighborhood, when, in the midst of a pleasant social gathering, the supposedly dead uncle suddenly reappears—it was only an old office skeleton that had been found in the ruins of the barn—and violently ejects them from his property. During a supposed serious illness of Uncle Richard an old will is discovered, according to the terms of which the farm really belongs to Thomas and Cordelia, who, however, nobly waive their rights, so that their uncle may have a home to his liking for his old age.

The last of June found Thomas and Cordelia Hampton very much discouraged. Old Mr. Parker was averse to having new methods tried on his cherished farm and he considered the old scrub stock quite good enough, particularly for an amateur farmer.

The wheezy old family horse had to be rested many times a day and the old cows gave little in the way of income. They invested in some good chickens, but it was too late to raise chicks successfully and the time was needed for other things. Thomas was handicapped not only by lack of experience, but by the old-time machinery as well, so that he and Cordelia were quietly planning to go back to town in the fall.

"But we must not say a word outside until we are ready to go," said Thomas positively. "I would not want poor old Uncle Richard to get it into his head that he ought to give up the farm to us. It makes me feel bad to think he must work as hard as he does, but the doctor says he needs exercise. He is far worse off than we, for when that bank failed in Cleveland he lost five thousand dollars. He may get something when the affairs are settled, but when a man gets to be sixty he can't afford to lose all he has."

"Of course we must be careful," agreed Cordelia. "Do you know, Thomas, I'm wicked enough to feel relieved that Uncle Richard didn't want us to move in with him. It is only in story books that people change over night and become radically different, so I'm glad Uncle Richard wanted to get along without us. He couldn't stand the noise and confusion at all if we tried to have good times."

"Well, it's few good times we'll have this summer, Sis. Everybody is run to death and help is impossible to get. We'll all have to put off good times until winter and—"

"And then we'll be back in town. O well! Don't imagine I'm fretting. I've made up my mind, Thomas, that it's our business to live one day at a time as well as we can and not fret about the future. At least that is what I'm trying to do."

"I had hoped to make a success of it this summer—that is just make a living—and then next year go at it in dead earnest," said Thomas sadly. "I like farming and I think it is more profitable than anything we've ever undertaken. Perhaps something will develop before fall that will help us out. At any rate we must not go into debt."

"I've thought of something," said Cordelia suddenly and she rapidly outlined her plan.

"I don't think it will work, to be perfectly frank, Sis, but it won't cost much to try it, I imagine. I'll write this very day and see what can be done."

If Thomas and Cordelia had been busy up to this time they were doubly so during the next few days. Letters flew back and forth and telephones were kept busy after that first important letter came. In spite of the busy times offers of assistance came to the two young workers and at the end of three or four days even Thomas began to feel some confidence in the scheme.

"At least it hasn't cost us a penny," he said half doubtfully as he and his sister waited anxiously for the evening train to whistle.

"You doubting Thomas!" said Grace severely. "Of course it's going to succeed. It must!"

"There they come! There they come!" cried half a dozen voices at once as the big farm wagon lumbered down the road. "I wonder what they'll say."

The unused farm house across the way had been rented for a nominal sum in case the undertaking succeeded, and nothing was to be paid if it failed, for a temporary home for twenty college students who wanted to do farm work for the summer. Cordelia with the help of a woman was to cook for them and serve the meals in her house so the unused farm house was merely for sleeping and lounging. Every available old bed and chair had been dragged from garret and barn and wood house, and the young ladies had worked hard to help Cordelia make the place clean and attractive. The farmers were delighted at the prospect of help in harvest and everyone had given such help as was possible to the undertaking. Old bedding had been loaned, old chairs and tables provided, old rugs utilized and old dishes raked and scraped together, so that the only thing yet to be tried out was how the young men would take to the scheme and whether Cordelia was able to carry out her cooking plans.

"Gee! This is some house!" said one of the most outspoken of the college bunch. "Beats living in a tent all hollow. I lived in a tent seven weeks last summer in Kansas. Why, there's even mosquito netting at the windows!"

"And wash-bowls and pitchers!" said another.

"Good gracious! Have we wandered into the Waldorf-Astoria by mistake? Last summer in Dakota a little muddy stream was all we had for our lavatory all summer."

Cordelia could not determine whether they were making fun of the place or were pleased with it, but when she set out the supper, aided by Mrs. Gross, Emily, Thomas and Frances, there was no doubt in her mind as to whether they liked the food or not. She was a trifle uneasy lest the price she had set for board might be too small, but she was glad to see that her eatables all disappeared in orderly fashion. No matter if they were ravenous they were gentlemen and her spirits rose. The supper was plain enough, consisting of cold boiled ham, biscuits, fresh strawberry jam, baked potatoes, fresh radishes, onions, lettuce and doughnuts, but everything was well cooked, hot and tempting.

"Miss Hampton, you need not worry as to whether we'll stay or not," said one young man who seemed to be a sort of Senior or Captain among them. "And if the meals continue like this we'll raise the price of board. You have it entirely too low."

The weather was fearfully hot that summer and work crowded in upon Thomas and Cordelia. The advent of the college students eased up tasks for the farmers who were able to hire help, but Thomas had no money to spend for assistance with his crops. Cordelia had one rather shiftless woman who had to be watched continually, so it was no small job to cook and wash dishes for hungry men three times a day no matter how the mercury ran up in the tube.

"But it wouldn't be so bad if Uncle Richard was only a little more easily pleased," sighed Cordelia to herself one hot July day as she made ready to carry a loaf of bread and a warm pie to her crochety relative. "If he would come over here and eat his meals I would have less trouble."

But that was the one thing Mr. Hampton had no idea of doing. He liked very much to have Cordelia's good things to eat, but he would not walk to the farm house after them. And he seemed to think Thomas had nothing in life to do but to help him with fences or the garden or rebuild the rickety old sheds. He wanted his place improved, he said, but he wanted to get it done without much effort on his part or the spending of money. And, to tell the truth, he was not able to work hard. A man who has idled away all his life can not expect to do hard labor when he gets old as Mr. Hampton speedily found out. An hour's work tired him out, so he called upon Thomas continually for help, and that young man felt it his duty to go when called upon.

"Of course Thomas is doing it all for himself and Cordelia," said Mr. Gross as they talked it over at home one hot evening. "It is too bad that they are worn to a thread waiting on him, but in the end they will get it all. That old will was recorded and it is impossible for Richard Hampton to keep them out of their rights. As long as he lives he'll have possession of the place and—"

"And he's likely to live to be a hundred!" put in Emily indignantly. "Thomas and Cordelia have not had a single good time all summer on account of that cranky old man. It's a mean shame!"

"Emily," said her parents reprovingly. "You ought to be glad Thomas and Cordelia are as noble as they are."

"They never complain," said John Gross. "I know they are not making a penny farming, but they are getting a fair income from the boarders, I think. It seems too bad that they work so hard for nothing. Mr. Parker is hard to get along with and they are handicapped in every way."

"They are going back to town this fall," said Emily. "As soon as the crops are harvested they will be back in their old places. Cordelia doesn't want her uncle to know they are going, for fear he would want them to come and live with him, and I don't blame her."

The hot prespiring summer was followed by a most wonderful autumn, and when the college students packed their belongings and went back to school in September Cordelia felt that she would need at least a month to rest and sort the neighbor's belongings before going back to town. The thought that she and her brother each had one hundred dollars to their credit, and that their old places were open for them helped her wonderfully, but she felt that the greatest luxury in life was simply to lie in bed late in the morning and go back to bed at dusk at night.

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

Sweetest Things

The sweetest flowers are the flowers that bloom
In the busy haunts of life;
That fill the air with their sweet perfume
In the midst of the toil and strife.

The sweetest songs are the songs we sing
In the ceaseless rounds of care,
Where sad hearts thrill with the cheer they bring
To the weary toilers there.

The sweetest joy is the joy to give
Of the best our lives afford,
And just to trust each day we live
In the fullness of the Lord.

—Edith Virginia Bradt.

The Girl Who Wasn't Smart.

BY DELLA DIMMITT.

A public playground is a very democratic place. You don't have to wait for introductions there and if you show a friendly spirit you're "in it" as much as anybody. I had talked for half an hour with the freckle-face Irish girl embroidering the pillow cover before I even knew she was Maggie O'Toole.

She didn't get on very fast with the pillow cover. She had to stop too often to see that Billy kept his trousers rolled up so he wouldn't get wet wading too far in the pool. Billy did get wet, after all, but it wasn't Maggie's fault.

"Billy your little brother?" I inquired politely.

"O, no," she said. "John, he's my brother. That's him—that big boy over there with one gallus and all them freckles just like me. He's a good boy but he needs watchin' to keep him out of mischief. I have to do a good deal of watchin' on John. Ma won't ever let him come down here without I'm along."

"Now, John," she commanded loudly out into the pool, "don't let Billy slip no more. He's a little fellow, he is. Ketch holt of him hard, John!"

"Billy," she lowered her voice to tell me, "lives in the house betwixt us and the store. The baby fell off the porch this mornin' and busted his head. O, no, not clean open—just kind o' busted like—a little on one side. He's all right, but Billy's ma thought she'd ort to take him to the hospital, so I'm tendin' Billy fur her."

By this time Billy had waded out of the pool and up to Maggie, the strap of his faded blue rompers needing adjustment.

"He's a nice little kid," she went on placidly, "only he will fight, and his ma tells me I must break him of it. If I was his ma it seems to me I'd break him myself, wouldn't you?"

"My brothers don't fight—no ma'am—they don't. O, I've got two. One of 'em is John—that's him with all them freckles."

"John, come here and get Billy," she called across the water again. And John obligingly waded back. The freckles on John were a good many, but his smile covered them in my eyes and the way he led Billy back showed him a true brother of man.

"John, he's smart," went on Maggie, "if he is freckled. He's two years younger'n me and two years ahead of me in school. Henry, that's my oldest brother, he's awfully smart. He graduated to the high school when he was only sixteen. He's workin' now, learnin' to be a bricklayer like pa."

"I aint smart," she confessed low-spiritedly. "I couldn't talk none till I was a great big girl, and then I couldn't say my words very plain."

"Well, you talk all right now," I reassured her.

"O, yes," she said, "pa made me say my words over and over and over again till I said 'em right; but then I'll never be smart like John or like Henry, neither," and she sighed.

"How old are you, Maggie?" I inquired.

"I'm eleven." The admission of her tremendous antiquity came with quite a shame-faced air.

"Eleven!" I burst out laughing. "Only eleven and here you are taking care of Billy and trying to make a man out of him when his own mother won't or can't. And you're keeping John out of mischief, and beside all that, you are working this beautiful pillow cover for your mother. And you're only eleven!"

"You tell your father when you go home to-night—and your mother—yes! and Henry and John—tell 'em all—take it straight from me—that you are the smartest one in the bunch!"

Maggie lifted up wondering eyes.

"But I just can't do 'rithmetic," she said.

But you can do philanthropy, Maggie. And that's a million times harder than 'rithmetic and it's ten million times better."

"What's that? 'Lantha—'?" said Maggie—"spell it for me!"

The Chain Prayer Again

Anonymous letters of any kind are improper and objectionable, but prayer chains seem especially obnoxious and improper. They cultivate an idea of prayer that is entirely foreign to the spirit of Christianity, and the threat they usually contain against those who break the chain is calculated to inspire fear rather than the spirit of confidence, joy and peace with which those who seek the presence of God should approach Him. Prayer chains have neither been commanded by the Word of God, nor is there any assurance that they will be answered.

The whole idea smacks of superstition and ignorance, and it is difficult to understand what useful purpose is to be served by copying things like this: "O Lord, I implore Thee to bless all mankind. Bring us to Thee, keep me to dwell in Thee" nine times and send it to as many friends in nine days, so that "some good thing" will happen on the ninth day. If the object is that of inducing persons to pray who might probably not pray otherwise, or to encourage a religious spirit in irreligious persons, it is a very foolish and unscriptural way of doing it, for no intelligent person has ever learned to pray or been helped to become religious by such a method. The only thing such a letter might do is to encourage superstition in weak and morbid minds and give the unbeliever into whose hands it may fall a cause for scoffing and contempt. And no matter how good the intention in mailing such letters may be, the end never justifies an objectionable means.

The prayer chain should be discouraged in every way; the best thing to do with them is to consign them to the flames at once. They threaten, they promise without the weight of authority; they are harmful to the true faith, which is founded entirely upon God's Word; they deny the true conception of prayer, which is that of a heart-to-heart conversation with God upon definite and vital matters, rather than vague and meaningless petitions uttered in the spirit of superstition. It is a mystery how persons who think clearly in other matters can fall a victim to the prayer chain.

All Meant for Our Making.

There is a purpose in circumstance. Nothing in our lives is for naught. All things which have been given us—even our chains—are meant for our making—meant for the working out of our goodly destiny.

Bunyan in prison, apparently cursed by sunless hours of solitude and loneliness, was a greater Bunyan than if he had been free to roam a field, writes Richard Wightman in the The Metropolitan Magazine. The walls which shut his body in could not confine his soul; it escaped them and went out into all the world to lift to higher levels the hope and vision of mankind.

The log cabin in which Lincoln was born lent its ruggedness and simplicity to the man himself, and has become a shrine which men approach with reverent feet as to some holy place which love and truth have glorified.

The hard lot is ever the school in which greatness is taught, and the best scholars are those who perceive the purpose of difficulty and do not grow bitter as they grapple with it. The very genius of progressive living consists in a capacity to appreciate the day and what the day holds; to find in all seasons and events a divine conspiracy to refine the soul and make it a greater soul; to hail hardship with grim gladness and bless the hills which must be climbed; to look with kindly eyes upon every human thing; to accept with complacency the small circle of opportunity until it has been shown that we are worthy to move into a wider one. Along no other path may we come to our best and largest estate of being and serving.

Denominational

We Want to Hear from You

It is an important part of the work of the Evangelical Herald to try to give its readers as much as possible of the important and interesting things which the nearly 1,500 Evangelical churches and the many charitable and benevolent institutions are doing. The editor is naturally unable to do this unless he has regular and reliable sources of information. With this end in view we have organized a staff of able and willing correspondents who are supposed to be on the lookout for everything in their respective territories that may be of interest to other churches and the denomination at large, especially all that makes for progress in the local church, the denomination or the kingdom of God. Each District has one or more correspondents who will be glad to get first-hand information concerning whatever may be going on in their field and to transmit it to the Herald office. They will consider it a favor if churches publishing a parish paper will put the proper correspondent on their mailing list, thus keeping him posted as to their progress and success. The amount of space that can be given to reports of this kind must be used to the best advantage in covering the whole field, hence the items should be as brief as possible, and the editor must reserve the right to select and condense wherever necessary.

The following is a revised list of the Herald correspondents in the various Districts:

Atlantic District: Rev. W. E. Bourquin, 595 E. 7th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.; Rev. H. F. Carl Haas, 16 Francis St., Annapolis, Md.

Indiana District: Rev. F. A. Meusch, 222 E. Spring St., New Albany, Ind.; Rev. A. E. Viehe, 242 Hosea St., Cincinnati, O.; Rev. Paul Press, Mt. Vernon, Ind.; Rev. W. E. Uhrland, 848 Sanders St., Indianapolis, Ind.

Iowa District: Rev. A. Haeussler, Alden, Iowa.

Michigan District: Rev. F. R. Schreiber, 352 Mt. Vernon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.; Rev. R. Niebuhr, 1761 Vinewood Ave., Detroit, Mich.

Minnesota District: Rev. Paul T. Bratzel, 219 E. 10th St., Duluth, Minn.

Missouri District: Rev. F. Rodenbeck, 106 W. 4th St., Fulton, Mo.

Nebraska District: Rev. H. Schirneker, Harvard, Neb.

Kansas District: Rev. H. Vlieth, 643 Orville Ave., Kansas City, Kas.

Ohio District: Rev. Ernst Irion, Strasburg, O.; Rev. Th. Merten, 725 Reid Ave., Lorain, O.

Pacific District: Rev. E. Arenas, 306 W. Locust St., Lodi, Cal.

Pennsylvania District: Rev. W. A. Bomhard, 210 8th St., Sharpsburg Sta., Pittsburgh, Pa.

New York District: Rev. H. L. Streich, 219 Bird Ave., Buffalo, N. Y.

North Illinois District: Rev. J. A. George, 744 W. 26th St., Chicago, Ill.

South Illinois District: Rev. D. Buchmueller, Trenton, Ill.; Mr. G. E. Seybold, 7834 Plum St., New Orleans, La.

Texas District: Rev. Carl Sanger, R. R. 1, Box 153, San Antonio, Texas.

West Missouri District: Rev. H. Rieger, Higginsville, Mo.

Wisconsin District: Rev. L. R. Moessner, R. R. 5, Ft. Atkinson, Wis.

Colorado Mission District: Rev. J. J. Braun, 1114 White Ave., Grand Junction, Colo.

Washington Mission District: Rev. G. A. Freund, Gresham, Ore.

Besides the church news our readers are always interested in the way churches are seeking to solve their local problems. Perhaps it is a puzzling financial proposition that has been successfully met. Tell our readers about it and help them meet similar problems. Perhaps it's a new way of winning members for the church, or of arousing indifferent ones to their duties; every other church wants to know about things like this, because in some way or other it is a vital matter everywhere. And if you have not succeeded as you would want to, some one else may help you discover the reason if you tell the Herald about it. No names need be mentioned, the Herald is glad to serve as a medium of exchange and by doing so help others who may be looking for counsel without saying anything about it. If it's anything in church work, tell the Herald about it; to help our readers and their churches in their Sunday-school, the societies, brotherhoods or in any other department is the Herald's chief business and greatest joy.

North Illinois District Chicago

On the 6th of February the members of Gethsemane Church and their pastor, F. H. Krohne, were permitted to dedicate their new church and parsonage to the services of God. Many friends from far and near were present at the dedication services. Many pastors from Chicago and vicinity were present and expressed congratulations to the pastor and members of the Gethsemane Church in behalf of their respective congregations.

In the morning service Rev. H. S. Von Rague of Middleton, O., and Prof. A. Arlt delivered the sermons; in the afternoon Revs. J. Bollens, Alfred E. Meyer and R. B. Fiedler, and in the evening service Revs. C. A. Koenig and Jacob Pister preached God's Word.

All services were impressive and well attended. Besides the anthems rendered by the Gethsemane choir, the choirs of St. Peter's and the Nazareth Church took part in the program of the services.

The new structure (50x89) is modern and beautiful. It contains a basement, used for Sunday-school, the church proper and a ten-room parsonage. All are provided with steam heat, electric light and all modern conveniences. The church auditorium has splendid art glass windows, one representing "Christ the Good Shepherd," the other "Christ in Gethsemane." The cost of the structure, including all interior fixtures, is $20,000.00.

Thus the Gethsemane Church has a splendid opportunity to increase its membership in the future. May the work of the pastor and its members be crowned with God's blessing and success. R. B. F.

Good Samaritan Home for Aged and Infirm, St. Louis, Mo.

The annual meeting of the Board for the Good Samaritan Home for the Aged and Infirm was held on January 13th. Every member was present. All the officers were re-elected, viz.: Mr. Karl J. Doerr, president; Mr. F. H. Hohengarten, vice-president; Mr. J. H. Wibbing, secretary; Mr. Wm. G. Mueller, Treasurer; and Rev. F. H. Krafft, Reporter. The annual report read by the president proved of so much interest that the Board resolved to have it published. The report follows:

Dear Brethren:

"As it is my duty, I herewith submit to you a report of the management of the Home for the Aged and Infirm for the year just passed.

RECEIPTS.

Board and Lodging from temporary inmates	$1,965.08
Admission Fees	2,594.00
Board and Lodging from permanent inmates	468.00
Free will offerings from societies, congregations and many friends	3,458.08
Legacies	900.00
	<hr/>
	$9,385.16

DISBURSEMENTS.

Salaries	$2,331.75
Meat and Vegetables	1,170.69
Groceries	1,173.76
Light and power	296.40
Ice and coal	566.25
Baker	512.94
Milk	338.44
Medicines	90.43
Insurance	123.26
Telephone	24.25
"Wohltätigkeitsfreund"	144.25
Water tax	75.56
Sundry Expenses	1,693.03
	<hr/>
	$8,541.01

"This shows a surplus of $844.35. In the previous year our disbursements exceeded the receipts by $600. Altho the surplus of 1915 is comparatively small, we have the satisfaction of noting that the financial condition has improved somewhat. The item "Sundries" covers many special expenses, such as roofing for the building, $230.00; painting, $351.00; whitewashing, $120.00, and many minor repairs, which make up the large aggregate of $1693.03.

"The free will offerings include $1000.00 from the Men's Benevolent Society; $138.02 from the General Treasurer, and liberal contributions on part of our various church societies and the friends of our institution, far and near. Our good ladies' society also did much in the past year in order to make the lot of our old people as pleasant as possible. They furnished us with bedding and clothing, which demonstrates their great interest in our Home. We wish to express our heartfelt thanks to all our friends and patrons and especially to our two Home societies for their energetic activity for our welfare. We hope and trust that a great many men and women may join these societies in the new year, as their work means a permanent source of income to us.

"We also wish to remember gratefully those whose deceased relatives have favored us in their last will and testament. Such legacies assist us greatly in taking care of our running expenses.

"We also owe thanks to the various ministers who were kind enough to hold services in our chapel in the past year. Our old people gladly attend such services as the sermons are a source of strength in their hope for eternal life. We must also remember our Home physician, Dr. F. C. Esselbruegge, who cares for the physical welfare of our inmates without accepting any remuneration. Our matron, Sister Alwina Scheid, has filled the position in a most efficient manner, and has endeared herself to every one in the Home, who all respect and love her. May God bless her and assist her further in her work. We owe special thanks to the Deaconess Home whose Board was kind enough to place the services of this sister at our disposal.

"During the past year we admitted seventeen persons to our Home, six men and eleven women; eleven of these came to remain here for the rest of their days, and the others for a temporary stay. Grim death removed four of our old friends from our midst, Mrs. A. Kaltenbach, Mrs. E. Kuhl, Mrs. J. Schaper and Mr. H. Tuegel.

"Our present roll shows an increase of eleven over last year, and includes twenty-seven women and twenty-six men. Our staff, in addition to an assistant to the matron, consists of three servant girls, a cook and a fireman. Our entire family, including the matron and all employees, therefore numbers sixty persons. The average age of the inmates is seventy-five years. The Board has as yet been unable to dispose of the old building.

"At the close of a year thoughts of many kinds enter our minds. What will the new year bring us? What will be the results of our efforts in the field of charity in the days to come? After due consideration the Board has decided to purchase a new site in the coming year, which is the first step towards the erection of a larger and more suitable Home. Our space is all occupied, every bed is taken, and still we are called upon for assistance every day in the year. Naturally our inability to provide for new applicants is of great concern to the Board, and it has therefore come to the conclusion that now is the time to act, as there is not sufficient room to care for those who were unable to provide sufficiently for their old age during the time they were able to work. We should therefore endeavor to solve the problem how to provide for the most urgent cases and how to help the most worthy poor. This project recalls the time when the sainted Rev. L. Nollau called such men as Adolphus Meyer, Francis Whittaker, Friedrich Bolte and Francis Hackmeier to assist him in founding our present Home. At that time this was a great undertaking, but these men overcame all difficulties, and their convictions, courage and overwhelming faith in the Lord was crowned with success. May the same spirit which prompted those men lead us also. The Board does not consider this matter lightly, for it will take undivided activity and great love for the cause to begin the project as planned and to complete it; for it will take a large sum of money to carry it to completion. But our plans may be fulfilled if we pray: "Lord, let us not falter, give us steadfastness, and I will thank Thee eternally."

"Dear friends, wherever you may be, we ask for your support. Help us to erect a new Home for our Aged and Infirm so that we may provide for them on a larger scale than heretofore. With your help the Board will be able to begin the work and under the

Continued on Page 8

Picked up by the Way

Interesting Items Gleaned from Many Sources

American-made Bibles are reported as now the "best sellers" among all books. It is estimated that the year now closing will show an increase of fifty per cent in the sale of our Bibles over the best previous year's record. The war has interfered with the printing of Bibles in the countries affected, hence the demand for the American product.

A man who was making an address before some Sunday-school children, the "Christian Register" says, had occasion to use the word "epitome." Realizing that the word might need explanation to his young audience, he simplified the matter by saying that "epitome" meant "an abbreviated synopsis!"

Automobile racing men expect a speed of two miles a minute to be attained in the near future. A new world's short-distance track record was made recently which approximated this speed. A two-mile lap was made in 1 minute and a trifle over two seconds—an average of 115.67 miles an hour.

The largest apartment in New York City is planned for a new apartment-house to be erected on the corner of Fifth Avenue and Seventy-second street. It will consist of twenty-eight rooms and eight baths, and has already been leased for $30,000 a year rent, tho it will not be ready for occupancy till next fall.

Among the bits of Irish humor recorded in "National Humor" is the story of a Dublin cabman who had driven a large man a long distance and was then offered the legal fare, sixpence. Politely deferring the acceptance of the coin for a moment, cabby carefully put his lap-robe over the horse's head, completely covering his eyes. The astonished "fare" asked what he was doing that for? "Just to kape the dacint baste from seeing what a big load he had dragged all this way for a sixpence," was the reply. The big customer, we are told, saw the point and suitably responded to the cabman's good-natured thrust.

In a recently published book a foot-note states that Nelson's celebrated message, "England expects every man to do his duty," was praised by the famous admiral as "Nelson expetes," etc., and that one of his officers suggested the change of the first word to "England." Nelson's greatness was evident in his immediate acceptance of the change; a smaller man would have felt insulted at the proposed elimination of his own name.

Hitting off the high price of eggs—50 and 60 cents a dozen for "near-by fresh eggs" in the New York market (and 72 cents for "glit-edge Leghorn" eggs, at retail), as against 40 to 55 cents last year—a cartoonist in an agricultural paper makes a policeman say, as he holds up and questions a suspicious-looking individual who is displaying his possessions, "I'll take yer word for the watch and the sparklers, but where did ye get that egg!"

"In every city in the United States where there are more than twenty Albanians there is an Albanian Club. . . . They hold no dances in these clubs. Many of them serve as evening schools. Their purpose is: Liberty, Fraternity, Justice." So says the "Albanian Era," which, strangely enough, is published in Denver, Colorado, and is edited by John Adams. It states that there are 40,000 Albanians, mostly young men, in this country. "They are convinced that they have now no friends in Europe and solicit earnestly the friendship of the United States."

The municipal asphalt plant of New York has "made good," according to its superintendent's report for the first year's operation. Nearly 300,000 square yards of sheet asphalt were laid, at an approximate cost of one dollar per yard. Former contract prices for this work were about fifty per cent higher. Thus a saving of $140,000 was effected in one year. With some of the money saved, motor vehicles were bought, with a further saving in money and efficiency.

New Orleans is said to be now a ratless city, as a result of fifteen months' work following the appearance of a few cases of bubonic plague. Rats, which carry this plague, were practically exterminated within the city, a force of 600 rat-catchers being employed, who on a single day caught 1,708 of the plague-carriers. In addition, docks and buildings have been made rat-proof, as a preventive measure.

Practical Expressions of Protestant Christian Life in Germany Glimpses of some of the Agencies, independent of ecclesiastical control, thru which German Evangelical Christians are expressing their religious Life

DR. JOHN J. MEYER, ST. LOUIS, MO.

I.

In a series of very instructive articles the Evangelical Herald sometime ago has given us some glimpses of the development of Protestantism in Germany in the nineteenth century. It was shown how, after the Reformation, formal orthodoxy was undermined by pietism, the practical expression of a living faith in upright conduct. The final downfall of ecclesiastical orthodoxy, however, was brought about by rationalism, this common foe of both orthodoxy and pietism. It was now a question as to whether rationalism, which boldly set aside the fundamentals of the Christian religion, should hold full sway in the Protestant theology of Germany and shape the development of the future. With Schleiermacher, the reformer of German theology, came the turning point in German religious thought and life. With the firm conviction that religion, culture and morality must be renewed thru faith, if Germany was to arise to a new life, he became the spiritual leader against the destructive influences of the time, opening a new path for scientific and practical theology in Germany. Special mention was also made of J. T. Beck, who, with his motto, "The Scriptures interpret Scripture" stood for the unhindered unfolding of the Word of God as a power from on high in the human soul. And finally we saw Hofmann, of Erlangen, go a step farther by basing his system on the idea of historical development. We then were given an account of practical Christianity in Protestant Germany as demonstrated by the foreign and home or rather Inner Mission work. The nineteenth century marks a period of wonderful unfolding of Christian life and thought in Germany, impressing us with the far-reaching importance of Germany's contribution to the modern idea of Christian culture.

In a note by the Editor our attention was called to the meaning of the German term "Innere Mission" which includes far more than the expression "home mission work," as it is used in this country. By this term is not meant only a system of church expansion, but a thoroughgoing and comprehensive system of rescue, evangelistic, missionary, institutional and social service activity of all kinds.

A Diversity of Independent Religious Forces

This activity is supported and directed not by the official churches of Germany, but by societies whose representatives are in touch with all the different Churches of modern Germany. For Evangelical Germany represents a stately number of churches, like that of Prussia with its twelve provinces, the three kingdoms of Bavaria, Saxony and Wuertemberg with their respective churches, six Grandduchies, five Duchies, seven principalities, the Hanseatic cities of Lubeck, Bremen and Hamburg, and the province of Alsace-Lorraine with their churches and church organizations, and in addition to these a number of Lutheran and Reformed Free Churches, and the United Brethren or "Herrnhuter," as they are called in Germany. It is obvious that all these churches, tho one in spirit, have their local and historic peculiarities, so that the far-reaching activity of the Inner Mission cannot be organized and directed by the official church, but must needs be handled in Christian unity by private organizations, closely related to the different provincial churches and to local needs and conditions which call for special work.

One of the greatest societies is the Gustav-Adolf-Verein, (Gustavus Adolphus Association), founded in 1834 in Leipsic and in 1843 consolidated with a similar movement which had sprung up in Basel and Darmstadt. It then was called "Evangelischer Verein der Gustav Adolf Stiftung" (Evangelical Association of the Gustavus Adolphus Foundation). Its aim and purpose is to give aid and support to Protestant families and congregations wherever needed, especially to succor the churches of the diaspora, i. e., Protestant churches suffering from oppression or persecution in non-Protestant countries. Since the second convention at Frankfurt the association has developed rapidly. Bavaria joined in 1849, after she had declined to take part in the movement when it first started.

Every country, every large state and every province has a main association with branch associations. At least every third year a general convention takes place. After 1852 associations were also established in Holland, Sweden, Austria, Transylvania, Hungary, and in 1859 an association for supporting Lutheran congregations was formed in Russia. Institutions like the Evangelical Society for Protestant Germans in North America, in Barmen and Elberfeld, the Society for Pastoral Assistance in Berlin, the Rhenish Institution for Pastoral Assistance in Duisberg, the Jerusalem Association in Berlin, the Lutherischer Gotteskasten, all originated under the influence of the Gustav-Adolf-Verein. Associations in foreign countries, working in the same spirit, but having no connection with the original German association, have been established in Belgium, France, Roumania and Italy, while England, Denmark and America do not possess them. Since its organization in 1832 in Germany and Austria and other countries between twenty-five and thirty million dollars have been spent for the purposes of the Association.

The "Evangelischer Bund" (Evangelical Union) is an alliance of German Protestants for maintaining Protestant interests in Germany itself. The occasion of the formation was the aggressive policy of the papacy and the arrogance of Romanism, or Ultramontanism, the dream of which is to re-establish the political influence of Catholicism in Germany. Its founder was Professor Willibald Beyschlag in Halle, who, finding others interested, called the first meeting at Erfurt in 1886. The Union seeks to reach its aims by public lectures, by issuing literature from its headquarters in Leipsic, exposing and refuting the claims of Romanism and repelling attacks against Protestantism and especially against Luther and Gustavus Adolphus. The Bund also affords material aid to weak institutions in the "Diaspora." Last year the Bund has voted the amount of 39,000 Marks, to which amount have to be added 300,000 Marks raised by the sub-committees of the principal associations for the furtherance of the Evangelical Church in Austria. The membership is 509,119.

Denominational Tendencies

"Lutherischer Gotteskasten" (Lutheran temple treasury) is the odd name of an organization of Lutheran societies in Germany, which aim to help and support Lutherans, living abroad, in their church work. As we have remarked already, this movement sprang from the Gustav-Adolf Verein. The founders in general approved of the aim of the Gustav-Adolf Verein, but took exception to some of its ecclesiastical principles and solicited voluntary contributions to be used for the same purpose. There was much opposition to the Gustav-Adolf Verein, because it extended aid to the Reformed and so-called United Church as well as to Lutherans, and because it limited its field to localities where Roman Catholicism predominated. One of the societies, selected for five years, acts as the head and arranges for an annual conference. A special branch of the work—the administration of the Lutherstift in Königgrätz, the work in Austria, in Brazil, etc.—is assigned to each society. According to the figures of 1912, the latest data available, the receipts of the Gotteskasten Society amounted to about $30,000.

"Reformed Union for Germany" (Reformierter Bund für Deutschland) is the name of a society which grew out of the Reformed Conference of Stuttgart in 1850. On the occasion of the Zwingli Jubilee in Marburg 1884 Reformed church bodies and congregations joined the society and thus the "Reformed Union for Germany" became an accomplished fact. The Union consists of four church corporations with twenty-one congregations, ninety-four individual congregations and societies in practically all German provinces where the Reformed Church is represented. All the congregations represent a membership of 330,000 souls. The Reformed Union stands for the idea that the two Reformation Churches are a necessity to keep up a healthy and prosperous church life which can be

Concluded on Page 8

Religious News

American Bible Society Centennial

The American Bible Society has just issued the first of its bulletins announcing preparations thus far made for the celebration in many cities of the one hundredth anniversary of the Society's founding. The chief celebration is to take place in Washington, on about May 8, with President Wilson as the speaker. Here are to assemble the Bible distributing interests of the world, for not only are American Bible interests to be there, but societies of other nations are to send representatives. The second most important celebration takes place in New York, where the Society was formed, and where it has always had its headquarters. Plans are in hand to make this celebration unique in many ways.

Other celebrations are planned for more than forty cities, including Atlanta, Birmingham, New Orleans, Chicago, Detroit, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, Los Angeles, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Seattle and Nashville. Committees have been named by all principal religious bodies, and there is to be issued a history of the Society in popular form. A call has gone to all churches asking that Sunday, May 7, be observed as a universal Bible celebration day.

The Society has circulated during its century 115,000,000 copies of the Scriptures, and with the British and Foreign Bible Society, and perhaps one or two other smaller societies, has led in the Bible translations for the peoples of all the world. A great function of these Bible societies is not only the translations, but also the furnishing of Bibles and Testaments for the use of missionaries in many fields. For the celebration of one hundred years of this great work exercises for services by Sunday-schools and others are being arranged. The American Society spent in ninety years over $38,000,000.

Church Federation in St. Louis

Perhaps nowhere else in the United States has the spirit of practical co-operation between the churches of the various denominations made steadier and more effective progress than in St. Louis, where the organization of the local Church Federation is entering its fifth year. The reports from the officers and standing committees are to the effect that the closer affiliation and companionship has brought a deeper consciousness of the essential unity of the Protestant congregations of the city. The people in the churches have learned to think less of the "sectarian differences" and more of the "federated unity" of the churches. As a result of this the problems of the city have been studied from a new view-point and their solution has been undertaken with a new determination. The unchurched multitudes, the congested districts, the problems of vice, poverty, sorrow and despair have been brought to the attention and to the heart of the ministry and the churches as never before, and the meaning of community responsibility is being generally realized for the first time. Many cases of church location have been amicably adjusted between the denominations thru the co-operation of the Federation, thus avoiding the unwise use of thousands of dollars. A study of the "down-town" section is proceeding, so that definite areas of responsibility may be established. Thru the Federation the constituent churches are performing a definite part in city-wide movements for civic betterment, and the Federation renders many valuable services to the churches that no other agency could offer, by studying local fields, preparing maps and surveys, supplying information and stimulating co-operation. To meet the need of trained teachers and officers in the Sunday-school a training school for Sunday-school workers, now in its third year, is being conducted for 240 teachers and officers. National experts declare it the equal, if not the best of any community training school in the country. Thru the capable and tirelessly faithful services of their representative in the Juvenile Court, the Rev. Howard Billman, the churches are expressing their love and reaching out a helping hand to hundreds of erring, homeless, friendless boys and girls and their parents. Last summer, at five street meetings every night in the week for twenty-two weeks, under the auspices of the Church Federation, 60,000 of the city's men and women, who could probably not have been induced to enter a church building, heard the Church's platform of social justice and Christian love, of sin, of repentance, of a crucified Christ, and of redemption. Twelve shop meetings conducted every week thruout the year by devoted and earnest pastors have succeeded in turning a very large proportion of the workingman's suspicion, indifference and antagonism to the Church into respect and friendship. A direct result of this has been conversions, increased church attendance by workingmen and their families, and new church memberships. The Big Brother Movement is being earnestly promoted with a view of employing the manhood of the churches in the task of cultivating Christian character in the neglected and delinquent boys of the community. Negotiations under way indicate that six other lines of work, the responsibility for which plainly rests upon the Protestant churches of the city, may be added to the present program.

The budget for maintaining the Federation amounts to about $7,500 annually, exclusive of the extension work (shop meetings, street meetings, Juvenile Court work and Big Brother Movement, and other lines of work to be taken up in the future). According to the plan devised under the inspiration of the persistent efforts and able leadership of the executive secretary, the Rev. Clair E. Ames, the extension work is being carried on thru the Federation office without separate overhead charges, thus enabling those interested in the various lines of work to undertake and support these tasks directly, without extra expense, but with the advantage of having back of them the Protestant churches of the city, and of being allied with all the other strong federated movements fostered and promoted by the Church Federation. The work of the St. Louis Federation is being watched with great interest by interested persons and organizations in many parts of the country.

The Panama Congress

The Panama Congress, attended by 275 leaders in Protestant Church work from North America and almost all Latin America, being now over and most of the delegates returned to their homes, the future work is placed in hands of Committees of Co-operation, which is to have two divisions. One of these, already organized is that of the Churches of North America, the other of Churches in England, Scotland and Holland. The North American section has been organized into five departments: 1. On fields, to prevent overlapping and overlooking, with E. T. Colton, who is at the head of the foreign work of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A., as chairman. 2. On Education, President Henry Churchill King, of Oberlin University, chairman; 3. On Literature, for which there is reported to be a great need, the Rev. Dr. L. C. Barnes, one of the secretaries of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, chairman; 4. On the Churches in North America, to secure their interest and co-operation, S. Earl Taylor, secretary of the Methodist Foreign Board, chairman, and 5. On finance, Eben E. Olcott of New York, president of the Albany Day Line, and the foremost leader of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, chairman.

It is stated that the work of the entire committee, fifty members in all, is to stimulate the work of existing agencies, not to duplicate it. It is, in short, a co-operative and efficiency board. The finance committee has already adopted a budget of $12,000 a year and is said to have secured it in part. It is to support the secretary, the Rev. S. G. Inman, who comes from one of the Disciples of Christ mission boards, and to pay the expenses of the work of the various departments.

Concerning the complications brought in by the Episcopal Church missionary society, in advance of the meeting of the Congress, it is stated that nothing done at Panama changes the situation in the slightest respect. The Committee on Co-operation, appointed by the Congress, is prohibited from taking any steps save as such steps are ordered by the respective mission boards. This action throws the matters in dispute back into the Episcopal society, in so far as that Church is concerned. All department chairmen of the North American division of the Committee, and Dr. Robert E. Speer, the Committee's chairman, belong to bodies other than the Episcopal. Yet this is said to have been done at their request. The belief is expressed that the way has been paved for Episcopal Church co-operation, without further friction in the missionary councils of that Church.

Propositions endorsed by the Congress, and now to come before the various Protestant missionary boards in this country, include the founding of the lectureships, and also the founding of three Christian universities, the last named a plan long advocated by Wm. J. Bryan. The Congress thought that one of these universities ought to be in Rio, a concession to the Portuguese; a second in Spanish South America, and the third in Spanish North America, either in Havana or the City of Mexico. The Congress expressed the hope that the American and the British and Foreign Bible Societies will divide Latin America and serve all of it. It favored the higher education of women, as well as men, the founding of central publishing plants for Christian literature, and the evangelization of students in existing Latin American universities.

Returned delegates are of the opinion that the character of the Congress, and of the men who attended it from North America, were such as favorably impress the Panamans. The President of Panama attended some sessions, but did not give the address of welcome, as had been arranged. His representative, Senor Ernesto Lofevere, the Panaman Foreign Minister, who delivered the welcoming address, while confessing himself a sincere and devout Catholic, nevertheless recognized the lofty and comprehensive purpose of the Congress. Whenever the Roman Catholic Church was mentioned in reports or referred to in the debates the reference was invariably courteous. Some of the delegates from the fields in South America regretted such attitude, but deferred the judgment of the leaders from the supporting missionary societies.

Cathedral warnings had been uttered, and ex-cathedral anathema had been published against the congress of "mercenary invasion," but no attention was given to these epithets in the meetings. The atmosphere in official Roman Catholic circles was anything but friendly, and this fact states the deepest problem that the evangelization of Latin America offers to American Christianity.

Thirty leading members of the Congress, under the chairmanship of the Rev. Dr. A. Woodruff Halsey of the Presbyterian Foreign Board are conducting during this month regional conferences thruout South America. These are in Lima, Peru; Santiago, Chile; Rio, Brazil; Havana, Cuba; and San Juan, Porto Rico, and next fall when conditions are expected to be more settled than now, a conference on work in Mexico in the City of Mexico.

Fear is expressed that the European section of the Committee on Co-operation may not be able to organize until after the war, altho it is known that existing missionary work supported from Europe has not been allowed to suffer from lack of support. All delegates returning from Panama report themselves delighted with the treatment accorded them by the Panama Republic, and freely declare that a new era in missionary work of the world has been opened.

The principal missionary societies have already perfected plans for new and enlarged work in Latin America. The American Board, representing Congregationalists, and the Baptist Foreign Board, neither having work now in South America, will take up work. The first named will enlarge some work it has in Mexico and take up new work in South America. Disciples of Christ will enlarge work they already have in the West Indies, and the Methodist Foreign Society, already with large enterprises in the Argentine, Chile and Brazil will confine their activities to those countries, but strengthen them. Presbyterians north and south have combined and will take the southern part of Mexico, working there with the agreement that they are not to be entrenched upon by other Protestant agencies. The Reformed Church has no work in Latin America at this time, but will inaugurate some.

For the present, until conditions seem to be more favorable for the establishment of a publishing house, printing will be done under direction of the various missionary societies. One plan is to commission experts, college professors wherever their release can be secured, into Latin America to study conditions not of education alone but on all lines, and report back to the permanent Latin American committee and also to American Missionary societies. It is declared that everything of efficient management and co-operation that can be devised will be employed in the new religious work for this vast Latin region.

Stenographic reports of the proceedings were made and will be printed, together with the revised reports of the commissioners, in three volumes. A story of the Congress, by Professor Harlan P. Beach of Yale in one volume will also be printed, and both works may be secured thru the Missionary Education Movement, 156 5th Ave., New York.

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

Apr. 2, 1916. Laetare, fourth Sunday in Lent

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

CONSECRATED TIME

M. Mar. 27. Youthful days. Eccl. 12: 1-7.
T. Mar. 28. Consecrated Days. Eph. 5: 14-21.
W. Mar. 29. A motto for every day. 1 Sam. 21: 8.
T. Mar. 30. A consecrated day. Mar. 11: 1-11.
F. Mar. 31. Time well used. John 9: 1-7.
S. Apr. 1. Prayer-time. Acts 10: 1-8.
Sun., Apr. 2. Topic:—The Consecration of Time.
Ps. 90: 1-17. (Consecration Meeting.)

Suggestions to the Leader

Bring to the meeting the different mechanisms used by men to measure time, a clock, hour glass, picture of a sun dial, water-wheel, etc. All these present time as something that is fleeting, running away from us, as it were. As a matter of fact it is not time that is fleeting but we ourselves. We speak of the sun rising and setting, but we now know that the sun is stationary, a fixed star of the greatest magnitude as far as the earth is concerned, and that the earth is revolving around her axis every twenty-four hours, the time required for one revolution having been divided into twenty-four periods of equal length. Similarly it is not time that is fleeting, but we ourselves are withering away. Time is therefore measured by our passing thru life, and is not a token or sign of time, but life itself.

Bring out the thought, that because time marks our passing, therefore it is essential that we use every God-given opportunity. He who kills time is a murderer.

The Topic Presented

The 90th Psalm is a prayer by Moses, the man of God. In the psalm Moses contrasts the transitoriness of man with the eternity of God. Time is not a passing of moments but a giving of life. In God's sight there can be no time, because there life is complete. But in our finite and imperfect state in which growth and development are the natural process, there life is in the process of becoming, and that process we call time. Because time in God's eyes is the opportunity for growth into the likeness and being of God, therefore every moment is important, for every moment marks a new growth, a new being.

1. Therefore use every moment right. We dare not trifle with eternity. It behooves us to make every effort within our power to grow from day to day into the perfect life, the image of God.

2. Have a definite plan. We dare not waste nor kill time. What we call time is an opportunity for development. To waste or kill time means that we are deliberately shutting off the opportunity for complete development. The imperfect, underdeveloped man is he who has wasted his opportunity. From his hands God will demand an accounting for the unused opportunities. This does not mean that every moment is to be considered in its most serious aspect. Jesus took time to rest and converse, to sleep and to pray, to dine and indulge in social fellowship. But these were moments of reaction in which He gathered strength for greater efforts. He never lost a minute, every moment counted for something definite that He was planning for the future.

3. Put first things first. What do you consider the most important things in life? What is that one thing needful? Is it moneymaking? Is it pleasure? Is it intellectual development? Is it art, science, or any of the thousand things that help fill our life? Is not the most important thing the perfect development of the inner life into the image of Jesus Christ? Those things that make such development impossible ought to be avoided, but those things which help bring out the divine ought to be practised. That is what consecration of time means, the setting aside of our given opportunities for the perfection of the inner man, the real Christian character and personality that puts God's things first.

4. Consider time a God-given opportunity.

1. To live, which word implies all that helps make life worth while.
2. To grow. Growth is expressive of the outward forms life may assume, and corresponds and includes the inner development, that conformity to the divine ideals.
3. To mature. Some day the pattern will be completed, and the picture will be done. What will your pattern be like? There will be many broken threads, but if we have permitted God to plan the pattern, and if we have but obeyed the directions, then the pattern will be an expression of the divine likeness given to the world in its most perfect form in the life of Jesus Christ.

In conclusion let us pray the last verse of the 90. Psalm: Let the favor of the Lord our God be upon us; and establish Thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish Thou it.

Some Questions on the Topic

What is a wise division of your time?
Why is living by plan an effective living?
What part of our time should be given daily to prayer and reading God's word?
How can we make use of fragments of time?
The moments spent on the street cars, waiting for others, etc.?
Why is he who is late meeting engagements a thief?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Gen. 1: 1, 14; Ex. 14: 24; 1 Sam. 11: 11; Matt. 14: 25; 2 Pet. 3: 8; Gal. 4: 4; Eph. 1: 10; Job 26: 10; Rev. 10: 6.

A Prayer

Help us to remember, O Lord, that time is but the passing of ourselves thru this world. Thou Lord hast been in all generations, Thou art from everlasting to everlasting. Help us to use our time wisely, that within us may develop the perfect life, that alone determines our fitness to dwell with Thee. May we guard carefully and sacredly these opportunities for inner growth, utilizing every fragment of time, every moment as Thou hast planned it for us.

With Thee, O Christ, we would walk thru life, taking heed of the one thing needful, to grow into Thy perfect being. And when the pattern of our life is completed, then take us unto Thyself, where time shall be no more, where perfect delight shall be given us, thru our dwelling with Thee in glory everlasting. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson Material for the second year: New Testament Studies—the Messianic and the Apostolic Eras.

Second Quarter

Apr. 2. The Faith of the Syrophenician Woman. Matt. 15: 21-28.
Apr. 9. Challenging Jesus. Matt. 15: 39-16: 12.
Apr. 16. What Think Ye of Christ? Matt. 16: 13-20.
Apr. 23. Jesus Transfigured. Matt. 17: 1-13; 2 Peter 1: 16-18.
Apr. 30. Entering the Kingdom. Matt. 18: 1-20.
May 7. Jesus and the Seventh Commandment. John 7: 53-8: 11.
May 14. The Light of the World. John 8: 12-20.
May 21. The Seventy Sent Forth. Luke 10: 1-24.
May 28. The Problem of Suffering. John 9: 1-12.
June 4. Praying in Jesus' Name. Luke 11: 1-13.
June 11. Raised from the Dead. John 11: 20-44.
June 18. The Coming of the Kingdom. Luke 17: 20-37.

Optional Lessons

Easter Lesson—The Glory of the Resurrection. 1 Cor. 15: 1-28.
Pentecost Lesson—The Power of Pentecost. Acts 2: 14-38.

Lesson 1. The Faith of the Syrophenician Woman
M. Mar. 27. Matt. 28: 18-20. John 4: 35, 36. The Great Commission.

T. Mar. 28. Psa. 22: 22-31. Jehovah the Ruler of the Nations.
W. Mar. 29. Isa. 11: 1-10. A Kingdom of Peace.
T. Mar. 30. Matt. 15: 21-28. The Faith of the Syrophenician Woman.
F. Mar. 31. Matt. 8: 5-13. The Centurion's Glory.

S. Apr. 1. Mark 7: 31-37. The Gentiles Healed.
S. Apr. 2. Rev. 21: 1-8. Jesus' Rule Established.

Lesson Key:—"And Peter opened his mouth and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to Him, Acts 10: 34, 35.

Altho Jesus, as the Messiah, had been especially promised to the Jewish nation; altho He himself said to the Samaritan woman, "Salvation is from the Jews," John 4: 22, and to the Syrophenician woman,

"I was not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel," Matt. 15: 24, the Scriptures are quite clear in proclaiming the universal meaning of His ministry. The very first definite promise of the coming of the King out of Judah, Gen. 49: 10, also promises that unto Him shall be the obedience of the peoples, i. e., all the nations of the earth; Isaiah, 60: 3, tells how the nations shall come to the light of Israel, and kings to the brightness of His rising, and the very fact that Jesus is conversing with the Samaritan and the Syrophenician woman indicates that He by no means restricted His message to His own people. In the latter case the manner in which Jesus ignores racial lines is especially evident when we note the mixture of national traits which the woman represents. She was a descendant of the Canaanites, Matt. 15: 22, of the Syrophenician race, and she spoke the Greek language, Mark 7: 26. She stood before the Master, as it were, as a representative of the great heathen world, a type of all nations, races and languages. When Jesus tells her, "I was not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel," and, "It is not meet to take the children's bread and cast it to the dogs," it is not His intention to exclude her from the benefits and blessings of His salvation, but to test her faith in His mercy and in His power to help her.

The world-significance of Jesus' message, which was evident, altho not emphasized, in the public ministry among His people, is made, in the farewell speeches, the supreme issue which the disciples are to carry out to all the nations of the earth. When Jesus says to His disciples, "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations," Matt. 28: 19, and "ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth," He calls attention to the great world-need of redemption from sin, Satan and death, and to the world-wide sufficiency and inclusiveness of God's plan of salvation. God is not merely a Jewish national deity who thinks and acts only for the people of His chosen race or nation; He is the Creator of the world and the universe, whose paternal Providence preserves and governs all things. And in His infinite and perfect wisdom He has made His plan of redemption so far-reaching and inclusive that forgiveness of sins is offered thru Christ to all mankind, so that every person of every time can and may have part therein. And in accordance with this universal plan of salvation the Christian Church is a universal Church, in which every sinner of all nations and times may find just what he most needs for his spiritual life.

The missionary activity of the Church represents the efforts of Jesus' disciples to fulfill the world-wide mission of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Being in line with the eternal purposes of Almighty God this missionary activity is not something that can be ignored or emphasized at pleasure, but a duty, a responsibility, an obligation. The individual Christian who is indifferent to the world-wide significance of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, or who wilfully neglects it, is unfaithful to the duty he owes his Saviour and Lord. And the congregation or church body that does not assume its share of the obligation or carry out its part of the task is disobedient to the most important and far-reaching call of the Church's Head and Founder. The people who do not "believe in" missions, and who do not support missionary work, are, strictly speaking, not Christians at all, because they disbelieve in and neglect an essential phase of the work which their professed Lord and Master has established and which He commands them, as His witnesses, to promote.

This lesson affords a splendid opportunity for calling attention to our own missionary work both in the home and foreign field. It will be interesting to point out how our Church came by its mission field in India; describe the people among whom our missionaries in India or the far west are working; to name the men and women now on the field; the institutions of different kinds that help in bringing the Gospel to the benighted dwellers of India, and how much money is needed annually to keep the work going. Our missionary literature, such as "Come over and help us," "Our Work," the report of the Boards for Home and Foreign Mission work in the Year Book, or the articles appearing regularly in this paper or the Evangelical Tidings, should be familiar, or made so, to all church members, young and old.

Denominational

Continued from Page 4

guidance of our merciful Father they will finish it. In closing I wish to thank the brethren for their valuable assistance and want to express the hope that the work in our beloved institution will continue in the coming year in a greater measure than ever before.

Respectfully,

Karl J. Doerr, President."

A Home for the Cure of Souls

REV. G. H. FREUND, GRESHAM, ORE.

High up on a beautiful plateau in the foot-hills of the Cascade mountains about thirty-five miles east of Portland, there is a tract of sixty acres which is of more than ordinary interest. The land is as yet only partially cleared, but it is rapidly being turned into a well equipped farm with an ideal country home.

The purpose of this farm is a benevolent one. It is not to make money, but to remake men who have lost out in the battle of life. To rescue them from the grind of the busy world where they have met defeat, and in the shelter of a congenial environment, give them a chance to find out why they have failed, and encourage them to tackle the tasks of living with a new purpose and the hope of success.

In the humdrum of a great city we see the sad spectacle of how the wreckage of human lives is tossed up by the relentless waves of circumstance. Christian love brings spiritual comfort to the bruised souls and physical help to the wasted bodies. But the environment is bad and the temptation too great, and over and over again we see man after man slip back into the old slough and end up at the rockpile, or in the jail, or—in the river.

Here up in the mountain home they are away from the old temptations; and they have pure air, pure water, wholesome food, and a chance to do honest work. There is no suggestion of charity about it, as everyone earns his living, and has time left for reading, for games and other social and religious exercises. Self-respect is regained and a new vision of life enters into the man's soul. When he again goes out into the world, it is with a new purpose and a new hope.

The institution is not quite a year old, but eighteen men have already graduated and have come down from that mountain home with a new light in their eyes.

The farm is owned and controlled by the First Presbyterian Church of Portland. It appeals to me as being a step in the right direction, and if emulated by other benevolent societies would do much toward solving the social question of to-day.

F. H. Freund.

The Twenty-seventh Annual Meeting of the St. Louis Deaconess Association was held on Jan. 16 in St. James Church, of that city. The speakers were the Revs. G. Bode (German) and Otto Press (English). An especially happy feature of the occasion was that Miss Charlotte Kiel of St. James Church, who had heard and heeded the call to the deaconess work, was ready to enter the ministry of mercy, and took up her duties at the Deaconess Home immediately after the services.

The report of the president at the annual business meeting on the Thursday following contained the following points of general interest: Last year there were fifty-two deaconesses in service at the Home; this year the number is sixty, six of whom are from other bodies and are with us for training purposes only. With the aid of our superintendent and sister superior the Henrietta hospital at East St. Louis has been reorganized into a regular Deaconess Home and Hospital. One June 30th two of our sisters were turned over to this institution and under their guidance the work there has greatly prospered.

During 1915 1,900 patients passed thru the Deaconess Hospital, of whom 1,483 paid in full for the services rendered; 216 St. Louis patients and 201 from outside the city were treated on the charity basis. According to their belief the patients classify themselves as follows: Evangelical 492; Methodist, 290; Roman Catholics, 276; Presbyterians, 179; Lutherans, 153; Baptists, 135; Disciples of Christ, 86; Protestant, 83; Jews, 74; Episcopal, 61; Congregational, 35; Reformed and Unitarian, eight each; without church affiliation, six; Adventists, four;

Swedenborgians, Christian Science and Quakers, three each; United Brethren and Buddhist, one each.

In October last, at the close of the fiscal year, the assets of the Association were $169,903.82, and the liabilities $10,086.07. The indebtedness amounted to $7,650.75, and consists of notes at four, three and two percent. During the past year the debt was reduced by $3,850. The Sisters' Benefit Reserve Fund amounted to $8,567.67 on Oct. 1.

RECEIPTS.

From Hospital, for nursing, bandages, medicine, etc.	$59,054.11
Membership dues	815.00
Free will offerings and bequests	2,002.99
Hospital Saturday and Sunday Ass'n.	1,857.06
Branch Homes, private nursing, etc.	2,771.63
Total	$66,500.79

EXPENDITURES

Groceries and provisions	$20,482.22
Medicine, bandages, instruments, etc.	4,332.71
Repairs, bedding, light and fuel	9,315.93
Salaries, wages and Sister's allowances	15,034.85
Water, insurance, etc.	1,354.83
Purchase of Residence, 4141 West Belle Pl... ..	3,717.53
Printing, postage and office expenses	1,422.95
Interest, traveling expenses, presents and unpaid debts	2,988.69
Total	$58,649.71

The Association voices its gratitude toward God who has prospered its work during another year, increased the force of deaconesses, protected the health of the sisters in the midst of many dangers and blessed their faithful and tireless efforts with success; it also expresses its appreciation of the able and conscientious services of the physicians which have been so generously given free of charge to the institution. The executive committee consists of Pastor J. Irion, chairman; Pastor F. Klemme, vice-chairman; Pastor G. Bode, secretary; Mr. O. G. Koenig, treasurer; Prof. S. D. Press, Mr. W. Samel, Mr. Anton Roesch, Mr. H. Poser, Mrs. E. Stifel, Mrs. F. Zimmermann, Mrs. L. Esser, Mrs. J. Hanpeter, Sister Superior Magdalen Gerhold, and Pastor F. P. Jens, superintendent and financial secretary.

Practical Expressions of Protestant Christian Life in Germany

Continued from Page 5

done best, if both work out their own peculiar features. The Reformed Union seeks to promote culture of the spiritual life and the preservation of the outward existence of the Reformed Church. The Reformed Students' Home in Halle and the Deaconess' Home in Detmold are under the control of the Union and are apparently in a prosperous condition.

A "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among Catholics" is one of the later organizations on the field of practical Christian social work. The Society is doing mission work among Catholic immigrants like Italians, Poles, Czechs and Slovaks, and aids in the distribution of the Scriptures in different languages. The work seems to increase with every year; tho there seems to be an occasional lack of funds there is apparently no relaxation in the enthusiastic efforts in behalf of the cause.

The eight German Bible societies in 1912 distributed 364,128 Bibles and 437,928 New Testaments, an astounding result of one year's work. It may be of interest to learn that one of these societies, the Wuerttemberg Privilegierte Bibelanstalt, during the first century of her existence, from 1812 to 1912, has distributed 3,090,977 Bibles, 4,243,441 New Testaments, 718,369 parts of the Bible, including biblical reading books, and 18,097 books for the blind.

A Pocket Manual of Prayer

By

WILLIAM A. PHILLIPS

90 pages

Texoderm, flexible, gilt edge

50 Cents

CONTENTS:

Part I. Pastoral Intercession.

Part II. Prayer in the Sanctuary.

Part III. Prayer in the Home.

Very Suitable for Confirmation.

In a most attractive binding.

The Evangelical Church.

PART I. THE EVANGELICAL CHURCH.

By Rev. David Brüning.

PART II. THE GERMAN EVANGELICAL SYNOD OF NORTH AMERICA.

By Rev. F. H. Graeper.

The contents of this timely booklet of forty pages are the same as those of the English tract recently published, with the addition of six full-page illustrations as follows:

1. The great Reformers, Luther, Melancthon, Zwingli and Calvin. 2. The historic log church in Gravois Settlement. 3. The Presidents of Eden Theological Seminary. 4. Eden Theological Seminary. 5. The Presidents General of the German Evangelical Synod of North America. 6. Irion Hall, Elmhurst College.

This booklet ought to be in the hands of all our confirmed young people in order to tell them what they need to know about their Church and to strengthen their loyalty to their denomination.

Price: 20 cents.

Confirmation Booklet No. E

A Token of Your Confirmation. Containing Certificate of Confirmation, without Memorial verse, Apostle's Creed, Lord's Prayer, Ten Commandments and Bible Quotations. Beautiful embossed cover in colored Lithography. Tied with silk cord. Size of booklet 5½x7½ inches.

Price in any quantity:

Each 25 Cents. Net. Postage Extra!

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.,
202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., MARCH 30th, 1916

NUMBER 13

Anent the Higher Cost of Living

Altho the high cost of living is no longer in the limelight of public discussion as it was before the outbreak of the European war, the seriousness of the situation is none the less apparent to those who have an opportunity to observe the actual conditions among the mass of the people. If anything, the situation may be said to have become even more grave thru the alleged influence of the war upon our trade, altho it is probable that the war has comparatively little to do with the extraordinary rise in the prices of many necessities. The suspicion is rather deepening that under cover of the war and the distractions which it has brought during nearly two years, "big business" has been tightening its grip upon the consumer and forcing him to pay an inordinate profit to the merchant and the manufacturer.

Legislative relief seems remote, but the problem may be attacked from another quarter, and in a way that promises sure and speedy relief at least for the individual who has the determination and the perseverance to undertake and carry out the plan. In one of the "sermons on advertising" that appeared last week in most of the prominent dailies was one sentence that, quite unwittingly, we feel sure, revealed an important factor in the problem of the higher cost of living that is usually overlooked. Among the items there set down to illustrate the rapid progress of present-day business was this: "the luxury of to-day becomes the necessity of to-morrow," and it seems a telling way of stating what is probably the weakest spot in present-day living. A luxury is something superfluous, something that is delightful to the senses, the feelings, not necessarily wrong or injurious, but something that is not necessary to either life or happiness, a more or less extravagant indulgence in physical or intellectual pleasure. Naturally there are differences. The savage, for instance, regards many things as luxuries, which civilized man rightfully considers as absolutely necessary to his welfare and happiness, and any sort of a rule for determining what is a luxury and what is a necessity would therefore be out of the question. That is something every individual must determine for himself in accordance to the dictates of his reason and his conscience and the limitations of his purse.

And right there is where the difficulty comes in. In most cases "the luxury of to-day becomes the necessity of to-morrow," not because of any advance in civilization, or in response to a higher need than was realized before, but because one is unable or unwilling to forego the pleasure that has once been experienced. The desire for enjoyment becomes so strong that the voice of conscience and reason is silenced and the limitations of the purse are forgotten or ignored. And this natural tendency is strengthened and stimulated by excessive advertising. Advertising is certainly a legitimate line of business, and a business necessity, but when it undertakes to make the luxuries of today become the necessities of to-morrow it is treading on dangerous ground, because it tempts the individual—and those individuals most who can least resist the temptation—to go beyond his depth as regards reason, conscience or purse.

Robbing the People

The other day one of our dailies had a cartoon that we wish could have been seen by every voter in the country. It represented Uncle Sam staring in open-mouthed wonder at a huge cannon, larger than any that had ever been made. His traveling bag, on which was inscribed "Water Power Rights," reposed on the ground beside him. From behind a thief was shown sneaking up with arm outstretched to grab the bag. That was the cartoonist's way of calling the country's attention to the danger which threatened it in the passage by the Senate of the Shields' bill on Mar. 8. This bill grants to corporations the right to assume possession of water power on public lands and eminent domain over privately owned lands. Possession is nominally restricted to fifty years, but at the end of that time, in order to resume possession, the Government must pay all unearned increment, which capital secured at the expense of the people, and the value of all plants owned by the corporation. Regulation of rates is left with the states, which are notoriously unable to deal satisfactorily with large corporations. It would hardly have been possible to railroad such a measure thru the Senate except under cover of the preparedness mania and the excitement fostered by the press of the country concerning our relations with the Central Powers.

A Democratic Senator, writing anonymously in Harper's Weekly expresses his profound astonishment at the fact that a matter of such importance can be discussed in the upper chamber of Congress without exciting the attention of the press, and without engaging the thought of barely half a dozen Senators. Does no one in the Senate or among the newspaper correspondents in Washington realize the far-reaching importance to the future industrial development of the country, of the rights taken away from the people of the United States by this measure? Are the people behind this iniquitous bill the only ones who know that 115 miles of the Chicago, Milwaukee & Saint Paul railway in the state of Montana are now being operated by hydro-electric power, and that by June 1 cars will be moving over 450 miles of that transcontinental system propelled by the force of the falling waters of our streams? Are the men intent of securing the rights of the people for nothing the only ones who know that the cost of operating the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railway electrically has been reduced thirty-three and one-third percent, and that the engineers confidently expect an even better saving than that on the Milwaukee railroad? Do only capitalists understand that such a result means the electrification of the rival lines serving the same territory—the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern—and that millions of dollars will immediately be invested in the development of water-power schemes in all parts of the country just as soon as this or some other satisfactory bill is passed by Congress?

A THOUGHT FOR LENT

"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," John 1: 29.

The "interests" certainly show a shrewd eye to business by attempting to put a scheme like this thru Congress while the attention of the country is fixed upon the allurements of compulsory military service and all sorts of exaggerated schemes for national defense which the armor and munition manufacturers are trying to foist upon the country. And it is not at all difficult to imagine that all these schemes were hatched out for the sole purpose of keeping the mind of the people engaged elsewhere while big business helped itself to what it wanted.

It is a comfort to know that of the sixty-eight Senators voting at least twenty-two (Ashhurst, Borah, Chamberlain, Chilton, Cummins, Gronna, Hollis, Husting, James, Kenyon, La Follette, Lans, Lea, Lee, Lewis, Martine, Newlands, Norris, Poindexter, Reed, Sheppard and Works) voted against the measure. The measure will in due time come before the House, and all pressure possible should be brought to bear upon the Representatives to consign it to oblivion. Do not fail to let your Representative know of your opposition to this legalized robbery scheme.

The Motion Picture

The motion picture has become a fixed institution. Its appeal to human life and interest, the diversion and amusement it offers, the profits it promises and bestows upon the shrewd manager, as well as its possibilities as a mold and educator of public sentiment have already made it indispensable to the popular mind and, in a way, even invaluable as a means of understanding and knowing the attitude and the desires of the mass of the people. Whether we like it or not, it is bound to be with us until something better in its line comes along, and we shall have to reckon with it and its influence for weal or woe in any educational, social or religious movement.

Since the motion picture must be reckoned with, and is coming to be reckoned with by the churches in hundreds of large and small cities and towns all over the country, it seems desirable to understand its history and development as well as its present-day character and possibilities, so that we may at least judge it intelligently and sympathetically. It is for this reason that we are reprinting from The Gospel of the Kingdom a discussion of the motion picture in its various aspects as it affects the community and the church by one who is thoroly familiar with the meaning and the possibilities of this form of popular amusement. In the course of the series, which begins in this issue, there will be told the history of the National Board of Censorship, the point of view from which it approves or condemns the films upon which it passes, the ways and means in which its work has been most effectively supplemented by local authorities in different parts of the country, and what the local churches can do to improve the pictures.

If the Church is to take the position implied in the words, "Nothing human is foreign to me," which seems to us essentially the attitude of the Bible, it cannot afford to ignore the motion picture. It should rather regard it as a most interesting social phenomenon, as something that deserves to be studied and understood and made use of as a powerful educational agency and a valuable instrument for social betterment. When it is borne in mind how the entire Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, is really a vast drama of human life and experience, portrayed by figures of flesh and blood in constant action for good or ill, and thus teaching its lessons of eternal spiritual truth, one can hardly help wishing that some one with the pen of a Shakespeare or Goethe, and the inspiration of Dante or Milton, might write a scenario of the divine plan of the ages, so that the screen might continually project its living appeal into the minds and hearts of countless millions of human beings in Christian and heathen lands in a manner undreamed of before. And who will say that the motion picture, as we see it developing under our eyes to-day, may not, with or without the help of the pulpit, the press and the platform, be called upon to present to men the power and the inspiration of the Christian Gospel with results that are altogether beyond our powers of imagination? With this possibility in mind the Church of Jesus Christ dare not despise the handmaid, as yet untutored and awkward, perhaps, which human ingenuity has placed at her disposal, but which may yet become the most resourceful and effective servant the Gospel of the Kingdom ever had.

THE LORD'S SUPPER

Who is Worthy?

"Wherefore whosoever shall eat the bread and drink the cup of the Lord in an unworthy manner, shall be guilty of the body and the blood of the Lord," 1 Cor. 11: 27.

To the mind of the Apostle, as we have seen, the Lord's Supper stands for the full meaning of the body and the blood of Christ, as the nourishment of the new life thru the memory of the Lord's death. To take part in it meant personal acceptance of the redemption in His blood, relief from the guilt and bondage of sin, forgiveness of sin, life and salvation, and the perfect peace of God. It would seem that a reminder of this serious and vital significance of the Lord's Supper should be all that was necessary to make Christians avoid anything and everything that was not in keeping with the memory of the Master while they were celebrating it. To clinch the matter, and make the meaning clear beyond a doubt, however, Paul goes a step farther and declares that all who do eat the bread and drink the cup in an unworthy manner, are guilty of the body and the blood of the Lord, i. e., they are committing a direct offense against that to which they owe their salvation. While they are outwardly in communion with the memory of their Lord and Saviour, they are inwardly opposing that which makes Him this. This is hypocrisy in its most awful form, indeed, one might almost compare such a sin with that against the Holy Spirit.

With this solemn significance of the Lord's Supper in mind sensitive minds have become almost superstitious in their fear of being unworthy of partaking of Christ's memorial, and elaborate schemes of self-examination have been devised that have only filled their minds with scruples and a morbid anxiety lest they not only lose the blessings Christ intended they should receive in the Lord's Supper, but even forfeit His great gift of salvation itself. But if our enjoyment of the blessings of God's salvation depended on our worthiness of these gifts, God might as well never have offered them, for then there would be none to accept them. What Paul means to say is that those who partake of the Lord's Supper should ask themselves only the simple question, Do I discern the Lord's body in the sacrament? Do I understand that this is no common meal, but merely the visible sign and means by which God offers to me all that the life and death of Jesus Christ has meant to me? Those who remember that their Lord freely gave His own body and blood for the life of the world, and accept the bread and the wine as a reminder of this, and as renewed nourishment for their new life of faith and love, are worthy communicants, and are not likely to desecrate the sacrament by unworthy thoughts or unseemly behaviour.

Not Belief but Faith Counts

Nor does it matter much what we think of the manner in which those who believe in Jesus Christ as their Saviour receive His body and His blood. Luther taught that, since Jesus in instituting the Lord's Supper uses the words "This is My body," "This is My blood," it cannot be otherwise than that the body and the blood of Christ is actually present and really given in the sacrament; "in with and under the bread and the wine we receive the body and the blood of Christ." Zwingli, the early Swiss Reformer, held that the bread and the wine were merely symbols of the body and the blood of Christ, and that therefore the Lord's Supper is a memorial of the crucified body and the atoning blood of Christ. Calvin, the great Geneva Reformer, regarded the bread and the wine as pledges of the spiritual gifts. Just as surely, he says, as the believer receives bread and wine, the spiritual man receives the body and the blood of Christ, i. e., all that the life, the suffering and the death of Christ stands for. Since both Christ himself and the Apostles content themselves with stating the fact that believers receive the body and the blood of Christ in the Lord's Supper, but say nothing at all about the manner in which this takes place, the Evangelical Church does not undertake to decide for or against any one of these teachings. Just as we cannot explain the connection that exists between our own body and soul, or the precise manner in which the food we eat is transformed into blood and tissue, life and energy, so the connection between the bread and the wine and the body and the blood of Jesus Christ remains a mystery concerning which each sincere believer is entitled to his own opinion. The one essential thing about the Lord's Supper is that it is the nourishment of the new life, i. e., that those who partake of it receive the body and the blood of Christ, i. e., accept in sincere faith what Jesus Christ has done for them by offering up His life and shedding His blood, and therefore seek a closer communion with Him and a more fruitful service for Him.

As believers in Christ we concern ourselves only with what the worthy partaker of the Lord's Supper receives. What those receive who partake unworthily is outside our interest in accordance with Matt. 7: 1. It seems clear that the attitude of those who receive the sacrament can have no power to change it. It is not man that makes the sacrament, but God. And if the visible signs and means are there, with the Word of God, they are consecrated and offered as the body and the blood of Christ, regardless of what those who receive them think of them. In the same way the Word of God, which is preached to both believers and unbelievers, becomes to one a savor from life unto life, to the other a savor from death unto death. The same sun that gives life and comfort to the living and helps to grow beautiful flowers and nourishing fruit, brings decay and corruption to the dead and develops the poisonous atmosphere of the marshes and swamp. The sun remains the same, but the recipient is not and hence the result is not the same. And the same bread and wine received in the Lord's Supper has a different effect on the believer than on the unbeliever.

Whether one accepts the Lutheran teaching concerning the Lord's Supper or that of Zwingli or Calvin, persons known to be unworthy should not be permitted to partake of the sacrament, lest they eat and drink judgment unto themselves if they "discern not the body."

The Old Hampton Place

BY HILDA RICHMOND

VIII.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS. Thomas and Cordelia Hampton, brother and sister, victims of a city boarding-house, receive news of the death of an eccentric old bachelor uncle, supposed to have burned to death in his barn. They attend the funeral and while enjoying the hospitality of a neighbor, become enamored of country life. After consulting a lawyer Thomas decides to take possession of his deceased uncle's farm and undertakes to make the neglected house habitable. The presence of the two young people brings a new spirit of sociability into the neighborhood, when, in the midst of a pleasant social gathering, the supposedly dead uncle suddenly reappears—it was only an old office skeleton that had been found in the ruins of the barn—and violently ejects them from his property. During a supposed serious illness of Uncle Richard an old will is discovered, according to the terms of which the farm really belongs to Thomas and Cordelia, who, however, nobly waive their rights, so that their uncle may have a home to his liking for his old age. An experiment in renting for the summer is a failure, and only the boarding of some college students furnishes the ready money with which they expect to return to town early in the fall.

"Come on and go for a drive with a picnic at the end of it!" called a gay party of young people—the "Old Crowd," as they called themselves—one morning as Cordelia was industriously sorting pillow slips with Thomas cording up the heavier bedding. "That work will wait on you."

"But we have to get things in order this week," said Cordelia. "We go back to town next Tuesday and nobody knows these things apart as I do."

"And this is the only day I can help Cordelia," added Thomas.

"But you haven't had a single good time all summer!" cried the young people. "You must go!"

Of course it ended in closing the farm house, jumping into summer garments suited to the occasion and getting into the waiting automobiles. "Why didn't you tell me about the picnic?" lamented Cordelia. "I haven't a thing fit to take."

"We are not in the habit of asking the guests of honor to contribute to the feast," said Grace. "This picnic is to be a sort of farewell to you and Thomas since you are leaving the Parker farm next week."

After a long and most delightful drive the automobiles circled round and when they finally came to a standstill the guests of honor were amazed to find themselves in front of Uncle Richard Hampton's house. Yes, and there was Uncle Richard himself gravely shaking hands with some people who were just entering the yard. There was no time to ask questions and they soon found themselves shaking hands with the master of the house perplexed and a trifle worried.

"My dear friends," said Mr. Hampton as a little hush fell upon the company. "I want to make a little speech and then it will be time for me to go to the train. One year ago to-day you thought you buried me over in the family lot and my sole surviving relatives took charge of this place. You all know how I acted when I got home, and you also know how I have imposed upon Thomas and Cordelia this summer. I wanted to try them to see what they were made of. They have been most dutiful and helpful in spite of my whims and I want you all to know it. I want to spend the rest of my life in California, as I enjoyed my winter there very much. I have plenty of money to care for me as long as I live and some to leave to these young relatives of mine. You have all been most kind to me. I don't pretend to say that I should like to live here with Thomas and Cordelia. Their ways are not my ways. But out in California I'm going to work and I'm going to try to be of some account before I die. And I'm going to go into the church and help along with my money. You people—particularly my nephew and niece—have convinced me that there is something to religion and I'm going to work in dead earnest at the eleventh hour. Everything on the place is yours. Good-bye! I see the hack coming for me!"

It was a long speech, and at its close the neighbors gathered round to wish Richard Hampton god-speed. He was touched by the real warmth of their words and tears stood in his eyes as he climbed into the depot hack. "I'm sorry I've wasted so much of my life, but I'm going to do better," he said. "I'll be back to visit here next summer if everything goes well, but I want to live out West. Goodbye! Good-bye!"

"Poor old man!" said Cordelia wiping away her tears as she and Thomas led the way into the house. "See! He tried to make things homelike before he left. What's this?" as she picked up a sealed envelope propped against the lamp. "A check for all the money we spent on the place last fall. Isn't that wonderful? I'm so sorry he didn't stay in his old home."

"But he didn't want to stay, child," said Mrs. Gross. "The doctor told him in a milder climate he might live many years and he's anxious to get to work. I'm sorry you could not have heard all he told us, but we have saved up every sentence to tell you later."

"Come out and see what's in the barn!" cried Mr. Gross excitedly. "I can't wait a minute longer."

The whole company streamed out to the rebuilt sheds and Thomas and Cordelia were amazed to find a beautiful team of matched work horses, two fine Jersey cows, a small flock of beautiful sheep and a few choice pigs, while the chicken coop boasted a dozen plump hens whose beautifully marked plumage told of their high-bred ancestry. The granary was filled with corn and wheat and it was evident that Mr. Hampton had left no stone unturned to make amends for keeping his relatives out of their inheritance all summer.

"Dinner! dinner! dinner!" called the ladies, as the excited young owners and most of the guests would have made a tour of the old orchard loaded with fruit and the garden over which Thomas had worked so faithfully all summer. "After dinner we will all walk around. The food is hot now and you must not delay."

"Where did all this food come from?" asked Cordelia in amazement as she looked at the tables loaded with every good thing the farms could boast. "I feel like a very important personage to have a share in this wonderful picnic."

"And you are an important personage," said the minister. "This feast is intended to celebrate your return to the old brick house where we had such good times last winter and also to open the social season for this year."

"And to celebrate the fact that so many of the young people are taking an interest in the country and its work," added the minister's wife. "Frances and Emily and Joe and Grace are all going to take district schools, and Julia Morris and her sister are coming back home to go round dressmaking, and—"

Mrs. Ashley paused for breath and Mrs. Dillon took up the narrative.

"And to celebrate the revival of interest in the church and Sunday-school and all rural undertakings," she supplemented. "Mr. Dillon and I are overjoyed at the turn affairs have taken."

"Hush—sh" came the subdued voice of Mrs. Burton. "Ladies, the minister is ready to return thanks."

As they all stood round the loaded tables beautiful with autumn fruits and flowers Mr. Ashley did return thanks, not in any conventional words, but in a little prayer of thankfulness that the lines had fallen to them all in goodly places. Even with his eyes closed he could see the Hampton burial lot with its rows of stiff cedars around which the same company had stood at that hour only one short year before, and he rejoiced to feel that the burying of that old skeleton had had such a happy outcome. The little children wondered what it was all about, and why so many of the grown-up folks found occasion to use their handkerchiefs, but they were not old enough to know that their hearts overflowed with happiness as well as with sadness.

"Poor Uncle Richard!" said Thomas as they took their seats. "Isn't it a pity that he doesn't care for good times like these? That is the only drawback to all my happiness to-day."

"Rich Uncle Richard!" said Cordelia wiping her eyes. "Isn't it wonderful that God has given him another chance, so to speak. I confidently expect that in the years to come he will enjoy such gatherings. There is no drawback to my happiness to-day."

"That's the way to feel!" said the minister heartily. "God has given Richard Hampton another chance and he promises to improve it. He is well and strong and it is our privilege to pray that many years of usefulness may be given him. He may even yet realize his dream of blessing mankind tho not as he once hoped, so he is not poor but rich—exceedingly rich."

"So are we all!" said Mr. Dillon reverently. "Somehow we never realized it so much as now. It was a great day for this neighborhood when the old Hampton place came into possession of its rightful owners."

"And the best is yet to be," said a hearty chorus of young voices.

"May God grant it!" said Mr. Ashley heartily and with one voice the assembled company said "Amen!"

Max Mueller and the New Testament

In these days of open and of covert attack upon the inspired Word of God, it is helpful to find such an intellect as that of Professor Max Muller bent in reverent joy before the Scriptures, and writing to a friend:

"How shall I describe to you what I found in the New Testament? I had not read it for many years and was prejudiced against it before I took it in hand. The light which struck Paul with blindness on his way to Damascus was not more strange (than that which fell on me) when I suddenly discovered the fulfillment of all hopes, the highest perfection of philosophy, the key to all seeming contradictions of the physical and moral world. The whole world seemed to me to be ordered for the sole purpose of furthering the religion of the Redeemer, and if this religion is not divine I understand nothing at all. In all my studies of the ancient times I have always felt the want of something, and it was not until I knew our Lord that all was clear to me. With Him, there is nothing I am unable to solve."—London Christian.

The Silent Prayer at the Beginning and Close of Worship

Speaking of prayer, we should like to say a few words about the good old custom of bowing the heads in silent prayer for a minute or two upon entering and before leaving the house of worship. Whoever observes this custom with true devotion and not as a mere formality certainly benefits thereby. Such a prayer at the beginning of the service naturally turns our thoughts toward the spiritual things of God's house; it puts us into a receptive mood; we draw near with our hearts to God; and—last but not least—there is the definite promise of God's hearing, and answering our prayer. Suitable words we find, if need be, in our hymnal. Whatever words you choose, continue the custom with true devotion, and it will prove very profitable to you for your spiritual welfare. —Lutheran Witness.

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

March

Growl, growl, gray March,
And shake your icy mane,
Call forth your servile winds,
Reforge the river's chain.

Storm o'er the shivering wood
And fright the stripling trees,
Pull down the royal oak,
And snap him 'cross your knees.

Growl, growl, and grind your teeth,
We do not fear your stroke,
Too well we know the one
You hide within your cloak.

Above your savage roar,
We hear her sleeping sing,
"I come, I come, I come,
O earth, receive your Spring!"
—Fletcher Harper Swift.

Fear Not; I Am with Thee

In a brief account of his boyhood, the Rev. John McNeil, the well-known Scotch preacher and evangelist, tells this fine story of an experience he had with his father in the days of his youth. He was employed as a clerk in a railway station at Greenock. The family lived at Inverkip. He says:

"I remember when a lad thus employed that no matter how late we were in getting thru our work on the Saturday, I started away home, so as to wake up at home on Sunday morning and spend the day with father and mother and the others in the dear old village. During the week I lived in lodgings in the town. The road home from the town lies thru the Valley of the Shadows, a long, dreary, lonely glen.

"I remember one Saturday night it was nearly midnight when I got clear of the booking-office, and started to tramp six or seven miles down thru the lonely glen to get home. The road had a bad name. It is the highway between one seaport and another, and there were ugly stories about men being knocked down and robbed.

This particular night was very black, and two miles outside our little village the road gets blacker than ever—a high wooded hill on the right and another on the left, and no light from moon or star or kindly cottage window. I was just entering the dark defile, blacker than a wolf's jaw, and I was in such a hurry to get home that I was only touching the road here and there, so to speak, when suddenly I thought my heart would leave me, and then it came leaping back to me.

"About one hundred yards ahead in the densest of the darkness, there suddenly rang out a great strong cheery voice:

"Is that you, Johnny?"

"It was my father—the bravest, strongest man I ever knew. He knew it was a black, dark, gruesome night and that I was nervous, for I was his son, as I am for strength, I was also my mother's for a kind of nervousness shot all thru me; and like a father, he arranged to be waiting for me at the worst of it, at the blackest of it.

"I was thinking of him away at home in the blaze and the ruddy glow of the fire, thinking of his boy of course, trudging thru the mire and mud, when suddenly he cried out. Even tho he saved me from my fears, he rather increased them for a little. But when I had steadied myself, and knew who it was, I was as good as at home.

"Many a time since when things have been getting very black and gloomy round about me I have heard a voice greater than any earthly parent cry: 'Fear not, for I am with thee!' And lo, God's foot is rising and falling on the road beside us as we tread the journey of life. Don't let us forget that."

Encouraging the Pastor

"Aunt Myra" took her hands from the dish-water, wiped them on her apron, and gave her visitor a chair. Her husband had gone to a neighbor's, and while they waited for him to come back, she talked about her home, the school, and the church she attended, two miles away.

"It's hard to get there sometimes," she said, "but I manage to go almost every Sunday. Sometimes it rains, and I think I can't, but generally a little clearing spell comes just before church-time, and we get in between showers. And sometimes it gets hot. Only last Sunday I thought I couldn't go. It was sultry, and the morning's work was hard, and by church-time I was tired out. But I went to the sink and pumped the big basin full of cold water, and I washed my face, and I rolled up my sleeves and washed my arms, and I splashed the cold water over my wrists, and I felt a lot better, so I thought I'd go after all.

"Well, when my husband saw me getting ready, he washed, too, and put on his clean clothes, and I said, 'I declare, you look real nice!' and he said, 'Well, come to think of it, you look real nice, too.' Of course, he's partial, but it does a body good to hear it said, anyway.

"It seemed as if our pastor always knew just what I needed, and I thought the sermon last Sunday was meant for me. It was practical, and gave you lots of comfort, too. You know the kind of sermon I mean, don't you?

"When church was out, and I was standing in the vestibule, waiting for my husband to bring the buggy round, our minister came out, and what do you think he said to me?

"He said, 'Mrs. Radford, I want to tell you how much you encourage me. Preaching in the summer is hard work. So many people go away, so many find it easy to stay at home; church work reaches a low ebb. But every Sunday, rain or shine, I know you and your husband will be here. I know how hard you work; and when I see you sitting there, reverent and prayerful and attentive, you are a real help and inspiration and I want to tell you so.'

"Well, sir, I didn't know what to say. I stood there looking foolish, I guess. But wasn't it good of him to say that? I knew all the time my going to church was doing me good, but who'd have thought that I was encouraging the pastor?"—Selected.

Rest in Him

A young man, distressed about his soul, confided in a friend. The friend said, "Did you ever learn to float?"

"Yes, I did," was the surprised reply.

"And did you find it easy to learn?"

"Not at first," he answered.

"What was the difficulty?" his friend pursued.

"Well, the fact was I could not lie still; I could not believe or realize that the water would hold me up without any effort of my own, so I always began to struggle, and, of course, down I went at once."

"And then?"

"Then I found out that I must give up the struggle, and just rest on the strength of the water to bear me up. It was easy enough after that; I was able to lie back in the fullest confidence that I should never sink."

"And is not God's Word more worthy of your trust than the changeable sea? He does not bid you wait for feelings; He commands you to rest in Him, to believe His word, and accept His gift."

The Reason Why the Sale of Liquor is Restricted

Ignorant people, says The Alliance Press Agency, are apt to say that those selling intoxicants should be as free to carry on their trade as other tradespeople, but the following words in The Brewer's Gazette, recently, show the consciousness of "the Trade" of the evils which compel legislators to load the liquor traffic with restrictions, and, in many countries, prohibit or allow the public to prohibit it: "It is axiomatic that it is because of the potentiality for drunkenness that, unfortunately, is a corollary to the sale of alcohol that restriction exists. Anyone may sell general provisions, anyone may vend green-groceries, under conditions which he is almost at liberty to determine for himself, and if the sale of alcohol were as innocuous as that of biscuits or oranges, similar liberties would obtain for the licensed victualler as the retailers of other commodities."

Denominational

Going Forward in St. Louis

While the Evangelical pastors of St. Louis, some forty in number, including the editors and professors and heads of institutions, have numerous opportunities for getting together and working together, the faithful sharers of their joys and sorrows have long lacked the opportunities for such an intercourse. Home duties and the work in their own churches took up practically all their time and left little chance for going beyond their immediate spheres and getting together and becoming better acquainted with each other. Four years ago, however, a movement set on foot by Mrs. Nollau, then of St. James Church, sought to overcome these difficulties and to unite the "first ladies" of the Evangelical churches of the city for promoting the missionary and educational work of the Church and cultivating a real sociability. Regular monthly meetings have been held at the homes of the pastors in rotation and have been most enjoyable and successful. The list of names now on the list is thirty-seven, and it would require some time to enumerate the things that have been accomplished in the interest of Eden Seminary, the home and foreign mission work and the local city mission work, to say nothing of the spirit of friendliness and fellowship that has been established and fostered. The officers are Mrs. J. F. Klick, president; Mrs. W. Baur, vice president; Mrs. H. Bode, secretary; Mrs. A. Reusch, treasurer.

An effort to make the influence of these gatherings count in a larger way was undertaken by inviting some 300 "leading ladies" from the Evangelical churches of the city for a social afternoon at St. Peter's Church on Feb. 16. Mrs. Nottrott gave interesting glimpses of life and conditions in India, and of some phases of missionary work, and the other numbers on the program and the luncheon served were thoroughly enjoyed by all. The proceeds, which were distributed among different branches of the Church's work, were substantial and highly satisfactory. It is not impossible that this meeting may be the beginning of a city-wide organization of Evangelical women in the effort to employ the splendid tho still largely latent forces of Evangelical womanhood in St. Louis to the best possible advantage in united and constructive effort in the interest of the Church and the Kingdom. H.

Colorado

The president of the Colorado Mission District must surely be one of the busiest men in the Synod. He seems to pray without ceasing and live out his prayer incessantly: "God use our Synod toward the coming of Thy kingdom." Building up our new western academy at Fort Collins with much personal and vital energy and very limited external equipment; traveling here and there to cities and desolate country spots to proclaim the message of truth and of love to ten or to hundreds; writing his hundreds of letters promptly, whole-heartedly:—he is always the same big-hearted, wise, far-sighted man of God—an inspiration to the ministers working in his District. May God send more like him into our western work.

One characteristic of Pastor Jans is that he will never perform the burial ceremony before the actual decease of the victim. Recently he was called to Petersville, Colo., to pronounce the last rites over a defunct congregation. The people had decided to deed their church over to the Church Extension Fund and allow the congregation to give up the ghost. When, however, Pastor Jans remembered how many excellent men had labored at Petersville before the big strike had laid the town low, he took the little trip over to see what methods of resuscitation could be applied. He found that the people were by no means "dead ones." Encouraging them to endure patiently this period of dullness, he arranged with them for bi-monthly services.

The next day found Rev. Jans at Horace, a thriving city of eastern Colorado and the seat of the state Normal School. Surrounding Horace is a large colony of Russo-German beet-raisers. The soil had been well prepared and with sixty farmers and their families Pastor Jans held a service and then organized a congregation on the spot. A church building committee was appointed and a liberal sum of money subscribed toward the building. This infant church, christened St. John's, already had a Sunday-school of 150 children in weekly attendance. Such churches do not drop out of the skies. This is how the soil had been prepared: Several other German Synods had worked in and about Horace and God had blessed their efforts. However, they had utterly failed to take into account that interesting development among the Russo-Germans, the prayer-meetings. These Lutheran Synods will not allow their members to bow their heads in prayer with members of other Synods. Only the official prayers of their own clergy are permissible. Of course, interdenominational prayer-meetings at which simple-hearted Russo-German laymen pray are to people thus falsely taught an abomination. This formal, artificial conception of prayer and of God's grace frequently leads to fanaticism, from which the simple layman revolts. So here. The "Alaska" and the "Arizona" Synods had withdrawn, and when the representative of our Synod arrived, he was welcomed with open arms.

Pastor Jans, the aggressive and progressive President of the District

This unpleasant feature of modern religious work, the rivalry of denominations, showed even uglier colors at Puma, Colo. A few German "dry-farmers" had been plodding along for thirty years with no success materially and positive retrogression spiritually. Things changed when a group of sturdy German farmers from Iowa came into the country. These good people noticed at once that the natural dearth of the country was insignificant compared with the utter spiritual desolation. They persuaded their former evangelical pastor in Iowa to pay them a visit. He in turn invited Pastor Jans to accompany him. So the time for the visit and for a big religious gathering was set. Just about this time a wealthy German who had been thoroly drilled in the chief tenets of the "Alaska" Synod moved into the country. Reading the announcements of Pastor Jans' meeting he quickly invited one of his ministers and together they made a house-to-house canvass securing $2,600 in subscriptions for a church. Nothing could be more foreign to the true spirit of the Evangelical Synod than fanatic rivalry with another Synod. However, there were enough people present in Pastor Jans' meeting who of their free will declared they could not feel at home amid the narrowness of the "Alaska" Synod and they desired to be served by the Evangelical Synod. So Puma will now be served by both churches. This reminds one of the story of Philips Brooks:—He went down to the seaside and found a great number of water-holes on the beach. He walked from puddle to puddle and gave each one a name writing with his cane into the sand: This is the Presbyterian Church, this is the Methodist Church,

Continued on Page 8

Practical Expressions of Protestant Christian Life in Germany

A surprisingly wide Range of Effort to win Men for Christ and extend His Kingdom. Popular positive Movements are both earnest and effective

DR. JOHN J. MEYER, ST. LOUIS, MO.

II.

Great good thruout Germany is also being accomplished by the Association of Christian Periodicals (Christlicher Zeitschriftenverein), with headquarters in Berlin. The work of this society is largely directed against the irreligious propaganda of the "Social-Democrat" party. (This party must not be confounded with similarly named movements in this country. In Germany the movement going by the name referred to is radically anti-ecclesiastical, anti-religious and anti-government, because of the close connection existing between the State and the Church. It is for this reason that many who are familiar with the aims of the German "Social-Democrats," but not so well acquainted with the aims of similarly named American movements which are wholly political in character, often say harsh things against the latter. It is because of the anti-religious character of the "Social-Democrats" in Germany that Christian leaders there are finding it necessary to counteract their propaganda by every means available. Note by the Editor.)

The periodicals published and distributed by the Society are of a general religious and evangelistic character, many of them devoted especially to the needs of workingmen,—women and girls, and are kept entirely free from advertising, altho many tempting offers have been made. They are usually distributed free of charge in public places, altho a smaller number are sold at a very nominal price, usually a "pfennig" (about one-fourth of one cent). During 1913 1,306,466 weekly publications, 106,000 monthlies and 37,850 quarterlies, or a total annual output of 63,359,632 copies, were circulated. In addition to this 565 hospitals and 369 prisons were supplied with suitable literature. The Society, with a membership of nearly 800, also pays for the pension insurance of all their officers, men and women, who have been in the employ of the Society for more than ten years. The Relief Fund for Workingmen, which gives financial help in addition to the government old-age and disability pension, has a fund of over $15,000, and all employees of the Society receive a summer vacation of from four days to four weeks. A special department is devoted to producing and distributing literature devoted to the sick and the bereaved, and another branch organization is lending assistance to poor women of the better classes, and securing work for those who are in need. Many women and children were sent into rural resorts for recreation.

An interesting Incident

In May 1888 the Evangelical Aid Association ("Evangelisch-kirchlicher Hilfsverein") was organized with the purpose of improving the conditions of the people within the sphere of church influence. The present emperor and empress may be called the real founders of this Society. The history of the beginning of this useful and efficient organization is very interesting. Prince and Princess William, after hearing a sermon on the urgent needs of the Evangelical Church on Memorial Sunday, Nov. 20, 1887, desired to arrange for a general collection on behalf of the Berlin City Mission and similar enterprises in other large cities. Chamberlain von Mirbach was sent to Berlin to arrange for a meeting in the royal palace.

Unfortunately the heating apparatus was temporarily out of commission, and so the meeting was

Concluded on Page 6

Picked up by the Way

Horses as well as men get nervous breakdowns at the front, according to a letter quoted in "Rider and Driver." Some of these horses are sent back to England for recuperation. The writer describes an army remount stable in Berkshire, run entirely by women. "The horses go there frightened, ill, and wild. In a month they are quiet as pet dogs, and in hard condition. The secret is that with the quiet, gentle handling of these skilled women, the horses' nerves get a rest and they recuperate in a marvelously short time."

The "North American Review," in publishing an article by Sydney Brooks on "The New England," notes that the article would have appeared in an earlier issue but for the fact that the original MS. went down in the Hesperian when that vessel was destroyed in September. Among generous tributes to a foe this sentence from Mr. Brooks' article is worthy of a place: "The cohesion and the unanimity of selfless devotion which Germany has displayed thruout her titanic efforts are as much beyond our present British reach as are the intelligence and foresight with which she has marshaled and turned to account all her resources of human and material energy."

The controversy over the name of the great mountain between Seattle and Tacoma still continues. An evidence of a rapprochement, however, comes in a circular which states that the Congregational churches of the two cities have united in asking the Geographic Board of the United States to call for testimony as to the name given to the mountain by the Indians, and its adoption instead of the present official name, Mount Rainier. Curiously, the circular makes no mention as to what the supposed aboriginal name may have been. Have we heard that the Indians called the mountain Tacoma?

The self-satisfaction which some illiterate people feel with regard to their own limitations has rarely been more pointedly expressed than by an inhabitant of the mountain region of Kentucky, as reported in "Harper's Magazine," by Mr. W. A. Bradley in describing a recent trip: "The reason why we-uns knows so much more than you-uns," an old mountain woman said to him, "is because we can't read so much. So we think more." The remark has its moral, too, for the "omnivorous reader."

"I'm awfully sorry that my engagements prevent my attending your charity concert, but I shall be with you in spirit."

"Splendid! And where would you like your spirit to sit? I have tickets here for fifty cents, one dollar and two dollars."

In "Welsh Humor" is this story which may replace the time-honored story of Columbus and his egg: Sir Foulk Fitzwarren was recounting to his knights his exploits against the Saracen. These being calmly received, Sir Foulk said: "But right here, the other day, I jumped from the ground to the top of my castle." The knights being skeptical, Sir Foulk invited them to come the next day and see him perform the feat. When they assembled, he jumped up one step of the stairway, and continued jumping, step by step, till he was on the top of the tallest tower! "But we could do that too," chorused the knights. "Not till I showed you how," retorted the redoubtable warrior.

It was recently announced that 252 ships of more than a thousand tons, not counting warships, were under construction in the shipyards of the United States, the average size being about 5,000 tons. The shipyards are said to have contracts on hand sufficient to keep them in full operation for three years. Senator Burton of Ohio expressed himself as opposed to the government ship purchase act. He said that American shipping on the high seas was certain to occupy a more favorable position at the end of the war than before, since the war has changed shipping conditions materially. The business is now profitable for American vessels and there is no need for a government subsidy. With the American shipyards already two years behind their orders it is difficult to see where the government could get any boats. Senator Burton also favors the modification of the Seaman's Act, to make it more suitable to the needs of the mercantile marine, especially in those points at which it handicaps the entrance of American vessels into the foreign trade.

"WE BEHELD HIS GLORY"

The Greatness of Christ's divine Glory was His perfect Humanity. He is the Ideal of Mankind realized, the only true Measure of Manhood. Thru the Establishment of a new Kingdom, a new Righteousness and a new Covenant He founded a new Relationship between God and Man

PROF. S. D. PRESS, EDEN SEMINARY, ST. LOUIS. FROM THE GERMAN BY PASTOR J. J. BRAUN

I.

Beholding the Son of Man in the Flesh

It is worth noticing that the evangelist places the words "and we beheld His glory" between the clearest expression of the humanity of Jesus: "the Word became flesh" and the highest expression of His relation to the Godhead: "a glory as of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." As inexplicable as the person of Christ is when one tries to understand Him as man only, so mistaken it is to base an explanation of His glory on His divinity alone. The explanation of the glory of the person of Christ is to be found in the fact that, as Peter expressed it "God was with Him," i. e., that God owned or acknowledged what He did; or in the words of Paul, that "God was in Him," i. e., that in Him the entire undivided divine glory revealed itself, but not as tho He were God, but as in a man, "being made in the likeness of man."

Therefore Jesus preferred to call himself the "Son of Man." With this term Jesus himself emphasized His intimate connection with mankind, His essential kinship with the human race. This is peculiar in Him that in spite of His being the Son of God, He did not assert His likeness to God but rather emphasized His identity with the human race. The greatness of Christ is to be seen not in the fact that He was a superhuman being, but rather in this that He was a man, yea more a man than any one of us. In distinction from all of us, Christ is the man in whom the highest idea of humanity is perfectly realized, God's idea of humanity, i. e., that it is the image of God. In an absolute sense He has always been the complete expression of the Godhead, even as He is termed in Hebrews: "The reflection, or rather the effulgence of His glory, the express image or the character of His being." In a relative sense He became all of this in the course of His earthly development. To such heights did God call us when He gave us His image, namely, that we should "be conformed to the image of His Son."

Jesus was more man for the express reason that He was more divine. For being so, God could dwell in Him as was not possible in any other man. He was more the Son of man because He was the Son of God. He was most keenly sympathetic with everything truly human, for He never could have become man's Prophet, Priest and King. No one could be near Him without thinking more highly of himself, without receiving a deeper impression of a man's true dignity, of the nobility of humanity; without being filled with the burning desire to realize man's ideal: to be like God, perfect. The glory of Jesus Christ consisted in the fact that He was that in which Paul saw the goal of the human personality: "a man of God thoroly furnished unto all good works." Jesus' desires corresponded with His duties and His nature corresponded perfectly with His desires. Jesus Christ was a perfect man at every stage of His development, so that His life as a whole exhibited the perfected God-personality in the flesh.

As a perfected personality He is presented to us in the gospels: In whatever the four authors of the gospels may differ, they all agree in that they are conscious of describing a unique personality. John expresses this in his theme: "We beheld His glory as of the first-born full of grace and truth." The fullness and manifoldness of His glory is seen most clearly in the differences of the gospel narratives. "Out of His fulness have all we received, and grace for grace," says John. The unique personality of Jesus had not merely a purpose in himself, but as the perfect man He is of importance to each one of us. His life is the standard for every man's life. Whatever a man needs to become a finished personality can be found in Him and can be had from Him. Thus each of the evangelists took from Jesus what was lacking in his own individuality and what he needed for his particular task. This explains the differences in the gospels, each of which is nevertheless complete in itself.

The Great Fulfiller

To Matthew Jesus is the promised Messiah, in whom all the promises God had given the chosen people Israel are fulfilled. Matthew presents Him as the great Fulfiller, thru whom the great promises of the past have become a wonderful reality.

First of all He is the fulfiller of the theocratic idea, i. e. the idea of the establishment of the royal rule of God on earth. In this He is the founder of a new and eternal kingdom. Jesus realized the royal rule of God on earth in the first place by showing that the kingdom of God does not mean a place, nor an institution, rather that it is of an inner and spiritual nature, within man, in every man in whose life the will of God is the supreme law. Then He realized the royal rule of God in His own life. Here for the first time was a man whose life was lived completely according to God's will: an irreproachable, spotless life, filled only with love. In this sense Christ accomplished the kingdom of God on earth and was at the same time the beginning of a new humanity. He was the head of all those who like himself desired to live their lives altogether in the spirit and according to the will of God, a new kind of life, which was possible in the fullness of its power and freedom only as a result of Christ's having lived and died.

In the second place Matthew saw the glory of Christ in His fulfilling of the law. Herein He ushered in a new righteousness, a blessedness which in reality is already contained in the foregoing. Jesus fulfilled the law in the first place by showing its true nature. The essence of the law is not its performance. Finding the law to consist in works makes life under the law to spend itself in endless and oftentimes fruitless activity. The true nature of the law is moreover its righteousness, a state of being, an inner disposition. It is the expression of the deepest nature of man, the part of his being that bears his kinship with God. Viewed thus the law becomes not only the highest standard for our life, the expression of that which we ought to be, but as the law of our life it becomes our ideal, the expression of that which we desire to be. Thus Christ transformed the law from being a hard taskmaster to being something far better within us: a glad incentive. He changed the "Thou shalt" of Moses into "Thou canst now if thou wilt." By His own fulfillment of the law Jesus not only proved the possibility of fulfilling it according to his interpretation, but He also pointed out the way, namely the way of faith and of hearty devotion to God in the spirit and power of Jesus Christ.

The basis for this righteousness is the fact that Christ is the founder of a new relation to God. Therefore Matthew thirdly sees the glory of Christ in this that He fulfills the Old Testament idea of sacrifice—the central idea of all religion—and thus becomes the founder of a new holy covenant, a new and real relationship to God. In this also Christ brought fulfillment by showing that a man's true relation to God is not of the nature of a contract, rather a personal relation, and that sacrifice, the center of all religion, does not consist in presenting an external gift, but rather in the presentation of a holy life. Such sacrifice of a holy life, the condition of entry into the fellowship with God, no one but the Sinless One himself could render. Sacrificing himself for mankind by His obedience unto death, Jesus became the founder of a new covenant, a new relationship to God. Whoever is sanctified by Christ, whoever by repentance participates in the death of Christ, whoever by the power of His resurrection walks in newness of life: he is in fellowship with the holy God.

This is the climax of the glory of the human Christ according to the gospels, that by Him a personal relationship between God and man is brought about again in spite of sin. In Christ we have the assurance of the forgiveness of sins and thus we come boldly to the throne of grace and live as His children in the very presence of God. Jesus is the Christ, Jesus is our Saviour, and this will remain His greatest glory.

Practical Expressions of Protestant Christian Life in Germany

Continued from Page 4

held in the building of the General Staff, a fact which, however, came very near leading to serious political consequences. About fifty prominent gentlemen and a few ladies were invited by Prince and Princess William to attend this meeting which led to the drawing up of an appeal for a general offering. Court preacher Adolf Stoecker was one of the speakers. His presence and the locality of this meeting gave rise to a veritable flood of suspicions and exciting articles in the liberal and the socialist press. It was surmised and publicly declared that this meeting was nothing but a pretext to cover a political-reactionary and religious-orthodox conspiracy with the aim to win over the young royal couple!

As a result of these insinuations the Crownprince Frederick, who at first had been delighted at the spirit manifested by his son and daughter-in-law, as well Prince Bismarck, became uneasy at the turn events had taken and counseled giving up the whole plan in order to appease this political tempest. Even Stoecker was willing to resign from the Berlin City Mission, but the royal couple would not yield to these advices and intentions. Prince William wrote to the Emperor, his excellent grand-father, Princess William addressed the Empress in behalf of the cause, Chamberlain Mirbach and Herr von Bennigsen fought for the good cause publicly, and when Prince Bismarck came to Berlin in January, he spoke well of the enterprise and approved the appeal, deeming it entirely in order that even ministers of the government had signed the document. The appeal brought $25,000 within a short time.

On May 28, 1888 the Evangelical Aid Association was organized in the parliament building under the protectorate of the crown-princess. In June 1913 this efficient society celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of its existence. Dr. Dryander reported on the work accomplished during the past twenty-five years and other leaders of national reputation spoke on the different branches of the work. The Society has accepted the patronage of the Paul Gerhardt and Kathryn-Memorials in Wittenberg.

Miscellaneous Organizations

A Society for the Preservation of the Evangelical Public School (Verein zur Erhaltung der Evangelischen Volksschule) was organized in 1876, when the government seemed to favor the establishment of public schools with religious teaching adapted to both Protestant and Catholic pupils. As a result of constant agitation the plan was abandoned and the public school with definite Protestant and Catholic (in Catholic territory) teaching was established. Other forces opposing the teaching of evangelical Christianity in the public schools soon arose and the Society has continued its efforts to keep the public school in Protestant territory strictly Evangelical. At present it is in the midst of a fight opposing the National Association of Teachers, which seeks to "nationalize" the public school system, which means the discontinuance of all religious teaching. The Society is well organized and is financially prosperous, so that a permanent secretary could be employed. Its propaganda is carried on by means of a monthly journal which has been in existence for thirty-four years.

The Society for Protestant Germans in America (Evangelische Gesellschaft fuer die Protestantischen Deutschen in Amerika) was organized in 1838 as an auxiliary of the Rhenish Missionary Society at Barmen. The work of this Society, which observed its 75th anniversary three years ago, received detailed notice in our columns at that time. To many it is better known as the "Langenberg Society," and thru its assistance many of the early pioneers of our Synod found their first field of labor in this country. Confessional controversies unfortunately caused trouble, and many of the pastors sent to the United States affiliated with different denominations, Lutherans, Reformed or Evangelical, as suited their individual preferences or the wishes of the congregation among which they were to labor. The Society sought to make its work for the United States self-supporting by the establishment of theological seminaries wherever possible. Since the early eighties, when the work in this country could well be taken care of by existing societies, the Society turned its attention to South America, especially to Brazil, where the spiritual care

Concluded on Page 8

THE PROBLEM OF THE "MOVIES"

The unlimited human Interest of the Motion Picture gives it a permanent Place among Amusements. Sympathetic Study offers more opportunities for improving Motion Pictures than indiscriminate Criticism

ORRIN G. COCKS, ADVISORY SECRETARY NATIONAL BOARD OF CENSORSHIP OF MOTION PICTURES

The Immensity of the Problem

In 1914, over 6,000 motion-picture subjects were brought into being and put into circulation. These, in turn, were copied from 30 to 100 times, and were exhibited simultaneously to audiences in practically all the great cities of the United States. From these centers they moved rapidly until they were seen in the course of three or four months by people in the smallest town within a region of 200 or 300 miles of the central city. The same film, therefore, may possibly have been shown to 8,000,000 people. In some cities like New York or Chicago it would remain for a month, and in the smaller towns for a day.

The motion picture has as its field the sum total of human experiences, good, bad, and indifferent. The camera enlarges the field of the stage one hundredfold. The big motives and situations governing life are detected and woven into intensely human stories by men of undoubted ingenuity. These men lay hold of the great novels, the thrilling incidents of history, the crucial movements of life, the incidents which touch the heart-strings and the motives which build up or tear down character. The field is the world, and the scope is as wide as human history. When skilled individuals, with an eye for the dramatic, search thru life for themes, it becomes a nice problem in morals for the critic to ascertain the effects of such stories upon audiences.

The motion picture appeals to all classes and ages in this country which is composed of a bewildering variety of people. Within the limits of the country are foreigners and native-born, educated and ignorant, working people and leisure classes, the simple and the sophisticated, the black and the white, the farmer and the city dweller. All these have moral standards which are the result of heredity and training. The people, moreover, demand that they shall have essential freedom to think, work and enjoy themselves without the dictation of any class or group. There is essential agreement regarding those subjects which are undoubtedly bad. It is the border-line questions of morality and conduct which are difficult. Who is wise enough accurately to place the "ban" on some of these experiences and motives which make or mar humanity?

Since the American people have allowed this popular form of amusement to become commercialized, they find themselves bound by methods of circulation. These films must yield profit. They are, therefore, rented to business men who exhibit them under one of two methods. The exhibitor contracts to take a daily supply of film-stories suitable for his needs on a weekly or monthly basis. He is ignorant, in most cases, of the particular subjects which will be forwarded to him. He is, therefore, powerless to make any essential changes in his program. The best he can do is to remove certain sections of a picture which he believes to be unsatisfactory to his clientele. This method of circulating films appears to be required by the limited attendance at his motion-picture theatre. The second method is more extensively in vogue among those exhibitors who command a larger audience and a correspondingly larger income. Such men arrange in advance for the rental of special films which they are satisfied will meet the amusement needs of their audiences. They are able to control the class of pictures which are shown in their theatres. Their business demands that they be keen students of human nature and that they be governed by the expressions of interest of their audiences.

How shall be met the demands of the children for amusement? About fifteen per cent of the audiences of motion-picture houses thruout the United States are young people under sixteen. It is generally agreed that the pleasure of children should be active rather than passive, and in the open air rather than within doors. It is further agreed that the censor should seriously consider the influence of the photo-play which has been constructed primarily for the adult. The constructive way of meeting this problem would appear to be that of substitution rather than prohibition. It is possible in every city to exhibit pictures which are satisfactory to the child mind and to encourage parents to allow their children to attend only such performances. One writer says, "There are already thousands of films that can be used by churches and Sunday-schools and young people's societies. The imperative need just now is a system of circulation and handling of those worthy ones on the market and those coming into existence from time to time so that no religious organization will be taking any risk or subjecting themselves to criticism."

Real Difficulties and the Reasons:

The difficulty in obtaining films which are satisfactory for use in churches, parish houses, and similar institutions must be met. It may be well to speak briefly as to why such films are not available for such worthy purposes. Owing to the indifference of educational and religious institutions, the motion picture is almost entirely in the hands of those who are using it for gain. This does not mean that it has been unworthily used, but it does mean that it has been capitalized and commercialized. Films now must do service like trolley cars, railroad equipment, and ocean-going liners, which bring in regular financial returns. From the business standpoint, the demand of churches, schools and libraries has been irregular. Those using the films desire a large service at the minimum price and are regarded by business men as poor pay. Many of them, moreover, have been unbusiness-like in their dealings with the companies circulating films and have caused delays which are irritating. The commercial film houses have made some costly experiments with disheartening results in attempting to enlarge and meet this demand.

Do you desire to possess influence in changing the play houses of your city for the better? Go to them, don't stay away. Study the pictures and their effects on the audiences. Analyze their appeal. Form the acquaintance of the keen-minded proprietor who daily listens to the comments of his clientele. Let him know when you are pleased. Speak to him about the future shows. Support the decent, conscientious men; and there are many. Discriminate between houses, if necessary. Results will surely follow. Don't censor and condemn without accurate knowledge. "Go and tell him his fault, between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou has gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, take with thee one or two more . . ." Only then, "Tell it unto the church" or city. In most of our cities, there are one or more picture houses (1 to 5,000). These are keen to give their clientele what they want. A group of skilled laymen during the Newark campaign of the Men and Religion Forward Movement canvassed the city for evils in the picture houses and almost unanimously reported that they were clean in the shows presented and that the conduct of the audiences was above reproach.

"The public is fast realizing that besides being the greatest known amusement factor, the photo-play acts as a sort of rest producer, a sort of check valve on the human nerves, bringing refreshment and rest to a troubled mind instead of filling sanitariums with human wrecks as the direct result of overworked nerves."

The Difficulties of Censorship

Among the various forms of public or commercial amusement—dancing, baseball, college athletics, racing, boxing, the theatre and vaudeville—there is none which is cleaner or more wholesome than the motion picture. It is, however, a new art, which has grown so rapidly that it is impossible to pass judgment upon it from month to month. Changes have been made in projection machines, cameras, acting, the themes used, the devices for dramatic effects, as well as in the producing companies, methods of circulation, the theatres, and the advertising. It is unfair to criticize a motion picture on the basis of the character of films produced when the art was new and the results obtained were crass and spectacular. The entire amusement is suffering from judgments which were formed during that early period.

Concluded on Page 8

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

Apr. 9, 1916. Judica, fifth Sunday in Lent

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

DENOMINATIONAL DUTIES

- M. Apr. 3. Co-operation. 1 Cor. 12: 1-12.
T. Apr. 4. Gifts. 2 Cor. 9: 1-5.
W. Apr. 5. Earnest prayer. Ps. 122: 1-9.
T. Apr. 6. Zealous service. 1 Tim. 3: 1-13.
F. Apr. 7. Willing testimony. Acts 5: 17-29.
S. Apr. 8. Clean lives. Eph. 4: 1-15.
Sun., Apr. 9. Topic:—What my Denomination Expects from its Young People. Ps. 84: 1-12.

Suggestions to the Leader

Our topic is an appeal for denominational loyalty and support. The leader ought to be well informed as to the principles for which our Evangelical Church stands, and the work our Evangelical Church is doing. Bring out the need of denominationalism. Every denomination represents a specific family in the great kingdom of Jesus Christ. Its prime reason for existence is the historic development of the nation in whose midst the denomination originated. No nation is doing her duty towards the Kingdom of Jesus Christ that does not contribute something specific towards the development of that Kingdom. Thus every denomination is the fruit of this distinct national contribution to the development of the faith in Jesus Christ. We cannot at this time subscribe to the creed of the so-called "Internationalism," according to which every man is asked to renounce his loyalty and adherence to any one race, and proclaims himself to be a member of the great human race. We realize that patriotism belongs to our fatherland, and that true service to mankind can best be rendered thru the channels of our national life. Neither can it be conceived at this time, which is properly regarded as the formative period of the struggling Christian Church, that a man can be loyal to the cause of Jesus Christ who renounces membership in any specific denomination, and proclaims himself to be a member of the Church universal. Human life demands divisions in organization, for the purpose of perfecting and completing the work assigned to us. Thus we shall need the smaller division that denominations stand for, but work and pray that these smaller divisions may each live out the principles characteristic of them and thus contribute to the sum total of divine revelation.

The Topic Presented

The topic may be presented in the form of various sub-topics assigned to different members for treatment. Carry out the following outline sub-topics, and have them discussed by different members of the society.

What does our Evangelical Church expect of her Young People?

1. Our Evangelical Church expects her young people to be loyal followers of Jesus Christ. That includes an experimental knowledge of Jesus Christ, a public confession by word and deed of our faith in Him, as our Saviour, a consistent logical life in Christian righteousness, that the world seeing our good works may praise our Father in heaven.

2. Our Evangelical Church expects her young people to be informed as to the principles for which our denomination stands. Our Evangelical Church stands for the Gospel of Jesus Christ only. The Evangelical Church is not named after a man, be it even a Paul or Luther, nor after one of the sacraments, nor after a certain form of organization, but after the message Jesus came to proclaim, and the mission with which Jesus commissioned His followers and disciples,—Evangelical. The Evangel, the Gospel is our heritage, and to proclaim that Gospel, to evangelize the world, is our duty and commission. Jesus Christ is the heart and life of the Gospel, He is also the center of our Evangelical Church.

3. Our Evangelical Church expects her young people to work for the spreading of these principles. This implies active work and sacrificing service.

1. Service in our own congregation. Every young person ought to have some definite task to perform. There is so much that you can do, and still more that you ought to do. The Sunday-school, League, Mission Society, etc., all offer opportunities of definite service.

2. Preparation for this service. It is not only important that we know Jesus Christ, but we must also know the best methods and best plans of work. After Jesus had awakened in the disciples the conviction that He was the Messiah of Israel, and the Saviour of the world, then He called them to His discipleship and trained them in methods of service. No one can be a loyal disciple of Jesus Christ who does not develop intellectually, and is not willing to perfect the working plans of the Church. Training classes ought to abound in every congregation, Teacher Training Classes, Mission Study Clubs, Reading Circles, etc. Smaller groups of young people, who are anxious to specialize in certain branches of work, such as Primary work, Teen Age work, Boys' Work, etc., ought to unite and pursue these special studies. It is absolutely essential that we specialize in our work, and prepare thoroly for this special work.

3. Financial support. The denomination has given you more than you ever can repay. No child can pay for his own raising, even if all the wealth of the world were his. Love and the molding of the inner life is a priceless task. The generations of noble lives that have made their church a possibility, the day after day, year after year influence, that has helped form your life and developed your conviction and character, calling out the best in you, these are blessings for which you can never pay. Therefore we can give the means to make these blessings accessible to others, that the spirit of the Evangelical Church be maintained on earth. With your money you will also give thought and prayer and service.

3. Our Evangelical Church expects her young people to co-operate with the other Christian denominations. Interdenominational work is impossible where denominational loyalty does not exist. Loyalty to your denomination does not preclude knowledge of other denominations. Ignorance of this sort breeds bigotry, and fanaticism. These are evil, and must be crushed wherever they appear. They are a counterfeit Christian faith, and will never pass for the genuine in the realm of the Master.

Some Questions on the Topic

What do we owe to our denomination? With what does our denomination provide us?

How can we support our denomination?

Why is the liberal use of denominational literature essential in the development of Evangelical Christians?

What has our Evangelical Church a right to expect of you?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Loyalty to the Church—Ezra 10: 7; Matt. 16: 19; John 16: 2; Rom. 14: 1; 15: 1; 16: 17; 1 Cor. 4: 19, 21; 1 Cor. 16: 22; 1 Thess. 5: 14; Rev. 22: 19.

Love for the Church—Psalm 122: 6; 128: 5; Isa. 22: 4; 58: 12; 62: 1, 6, 7; 66: 10, 13, 14; Jer. 14: 17; Eph. 4: 25; 5: 30; Rev. 21: 27.

A Prayer

When Thy children returned from the land of captivity they sought to build Thy temple, that Thy kingdom might again be established upon the earth. Thou hast delivered us, O Lord from the captivity of sin. Rejoicing in our deliverance we are seeking to build Thy temple on earth, that the message of deliverance and salvation might be brought to all mankind. Help us, Lord, to use right these means which Thou hast placed within our reach. We thank Thee, for our Evangelical Church. She has broken unto us our spiritual food, guarded us against unbelief and superstition, guided us into the heavenly truth. We thank Thee, for the ministry of Thy word, and pray that we may grow more in grace and understanding, that we may be living stones in Thy kingdom, living witnesses of Thy truth. Save us from error and indifference, and hasten us in our work, that thru our testimony others may be brought into the fold of Thy flock. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson 2.—Challenging Jesus

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Apr. 3. Matt. 15: 39-16:12. Challenging Jesus.
T. Apr. 4. John 12: 36b-50. Blind Leaders of the People.
W. Apr. 5. Matt. 15: 29-38. Jesus' Compassion.
T. Apr. 6. John 8: 12-20. Jesus the Light of the World.

F. Apr. 7. Isa. 61: 1-11. Isaiah's Vision of the Messiah.

S. Apr. 8. John 6: 30-40. The Heavenly Manna.

S. Apr. 9. John 12: 20-36. The Sign from Heaven.

Lesson Key:—"A stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence; for they stumble at the word; being disobedient: whereunto they also were appointed," 1 Peter 2: 8.

It is a strange and perplexing fact that the Jewish people, after waiting for their promised King and Deliverer for more than a thousand years, should not only not have recognized Him when He finally came, but should even have consciously and decisively rejected Him after He had made himself known to them. And when it is remembered what the coming and the ministry of Jesus could have meant to His people if they had received Him as their Messiah and Lord and wholeheartedly followed His leadership, their failure to do so amounts to a tragedy that is hardly equaled in the annals of the race. We may understand this tragedy only as we understand its causes, i. e., the perverted ideals and wrong desires with which the people had come to regard their promised Messiah and what He was to accomplish for them.

At the very beginning of their national life Israel had been made familiar with the one purpose of God in choosing them as His people. The one condition on which they were thus chosen was that they should hear His voice and keep His covenant, and the only reason why they were thus chosen was that they were to become a kingdom of priests and a holy nation. Moses had emphasized these facts again and again, and the prophets and men of God who were raised up after him had continually laid stress upon them, while every event in their history, victory as well as defeat, and prosperity as well as disaster, had been ordained of God for the single purpose of making them understand and remember them. And yet, when all things have been prepared, and they are asked to partake of the fullness of the divine blessing so graciously and generously offered, they deliberately turn their back upon the Giver and the gift, for no other reason than that it does not meet their wrong and unfounded earthly and material expectations. They desired political freedom instead of freedom from the bondage of sin; earthly glory instead of the glory of God; an outward world-empire ruling over the nations, instead of the conquest of Satan and the forces of darkness thru the rule of God, and hence they could not and would not appreciate the spiritual and eternal blessings which were to be theirs. We have already seen how the opposition to Jesus began immediately upon His appearance, and continued and increased as the spirit of His life and work became more plainly evident.

It is inspiring to note the patience and persistence with which Jesus keeps His divinely appointed task in view in the very midst of the fiercest opposition and the most trying circumstances. Opposed to Him are all the rulers of the people, the very ones whose word had always counted for most among pious Israelites, and who were most highly respected as the representatives and interpreters of God's will, yet He shows no sign of weakening in His position. Tho He knows full well the fanatical temper of the enemy that has been aroused, and the cunning and hypocrisy with which they are laying traps for Him, He yet goes bravely forward in the calm and courageous conviction that the truth He proclaims and the work He has inaugurated is of God and that all the powers of hell shall not prevail against it. Nothing that may happen to Him personally can swerve Him from the singlehearted devotion to love and truth and righteousness, and the knowledge that these forces will finally conquer the world. In the face of every challenge and all opposition He is unshakably firm in His insistence that the things that count most in life and, in the last analysis, in the world also, are not the things of the world that pass away, but the eternal things of God that abide forever. The meek shall inherit the earth, and they that believe on Him, tho they die, yet shall they live; and whosoever liveth and believeth on Him shall never die.

What the Church and the followers of Jesus need today is a far larger measure of the determination to remain true to the highest and the best ideals and principles of Jesus Christ. The forces of darkness and evil are gathering for the final conflict, it seems, with the forces of truth and righteousness, and they are using every inducement that can be secured and that will appeal to an ease- and pleasure-loving age to win men to the worship of mammon. It has probably never been so hard to stand firmly by one's Christian convictions as it is to-day, since the enemy is very often not plainly visible, like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, but rather fashions himself as an angel of light, with ministers fashioning themselves as ministers of righteousness, seeking to tempt and pervert even the elect. There is constant need of earnest prayer for enlightenment and the guidance of the Holy Spirit to discover the truth in the midst of error and falsehood, and of heroic devotion and determination to follow out the will of Jesus Christ, when it has been learned, to the bitter end, if necessary.

Denominational Continued from Page 4

this is the Lutheran Church, etc. Then he walked to a higher position, sat down and watched developments. Presently the tide set in. Closer and closer the water rolled on, until all the puddles were filled, then overflowed and directly there were no puddles distinguishable. There was only one great swelling sea. Then Philips Brooks prayed: "Lord, send a flood-tide of Thy spirit and fill our little lives as the water filled the puddles, that we may overflow with divine power and all become one as Thou art one!"

We should like to have a photograph of our beloved President en route to a certain Wyoming town on a rickety hay-rack. He had arrived at the nearest railway station at two A. M. The appointed farmer had not appeared. Finally at two P. M. the man came. He had been out on his new homestead twenty-five miles distant and had not received the pastor's announcement of his coming, and had even now just come thru the station town "by chance." The bottom of the wagon consisted of boards nine inches apart. The pastor was bidden to take his seat on a sack of corn and see that the rest of the cargo was not lost. So the President Jans held on to his suit-case with one hand and to a sack of flour with the other and with his foot tried to steady a sack of potatoes. He succeeded well for a few miles, when suddenly the outfit struck a typical Wyoming rut and out went the potatoes. The economical farmer must have every potato—but the rest we will leave for the reader's imagination.

During all this trying experience, the pastor was working hard to get acquainted with the farmer, whom he knew to be a key-man in the colony of beet-raisers, and it was he who had induced Rev. Jans to make the trip. But now he was as hopeless about the prospects in the Wyoming section as formerly he was optimistic. The people were deaf to his invitations. However, he explained that the most of the men were that afternoon gathered in the town for an auction. Thither preacher and farmer repaired. One by one the men were interviewed and cordially invited to a service on the following day, Sunday. The result was a Sunday morning congregation of ten adults and some children. But it was an impressive service. A girl of 15 years was catechised and found to be well versed in the catechism. Her parents, devout and intelligent Christians, had been her teachers. So Pastor Jans did not hesitate to confirm her in this service.—Here, too, bi-monthly services were promised.

Many more settlements of Evangelical people like these remain unvisited in Colorado and the West. Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that He may send laborers into His vineyard. —J. J. Braun.

Practical Expressions of Protestant Christian Life in Germany

Concluded from Page 6

of the German settlers had been undertaken by Pastor Borchard as early as 1863. The efforts to seek out and minister to the Germans of the southern provinces of Brazil has been most successful and is still being effectively carried on.

Another influential agency of German Evangelical life and work is the Evangelical Press Association for Germany (Evangelischer Pressverband fuer Deutschland) which was organized in 1910. In the comparatively short time of its existence it has succeeded in unifying and systematizing the entire Protestant publicity service, so that subscribers receive all the important church and missionary news at first hand, treated simply as facts, without comment, except where it becomes necessary to give explanations or correct errors. The service is being more and more recognized as impartial and authentic even by secular papers, which make free use of the material furnished. The work is being developed along four distinct lines: the journalistic section, which deals with the reports transmitted to other papers; the observation section, which is on the lookout for direct or indirect attacks upon Protestantism or religion in general; the correspondence section, which furnishes special and devotional articles, and a defensive and offensive section, which meets any attacks that may be made with authoritative articles by competent writers, and exposes the character and the motives of the attacks and of those who make them.

The National Evangelical Union (Evangelischer Volksbund), devoted to the promotion of positive Evangelical teaching as against liberal movements on the one hand and popular indifference towards things religious on the other, the only three years old, has already secured a membership of 42,700 (1914). "That portion of our people who still hold to the Bible as the revealed Word of God," said the call for organizing the Union, "is being forced into a life and death struggle, the like of which, in intensity and far-reaching importance, has not been known in the history of the Church. Two points of view, as diametrically opposed to each other as day and night, as fire and water, are struggling for supremacy in the nation and in the Church. The very existence of religion in general and Christianity in particular is at stake, 'to be or not to be, that is the question.' The battle-cry, 'Here Wittenberg—here Rome!' has been superseded by the cry, 'Here Christianity—here anti-Christianity!' The aim of the National Evangelical Union is to so unite and mobilize the entire force of Bible Christians in Germany that it shall be able to win the decisive battle that is drawing nigh between the prince of darkness and Him who is the Light of the world." The willingness with which the means for such a program are being furnished by the members and the manner in which the membership was almost trebled in the second year, indicate that the Evangelical people of Germany understand the danger of the present situation and are responding heroically.

In the above we have sought to show a few of the chief activities thru which the Evangelical Christians of Germany are giving expression to their faith, their hope and their life. Space permits only a brief mention of the most prominent agencies, and a long list of others might be mentioned, especially the far-reaching, well organized service of Evangelical deaconesses, of whom there are about 20,000 in the different Homes and hospitals, and who are now to a very large extent devoting their trained services to the physical and spiritual care of the wounded soldiers brought home from the front. Thousands of male nurses are engaged in similar services at the front, and in addition to the large number of pastors who have responded to their country's call to the field, the great armies on the east and the west are well supplied with chaplains, who minister to the spiritual needs of the wounded and the dying, distribute Bibles, Testaments and other Christian literature, and render any other service that may be in their power. From all this it is abundantly evident that Evangelical Christianity in Germany, notwithstanding the report circulated by hostile British interests, or biased, indifferent and uninformed American journals, is earnestly and aggressively active in holding its own and building the Kingdom.

The Problem of the "Movies"

Concluded from Page 6

The motion picture is not what it was even eight or ten years ago. It was then proved piffling, shocking, or insane. Out of this tertiary period it has emerged thru the stone age of brutishness and its pre-historic past into the age of intelligence, esthetics, morals, humor, and social values. Some credit should be given to an art, answering many human needs and portraying most human events, which has sprung, like Jason's warriors, into full and self-conscious manhood within some fifteen years! What if, still, there are some elements which grate on sensitive nerves, some crudities and some shortcomings? They are the minor and fleeting gaucheries of youth. They, too, will pass. It is true that some producers walk boldly into the inner sanctuaries of life where angels fear to tread. Most of them have undertaken the quest there to find those hidden forces and impulses which make or mar life. Some of the vast numbers of people viewing such stories winnow the wheat from the chaff and find food and comfort.

The motion picture strikes into the minds of people thru the eye. The figures of people walk up and down and live their brief lives. No audible word is spoken, but, thru action, association of individuals, surrounding and background, the story is told; the idea presented. By clever foreshortening, the events of years, the emotions of a lifetime, are told in an hour. No wonder that skilled psychologists and educators see in the motion picture an incomparable force and potentiality! Have you ever considered the power of indirect against direct advice in the region of social influence and morals? Of course, this is pre-eminently illustrated in the stories and parables of our Lord. The humble motion picture carries facts, laws, consequences into the minds of the spectators apparently as incidents. The story is told and the people see for themselves the cause, the progress, the inevitable entanglements or the casting off of burdens and shackles, and the final results. With minds like our own, they generalize and do it wholesomely. They also make the personal application and store up the teaching against the day when their own wills need strengthening. Concede to the motion picture the same powers which are granted to the book, the painting and the event in real life. Let it tell its own story and sink in. It knows how to touch the heart-strings, stimulate the mind, train the will and accomplish the results in action. It can be a true hand-maid to the cause of pure religion.

It is because it is vital and lays a firm, if sometimes ignorant, hand upon the forces of life that the motion picture is here. It cannot be dislodged. It appeals to people primarily as an amusement and relaxation, but cunningly weaves into such hours of play thrills, thoughts, emotions, the elements for imagination, instruction and culture. "The church must not only see that the motion pictures are carefully regulated so as to be fit for general use but it must actually use them." The church needs to recognize that people require relaxation, amusement, change, and thrill. It can as little stand aside from these periods of happiness as from the solemn, tragic or holy moments.

Now Ready! Order immediately!

YOU WILL NEED THIS BOOK
FOR YOUR EASTER SERVICES

Evangelical Book of Worship

MOROCCO. GILT EDGES

Size and Style like our German Kirchen-Agende
Antique

Price, Postpaid $3.00 Net

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,
1716—18 Chouteau Ave., ST. LOUIS, MO.

202 South Clark St., CHICAGO, ILL.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo. All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., APRIL 6th, 1916

NUMBER 14

Christianity and Politics

To the minds of many good people Christianity and politics appear mutually exclusive. The word "politics" seems to them so suggestive of graft, intrigue and general corruption that the pure and lofty ideals for which Christianity stands can have nothing to do with it. The idea of politics smacks so much of the world and the things that are in the world that he who appreciates the otherworldliness of Christianity and would do the will of God must necessarily keep away from anything that has any connection with so demoralizing a subject.

It is not difficult to understand such an attitude, for those who have come to realize what Jesus Christ means to the inner life of men, who have felt the saving, cleansing, uplifting influence of His Gospel, and thru it have learned to seek the things which are above, where Christ is, naturally feel inclined to concentrate their entire attention upon the spiritual life. They think so much of their newly-discovered treasure that they gladly count all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus their Lord, and lose interest in everything that has no direct spiritual bearing. They remember, too, that on one occasion where Jesus was confronted with a question of political duty, He answered those who were seeking to trap Him, "Render therefore unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." That principle seems to lay down a clear-cut dividing line between religious and political interests, and to justify the action of those who hold that one excludes the other.

The fact is, however, that Jesus' words have no such meaning. In fact, what Jesus emphasized was just this, that both religious and political duties must be taken care of. What He meant was not that rendering unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's made it impossible to render unto God the things that are God's, but rather that he who would fulfill his whole duty conscientiously must both render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's. Jesus' idea of human life was not that there was a great gulf fixed between those things that concerned themselves with the life beyond and those that concerned this life, so that the one might be called God's sphere, while the devil was supposed to hold sway in the other. It was rather Christ's aim that the spirit of righteousness, which is the Spirit of God, should permeate and control every human interest and every human relationship. The kingdom of God He had come to establish meant the supremacy of God everywhere, the rule of God at every point in every human life, so that the lives of its citizens might reflect God's will in every thought, word and deed and thus help to re-form, i. e., to make over every human condition that was not in accord with the will of God.

Jesus could have meant nothing less than this when He said to His disciples, "Ye are the salt of the earth," "Ye are the light of the world," "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a leaven." If these expressions mean anything at all they mean that, as the salt must show its effect upon everything it touches; as the light in the darkness cannot be hidden; as the leaven continues to act until all the meal it can reach is leavened, so the royal rule of God, working in and thru the lives of all true disciples of Christ, will and must exert a real, definite, purifying enlightening and regenerating influence upon his surroundings. Such an influence will naturally express itself in the personal life of the Christian, in his home life and in his relations with others, and in his attitude toward the things and conditions among which he lives. If Christianity were merely a form of belief or a system of teachings or a set of convictions upon certain subjects it could withdraw itself into the quiet seclusion of monasteries and convents and, content with the personal holiness that might there be attained, let the world run its course. But the religion of Jesus Christ is a living thing, a force that moves and grows and acts, and that is known by its fruits, a divine power at work in the world that not only will not and cannot be hedged in by human definitions or limitations, but that will eventually conquer every evil influence.

In a democracy politics is the very life of the people. If the people are to rule not only some of the people but all of them must take a deep and abiding interest in public affairs of every kind. Where politics in the United States are corrupt it is largely because the best, i. e. the Christian, citizens of the country have permitted them to become so thru their

A THOUGHT FOR LENT

To Calv'ry, Lord, in spirit now
Our weary souls repair,
To dwell upon Thy dying love,
And taste its sweetness there.

Thy sympathies and hopes are ours;
Dear Lord, we wait to see
Creation, all, below, above,
Redeemed and blest by Thee.

—Samuel Denney.

indifference or indolence. In a country where the people have it in their power to improve the government and the conditions under which people live, indifference toward public affairs and indolence in promoting the welfare of the nation is actually treasonable, because the nation has a right to expect every citizen to take an active part in the life of his community, his state and the entire nation. And the Christian citizens of the country, who are keeping out of politics are injuring their country most of all because their convictions, their attitude and their influence could constitute so great and powerful an influence for better things. Far from being un-Christian or disgraceful being in politics is thus rather a Christian and a patriotic duty of the utmost importance, as well as a great opportunity for applying the principles of Christian truth and righteousness to every-day affairs and conditions.

The National Missionary Campaign and Congress

As the National Missionary Campaign draws to a close the manner in which it has stirred the country is becoming more and more evident. "In city after city," says Men and Missions, "the auditoriums where meetings were held have been crowded to the doors, and in a few cases overflow meetings have been necessary for the women who had to be removed from the galleries to make a place for the men who had registered and wished to get in. From practically every city came expressions of wonder at the attendance at the day sessions. This feature of the campaign is so noteworthy that it is worth while to call attention to it again. In one city the local leaders warned the speakers that altho the attendance on Sunday and in the evening would be large, no one would attend the day sessions. Their astonishment was most interesting as they saw nearly a thousand people present when the first day session opened. The numbers grew from session to session until the day audiences were nearly as large as those at night.

No more striking evidences of the vitality of the campaign could be given than these."

The total number of registered delegates to the conventions held in twenty-two cities before Jan. 1 were 34,368. The conventions held since Jan. 19, the opening of the winter campaign, in twenty cities registered 27,096 delegates, and the incomplete figures from twelve other cities that are available to date, add 20,422 more. A dozen cities in which conventions were held during March have not yet reported, and the conventions in New York and Brooklyn, which close the campaign, are to be held from Apr. 9—16. The total number of 100,000 delegates aimed at when the campaign was undertaken is therefore practically assured, with the probability that 110,000 will be reached if not exceeded. That such signal success should have attended the progress of the campaign at a time of political and industrial unrest, with threatening conditions on our southern border and across the Atlantic, indicates a remarkably active religious interest on the part of the people. There can be no doubt that the churches of the country are stirred in regard to the nation's responsibility toward those who are still without the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The preparations for the National Missionary Congress, the fitting climax to the winter's series of meetings, are well advanced and the Congress promises to be an event of nation- and world-wide importance. It is the purpose to make this Congress much more a deliberative body than any of the preceding conventions have been, for the hope is that the delegates in attendance will be a group of men so thoroly representative of American Protestant Christianity that they will be very largely able to bring to pass whatever they may conclude that American church people ought to do.

In order that the Congress as held may not lack this deliberative force, it has been determined that no delegate will be admitted to the Congress except as he is appointed to his seat by one of the mission boards of his own denomination. The attendance has been limited to the seating capacity of Memorial Continental Hall, which is less than 2,000. Each denomination has been allowed only a specific number of delegates, twenty-five being the number allotted to the Evangelical Church. Volunteer applications will therefore not be accepted by the convention committee, but it is in order for any layman to inform his own denominational mission secretaries of his desire to attend, and the Boards will undoubtedly select their respective quotas for the Congress as far as possible from those who have sent in their names. Applications so filed with the Boards should be accompanied with the required registration fee of $5.00. Applications of Evangelical delegates should be filed at once with Rev. E. Schmidt, 1377 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

The mornings will be given up to general discussion of ways and means by which laymen can be enlisted in the missionary undertaking, while afternoons and evenings the order will be a succession of inspirational and informational addresses.

The registrations already received come from Texas, California and Washington and over thirty other states, thus showing that the Congress will not be an assemblage of men from any one section of the country, tho at present Virginia and New York seem to be rivals for first place in the number of delegates. A special rate of two cents per mile in each direction with a minimum of $1.00 for the round trip going and returning via the same route have been granted by the passenger associations. A special folder will be issued and sent to all registered delegates giving the names and the special rates at all desirable hotels.

THE LORD'S SUPPER

"But let a man prove himself"

"Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me and lead me in the way everlasting," Psal. 139: 23, 24.

If what we receive in the Lord's Supper depends upon our own spiritual condition, it is clear that none should come to the altar thoughtlessly, but with due self-examination. If the essential thing in partaking of the Lord's Supper is that we discern the body and the blood of Jesus Christ; that we understand what His life and His death stand for and mean to us, and accept what He has done for us in sincere and believing faith, then the matter is certainly worthy of the most earnest and heart-searching thought. For if Jesus Christ and His life and death mean anything at all to us it is something so vital, so personal and so intimate that we cannot afford to be anything less than very sure of ourselves and of our right relationship to Him. And that is why we should, as it were, look ourselves squarely in the face and learn to know the true character of our innermost being every time we plan to partake of the Lord's Supper. No careless or superficial thinking has any place where salvation from sin and eternal life are at stake.

And who of us has not realized, with the psalmist, that this is impossible without divine help? That the imagination of man's heart is evil means first of all that it is centered upon self. It is natural for all of us to exalt self in every way. We think of ourselves first; we naturally have a good opinion of ourselves; our desires, our motives and our ambitions seem to us just a little worthier than those of others. It is not easy for us to believe that our thoughts, desires, words and deeds are really sinful. We say so, perhaps, because we have been taught that way, and because conscience convicts us of guilt in many instances, and we listen quietly to what the Word of God tells us about the corruption and iniquity of the human heart, but even tho we believe we are not convinced; the heart is biased in its own favor and therefore easily overlooks the secret sinfulness and evil it ought most to see. It takes the all-seeing eye of God to search and fathom the hidden depths of the human heart, deceitful above all things, and exceedingly corrupt, and only He who is absolutely holy, righteous and just can judge it rightly. They who come to Him with the prayer of the psalmist upon their lips and in their hearts, ready to submit to the thoro and persistent searching of the Holy Spirit thru the living and active Word of God, sharper than any two-edged sword to pierce even to the dividing of soul and spirit, and quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart, will not deceive themselves by saying they have no sin. Because they earnestly desire to know the truth they shall see the truth about themselves, and the truth shall make them free, because only as the truth concerning our sins is known and admitted can we realize the need of salvation and accept the blessings which Christ offers.

Turning on the Searchlight

With the help of God and the earnest determination to know the actual condition of our hearts, we shall then make it our serious business to find out whether we still secretly or openly cherish any form of sin; whether we have been conscientious enough in our Christian life and every-day conduct; and whether we earnestly repent of the wrong things in our lives that will be uncovered there. Luther gives this advice: "Consider thy station in the light of the Ten Commandments, whether thou art father, mother, son, daughter, master or servant; whether thou hast been disobedient, unfaithful, idle, angry, impure, or revengeful; whether thou hast wronged any one in word or deed, or hast stolen or been neglectful to any one's wrong or injury." Every station or condition in life has its own duties and its own transgressions, and it is our business to see to it that we perform our full Christian duty in every way. The Ten Commandments represent the will of God, and all of them have their special application to every human life, from the first Commandment, which requires that we fear and love God and trust in Him above all things, to the last, which forbids all evil lust and desires and requires that we delight in God and in His holy providence.

A searching self-examination in accordance with the standard set by the Ten Commandments will lead every sincere inquirer to repentance, i. e., to a recognition of his own sinfulness, to sorrow and regret for the actual sins that have been committed, to the confession of wrong-doing to those who have been wronged, whether God or man, to the renunciation of sin and the yearning for the grace of God thru which sins are forgiven. Those who think they need no repentance have not examined themselves very thoroughly. Those who after earnest and honest self-examination think they must regard themselves as unworthy of the blessings of salvation that are vouchsafed to them in the Lord's Supper, should also remember that salvation thru faith in the grace of God in Christ Jesus requires no merit of our own, no sufficiency thru our own effort, but only a repentant heart that sincerely wants to be relieved of its guilt and sin and be clothed with the righteousness of Christ.

When that point has been reached the heart is ready to receive by the hand of faith the blessing which Jesus Christ offers, forgiveness of sins, life and salvation. Every Lord's Supper is a new opportunity for strengthening the inward man with the bread of life, for establishing and confirming the communion with Christ and with all His believers and declaring one's faith in the death of Christ for the sins of mankind. By the firm confidence of faith we accept and retain the atonement for our sins and the reconciliation with God established by Christ, and this faith is therefore necessary to a worthy partaking of the Lord's Supper, 2 Cor. 13: 5. Faith directs our lives Godward and effects a consecrated and sanctified way of living. Jesus does not demand of us a faith like that of Peter or Paul; even a weak faith is faith nevertheless, and will receive the nourishment it needs at the Lord's table. Those who come with this purpose in mind will not come in vain, for the Lord himself will strengthen and confirm their faith.

When we are planning to attend a festivity of any kind no one would think of going in any other than clean and presentable apparel, and without being sure that every part of the apparel was properly arranged. Should we not bestow far more care upon the condition of our hearts and the proper spiritual preparation when we are to be guests at the Lord's table? As we prepare our hearts for coming to the Lord's table on Good Friday or Easter, let us pray with the psalmist, as above, that our self-examination may be sincere and searching and may be accompanied with true repentance and real faith. Then there can be no doubt of our worthiness to come nor of the forgiveness of sins, life and salvation we shall receive.

What a Winter Taught Him

BY CORA S. DAY

A bad tempered baby was expressing its opinion of things downstairs. Its upraised voice mingled with the noisy quarreling of Teddy and Katie, the small twins.

"A fine, peaceful household, this," said James Connor to his reflection in the glass. He was just finishing dressing, and scowling over the racket below. "If it were not that examination is so near now, I'd get right out of this and go home. When it is over, and I am free—"

His face brightened at thought of that freedom ahead, when he should pack his few belongings and speed away, swiftly as trains could carry him—home! Such a dear, quiet, comfortable, tidy home. He drew a long breath at the mere thought of it in contrast with this.

If only there had been more advanced schools near it, he would not have been an inmate of his uncle's home this winter, to endure as best he could, for the sake of good school advantages, the slipshod, easy-going housekeeping of that uncle's second wife. It seemed the best place for him, in spite of its drawbacks. He knew no one else in the city. Mrs. Brannon was a good cook, whatever her other failings; and the charge was moderate, and a welcome addition to the slender Brannon income. So James had settled there for the winter, heroically made the best of what he could not help, and avoided the small cousins as much as possible. He was the only child of his own home, and did not relish the change to this noisy brood.

"Now for my housekeeping," he smiled to himself, stepping about and putting his room in order with the deftness of practice, and leaving it as neat as any girl of his age could have made it. He stepped into the hallway, closed and locked the door and dropped the key into his pocket. Only so could he protect his own against the ravages of the twins and keep undisturbed his one little oasis of tidiness in the house.

He had not locked his room at first. Such a thing was unheard of at home. But the twins wrought such havoc that at last he had, in great embarrassment, ventured to complain mildly to Mrs. Brannon. To his relief she listened and nodded assent with no sign of ruffled temper in her placid face or pleasant voice when she answered him.

"They are too bad, I know; but I've so many things on my hands, and the baby is so cross, it seems as if I just can't keep them out of mischief. Lock your door when you go out, James, then your things will be safe from the little rascals," and she laughed good-naturedly as she rescued the baby from the coal scuttle.

"It will lock her out, too," James thought, smiling to himself. "But I can keep things straighter than she ever has, thanks to my practice in helping mother about home."

So he did his own roomkeeping, partook of the excellent meals in which Mrs. Brannon seemed to center all her skill, studied as hard as he could, and looked forward to the homeward flight as a pleasant haven of refuge after the burden and toil of the year.

On his way downstairs that morning he came across a small figure sitting on the bottom step, bending over a torn story book, while another lay on the step beside him. This was Archie, the little boy Aunt Alice had left a baby when she died. He was a quiet, gentle little fellow, very unlike the noisy half-brothers and sisters. Mrs. Brannon was very good to him; indeed, he received many a tender word and caress that her own sturdy, boisterous youngsters neither missed, nor appreciated when given to them. Yet to James, Archie seemed as misplaced as himself in the happy-go-lucky family—that is, when James stopped to give his cousin a thought. Usually he was too busy to notice the quiet little chap, who never forced himself on his attention as the other youngsters did.

"Hello, Archie! See here, I almost fell over that book you had on the step. Don't you know you must not lay traps like that for folks?" he said as the boy glanced up with a little smile of greeting. The smile faded, and Archie hastily removed the offending book. James' conscience said something quite clearly and distinctly as he noticed the nervous movement of the little fellow.

"There, Archie, you needn't mind. I've eyes, and if I don't use them that is my fault. You have to get off in corners for any chance for peace, don't you?" he said sympathetically. Archie nodded silently, unsmilingly, and James tried again.

"Never mind, sonny. Next summer you shall go home with me and have a good time all to yourself. Wouldn't you like that?"

He expected instant and joyful assent. To his surprise Archie shook his head.

"No," he answered quietly but decisively.

"You wouldn't? Why not?" Astonishment mingled with chagrin at such prompt refusal of what he had considered a tempting offer.

"Because you are cross to me sometimes—and she never is," with a nod toward the kitchen and his step-mother.

It was a plain and simple explanation, and James carried it away with him as he went to school that morning. Unerringly the small boy had judged between them, and all his own virtues counted for nothing in Archie's eyes against the faults of Mrs. Brannon—when kindness counted on her side. In a flash James Connor saw himself as Archie saw him.

"I have been a pretty selfish kind of a beast all winter. I see it now, thanks to Archie's outspokenness," James told himself remorsefully. "I've been so completely wrapped up in my own comfort and convenience and plans and studies that I've never given a thought as to whether I could make things better outside of my room. If I had given a little more time to the youngsters, maybe I could have tamed them down a little and made things easier for myself and everybody else. I guess I've made a pretty complete failure of my winter in the Brannon household, no matter what I have done at school. Looks as if I had some reforming to do for the rest of the time I am here—"

He was always glad afterward that he had made that good resolution before the accident happened—before he had it knocked into him, as he put it. For the next minute something big and noisy and swift loomed up before him at the street crossing; the warning shouts of the spectators mingled with the frantic signal of the horn, and the next thing he realized was that he was gasping up to the frightened faces above him:

"Take me home—not to a hospital, please. Take me home to Aunt Mary."

They did as he wished. There was no gainsaying his insistence. A broken leg and some fractured ribs were not necessarily a hospital case, so they took him home to Aunt Mary. The doctor shook his head—mentally, as doctors must often do instead of physically—over the hallway littered with broken toys, and his equally unpromising glimpse of the rest of the house. He looked a little relieved at sight of the neat room to which the injured boy was taken, and completely satisfied when he saw how Mrs. Brannon took charge of the case, promptly, calmly, with unflurried speech and action.

"A born nurse," he pronounced her. "Not one woman in a dozen would do as splendidly as she did in such an emergency. Perhaps she is not a model housekeeper; but she has good, steady nerves, an easy pleasant way, and a kind heart that will just mother that boy well as fast as those broken bones will allow."

All of this prediction came quite true. Of course James's mother came posthaste at the news that her precious son had been worsted in an argument with an automobile over the right of way. Of course she claimed the position of head nurse, but she was far from being as strong and steady of nerve as easy-going Aunt Mary. It was not long before she was gratefully allowing the latter to go ahead and meekly following after her, doing the few things she could manage in the sick room, and helping further by putting, with the few deft, skillful touches which Aunt Mary had never learned, the house into such order as it had never known before.

Sitting-up time came at last. It was one day during that period that James found opportunity to make full confession to his mother of all the winter's failure to be a helpful member of the household. She listened, understanding many of the things he could not make plain in words, interpreting it all with her older wisdom and experience.

"Dear boy," she said when the story was done, "Aunt Mary has taught you something this winter—something well worth knowing, something that I'm afraid I did not teach you, because I was in danger of forgetting it myself. She may not be the best housekeeper in the world, and she may not train her children just as she ought. But we must remember that she came into her home here with no training for the work of a household. She is very willing and eager to learn all the things I have shown her in the way of better methods; she has done wonders in becoming so good a cook, and in bringing up her children to be so strong and well. I am going to help her to help herself—as I should have done long ago. The little folks will soon be outgrowing their present mischievous stage, too, and are just the bright, active sort to do great things with in the future. And Aunt Mary is so grateful for help.

"But about that lesson Aunt Mary has taught—the lesson of kindness and readiness to help others. We have been such a happy little family—father and I and our boy—that I'm afraid we have been in danger of forgetting our need of others and their need of us. For after all, James, no one of us, nor little family of us, no matter how selfishly happy, can live to ourselves. We need others—just as you needed Aunt Mary. They need us—as she did in a different way. It was well for you that when your need came she was ready to do her part. She makes me think, as she goes so pleasantly about her many duties, of that verse that says: 'In her tongue was the law of kindness'—and in her heart as well. It is a good law to learn and keep, isn't it? Suppose we try not to forget it again, and to remember that other verse, too, which says that we shall add 'to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity.'"

And James assented earnestly, sincerely thankful that returning strength was fast coming to enable him to practice that law which he had overlooked until Aunt Mary and her kind heart—with Archie to drive the lesson home—taught it to him.

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

Jewels

BY ARCHIBALD RUTLEDGE

The jewels are lost in the night,
Are darkened; and only by light
At length can their beauty be known.
Then the rose in the ruby is blown,
In the sapphire sparkles the ocean deep,
And the turquois cradles a sky asleep
In the tender twilights of tone.
On the beryl's shrine is the springtime shed,
In the agate the autumn is red.
As an angel, of beauty aware,
Adown the white shimmering stair
Thru the amethyst's crystalline door
A violet glory is led.
Thru the opal a far moon will roam,
As over a wild seashore,
Thru clouds that curtain her western home
She sinks to the foam.

O Master of love and of light,
O Giver of glorious day,
Not less than these jewels, we pray
Deliverance out of the night!
From the dim and the ignorant thought
Bring us forth as the jewels are brought;
By the might of Thy mind we were wrought;
Leave us not in the darkness alone!
More precious are we in Thy sight,
Are we, Thy children, Thine own—
Our radiance yielding more living delight
Than the wizard starlights of stone.
Our hearts, how imperfect they seem!
Their crystals are cloudy and marred;
Oh, yet, by Thy spirit starred,
They interpret Thee and Thy dream.
Beauty is lost till Thy radiance arrives;
Only Thy love can illumine our lives,
O Maker and Master supreme!

Give Yourself

"I don't see how you manage with so much company," said one woman to another. "Half the number of guests that you entertain would wear me out so that I should have to go to bed."

"I is all owing to a little secret that I learned," responded the elder woman. "It is worth its weight in gold, but I'm going to give it to you. I discovered that what my guests wanted most was not fine table service and an immaculate house, but just myself. You know company is literally together, with bread, while a function is something which we are bound by duty to perform."

The words are full of suggestion. Company often brings about an entire change in the family menu and its service. When guests are expected, the anxious housewife immediately sees dust on floor and table, flyspecks on windows, and disorder in the children's rooms. Mary must go to the florist's and John run to the confectioner's; husband must hurry home from the office, and slip up the back way to get into fresh clothes before he is seen, and everybody is put out more or less, shunted off the main track till the express goes by.

Yet think of the place where you like best to visit. It is not at the home of Mrs. Blank, who worries herself and her maids into a fever over imaginary defects in the roast or the pudding where you find only perfection, and who points out blemishes that you are unable to discern in her spotless rooms. I can see the very place toward which your heart turns with longing. There is a wide, roomy couch, with plenty of usable and much used pillows; magazines and papers at hand, not always in the most exact piles; rocking chairs are convenient, the children come into the room in their home clothes, unabashed, and the father is glad to see you. Your hostess sits down with you for a good talk, her mind sufficiently at rest to note a little shadow on your face, or a new light in your eyes. She is quite at leisure to take cognizance of your problems, and to put herself into the equation—which is sometimes all that is needed for their solution—or to bring her own experiences to you. How much it means to have some one to whom you can tell things! Company means companionship; it is from that root that we get our word "comrade."

This does not go to prove that we should never perform for our guests any of the little delicate acts of service which are such a delight to give as well as to receive. Love prompts these, and they are not wearing. The Japanese has a way of arranging flowers so that they have a special meaning for the one whom he is to entertain. But the guest who really cares for you will not be happier because you have tired yourself out to put an extra polish on floor or chair; rather will he be ill at ease because of it, and uncomfortable.

When your guest knocks, open the door wide into your own life. Give yourself—that is the difference between "company" and a "function."

—Gussie Packard Du Bois.

John Kellogg's Failure

Deacon John Kellogg, who sat in the second pew from the front, was generally the first man to shake the hand of the young minister after the sermon. The deacon's words of commendation were hearty, and they carried more weight than most words of praise, for the old man had lived a few years in the city, and had heard some famous preachers.

He had been a successful farmer, with money in the bank, but he had been ambitious to move to town and go into business. When he was somewhat past middle age, he had left his farm, gone to town, and entered into partnership with two other men. But after three years the business had failed.

So John Kellogg came back to the farm and began to pay off his debts. It took him a long time to do it, and when they were all paid, he was an old man, and his ambition gone. Nothing remained to him except his farm and his seat in the church.

The young minister had heard the story of those few years in the city, and once, while attending a conference there, he had met some one who had known John Kellogg. What he heard thrilled him with admiration. He resolved that when he returned home he would go to John Kellogg and tell him what sort of man he had discovered him to be.

Before the conference meetings were over, he received a telegram, and he hastened back, only to find that John Kellogg was dead. But what he had learned too late to tell him to his face, he told beside his coffin. Part of the people knew—but not all.

It was the dishonesty of John Kellogg's partners that had wrecked the business. Legally each partner was liable for the entire indebtedness, but the other two had hidden their property. John Kellogg might have escaped by the payment of his third, but he had refused to do that, because, he said, the people who trusted the firm had trusted him.

The debt was three times what in fairness he should have paid. But for honor's sake he had plowed corn year by year till he had paid the last dollar. When that was done, he was an old man. But had he failed?—Ex.

The Lord Permits no Hoarding

If we lock our strength in selfish indolence, it will be invaded by mysterious moth and rust, and subtle thieves will break thru and steal. A joy that is selfishly enjoyed dies out like a lamp deprived of oil. A blessing that is not shared withers away like grass that has no rain. Things are always fertilized when they are shared. They begin to propagate in the fine atmosphere of communion. God's holy dew and rain and sunshine fall upon human fellowships, while the selfish and exclusive life becomes dry and barren as a blasted heath.

Strange and gracious discoveries are made in the fraternal and sacrificial life. We go about distributing comforts, and we find comfort. We take heart's ease to our neighbors, and we return to find the gift of peace. We go down the roads of life lighting lamps of happiness for our neighbor, and lo! on our return blessedness is shining in our own chamber. We scatter flowers of good-will and beneficence, and lo! Eden blooms in our own garden. . . . Many hearts are poor because they never give anything away. God cannot pour anything in because they pour nothing out. Every time we graciously minister to our brother we make room for the grace of God.

—Dr. J. H. Jowett.

Denominational

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Installations

In accordance with the instructions of the respective District presidents the pastors named below have recently been installed in their various charges:

On Nov. 7, 1915 Pastor G. F. Schuetze at Berlin, Wis., by Pastor F. Kuether.

On Feb. 13, 1916 Pastor M. Peper as pastor of Colby-Milan parish, Wis., by Pastor J. Bizer.

Feb. 20, 1916

Pastor E. Beier at Browntown-Jordan-Wayne parish, Wis., by Pastor P. A. Schuh.

Pastor H. J. Hahn at West Toledo, O., by Pastor G. W. Krause.

On Feb. 27, 1916 Pastor J. Fisser at Lape-Dexter parish, Mo., by Pastor F. Bemberg.

Application for Membership

Pastor F. Fuerst, formerly pastor of St. Peter's Church, Halfway, Mich., now of North Detroit, has filed with the undersigned his application for membership in the German Evangelical Synod of N. A., announcement of which is herewith duly made according to the By-laws.

Paul Irion, Pres. Michigan District.

The Evangelical Academy at Fort Collins, Colo.

Some time has passed since we last reported to the readers of the Herald on the work of our institution, and it is time that we again appear in print. Some of our friends helped us to make Christmas-time real pleasant for our students. For the older students we selected the biography of Adolph Baltzer, so as to acquaint them with one of the early leaders of our Church. The younger ones received a volume of church history. Everybody was treated to nuts and candy.

Our lessons have not been interrupted since Christmas, altho we have lost some students. Our brother G. E., as first product of our institution, has been licensed to serve a congregation consisting of "home-steaders" out in Idaho, about 800 miles from here. His departure was rather unexpected, but were compelled to yield to the urgent wishes of these people if we were not to lose them altogether. Two younger pupils, who failed to develop sufficient love for the work, gave up their studies. One of our younger pupils is very ill at the hospital, just over an operation for appendicitis. We hope and pray that God, to whom all things are possible, may permit this young man, who was an earnest scholar, to remain with us. Our Senior class is at present composed of eight pupils and our Junior class contains six. We commend our work, a seed sown in hope, to the prayers of our readers.

J. Jans.

The Pastor's Home in Blue Springs, Mo.

Quite often we see new movements started with a blare of trumpets, a great show of apparent support, and a promise of success, which seemingly cannot fail to come. But after a few years nothing more is heard, and finally we learn that the movement has died a natural death. Great things, as a rule have a humble beginning and a slow but natural growth, they spring from some great need of the times and grow with a very real and living support.

Our Pastor's Home in Blue Springs, Mo., had a small enough beginning. The need of such an institution had long been felt, the only thing that was needed was for someone to plant the seed. This was done in 1906 when a Christian woman, a member of St. Peter's Church in Kansas City, Mo., made a donation of $2,000 to be used for the Church in any way that her pastor deemed best. Another donation of $500 was added by another member. Pastor Sauer thought that this money should be used in a manner that would make it of continuous benefit to our Synod; and so he conceived the idea of buying a plot of ground to be used in the foundation of a home for retired Evangelical ministers. He found, after considerable trouble, an ideal piece of ground on the outskirts of the little town of Blue Springs, about twenty miles from Kansas City. The original ten acre tract was at once deeded to the Synod, the General Conference leaving the West Missouri District in charge of the institution. A small cottage stood on the place, which was soon occupied by Pastor Pens and family. The institution found many friends from the beginning and their gifts made it possible to enlarge the property by the purchase of an adjoining piece of two and one-half acres on which also stood a small house. This house was remodeled and enlarged and Mrs. Pens and her sister moved into this new home. Pastor Pens died in the home.

Pastor Frank's Cottage at Blue Springs

It was intended to remodel the other house also, when something happened that brought the Home forcibly to the attention of our entire Church. Pastor Beyersdorff lost his sight in an unfortunate explosion and being without a home and unable to support himself on the small sum the Ministerial Pension and Relief Fund was able to pay him, the people of our Synod thought it only fair that a house should be built for his use. Blue Springs seemed the logical place. And the generous gifts of our congregations made the erection of two new houses and the remodeling of the old house possible. These first four cottages on the place, all occupied at present, compare favorably with the average parsonage; they have five rooms each and good cellars. The surroundings are the most pleasant imaginable. The little town of Blue Springs lies on a high elevation offering beautiful views, has a railroad and good rock roads connecting it with the neighboring towns; the trolley line will come sooner or later. The lots for the cottages are laid out on generous lines, there is plenty of room for gardens and for chickens; a large orchard furnishes plenty of fruit.

In spite of all this the Home has had its share of trouble. The occupants of the cottages as a rule come from other states; they have been used to an active life in an Evangelical congregation. In Blue Springs they missed the contact with a congregation, for Independence, the nearest one, is twelve miles distant. To-day Independence has been brought nearer by a "bus line," and the Home has grown sufficiently to have a social life of its own; it will grow still more and we are sure that the future will justify the judgment of the founders as to the value of the location.

Concluded on Page 8

"WE BEHELD HIS GLORY"

How the Spirit of Jesus Christ makes spiritual Heroes of every-day Men is the Wonder of the Ages. No other Power can do it

PROF. S. D. PRESS, EDEN SEMINARY, ST. LOUIS. FROM THE GERMAN BY PASTOR J. J. BRAUN

II

Beholding the Glory of Jesus in Spirit

Next to Christ himself, the most glorious thing on earth is a personality filled with His Spirit, a man in whom Christ has taken form.

The most glorious heritage that anyone ever left behind in this world is that which Jesus left His followers: that is, His Spirit. By this term we do not merely understand the wealth of His personal life on earth, rather His personal tho invisible presence. Therefore the Church of Jesus Christ, which came into existence upon the outpouring of the Spirit at Pentecost, is the most live organization that the history of the world knows. Thru the Spirit of Christ the glory of Christ is manifest in the Church. In a similar manner, at the beginning of Spring, nature manifests the glory of her great Creator. Gentle rains fall, the reviving rays of the sun shine warmly upon the land and all is suddenly full of life. Her glorious garb of tender green spread everywhere is a symbol of His joy. Even so, the Church feels the influence and the fire of His spirit and becomes the beginning of a new humanity, a symbol of the eternal Springtime of souls, the most eloquent testimony of the living presence of Christ in the world. In her inexhaustible power, in the manifoldness of her gifts, the Church is the image of the glory of her Lord.

Transforming Men

It is not a new institution that Christ puts into the world, but a kingdom of personalities, spirit-filled men like Peter, John, Stephen and Paul. Just herein does the glory of Jesus appear most beautifully that under the influence of His Spirit each man's own nature, his peculiar individuality, is developed. Christ produces originals; in each man He brings out the special image God planned for him. And consider the material with which He works! The work of Jesus stands unique in the history of the race. He calls fishermen and publicans to be apostles and makes them to be spiritual heroes. They become men whose principles and methods to-day serve as a guide to millions. Their writings are full of spirit and life and exert an immeasurably greater influence than all of the literature of the world, including science and art. Even the so-called immortal work of the greatest artists, Michael Angelo or Thorwaldsen, have no eternal value in themselves; they will finally fall a prey to the forces of corruption. The human artist can write ideals, paint or form them in plastic art, but only the Spirit of Christ, the divine artist, the sculptor of the soul can create living ideals, men who bear upon their brow the stamp of their divine nature, the character of eternity. All the heroes of the New Testament Church are His creations: Peter, John, Stephen, Paul and the others. The thing that characterizes them all is a thoroly developed individuality. This by no means signifies uniformity, but there is real unity with diversity, such as grows naturally out of the peculiar talents and the life of the individual. This is the greatness of Christ that He was able to awaken a diversity of light and life in a mixed group of disciples. By the sanctifying influence of the Spirit of Christ upon the individual character a special type of genuinely transfigured humanity was developed. In fact, within the sphere of New Testament personalities, we find the principle, originally good, which lies at the bottom of all the large branches of Christianity in its historical unfolding.

In the forefront is Peter, in accordance with the impulsive character of Simon, son of John. The original principle of his nature may be expressed in the one word "heart." He had a pure heart, inasmuch as his love was bestowed solely and undividedly upon the Lord, whose words were for him spirit and life and in whom he recognized the lord of his life. True, this love could occasionally be eclipsed, yes, it could even deny itself when in the hour of fierce temptation Peter was confounded in his estimate of Jesus. But it could not be entirely lost, for even after his denial, Peter could say: "Lord, Thou knowest all things, Thou knowest that I love Thee." Such love can upon occasion overreach itself. However, there is evidence in many a later deed of courage that the impetuous Peter was sincere in his avowal of allegiance: "Lord, I am ready to go with Thee both into prison and to death." When Simon had passed thru fiery trials and had come forth a purged character out of the school of Jesus, he became the rock of the Church, the founder of the Church of Christ. As a true man of rock, he holds his place at the head of the apostles at Jerusalem by his courage and eloquence thru all the persecutions of the first church and finally seals his love to his Master with a martyr's death.

Concluded on Page 8

Picked up by the Way

Interesting Items gleaned from Many Sources

There are still in America worlds to conquer for the tourist who likes to rough it and get away from civilization. One of these, in California, is described in Travel under the title "The Canyon of the Holy Kings." The region lies two and a half days' journey by stage and pack train beyond the railway, and is said to rival the Yosemite in scenic grandeur.

Charles P. Steinmetz, sometimes described as the world's greatest electrician, in an interview in Collier's says that the most important electrical and industrial problem of to-day is "the transportation of electricity." "The United States," he says, "should be covered with a mesh of power-transmission lines." These lines, he thinks, will eventually be as perfectly co-ordinated as are our present systems of railways, which make travel easy to every part of the country.

Manufacturers have different ideas as to the policy of admitting visitors to inspect their plants. A trade journal illustrates the extremes by two contrasting methods. One is that of a Chicago firm whose manager, when asked by a visitor for the privilege of seeing his plant, replied, "We don't let rubbernecks in." The Curtis Publishing Company, of Philadelphia, on the other hand, not only admits visitors, but employs a staff of guides to explain all details to the many persons who daily call at its offices.

Most people consider the American aborigines to have been easy victims of the sharper-witted whites in matters of buying and selling. A new book about "The Original John Jacob Astor," however, declares that "the Indian was a great bargainer," and says that Astor needed all his resources to get the better of the Indians in an exchange of commodities. He is said to have been the first fur dealer to become really proficient in the languages of the Mohawk, Seneca, and Oneida tribes, and this ability to talk to the Indians in their own tongue gave him great prestige among them.

Here is a good dog story, which may or may not be true: In an oil town in Texas a man went into a store and was at once approached by a large pointer dog which pawed his right leg in a wistful manner. The storekeeper said, "Give the dog a nickel." The animal, with the nickel in his mouth, rushed thru the door and across the street to a "hamburger" stand, dropped the money on the counter, and received a big red sausage, which he gulped down with great relish. The dog, it seems, got a dozen or more sausages in this way every day; he always, it is said, "made up" to well-dressed strangers for his nickel—sometimes, with genuine regard for the pockets of his "home folks," refusing to take the proffered coin from natives who wore the oil-driller's garb!

The United States Department of Labor has recently announced a summary of the legislation of the various states during 1915, in which labor is directly interested. In five states the administration of workmen's compensation, factory inspection and other labor laws were consolidated under one authority in an industrial commission. In Illinois an industrial commission on unemployment, consisting of three representatives of labor, three of employers, and three of the public, was established to investigate and to report at the next session of the legislature. California and Nevada also passed resolutions providing for the investigation of unemployment. Idaho passed a statute providing emergency employment by county boards of commissioners, employments to be on the highways and not more than sixty days' work to be furnished any person within one year. Public employment offices were established in California, Idaho, Iowa, New Jersey and Pennsylvania and the licensing and supervision of private employment offices were provided for in seven states. Idaho prohibited private employment agencies operated for gain. Arkansas and Kansas passed minimum wage laws relating to the employment of women and children, making eleven states which have such legislation. Idaho appointed a commission to investigate the subject. Arkansas and Pennsylvania strengthened their laws governing child labor.

THE PROBLEM OF THE "MOVIES"

The National Board of Censorship is an honest Effort to provide clean Entertainment for average Americans. Passing a Film does not mean approving it

ORRIN G. COCKS, ADVISORY SECRETARY NATIONAL BOARD OF CENSORSHIP OF MOTION PICTURES

II

It is just this venturesomeness into the untried regions of morals in society, this tragic or melodramatic presentation of vital problems, which causes conservative or timid persons to hesitate to grant approval. There are others, and many of them, who feel that life is so sacred that they can neither afford to use their time in the enjoyment of such relaxations nor to advise those who listen to their judgments to participate. All respect and admiration for such devoted and consecrated lives! A public policy, however, must be adopted by clergymen and people alike. What is true of the theatre, the reading of fiction, the principles of politics, the management of business and indulgence in various forms of play, is also true of the motion picture. Such a public policy, which affects the rank and file of the people, will be different from that code of principles which is worked out for the individual. Many thousands in every city may agree, in general, that life is so big and so worth while that they can not spare much time for that form of relaxation and amusement portrayed in the motion-picture show, but there are scores of thousands who have not this sense of the value of time and of the importance of the development of character. Their energies have been sapped by the long hours of work. Their leisure time is a period for violent reaction. Their brains have been benumbed by the dreary routine of life. Their imaginations need something to feed upon. Still others have become systematic searchers for pleasure. All these must be included when a public policy is formulated. Certainly, it does not do to look down from the hills of character upon the vast multitudes struggling in the valleys and plains of life, and condemn them all because their standards are not ours. There must be some working principles affecting the amusement and culture of the people to which approval can be given. It can not be stated too forcefully that the people will play whether we want them to or not. This craving of the individual will find expression whether there is opposition or sanction by intellectual or spiritual leaders. There are so many avenues down which the people travel to danger, to degeneracy, and to self-destruction that he is a wise man who supports the manifestations which are popular and wholesome.

The National Board of Censorship

In the spring of 1909, the character of the films and the conditions of the houses in New York were such that Mayor McClellan decided to close all the motion-picture theatres. This action forced the manufacturers who had large sums invested to appeal to Charles Sprague Smith and John Collier, of the People's Institute, to criticize the pictures in such a way that they would meet with public approval. The experiment was entirely new and was undertaken with some hesitation and fear by a public-spirited group gathered by Mr. Smith. The manufacturers agreed to interfere in no way with the decisions of this volunteer committee and to abide strictly by their verdicts. In the summer of 1909, the work of the organization which was formed (The National Board of Censorship) was extended to pictures for circulation thruout the entire country. From that date until the present time, the criticism of motion pictures has continued without interruption. As the industry has grown, the National Board has grown, until at present there are 165 skilled volunteers criticizing ninety-nine percent of the motion-picture output as a censoring committee, which is supervised in turn by a general committee of thirty-five. Soon after its organization, Mr. Smith found that it was necessary for efficiency to maintain a secretarial staff and an office. The expenses for this work were requested from the producing companies and were contributed. This arrangement has continued to the present day. The entire direction of this organization is lodged in the general committee, which originates policies, selects disinterested members for the committees and directs the entire work of the board. No one in any way financially interested in motion pictures is eligible for membership. The paid officials have no vote on individual pictures or upon questions of policy. The critics, serving on the National Board, have been drawn from those groups which are interested primarily in public welfare, the home, the child, clean recreation and education, or art.

The efforts of these volunteers have been directed, from the beginning, to removing only those elements from motion pictures which are harmful from an ethical standpoint. All pictures are, therefore, passed rather than approved. They have been judged from the standpoint of the adult, altho it has been recognized that thought must be given to the influence of the motion picture on the child. There has been no attempt to dictate from the standpoint of class, sect, intellectual bias, political or economic theory. The effort, on the other hand, has been to discover public opinion thruout the United States on what is morally fundamental.

Mr. Jones, Mr. Brown and their fellow citizens have no desire to have any one class or group condescend to them in selecting what they shall or shall not see. There is a vast deal of independence in this western world which demands freedom without indecency, vice or suggestiveness. These men and their like require only that their amusements shall be judged according to those fundamental standards of ethics which the American public writes for itself and revises from time to time. It is with this fundamental freedom in mind that the National Board of Censorship attempts its public service of removing the elements of evil from the picture shows exhibited nightly thruout the country. Personal standards or individual judgments will no do. Even if this organization had the desire, it would defeat its own end if it rendered decisions on the basis of the opinions of the cultured, the artistic, the professional, the social service, or the religious groups.

Local Legislation

The question of censorship is intimately connected with local legislation in the regulation of motion pictures. It is necessary to have a national organization dealing with the national industry which will enforce its rulings on questions of fundamental morals. A vast number of smaller cities and towns are adequately protected by this organization working in their interests. It is equally important to have official groups or individuals who shall be charged with the enforcement of public opinion in the larger cities.

It is well to bear in mind that the same picture is delivered to from thirty to 100 points in the United States for circulation on the same day. It starts upon its circuit to the motion-picture houses and is shown first to those theatres which are able to pay for the new and more valuable film. If the larger cities, therefore, make changes in the pictures, based on the complaint of citizens, it becomes almost impossible not to insert such changes when the films are circulated to the smaller surrounding cities and towns. Changes, therefore, which are insisted upon in the centers from which the film circulates are permanent until the film is worn out and destroyed.

The National Board sends a weekly bulletin to some 450 correspondents in all parts of the country. This bulletin states the action taken by the national group on all pictures. These reach the mayors and city officials in advance of the date of release.

In some of the cities of the country various local forms of censorship have come into being. These vary from the executive order of the Mayor of Boston to allow only those pictures to be shown which have been passed by the National Board of Censorship to those passed by a volunteer board with a paid secretary, appointed by the Mayor of Portland, Oregon.

Experience in the whole of the United States and over a period of six years has demonstrated that the most satisfactory way of handling the censorship of motion pictures is thru the constituted authorities. Voluntary boards of censorship have been tried in a number of cities and during the first few months they have been intensely active and repressive in their decisions. After the first enthusiasm has worn off and before they learn the complexity of the civic problem which is presented to them, they lose their interest and are brought together with difficulty. The work to be accomplished is a complicated one and some months are required to learn fairness and to develop skill. Before these are attained, the burden of the work has settled upon the shoulders of a few earnest persons who have leisure. It is, moreover, physically impossible for any group to review in advance the multitudes of films which are exhibited day after day in a city of from 75,000 inhabitants upward. The conscientious critics, therefore resign in despair.

If the motion picture were not a public and commercialized amusement, ministering to all the citizens, it might be regulated by those who have a certain well-defined ethical background. Since it is intended for all the people, it becomes necessary for those who are editing or criticising the films to lay aside their personal convictions and attempt to estimate the ethical standard of their city. In fairness to the mass of the people, their wishes and desires should be represented quite as freely and as fully as the wishes and desires of those who are cultured and have arrived at clear-cut and refined moral distinctions. This search for an expression of the will of the majority on questions of morality upon which there is no final agreement is far from easy. The volunteer critics discover that there are differences of opinion among their own number and that there would be further differences were they to call in other citizens with experience rather than theory.

In any American city which is committed to freedom of speech and thought it is quite unwise to render decisions regarding amusements which are, in effect, those of any class, sect, political or economic bias. Take, for example, a group of one hundred churches: there will be fully ten different opinions about the kinds of films which are desirable. Running thru all the denominations, there have been also questionings about the value of the motion picture as an instrument for church purposes, as well as an antagonism to this force which has attracted great masses of people. For the last three years there have been individuals and organizations who are struggling valiantly to develop public sentiment and to meet any demand which might arise in a way satisfactory to the church. These dreamers and public servants stand ready still to furnish the supply of films in different localities when the demand has grown to a self-supporting basis.

Religious News

Sunday-school Work entering new Phase

Various religious bodies in the United States are now for the first time represented in the management of Sunday-school affairs. The change, just brought about, is regarded as one of the most significant steps taken in recent years in religious education, in missions, and is likely to promote closer co-operation between Sunday-schools and the churches.

The World's Sunday-school Association formed in London in 1889. Three men, all laymen, are present officers of the American section. They are H. J. Heintz of Pittsburg; E. K. Warren of Three Oaks, Mich., and Arthur M. Harris of New York. Now it has been decided, and all bodies have ratified the agreement that one half of the managing men of the American section shall be representatives from the various religious bodies. Some of these will come from the mission boards, and some from the Sunday-school workers.

One million, six hundred thousand men and women in the United States give some part of their Sundays to teaching of classes in Sunday-schools. A plan is now formulating, endorsed by the Sunday School Council, for a nation-wide teacher training movement that is to offer courses covering three years. The Council named has in its membership all evangelical religious bodies, and the new plan is hastened somewhat, so the announcement states, by a pressing demand for trained teachers for schools organized on the Gary plan and on the Colorado and North Dakota plans. Co-operation will be had with the International Committee, and societies in many cities are adding to their staffs in order to put the plan thru. Just now educational agencies in the various religious bodies are taking stock of their forces, how they may unite.

During 1915 the growth in Sunday-school pupils within the United States is reported greater than for many years. The total is considerably more than 1,000,000 in a new total of 16,600,000. The single religious body that added most to its enrollment was the Southern Baptist, with 214,000, but close behind them were the northern Methodists, which gained 213,000. Southern Methodists gained 122,000 and northern Baptists 118,000. The gains of Presbyterians were 68,000 and of Episcopalians 61,000. Religious education leaders say new forces are at work, and they expect even larger growths within the next year or two.

Methodists Observing Asbury Anniversary

Methodists of all America are just now fixing their attention upon their first American bishop, Francis Asbury. It was just one hundred years ago that Bishop Asbury died in the home of a friend in Spottsylvania county, Va., while on his way to Baltimore to attend a Methodist General Conference. Methodist newspapers contain an address, prepared by Asbury but never delivered because its author never reached the Conference, and now for the first time come to light. Churches, conferences and Methodist societies everywhere are having sermons on Asbury's life and influence.

It is stated that in his ministry of forty-five years Bishop Asbury traveled 270,000 miles, or more than ten times the distance around the world, and practically all of these miles on horseback. He is said to have preached more than 16,000 sermons, and to have ordained 4,000 Methodist ministers. After him are named churches and institutions almost without number.

The exact anniversary date is March 31, but the memorial dates continue until May, when the General Conference of Methodists North, meeting at Saratoga, takes cognizance of the anniversary. When Asbury began to preach in 1771, immediately he arrived from England, American Methodism had 316 members. When he died it had 214,000, and Methodists are now claiming, in the countless Asbury addresses they are giving, a total of 8,268,757 Methodists, all names and bodies, in the United States.

The Methodist Book Concern, selling literature to Methodists to the value of $1,000,000, are erecting a new building in Chicago for Methodist headquarters, and enlarging the Cincinnati plant, all at an expense of $600,000. To aged Methodist ministers the Concern has just turned over, thru the Book Committee, a profit of $275,000 made last year. This sum is smaller by $25,000 than the $300,000 turned over the previous year, owing to the larger cost in 1915 of white paper, so the report just issued says. The business actually done was less by $50,000 in 1915 than that done in 1914, the falling off being general at all centres save Cincinnati, which showed a heavy increase.

The report of the Book Concern to the Book Committee, just made public, shows a circulation of the Methodist Christian Advocates of 250,000 copies per week. Other data, showing the strength of Methodism, the large northern body only, is a membership of more than 4,000,000, church property valued at $212,325,000, Sunday-school pupils numbering 4,500,000, and endowments above $50,000,000.

Topics for Prayer and Special Services

The Federal Council of Churches, endorsed by the Evangelical Alliance, proposed to the ministers and people of all America that they keep Holy Week, April 16 to 23, as a Week of Prayer. The request is not that Holy Week be substituted for the first week in the year, but that a second week be added. The topic proposed is "Glorying in the Cross," and the plea is made that "Among the endeavors Christians are making to move in unison toward God, we would suggest united prayer thru the week preceding Easter. The accompanying topics, which in a general way follow the days of 'His last week,' we present as helps in securing such union in worship and supplication.

The topics by days are as follows:

Sunday, April 16. Sermons on the King of Kings and His Kingdom in its Growth and Glory. The Redeemed City. In Evangelical churches Palm Sunday has, of course, its own significance, which should be given first place.

Monday, April 17. Thanksgiving and Cleansing. Create in us clean hearts, O God. In deep contrition for our sins let us seek the spirit of grace and supplications. Let us praise God for His forgiving love, for the intercession of our Lord, and for the strengthening of our churches, and let us open our hearts to the renewing of His Spirit. And while we thank God that we have been kept from entanglement in the war, now raging, let us pray the more earnestly for the multitudes who are stricken by it with untold sorrow. As aforetime Jesus cleansed the temple of unholy things may He now cleanse us from unholy motives and desires. Psalms 65: 1-4; 139: 23-24. Matt. 5: 8; 21: 22.

Tuesday, April 18. Authority and Courage. Be strong and of good courage. That we may not merely weep over city conditions but work zealously for city redemption, and pray that every agency for moral, social and religious benefit may be blessed; that we may not have cities of shekels and shackles, "Satan's throne," but cities of God. That the great forces centered in them may be brought under the sway of righteousness; that all who have to do with making and enforcing the laws may serve as powers ordained of God; that intemperance, gambling and social sins with their kindred vices and crimes may be suppressed. For the Rest Day, in the interest of the humblest toilers, and for the home, the honor of marriage, and the renewal of family worship. Psalms 2. Ezk. 33: 7-9. Matt. 22: 21. Romans 13: 1-7. 1 Peter 2: 13-17.

Wednesday, April 19. Loyalty and Unity. One body and one spirit. That we may exalt our Lord as Prophet, Priest and King; that every effort to heal divisions and to bring all Christians into effective unity may be blessed; that we may esteem churches to be great which most largely reveal beneficence, unselfishness and love. That immigrants of every name and tongue may have truer sympathy and brotherly kindness, and that racial enmities may be swallowed up in the love of God. That more and more Jews and Gentiles may believe in each other and work together for the good of the world. For education in schools, colleges and universities, and that the principles of justice and equity may be established between employers and employees. Psalms 122. Isa. 52: 8. Matt. 22: 37-38. John 17: 20-23. Eph. 4: 1-16.

Thursday, April 20. Heart Searching and Consecration. Making ready the guest chamber for the Lord. For a new spirit of separation unto service and an entire surrender of ourselves to Christ; that we may have a deeper reverence for God and His truth; that the living Church and its ordinances may have a larger honor and that spiritual life may be enriched. That flood tides of personal and co-operative evangelism may roll over our land and that our churches may welcome multitudes confessing Christ; that with His mind who said: "As the Father hath sent me so have I sent you," officers and teachers of our Sunday-schools, and hosts of men and women may be moved to go forth for the winning of children and youth to Christ and the Church. Psalms 51: 10-13; 139: 1-6; 23-24. Isa. 6: 8.

Friday, April 21. Sacrifice and Service. The cross and its glory. That the Gospel may be preached with simplicity and power; that Christ's unselfish love may set us on fire with His zeal to seek and to save the lost. That Christ may be lifted up to bring men to God; that the cross may become the principle of union and fellowship among all Christians, and that all who confess His name may serve God and man in whole-hearted devotion. John 1: 29; 12: 24, 32. 1 Cor. 2: 2. Gal. 6: 14.

Saturday, April 22. The Kingdom and its Triumph. The gates of hell shall not prevail. That the best of the past may inspire us to yet higher good for the future; that the faith of the fathers may be perfected in their children. That the memories of Hus and Luther may provoke us to become worthy ambassadors of Christ. That we may have clearer vision of our duties as a nation and as churches and that we may not be tempted to substitute force for faith or speech for service. That we may be kept in peace with our neighbor nations and with the whole world; that war may cease among men, and that we may exhibit the spirit of justice with such nobility and sympathy as shall enable us to aid every nation to secure an abiding peace. Psalms 110. Isa. 9: 6-7. Rev. 1: 4-8.

Sunday, April 23. Sermons on the Resurrection. "O Risen Christ! O Easter Flower! How dear Thy Grace has grown! From East to West, with loving power, Make all the world Thine own."

—Phillips Brooks.

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

Apr. 16, 1916. Palm Sunday

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

GOOD PRAYER MEETINGS

- M. Apr. 10. Regular attendance. Heb. 10: 23—25.
T. Apr. 11. Home prayer. Dan. 6: 4—14.
W. Apr. 12. Love for the church. Ps. 84: 1—12.
T. Apr. 13. Using our gifts. 1 Cor. 12: 13—25.
F. Apr. 14. Studying the Bible. Ps. 119: 105—112.
S. Apr. 15. Interest in others. Luke 6: 27—38.
Sun., Apr. 16. Topic:—Good Prayer Meetings, and How to Have Them Always. Acts 12: 1—17.

Suggestions to the Leader

Let the term "prayermeeting" stand for devotional meeting. Every devotional meeting, however, must be a prayermeeting in which the members of the society take part, if such a meeting is to be effective and helpful. Those societies who fail to lay the greatest emphasis on these devotional meetings will soon have no need of advertising and announcing their work. True success is the result of prayer.

These meetings ought to be held weekly. In some instances they are held on a week-day evening. In a great many congregations the young people meet on Sunday evening, usually during the hour preceding the Sunday evening service. If there should be no evening service the young people occupy the hour. This gives an exceptional opportunity for a young people's service. The pastor will not be lacking an interesting and inspiring audience.

But whenever the meeting may be held, the greatest and most careful preparation is necessary.

Avoid the temptation to fail to prepare this meeting most conscientiously, by thinking that somehow you can "muddle thru." There was a member of a certain society, to whom had been assigned by the devotional committee, the leadership for the meeting to be held on the first Sunday evening of the coming month. He accepted the assignment, and, at the time, felt the stirring of a splendid ambition within him. He would show them "a meeting that was a meeting." But Hochmut kommt vor dem Fall, according to a German proverb. He concluded that there was no need of being in a hurry getting ready for the meeting, for there was still a whole month ahead of him. Several times the importance of the service was suggested to him, but he deferred making preparation until some more convenient season. Finally the day of the meeting came,—but why repeat what happened? He went to the meeting hoping that something would turn up, but with the assurance that he would muddle thru somehow. In the words of another, after it was all over, it was a "muddle right." Afterwards he said that everything was against him, but his better self whispered "lack of preparation, lack of plan, lack of effort."

The Topic Presented

Our Daily Readings suggest the real way of making our devotional meetings helpful and blessed. It depends not on the leader alone, but on the spiritual attitude of the individual member. The average preparation and interest of the individual members present represents the amount of work the society as such is willing and able to do. You cannot get more out of a meeting than you put into it.

What must we do to always have good devotional meetings? Follow the six rules laid down in our Daily Readings.

1. Be present regularly, and on time. Present all the time, that means not only numbers occupying the seats, but interest and devotion enrolled to help in conducting the meeting. With these two on our side it will not be a difficult thing to make the meeting helpful. The poorest preacher can deliver an inspiring sermon when assisted by an inspiring audience, while the most carefully prepared sermon may fall flat when there is no responsive congregation.

2. Home Prayer. That means constant fellowship with God. You are not entering a strange, unfamiliar atmosphere when you attend your devotional meetings. You must be on speaking terms with God if you would be able to introduce others to Him. Your daily devotions will spiritualize your countenance, and you will be able to bring God with you into the presence of the meeting.

3. Love for the Church. The Church is the communion of believers. Those who love the Lord's name assemble to meet their Lord. You love your own individual church, because she has been a spiritual mother and teacher to you. Your church building may be humble and old-fashioned, your congregation may be small, and yet it is in your mind a very Bethel, here are the portals to heaven.

4. Using our gifts. We dare not withhold our special gifts and abilities from the use for others. God has given us special talents. They are not ours, but belong to the others, for whose enjoyment and use they were primarily intended. If we fail to use our gifts they will become atrophied, useless. He who saves his life will lose it. What gifts have you? Are you musical? Can you lead in the study of the Bible? Can you conduct a Teacher Training Class? A Mission Study Class? A Singing Class? Have you social talents? Are you a good entertainer? Can you work with children? Can you teach in the Sunday-school? Can you prepare entertainments for the and with the children? Can you lead boys? etc. There are a thousand and one different things we can do. Do what you can do, and if you cannot do a certain thing that ought to be done, then prepare yourself to do it.

5. Studying the Bible. Remember, all our work must have one aim, to develop the Christian personality in the members of our society. That personality cannot be developed unless we know what God is like. We can learn to know God best out of His Sacred Book. That Book must be in our heart by day and by night. We dare not lose sight of the directions it indicates. It is to us as necessary as the compass to the mariner. You cannot lead others to God unless you know the way yourself.

6. We must be interested in others. Service is impossible except we give ourselves to others. Interest in others is conditioned by our own religious experiences as to the truthfulness and efficacy of the message of salvation. This personal experience leads us to make an effort to bring others to the point of accepting this salvation. The consecration of fine young manhood and womanhood does not only secure the loyal support of these young people, but assures the Christian Church a life-long service of consecrated lives. To be interested in others means that we love them with that same love, with which the Christ loved us.

Some Questions on the Topic

Why do we conduct devotional meetings?

How may the devotional committee plan a good meeting?

Why is personal preparation of the individual member essential to a good meeting?

Why ought every devotional meeting be a prayer-meeting?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Matt. 11: 25, 26; 1 Cor. 1: 17, 21; 23, 27—29; 1 Cor. 2: 1—8; 2 Cor. 2: 14, 15; 1 Thess. 1: 5; 1 Tim. 6: 20, 21; Tit. 1: 3; 3: 8, 9.

A Prayer

We pray, our heavenly Father, that we may realize more and more, that we are in Thy presence, when we assemble for prayer and worship. Thou art present where men pray. Thy blessing is poured out over seeking souls. Thou alone canst perfect Thy likeness within us, Thy word alone can guide us in all truth. Thou didst love us, therefore Thou didst give Thine only Son for us. Help us to live for others, to serve others in the same love wherewith Thou didst love us. May every meeting of our society herald the call of salvation, and be the means of building character, and saving souls. May we as a society labor more earnestly for the coming of Thy kingdom. To that service we would consecrate ourselves, by the love of Jesus Christ, for erring and weak men. Forgive us our sins and failures. Make us strong and effective thru Thy grace. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson 3. What think ye of Christ?

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Apr. 10. Matt. 16: 13—20. Peter's Confession.
T. Apr. 11. John 1: 43—51. Nathanael's Confession.
W. Apr. 12. John 4: 27—41. The Samaritans' Confession.
T. Apr. 13. John 9: 13—38. The Blind Man's Confession.
F. Apr. 14. John 20: 19—29. Thomas' Confession.

- S. Apr. 15. Matt. 16: 21—28. Taking up Jesus' Cross.
S. Apr. 16. Matt. 7: 15—23. A Warning to False Followers.

Lesson Key:—Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not Jesus is not of God: and this is the spirit of the antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it cometh; and now it is in the world already. Whosoever shall confess that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, God abideth in him, and he in God 1 John 4: 2, 3, 15.

Palm Sunday is a day of confession, not only for the boys and girls that gather around the altar to make public profession of their faith and pledge faithfulness to their Lord and Saviour as long as they live, but for all Evangelical church members or adherents, whether they have ever made such a profession or a pledge themselves or not. During Lent the members of all Evangelical churches have had their attention called to the need of redeeming sinners and a sinful world from the bondage of guilt and iniquity thru the suffering and the death of Jesus Christ as the Lamb of God. They have learned to realize again the need of salvation, above all the need of a personal Saviour from personal guilt, and the whole aim of the Lenten services has been to awaken a longing for a closer personal relationship with Jesus Christ as the Saviour from sin and the Lord of the new life. Those who have taken to heart the message of the Lenten season have become convinced that they must have more of the life and power of Jesus Christ in their lives in order to make their spiritual life satisfying and successful. Hence, as Palm Sunday approaches they feel the need of expressing once more their devotion to Him, their trust in His redemption and their willingness to serve Him in His kingdom. Peter's confession and what it implies is therefore a very natural and appropriate and at the same time thought-compelling subject just at this time.

In a most natural manner Jesus had been educating His disciples to the point He desired them to attain. By His first call He had attracted them and won their confidence. In the Sermon on the Mount He had set before them the ideal at which He was aiming. The perfect example of His own life and His wonderful deeds in the service of others put these ideals into living human form under the inspiration of which they were to begin the work themselves under His guidance and direction. And now, as the end is near He asks them to draw their own conclusions from what they have experienced by asking them "Who am I?" Peter, no doubt the most apt of His disciples, as well as the most impulsive and energetic, has his answer ready at once: "Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God!"

That is the confession that Palm Sunday should bring to the lips of all Evangelical people, young or old. They have followed Jesus thru His life, have seen His works and witnessed His obedience and devotion to the will of God as He sacrificed himself in order to make His ministry for the salvation of mankind perfect. They have beheld the wonderful love of the Father expressed in the wonderful life of the Son, and as Palm Sunday gathers all this into a focus with the burning, searching question: "This have I done for thee; what hast thou done for me?" it seems as the one could hardly help replying as Peter did on another occasion, "Lord, Thou hast the words of eternal life, and we have believed and know that Thou art the Holy One of God." If Peter's words on either of these occasions meant anything at all, they were the expression of a deep and determined devotion of an earnest soul to one whom he had recognized as the noblest, greatest and best ideal of manhood, the only one who could lift him above himself and inspire him to a new life. The intimate relationship with such a life meant so much to Peter that giving it up would have meant giving up all that made life worth living.

Let us make Palm Sunday a day of such confession for ourselves, the members of our families and the church to which we belong. Let us draw so close to Jesus Christ during these last weeks of the Lenten season that we shall not be able to think of ourselves in any other way except as in connection with Him. Let the thought of Jesus sacrificing himself for you and me sink down so deep into our hearts that we shall not only find it unthinkable and impossible to be without Him, but shall find therein a strong and lasting inspiration for service in the conquest of the world for His Kingdom.

"And we beheld His Glory"

Continued from Page 4

Each one in his own Way

He is the type of the true religion of the heart, as John, in whom there is greater depth of sentiment, is a type of pure mysticism. John was the inseparable friend of Peter and yet quite different from him in character. His love for Jesus was equally as ardent as that of Peter; he was known in the select circle as the disciple whom Jesus loved. But John was not always as we know him. A few episodes in the gospels give us knowledge of his natural disposition. It is not a very favorable light in which he appears in his encounter with the Jewish exorcist, Mark 9: 38—40, who tries to expel an evil spirit in the name of Jesus. John forbade him emphatically on the ground that he was no disciple. But when he related the thing to Jesus, thinking it a piece of heroism, he received this rebuke: "You should not have done it, for whosoever is not against us is for us." Jesus would not tolerate such fanaticism among His followers. Another incident that shows John's vehement character is furnished in Luke 9: 51—56. Jesus with His disciples was on His last journey to Jerusalem. Passing thru Samaria, they were surprised by the night. Jesus sent His disciples into the Samaritan city to procure lodging. But they were denied because they were Jews. John became so angry at this slight to his Master, that he suggested that they call down fire from heaven to destroy the city. Great was his surprise, when Jesus met him with the rebuke: "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are. For the Son of Man came not to destroy men's lives but to save them." Thus only gradually under the discipline of the Spirit of Jesus did the vehement John become the apostle of love. The most beautiful feature of it all is the skillful teaching Jesus employed in that he did not destroy the old nature of John but transformed it. The original hardness and narrowness of his nature was precisely what made the love of John so deep and true. Whoever imagines John, the disciple of love to be a gentle, tender-hearted and yielding man certainly does not know him. In genuine Christian love there is power and severity. In John this love is present in his perfect devotion to his Master and in the fervor of his interest in his fellows. There is nothing fragmentary about his love. It is complete. Then, too, the love of John always had a strong exclusive element. He is not a man of compromises, and just herein he is so exemplary as the disciple of love.

In like manner it would be possible to show by the example of James, the man of ethical mind, and of Paul, the man of conscience, and of other New Testament personalities, that the Spirit of Jesus brings out and develops the individuality of men. What a wealth and manifoldness in the Spirit of Jesus Christ! as many-sided as the dispositions of men! Every man is called to let the glory of Christ shine forth thru his own particular individuality. Thru each man, in whom under the influence of the Spirit of Christ the image of God is worked out, a new phase of divine nature meets the view, a new side of the divine glory of Christ is revealed. The art of living together in Christian love consists in this, that we come to recognize each other as disciples of Christ, as Christian personalities.

Christian Manhood reflects Christ's Spirit

Whoever would know the Master in His glory, must view him in His disciples. Certainly it is not as yet a perfect image. But as many colors as the image of Christ in His disciples may exhibit, "their union in heaven will finally yield pure white, where Christ is no longer divided, nor His disciples rent asunder, but where all who loved Him with His heart, shall be one flock under the one shepherd."

Whoever would behold the glory of Christ in the spirit, let him read biographies of Christian men such as Monod, Stoecker, Bodelschwing, Kaehler; or, better yet, let him submit his own life more and more to the guidance of the Spirit of Christ, let him cultivate the fellowship with Christ as with the living, present Saviour, and the fellowship with true Christians.

Secondly, we can in spirit behold the glory of Christ in the New Testament writings. As different as are the individualities of the authors, the circumstance, occasion, and purpose of their writings, all of them have this in common that they are practicing and professing Christ. Therefore they are the original standard for the Christian preaching and the Christian theology of all time—they are Christocentric.

Third, we can in spirit behold the glory of Jesus in His effectual working as living, present Saviour in the New Testament churches. In the simplicity and genuineness of their activity there is an emphasis on essentials: the Word, prayer, breaking of bread, fellowship: these are the guide-lines for the expression of Christian life and fellowship in all ages and places and under the most varying circumstances.

The Pastor's Home in Blue Springs, Mo.

Continued from Page 4

The land in and around Blue Springs consists of a porous soil and is well watered; consequently the cellars were often full of water. This was disagreeable, but all things come to him, who waits; the

Pastor Frank and the Sheep

Home now has a drainage system of its own and the cellars are dry. A good road has been graded, the place has been kept very clean and the Home makes a very favorable impression as viewed from the road. There are three houses fronting the road all to the left from the main entrance; they are occupied respectively by Mrs. Kraehenbuehl and daughters, Mrs. Niethammer and Mrs. Pens and her sister. Going down the road from the main entrance you come to the oldest house on the place, where Mrs. Schoenhut lives, over eighty years old, but hale and hearty for her years and always glad to have visitors. Across the road from her, stands one of the new cottages formerly occupied by Mrs. Stark, but now vacant. And furthest back stands the latest addition, the residence shown on page four, now the home of Pastor Frank and his wife. This house is the largest, because it has one extra large room where, for the present, the residents gather for their Sunday devotion. Pastor Frank has assumed the duties of a chaplain for the Home, and in spite of his advanced age is a forceful and energetic preacher and a faithful minister to his little flock.

A trip to the Home from Kansas City or Independence is very pleasant and it certainly is a joy to see the large, well kept place; last summer a small flock of sheep added to the beauty of the scene and did away with the trouble and expense of keeping the grass and weeds down. Of this flock also Pastor Frank is the faithful and patient shepherd, as the illustration shows.

There is still much to be done; the road needs curbing and a sidewalk, but surely our congregations will not withhold their support, now that the future of the Home seems so well assured. And all our friends may be assured that the management is as good as can be. The writer is not on the Board, so he may be allowed to add, that the members of the Board have done work of which our whole Synod may be justly proud.

The Board values the twelve acres and six houses at $15,000.00 and, thanks to the assistance of our Synod, has a debt of only $500.00. The most necessary drainage system required an expense of over $400.00. Without that the institution would be free of debt. At present the Synod is not, and probably never will be able to pay to invalid and retired ministers, pastors' or teachers' widows a sufficient pension for old age. Therefore it is the aim of this worthy institution to give to retired ministers a respectable little home besides their pension, free of charge. There is still room at the colony for more cottages. There are applicants on the waiting list, anxious to establish their home here. But the money is needed for the erection and maintenance of these cottages. There is no endowment save the principal invested in the grounds and the five cottages.

New cottages can be built only when new gifts and contributions are forth-coming. To him who has seen the blessed influence emanating from these occupied cottages, and has witnessed the pastoral peace and simplicity existing there, the maintenance and enlargement of this colony at Blue Springs appeals as nothing else can. It is a blessed place of refuge for men and women who have worn themselves out in the service of our congregations, who all their life time have barely existed upon meager salaries, and who now are able to live carefree, having at last found a spot they can consider their home, provided for them by hearts that love the servants of God. The Evangelical churches contributing annually to our Pastors' Home honor themselves and repay in a small way at least the debt of gratitude they owe for the valuable services rendered them by the faithful and unselfish service of their ministry.

Pastor J. Sauer, 5018 Euclid Ave., Kansas City, is the chairman of the Board in control of the institution, and Pastor Paul Moritz, Independence, Mo., is the secretary and treasurer.

H. Vieth.

Now Ready! Order immediately!

YOU WILL NEED THIS BOOK
FOR YOUR EASTER SERVICES

Evangelical Book of Worship

MOROCCO. GILT EDGES

Size and Style like our German Kirchen-Agende
Antique

Price, Postpaid $3.00 Net

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,
1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.,
202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CHANGED ADDRESSES

Rev. H. A. Dies, Boston, N. Y.
Rev. A. Glade, 2500 N. Talman Ave., Chicago, Ill.
(New Parsonage.)
Rev. M. Rosenfeld, Marshfield, Wis.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., APRIL 13th, 1916

NUMBER 15

Palm Sunday

Palm Sunday has a meaning of its own for every Evangelical Christian. There is no adolescent or adult member of an Evangelical church but has good reason to remember that day in a very special and personal manner. Sentiments also of the most precious and sacred kind cluster around the memories with which the day has become invested, and they must be unspiritual and worldly indeed who do not, on that day at least, feel the need of a closer walk with God and a purer and loftier way of living. For it makes little difference whether it was just a few years ago that you stood at the altar confessing your faith in Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour and pledging Him obedience until death, or whether three score years or even more have passed since then, the memory of that hour still means something to your heart-life. Perhaps you have been all too slow in realizing just what that memory should mean and might have meant in your life; perhaps other things have obscured it for all too long a time; perhaps it has been inconvenient or even distasteful, but the memory is there nevertheless, and it has been an influence, even tho it did not accomplish what might have been done. If you have ever have a real Palm Sunday in your life you cannot get away from it any more than you can get away from what home and father and mother have meant to you.

But no matter what Palm Sunday may have meant to you in the past, it can mean still more in the future. If it has not been what it might have been in the past, the grace of God and the Holy spirit can yet bring about what seemed impossible before. And if you have sought to make it count for the very most right from the beginning this is not only no reason at all for being contented with yourself, much less conceited about it, but is rather all the more of an inducement to strive after still better and loftier things, not thru any merit or worthiness nor by any effort of your own, but thru the same grace of God that helped and held you fast thus far. "Forgetting the things that are behind," says Paul, "and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." There were some things in Paul's life that he wanted to forget, tho he never could quite succeed in doing so; there were other things, also, which a smaller-sized man than he was would have been only too glad to remember and to speak about whenever opportunity offered. But whatever memories the past brings to him, his face is set forward to the future. There are higher, better and purer things yet to be gained, and he knows no other business than that of pressing forward unto the prize, if so be that he may lay hold on that for which also he was laid hold on by Christ Jesus. To get still closer to the Saviour who has lived and died for him; to experience yet more of His life and power; to be cleansed and purified of his baser desires and selfish passions; to overcome the temptations of the world, the flesh and the devil, and to render more earnest and effective service in the cause of Jesus Christ and His kingdom is his one great aim. Paul knew nothing about Palm Sunday, but he had the true Palm Sunday experience, because he had surrendered and consecrated himself entirely to his Saviour and Lord. And if the Palm Sundays you and I have experienced, whether they be few or many, have such a result, there can be no doubt as to the outcome.

In order that the coming Palm Sunday may help to bring about such a growth in the spiritual life, let us get away from all that is merely outward and formal in connection with it. The crowds at church, the decorations, the special programs, the procession of eager, earnest boys and girls that become members of the Church of Jesus Christ, all this is worthless except as it helps to remind us of our obligations toward Him who has redeemed, purchased and delivered us with His innocent precious blood from sin, Satan, and death that we might be His own and serve Him in His kingdom in everlasting innocence, righteousness and blessedness. And if the Palm Sundays of the past have not been what they should have meant, this one and the others to come may be made to mean all the more.

The War and the Printer

We are all familiar enough with the war in print, and the influence of war news upon the press in general, but the war is beginning to affect the printing and publishing business in a far more direct and practical way than would have been thought possible six or eight months ago. It is not the censor who is worrying the American publisher to any great extent, but if conditions in the paper market continue in the

A THOUGHT FOR LENT

"Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins," 1 John 4: 10 manner in which they have been going for several months, the fondest dreams of the censor may be realized because lack of paper will make it impossible to print anything at all.

In the printing paper line it is no longer a question of the kind of paper you want but only of the kind you can get. Many mills are considering the advisability of shutting down on account of the lack of materials and the increasing cost of every product entering into the manufacture of paper, all the materials used in the manufacture of paper having gone up in price from twenty-five to 2000 percent. Rags have advanced in price both on account of short supply and the increased demand. Munition makers are using tremendous quantities of cotton rags to make explosives. Formerly vast quantities of cotton rags were imported from Europe. This supply is now entirely shut off. Chlorine (bleaching powder) has advanced from one and one-fourth cents per pound to fifteen cents per pound because of the stopping of the European supply, and domestic makers are busy experimenting with chlorine gas and chloroform.

In addition to this the market is affected by a decreased supply of all kinds of paper. Before the war Germany supplied a large part of the world's paper, besides furnishing a large amount of pulp. Sweden also sold us large amounts of pulp, both countries obtaining their supply of wood very largely from Russia. When the war shut out Germany Sweden continued to supply her share until her mills ran short of pulp, which could no longer be secured from Russia. The European mills formerly dependent on Sweden and Germany and now turned to taking all the surplus Canadian pulp which formerly came to the United States. The scarcity of dyes and chemicals with which Germany formerly supplied us made matters still worse.

Just when these conditions began to make themselves felt there came a tremendous increase in business in the United States, in England and in South America, which created an enormous and unheard of demand for paper. Stocks everywhere were short, but South America, Asia, Australia and even some European countries began to buy paper in America and to offer large premiums over existing prices. The combined demand is for several times more paper than American mills can make, and with the available supply of raw material short and prices everywhere soaring no one seems to know where they will go. There is absolutely no precedent for the situation.

Under the circumstances publishing houses are unable to say how long they will be able to keep up the quality of the paper they have been using so far. Naturally conditions like these have also been making fierce inroads on the profits of the business, which is a very vital question, especially with the denominational houses, which are expected to turn over a certain amount of annual income to the treasury of various boards and institutions. It seems only fair that the reading public should be advised of these conditions, so that they may not be tempted to criticise the publishers, who have troubles enough of their own just now, without being held responsible for a situation they are utterly helpless to change.

Efficiency in Federal Administration

Ever since the Commission on Economy and Efficiency appointed by President Taft studied the administration of the Federal government and reported on the methods employed, it has been the hope of public-spirited citizens of all parties that some plan might be provided to carry on the work thus begun. An attempt to provide this thru the organization of an Institute of Government Research is reported by The Survey.

The hostility of the present Congress and its predecessor prevented a continuance, under public authority, of the work the Taft commission had started. This strengthened the belief held by some of those identified with the commission that the most effective effort could be secured thru an outside non-partisan agency. Thus the idea which found its first expression in the New York Bureau of Municipal Research, which brought about the establishment of similar bureaus in many other cities, and which led to the Taft commission, has now resulted in the establishment of this new Institute to do for the Federal government what the original bureau has done and is doing for municipal administration in the metropolis.

The magnitude of its task is measured by the billion dollar budgets which first startled the Nation and now are accepted as a matter of course. The organization scheme of bureaus in the Federal departments will doubtless receive much attention—the Taft commission declared, for example, that by combining under one management the light house service, the life saving service and the revenue cutter service patrolling the coast, not less than a million dollars a year could be saved. In one office it believed, after studying the day's work of every man employed, that $325,000 out of $758,000 could be saved.

The new Institute is expected to follow the same policy as that pursued by the various bureaus of municipal research, co-operating with officials in improving administrative organization and methods.

The trustees number twenty and include three distinct elements—men of academic attainment, successful executives in large business affairs, and men of experience in governmental service. Financial backing is sought on pledges which will assume adequate funds for several years and the larger part of this support is to be raised outside of New York. It is expected that the staff will include men who had experience in the work of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency. The trustees are as follows: Chairman, Frank J. Goodnow, Baltimore; vice chairman, Robert S. Brookings, St. Louis; secretary, Edwin A. Alderman, Charlottesville, Va.; treasurer, Frederick Strauss, New York; R. Fulton Cutting, New York; and others equally prominent.

THE LORD'S SUPPER

What to do

"If therefore thou art offering thy gift at the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother has aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift," Matt. 5: 23, 24.

Any self-examination that has been sincere and serious must lead to definite practical results. If the object of self-examination, as we have seen, is to reveal the real character of self, its faults and weaknesses and the need of the gracious help of God to correct and remedy them, it must result in some actual effort in that direction. There is deep spiritual truth in the ancient proverb, "The road to hell is paved with good resolutions." Good resolutions trodden under foot are worse than useless, they are actually iniquitous. The fact that good resolutions have been made shows that the need of doing better has been recognized, and that the desire to do better in the future is also present. If they are neglected and trampled upon it is because the old, selfish worldly nature is stronger than the longing for better things. The road to hell is paved with good resolutions because every good resolution that is not carried out with persistent determination is really a victory of the baser sinful side of self. If self-examination leads to nothing but the recognition of evils that are never remedied, it merely emphasizes the weakness of the flesh and the power of Satan in that life. To see the need of striving for better things in the spiritual life and not follow up this conviction with suitable conduct and action means a still further weakening of moral backbone, a yielding to the selfish, evil tendencies of human nature. It is really a sowing unto the flesh with all the sad and inevitable consequences, Gal. 6: 7, 8.

The man who came to the temple with a gift to be offered upon the altar, and remembering that his brother, i. e., any brother man, had aught against him, could have offered his gift without any regard to whether his brother had aught against him or not. Outwardly his religious duty would have been irreproachably performed. But he would have yielded to his baser selfish nature by putting self first. Such an act of worship would have been degraded—and it doubtlessly was very often so degraded—because it would have been performed entirely from self-interest, regardless of any other considerations. This is what Jesus points out when He enjoins His hearers, in such a case, to rather leave their gifts before the altar, unoffered, and to reconcile themselves first with their brother. This would be more than unselfish conduct, it would be anti-selfish, if we may coin a new expression to fit the case. It would mean a humbling of the selfish spirit, a definite act of real self-denial and self-sacrifice. It would show that the man who does this is ready and willing to perform his religious duty not only outwardly and from self-interest, but even to the extent of going contrary to his selfish impulses. It is putting into practice the spirit of Jesus Christ who gave himself and all He had and was, even His most fundamental human rights, for the sake of His love for men.

True Humility is not afraid of Self-denial

It is because the spirit that insists upon its rights is so essentially a selfish, un- and anti-Christian spirit, that it can have no share in the spiritual blessings vouchsafed to believers in the Lord's Supper. The man who offered his gift on the altar regardless of whether his brother had aught against him, had fulfilled the letter of the law, but he ignored or rejected its spirit, and therefore Jesus could not recognize his act as an actual fulfillment of the law. We may be entirely orthodox in regard to the Lord's Supper, and very sure that we need the forgiveness of sins thru the grace of God in Christ Jesus; we may even take eager advantage of every opportunity of coming to the Lord's table in order to nourish our spiritual life, but all this merely outward and therefore worse than useless if it does not go together with the readiness to deny and sacrifice the selfish spirit that naturally controls the heart. Unless we are actually ready to do something that is in line with the self-denying and self-sacrificing spirit of Jesus Christ our partaking of His Supper is merely an outward form that can never nourish the spiritual life. And if the spiritual life is obliged to go without the nourishment it needs the time will come when there will be no spiritual life to nourish.

Before Jesus instituted His Supper He washed the disciples' feet as an object lesson of the humble love for them and of His willingness to serve. It was a service that was usually performed only by the humblest menial, and one which, as Peter's words, John 13: 6, etc., show, none of the disciples, would have been willing to perform for another. But Jesus had given them an example that they also should do as He had done unto them, an example which was all the more forceful since, according to Luke 22: 24—30, the strife about rank had just taken place. The very fact that they were disciples of Jesus Christ imposed a different standard upon them than that followed by the world. Because of their discipleship he that serves among them was to be the chief, because the idea of service implied the complete mastery and sacrifice of self. This spirit of self-mastering and self-sacrificing service is born only out of an utter surrender to Jesus Christ. Only those who have not yet surrendered entirely to Jesus Christ are unwilling to forgive a brother with whom they have quarreled, or to ask forgiveness, and thereby they become unworthy of partaking of the Lord's Supper.

The preparation for the Lord's Supper is therefore inward rather than outward by fasting or formal self-denial. Of course every sincere Christian will naturally refrain from anything and everything that interferes with a sincere and searching self-examination, but the outward preparation is of value only as it helps one to reach the suitable spiritual condition, and is by no means a guarantee of a worthy preparation, Psa. 143.

In brief, therefore, to partake of the Lord's Supper worthily requires: (1.) That we come with the humble acknowledgement of our need of forgiveness of sins; (2.) That we cheerfully believe and trust that forgiveness has been supplied for us; (3.) That we come to the Lord's Table in the spirit of love and conciliation toward all; (4.) That we firmly resolve to renounce sin more completely than ever, and to serve the Lord and others more faithfully, which is a natural consequence of the first three conditions.

Many Christians earnestly desire to put away their sins and to yield themselves more fully to Christ, but their repentance is not as sincere nor is their faith as firm and cheerful as it ought to be. Should these remain away from the Lord's Supper because they feel their spiritual deficiency and fear that they might be unworthy? When the epileptic boy was brought to Jesus, Mark 9: 17 etc., He said to the father, "If thou canst! All things are possible to him that believeth!" Straightway the father of the child cried out and said, "I believe; help Thou mine unbelief!" And Jesus accepted the weak and little faith of that father and healed his boy. For even tho faith is weak, it is faith nevertheless, and the Lord's Supper was instituted for the express purpose of strengthening faith. "They that are in health have no need of a physician; but they that are sick," Luke 5: 31. Those who struggle against doubt and unbelief and seek to strive for the firm assurance of salvation are not unworthy. The Saviour's call is to those who are weary and heavy laden, and to them He offers rest and peace: Those who are weary and heavy laden because they are not sure of their salvation thru Christ are thus welcome at His table. Christ aims to strengthen their faith, and they are not to eat and drink judgment unto themselves.

The Gift Without the Giver

BY SARAH ENDICOTT OBER

Marion Graves returned from the missionary convention all aflame with enthusiasm. Yearning over the needy ones of whom she had heard, passionately longing to be of service to them, she carefully and prayerfully counted over her scanty possessions, hoping to find something to contribute. But already she had given more than was "prudent" from the world's view. Her heart was fuller than her purse, and there remained but one way by which she could secure the money—that of soliciting it from others.

Marion's sensitive nature shrank from this. It always seemed a humiliation, altho it was not for herself but for her Master that she asked alms. It was always her last resort, but still she was forced to it in her zeal, until one of her friends once said jestingly: "Marion, your epitaph should be, 'And the beggar died also.'" She now ran over the list of her friends and acquaintances, wondering where she would call, for but recently had she drained their resources for some local charity. Suddenly she thought of Miss Priscilla Patch, but only to reject the thought, for Miss Priscilla was noted for her stinginess. So persistently did the name recur to her, however, that Marion finally concluded to call upon the lady.

Miss Priscilla was the last of her race, and for three-fourths of a century had lived in an old house that was stored with the accumulations of generations of frugal, miserly people. A large bank account was hers, yet Miss Priscilla lived as plainly and hoarded as carefully as tho she had not a penny. She had never been known to contribute to any cause, but Marion determined to ask her now.

So, praying for just the right message, she went on her errand. Miss Priscilla welcomed her warmly, for she was lonely, and Marion's bright face was very dear to her. For some time Marion had no opportunity to present her plea, so many woes the old woman poured out into her sympathetic ears. Miss Priscilla had discovered buffalo bugs and moths among some of her cherished stores, and could talk or hear of nothing else. She lamented bitterly their destructive raids, and dilated upon her toil and care in consequence until she was fairly forced to stop for breath.

"Why not put your treasures where 'neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break thru nor steal'?" asked Marion, when she could interpose a word.

"What on earth do you mean?" asked Miss Priscilla in surprise.

"No, not on earth but in heaven," answered Marion, laughing, tho her eyes were full of earnestness. "Lay up your treasures in heaven."

Then she plunged into her story before Miss Priscilla could recover from her consternation. With graphic force she pictured the degraded lives of unchristianized millions; their extreme poverty, their squalid homes, their ignorant, barren minds. With thrilling earnestness she told of their longings for better things; their quick response to helpful influences; their heroic efforts to grasp and assimilate what advantages were proffered them; their slow rising above their low levels. With loving zest she sketched the self-sacrificing lives of the missionaries, their incessant toil, their arduous labors, their hopes and discouragements, their successes and failures, and the scanty means from which they must accomplish great results.

Miss Priscilla's face was a study as she listened perforce. At first she was grim and repellant, as she detected her visitor's purpose; then she relaxed and gradually became interested in spite of herself. When Marion ceased Miss Priscilla's keen gray eyes were softened by unwonted moisture.

"Why, Marion!" she exclaimed, "I never knew there were such people in the world. How interesting, and how very worthy their cause is! I really must do something for them. Call again in a few days and perhaps I may find something for them."

So with rejoicing Marion went home, grateful not alone for the promised aid but for the new interest and impetus that seemed to have entered that narrowed life.

At the appointed time she called again, and found a huge bundle awaiting her, while Miss Priscilla's sallow face fairly glowed with enthusiasm.

"See, Marion," she exclaimed, "I've been all thru the attic, and found all this for those poor people. I declare I could not rest until I had got them something."

"And it made you happy too, did it not?" asked Marion, her own face radiant. "The greatest joy in the world comes from giving to the Lord."

"I suppose so," answered Miss Priscilla rather dubiously, as she tugged at the stout cord that fastened the bundle. "Anyway I am glad to get rid of the things, and hope they will do somebody some good. But to my mind, charity begins at home, and I believe the Lord intends for every one to look out for themselves first. He don't give us things just to have us give them away again. But I am willing to give away what I don't want myself, and I got all stirred up thinking of those poor people. There, see what I am going to give them?"

Visions of bedding, warm garments, and all sorts of comforts for the poor creatures had been dancing in Marion's mind, but they were dispelled with a shock at the sight of the contents of that great bundle. Tumbling out at her feet were time-yellowed newspapers, old almanacs, ancient school books, bundles of Godey's and Peterson's Magazines filled with curious pictures of the hoopskirts and waterfalls of a half-century ago. A few antique and moth-eaten garments capped the pile.

Marion stood stunned, speechless, the slow tears gathering in her eyes.

"What's the matter?" questioned Miss Priscilla sharply, as she noticed her revulsion of feeling. "Don't you like these things? You said those folks were glad of anything—that they needed good reading. I'm sure there's lots of good reading here."

Marion thought of the half-starved, scantily clothed bodies; of the just-awakened, hungering minds; of the poor, needy souls. They asked for bread; should they be offered stones? What food was there for them in these old sentimental stories, those obsolete books, those medical almanacs? What knowledge, or guidance, or strong foundation truths for those groping minds? But with her disappointment and compassion for the defrauded ones was mingled a great pity for this narrow soul, so cramped and confined by greed and avarice.

"If you do not want the things, just say so," said Miss Priscilla tartly, comprehending that her gift was somehow not appreciated. "I can sell them to the ragman. If he don't pay much, it is better than nothing. You don't catch me giving anything away after this."

Marion turned toward her, compassionate and tearful.

"Oh, you poor, poor soul!" she cried. "I am so sorry for you."

"Sorry for me! Why, what do you mean?" exclaimed Miss Priscilla in amazement.

"Dear Miss Priscilla, you miss so much joy and happiness out of life," said Marion earnestly.

Then she tried to explain how those things were not suited to the needs of the poor, and not worth the expressage to the place. But Miss Priscilla cut her short.

"Beggars must not be choosers! Don't you ever come to me again with your woful tales."

Downcast and discouraged, poor Marion went home, but before she reached her house some one called her. She turned to see Widow Brown beckoning from her door.

"Oh, Marion!" she called. "You are just the one I wish to see. Come in for a few moments."

The home of Widow Brown was small and poor, its scanty furnishings betraying a close struggle with poverty, but the widow's face was peaceful and contented, the sorrow and suffering had engraven deep lines upon it.

"Oh, Marion!" she continued eagerly, as she led the way into the house. "Did not that stirring appeal for the mountain people thrill your heart? I could not sleep all night for thinking of them, and trying to find some way to help them. And the way came all at once. I wonder that I never had thought of it before, but I believe the dear Lord has kept me from giving away my treasures before, just to reserve them for this time. And all the while I thought it was because I could not part with them. Come, dear, and see what I have ready to send."

And she led the wondering girl into the bare little "best room." There spread about were many articles of clothing. Dainty garments that her own hands had fashioned for the darling who years ago had donned heavenly apparel. Pretty undergarments, dresses, laces, ribbons, even the books and toys once dear to that girlish heart.

And beside them were other garments that had been worn by the child's father, cherished reminders of the happy years of Widow Brown's married life. There, too, were his books, his tools, and many other possessions that would be a veritable Godsend to some poor man.

Marion comprehended, and also realized the great sacrifice that was here laid upon the altar. The girlish wardrobe was a part of her own life, for she knew every item, its owner having been the dearest friend of her youth.

"Why, Auntie Brown!" she cried. "Are you going to part with all your treasures?"

Mrs. Brown stroked the soft folds of a beautiful dress as she replied: "Yes, dear. These are not my real treasures; these are but their wrappings. Nothing can take away my precious memories; they are always mine. I must not hoard these any longer, now that the Master has need of them. They will be a part of His work, and it will seem to me as if my husband and Jessie were still working for Him."

Marion could say no more, but her warm embrace testified to her complete comprehension. Together

Continued on Page 8

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

The Passers-By

Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by,
That God's holy Son does so cruelly die?
Oh, can you not pause for a moment each day
And ask why God's Son should perish this way?

I call unto you whom nothing can hold
Save the glittering power of silver and gold:
Oh, have you not heard that He on the cross
Was betrayed by His friend for love of such dross?

I cry unto you who nightly explore
The tomes of the ancients for wisdom and lore:
Oh, will ye not see, and will ye not learn
That the wise of this earth God's wisdom do spurn?

And ye who delight in pleasures so gay,
In feasting and drinking, the dance and the play:
Is it nothing to you, and can you pass by While Jesus does suffer between earth and sky?

I cry unto you who, bowed down with grief,
Their eyes filled with tears, despair of relief:
Oh, look to the cross, see the sorrow-marred Man
Who bore all our griefs and suffered all pain!

Is it nothing to us? We cannot pass by;
We come to Thy cross, Thy grace draws us nigh:
O Jesus, forgive us! believing we cry,
Thou art our sole Treasure, our Wisdom, our Joy.

—Arthur T. Bonnet.

Beyond the Door

Oh, these dreadful days when it seems as if we are right up against a blank wall! They come to most of us house-mothers and home-makers, brought sometimes by physical infirmity, sometimes by other and subtler causes; but how hard they are to live thru until we learn that instead of blank walls they are just closed doors, which tomorrow are going to open and let us into sunshine and blessing! For weeks when Christmas time draws near, to our little ones there are closed doors that shut mother, her comfort and her cheer, away from childish wants and wishes; and tiny hands batter in vain at the panel, when all the time we are making beautiful things for them, thinking only of them, planning them a great happiness which would be all spoiled if it were given them before the right time. As they grow older and learn the meaning of that closed door, they pass it by with a little knowing smile—mother is shut away, but they are wise; they know that in a little while something lovely will be theirs. And so I am coming—now that the wrinkles have to be rubbed out at night, and the gray hair cannot be concealed—to know that these days of the closed door presage something splendid that my dear Father is preparing for me. It may be a clearer vision about a daily care; it may be a needed lesson of patience that will help me to help somebody else, or it may be a thing of dazzling splendor in the joy it will bring. But I know the blessing is securely there. I didn't like the closed door any more than I did the blank wall, before I learned that it had hinges, and even now sometimes my mouth twists one-sided when I try to smile. But I've watched so often that I know something good awaits me, and that knowledge is a great help in enduring until the time of fulfillment comes.

—Susie Bouchelle Wight.

"Clubby"

Ten years ago Clubby was a baby. In ten years more Clubby will be a voter. Just at present, Clubby is a heathen whose home is anywhere around the railroad tracks. His eleven years have been spent beyond the reach of the arm of the law, the hand of philanthropy, or the voice of Christian teaching. Yet he has a heart; and this heart is active in behalf of his mother and two little sisters, for whom Clubby is breadwinner.

Before he got into trouble and took himself off, there was a father in the family—a father who gave Clubby his name. Not in baptism was the name given, but in a fit of drunken brutality. The foot was incurably injured. Therefore "Clubby" became his appropriate designation; and on this injured foot he hobbles cheerfully thru his world.

Clubby has never been to school, but nobody cares, not even his mother; Clubby's mother is not the kind to care. Yet he has not been without education. The streets and the "tracks" have taught him much. A recapitulation of his acquirements would include proficiency in swearing, smoking, drinking, and stealing, besides his specialty—this specialty being a marvelous skill in telling lies with a straight face.

Clubby's father had contributed one of these items to his son's education. Before this father had eliminated himself as a factor in the family problem, he had seen to it that Clubby learned the secret of access to Sunday-closed saloons. When he brought the can safely home, the child was rewarded with a share of the beer. The taste was early developed, and now, at eleven years, Clubby was fond of it, and gets it at the saloon for himself. Sometimes in indulgent hours, and when there is a spare dime, Clubby, as the head of the family, brings home the can and deals it out to the little sisters and the mother, as his father did before him.

For several years the "tracks" have been, thru Clubby, the source of supply for family provisions. You can always get coal on the tracks. Fruit cars, too, offer opportunities, and grain cars. Notwithstanding his foot, Clubby is expert as a purveyor, and no boy about the tracks is more successfully agile in dodging policemen and watchmen.

Concerning Clubby's mother—"She's been fightin' and got the worst of it, and you'd best let her alone." This was Clubby's regretful but positive statement to the Sunday-school teacher who called.

Clubby is eleven years old now. The chances are that there are years of life ahead of him. He has all the energy of a steam engine. In these years that are coming these energies will be active for good, or active for evil. What shall we do for Clubby's future?—Sunday School Times.

Bible or Newspaper?

Alas for the mind, the heart, the home, the shop, the office where the Book of God has been dethroned! Look out! Something unpleasant will happen some day. It may be a sorrow, a calamity, a soul-tragedy. Where the Bible is not on guard, there is no defense.

The editor of the London Christian, referring especially to conditions in England, raises a warning cry which may be even more applicable here than beyond the sea: "The gradual and insidious way in which the daily newspapers are superseding all serious reading matter on the part of many professing Christians, is a fact fraught with serious and lamentable consequences. The Bible is fast becoming the most bepraised and the least beared book in the world. Its august message, its spiritual appeal, its open windows of insight into the mysteries of redemption, are little known to the rising generation compared with those of days gone by. Religious people of old knew their Bibles from cover to cover; nowadays, many who would be shocked not to be called Christians know it only at second hand, and that very imperfectly."

"Lean Christians," says one, "own Bibles, but feed on newspapers." Another writer laments: "How few there are who constantly feed on the Word of God! How few who are familiar with the Scriptures as a whole! How few who commit to memory any considerable portion of God's Word! How few who are so filled with it that it is like fire shut up in their bones!"

This is a glimpse of a dark side. Thank God, there is another side, too. No one can say, with Elijah, "I am alone left"—of those who give the Bible the supreme place. God has more than the seven thousand of Elijah's day who have not surrendered the Bible. But the fact of Bible neglect remains, nevertheless, unspeakably sad and full of evil omen for the land that owes all its blessings to the God of the Bible.—The Evangelist.

A Wonder of Surgery

A baseball player had two fingers of his right hand pretty badly bunged up in practice, and on his way home from the grounds he dropped into a doctor's office to have them attended to.

"Doctor," he asked anxiously as he was leaving, "when this paw of mine heals will I be able to play the piano?"

"Certainly you will," the doctor assured him.

"Well, then, you're a wonder, doc. I never could before."

Denominational

A Letter to the Pastors and the Churches

Last Spring in a personal letter I requested the pastors to secure the approval of their church councils for an offering of five cents per communicant for the General treasury at Eastertide. Many pastors and churches gave kindly and favorable consideration to this request, and the contributions have greatly helped the General treasury to meet the very many larger and smaller obligations that continually present themselves.

The denominational household is already conducted on so economical a basis that further reduction of expenses is impossible. A number of necessary items have been omitted in order to cut down expenses. But this policy cannot be continued without injury to the reputation of the Church. That the expenses of a growing household should increase is only natural and self-evident. But these expenses are easily borne when they are divided among the entire family. Every communicant member of our churches has a direct share in the blessings of his Church, and each one should therefore be gladly willing to contribute the insignificant offering of five cents per annum for this purpose. The pastors and churches are therefore again very earnestly requested to send in their offerings on such a basis to the General Treasurer. I make this request all the more confidently as the Board of Benevolences, whose especial business it is to pass upon all the needs of the Church, has encouraged it, and has gladly countersigned the request. Wishing all our people a most joyful and blessed Eastertide,

Respectfully

John Baltzer, President-General.

St. Louis, Mo., Mar. 27, 1916.

Countersigned and warmly recommended by order of the Board for Benevolences,

F. E. C. Haas, Chairman,

Amsterdam, N. Y.

Indiana District

Louisville, Ky.

Services in observance of the twenty-first anniversary of the erection of St. Peter's Evangelical Church, Louisville, Ky., were held on Sunday morning and afternoon, March 26th. The Rev. David Brüning, pastor of the church officiated. The congregation, the Sunday-school and the Sunday morning Bible classes took part in the celebration.

During the time that the Rev. Brüning has been pastor, more than $40,000 has been expended for various improvements, and the congregation has had a notable increase in membership. Recently a branch mission was established on West Market Street. It is the intention to erect a building for the use of this mission in the near future, as the services are at present conducted in a residence.

St. Peters is one of the thriving Evangelical churches of Louisville, and under the energetic and efficient leadership of its pastor has a splendid future before it. May God bless it in the future as He has in the past.

F. A. M.

Michigan District

Detroit

The new addition to the German Protestant Home for Orphans and Old People, maintained by the Ohio and Michigan districts at Detroit, Mich., was dedicated Sunday afternoon, April 2. Hundreds of friends of the institution were present to witness the ceremony.

The new addition was erected at an approximate cost of $9,000. It provides additional accommodations for twenty-four children, thus bringing the capacity of the Home to 120, exclusive of the old people's section. The new addition is beautifully appointed and besides the new dormitories contains a manual training room, a school room, several sick rooms and accommodations for attendants. The addition finally completes the building, a wing having been added to the old people's section several years ago. The Home is located in one of the prettiest residence sections of Detroit, and presents a very pretty appearance.

The progress made in this work of charity, as indicated by this new expansion ought to be an occasion for gratitude for all who are interested in this blessed work.

R. N.

"I will make you Fishers of Men"

Changed Conditions have affected the Work of the Home Missionary as they have that of the Gold-seeker. How Church People can make the Lot of the Missionary a great deal easier. A Field Secretary would help, too

Some Difficulties in Home Mission Work

In the latter part of January the writer received a telegram from the chairman of the colonization board requesting him to visit the colony at Billings, Mont., on his way to the meeting of the Central Board, as the colonization board was to meet in St. Paul just previous to the meeting of the Board for Home Missions. This telegram upset all the plans I had made for the trip to the east, as I had, at the request of the Central Board, expected to visit the Casa Grande colony, N. M. But since I was able to obtain free transportation to St. Paul via Portland, Ore., I undertook the journey, altho with a premonition that something would go wrong. The trip from Los Angeles to Portland was made on schedule time, but at Portland the weather was such that it was impossible to go on in any direction. The snow in the streets was three feet deep, and it was still snowing. The street cars did their best to keep going, but the elements were victorious. Those who did not care to walk home from work were obliged to go to a hotel—if they were able to find one that was not already overcrowded. The police officers who could not get home found temporary quarters in the prisoners' cells. The schools were forced to close, and even the great department stores were temporarily out of business, as neither customers nor salesmen could reach them.

Since my time was short I expected to go on to St. Paul the next day, but this was out of the question, as from five to fifteen feet of snow covered the tracks in the mountains. The trains that had left Portland the day before were already snowbound, one of them for over sixty hours. Since telegraph lines were all down, not even the dispatcher's office in Portland could tell where the trains were. When after three days of anxious waiting no train was yet able to leave for the east, and no one was able to say when traffic would again be open, so that it was impossible for me to reach St. Paul in time for the meeting of the Central Board, I reluctantly turned my face toward Los Angeles again.

On the way I had leisure to think of the difficulties in the way of our home mission work at the present time. They seem to become more serious from year to year. It is almost the same condition one meets with in gold-mining. In former days many persons came to California and Alaska to dig for gold. Many of these had no trouble in finding the precious metal. Those who had "luck" became rich in a very short time. To-day, however, gold is rarely found on the surface. The man who works his own "claim" is happy if he makes a day-laborer's wages. On our train was an old man who had a claim in Alaska which he had been working for fourteen years. Before that he had lived in California, where he had also mined for gold. "I have been in the mining business for over fifty years," he said, "and what we take out of the ground is at least honest money." Without doubt the old man spoke the truth, but as far as we could see all his half century of hard work had not made him rich. The great corporations have the best and most modern machinery, and therefore they pay good dividends, while the individual miner is very rarely successful.

The Miner and the Missionary

Gold-mining and home mission work are similar in many ways. In former years the German settlers lived nearer together, and it was not very difficult to gather them into congregations. Many churches were organized and developed without asking support from the Board. To-day, however, all this is changed. Our German people, among whom most of our work is being done, are scattered far and wide, and we are glad if we can begin here and there with eight or ten families. In the cities it is not much better. There is material enough, it is true, but the people have little interest in church or religion. We must not forget that most of our German immigrants in the cities have also come from cities in Germany, and every one knows that religious life in the German cities has declined rapidly during the last twenty years. The influence of liberal preachers has had its effect, since men are naturally inclined to leave God and their Saviour, and to build their own tower of Babel to reach unto heaven. The simple way of redemption is therefore foolishness to many as it was to the Athenians in the days of Paul. And if this natural inclination is even encouraged and strengthened by the teachers of religion, it is no wonder that hosts of men no longer care for the real message of Christianity. It is clear that little can be done with the people that have grown up here in the large cities of the west under such conditions. The word of the cross does not attract them, and as true witnesses of Christ we may preach nothing else.

But just as the gold-seeker is fortunate enough from time to time to find a larger or smaller nugget of real gold, the missionary also "strikes it rich" occasionally. One of our missionaries reports the following: "One day I was asked to preach a funeral sermon for a man who had been an utter stranger to me. As is usual in such cases I spoke in a general way, referring to the frailty of human life and how each one of us must one day appear before the throne of God to render an account of our life, whether it be good or evil. The funeral was conducted in the usual manner. Two or three days later an elderly man, a friend of the deceased, came to me and asked for an interview. The things we talked about were not for publication. The man had not been inside of a church for thirty years, but he promised to come to church again, and he kept his word. At every service he is in his place. A few months later he joined the church without being in any way asked to do so, and he is now an active member of our little church."

And just as the gold-seeker rejoices when he has found "pay dirt," the missionary who can say with Paul, "The love of Christ constraineth me," rejoices when he has by the grace of God, succeeded in winning a soul for his Saviour and the Church. And he is entitled to such joy. For if there is joy in heaven with the angels over every sinner that repenteth, a faithful missionary can surely rejoice when he has been instrumental in saving an immortal soul. Successes like these are rarely conspicuous, and the Board does not usually take especial notice of them, but the Good Shepherd applies another standard to the work of His servants than we short-sighted human beings. In His eyes one immortal soul counts for more than all the contributions and statistics in the world.

Another missionary reports the following: "At a recent social gathering I had a conversation with Mrs. X. She told me very frankly that educated people stayed away from the church because we did not offer them what they wanted. As a rule German pastors were too narrow and did not understand how to reach modern people in the right way. She was, she confessed, a stranger to the church for many years, altho she had grown up in a religious atmosphere. I invited her to come to church, so that she might judge for herself the work of German pastors. She promised and attended service the next Sunday. And she came not only once, but as often as I visited the place. To-day she is a member of the church in good standing who not only attends the services herself, but also brings others of her acquaintance to the meetings. I have been in home mission work for many years, and it does me good to be able to point to experiences like these, besides the many discouraging and unpleasant ones with which we so often meet."

Missionaries deserve more Appreciation

It seems to me we have far too little sympathy with our home missionary workers. Their work certainly is among the most difficult and self-denying which the Church carries on. The missionaries on the foreign field have far more sympathy from the Church and its members, but who has real interest in a missionary in our own land? Many even regard them as "second-class" pastors, for whom no other place can be found, and who ought to be glad to get a place to live in the far West. In our base-ball games the players are encouraged by applause and shouts of appreciation, and many a game that might have been lost has been won because the spirits of the player was cheered and stimulated by those who looked on. And

Continued on Page 7

Picked up by the Way

Interesting Items gleaned from Many Sources

Are the natives of the Balkan Peninsula ever to cease giving us surprises? One of these surprises comes in the statement that to-day no less than eighty-five per cent of the locomotives in use in Rumania are of the up-to-date oil-burning variety.

The enterprising hen keeps pace with the general advance in records of all sorts. In the fourth international egg-laying contest at Storrs, Connecticut, 1,000 hens laid in 1915 an average of 152 eggs each, as compared with 144 in the previous year.

A letter printed in the New York Evening Sun says that this sign appears in the Chicago public library—"Please do not sneeze in the books;" and this in the Boston public library—"Only low talk permitted here." These sound apocryphal; but we are assured that in the Cathedral at Strasbourg this placard is posted, presumably for the benefit of uneasy tourists: "Please do not circulate during the service."

"Screen Stars' Ball is an All-Night Reel," was the humorous headline that introduced an account of a dance recently held for the amusement of the "owners of the world's best-known faces," the popular movie actresses. As the faces of these young women appear daily before numberless audiences in countless photo-plays, there is some justification for the characterization.

Justice Day, of the United States Supreme Court, is a man of small stature, a writer in Everybody's observes; while his son looms high even among six-footers. Recently the son came into the Supreme Court room. Seizing the opportunity, Justice Holmes jotted down a note on a piece of paper and passed it along. When it reached Justice Day, he read: "My, the boy's a block off the old chip, isn't he, Day?"

The European correspondent of the "Railway Age Gazette" quotes a Frenchman, who had traveled thru-out France this fall and seen the wonderful work of women in the fields, as paying this indirect tribute to his countrywomen: "Would it not be a good thing to keep the men at war?" Besides raising the crops of the country, Frenchwomen are making munitions, keeping the post-office going, and doing much of the work connected with the railways.

"Why do we say 'Good-evening' when a visitor calls, and 'Good-night' when he goes?" asks Mary in Harper's Magazine. "Force of habit, I presume," answers Earl; "evening and night are synonymous terms." "Well," is the conclusive rejoinder, "they may be synonymous, but I guess you would rather have the society column report say that I appeared clad in a tasteful evening gown instead of saying I was clad in a tasteful nightgown."

"If any man here," shouted the temperance speaker, as reported by the "Western Druggist," "can name an honest business that has been helped by the saloon, I will spend the rest of my life working for the liquor people." A man rose. "I consider my business an honest one," he said, "and it has been helped by the saloon." "What is your business?" demanded the orator. "I am, sir," was the reply, "an undertaker."

A manufacturer of printing inks gives in the American Printer some reasons why the prices of his products have gone up, and incidentally says that perhaps there is some "artificial inflation of prices." Two things he cannot understand, he says: why lamp and carbon blacks, which are produced in this country very largely, should have been advanced 300 per cent on January first; and why chloride of lime should have advanced in price from 1½ cents to 17 cents a pound!

The Chinese junk is to most Western eyes a curious, not to say outlandish, type of vessel. Yet a nautical authority, in picturing and describing a famous craft of this kind which visited Europe and America as long ago as 1848, says that she proved herself an excellent sea boat, with powers of weathering a storm equal, if not superior, to vessels of Western build. This junk, the Keying, is also declared to have made a run "equal to the time of the best packet ships of the period." Information of this kind about foreign methods is often truly educative to Americans inclined to be boastful.

"WE BEHELD HIS GLORY"

Paganism from without and Error from within have delayed the Church's Conquest of the World, but cannot prevent the Fulfillment of her Destiny.

The Truth and the Freedom of the Reformation will win the World for Christ

PROF. S. D. PRESS, EDEN SEMINARY, ST. LOUIS. FROM THE GERMAN BY PASTOR J. J. BRAUN

III.

Beholding His Glory in the Church and Her History

The revelation of the glory of Christ shall reach its climax in the fulfillment of the prophecy: "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ," or literally: "The world-empire of our Lord and His appointed is established and He will reign from eternity to eternity." This is the goal of all world-development, the true theme of all history both of the Church and of the world. The signs at the founding of the Christian Church point to this relation of Christ to the world: the rushing mighty wind and the tongues as of fire. When the tempest is loosed nothing can abide before it, everything is swept away like the dust of the earth, the iron structures built by the hand of man are broken like a reed. Fire melts the hardest elements known to man. But their greatest power they do not show as destructive agencies but as beneficent and vitalizing forces: the wind as breath giving life, fire as a means of cleansing and refining.

Both symbolize the power of the Spirit residing in Christianity to which the victory over the world is assured. Toward hostile forces in the world the spirit of Christianity proves itself to be a force of destruction; they are overcome by Christianity. Its work of destruction will not be complete until the last enemy, the last and strongest of the forces of destruction will be exterminated, even death. Christianity shows itself as a vitalizing force, by becoming effective as salt and light among the nations wherever it is taken by its bearers, spreading culture and civilization, and creating a new humanity. Christianity does not arrive at its goal until the whole world is reconquered, not until by the force of its spirit it has infused the power of an eternal, never-ending life into the transformed world.

World-conquest and world-winning have formed the program of the Church of Christ from the beginning. Her history is one march of triumph thru the world and that without the slightest loss of vital energy. To this day the spirit of Christianity shows the same effectiveness as on the first day of Pentecost. Christianity has not only borne the human weaknesses and sins of its followers, but it has weathered crises much more severe than the present world-conflagration, and thereby added to the glory of the race as no other of the spiritual movements of the world has done. The weapons with which Christianity has gained its victory are the same which the Spirit of Jesus Christ gave into the hands of the leaders of the first Christian Church: the testimony of truth, of the righteous one, of the risen prince of life; and the Gospel of love in word and deed. The spirit of truth and the spirit of love are ethical forces by which Christianity has proven itself superior to all other spiritual forces in the world, and on which her ability for world-conquest rests.

Christianity victorious in every Struggle

World-conquest means struggle. Many a severe conflict has Christianity had to wage until it had acquired its present position as a world-encircling power. The first serious test which Christianity in its youth had to endure in conflict with the enemy brought a glorious victory. It was the conflict with its mightiest external foe, Greek and Roman paganism. The most powerful forces of the old world: the state, philosophy, and pagan religion, which are frequently to this day the greatest enemies of Christianity, had conspired to destroy it, root and branch. The various reasons for the inevitable collision of Roman-Greek paganism as representatives of the world-power at that time cannot be enumerated here for lack of space. Attention should be directed, however, to one principal reason that is expressed in the word of our Lord: "My kingdom is not of this world." For antique paganism as well as for the modern man of the world this world is the highest and best there is. For the Christian the greatest good is not of this world at all. It was just this emphasis upon the innermost contrast between Christianity as kingdom of God and paganism as kingdom of this world, by which Christianity exposed itself to the hatred of all pagan religions, of Greek philosophy, and of the Roman government and thereby to certain ruin.

But just this was the salvation of the Church of Christ. For in this contrast she possesses the world-conquering power of Christianity, by which she becomes invincible. Tho soon persecution were to set in upon the young Church like a terrible hail-storm upon the tender fields in Springtime, the Christians' courage to die; the sense of triumph with which the martyrs went to their death; the faith, which being certain of the supernatural counted the earthly life for naught: these things comprised the ethical strength by which Christianity finally overcame its strongest opponents.

A far greater menace, however, to the existence of the Christian Church came from within the Church itself. Wholesale desertions thru fear of martyrdom, the betrayal of close relatives, and later when the Church had become State-church, the entering of the poison of world-conformity and of the strange fire of pagan philosophy like a secret disease that gnaws at the very marrow of her life, these things threatened her very existence. Nevertheless she retained the spirit that made such heroes as Athanasius, Ambrose and Augustine, men in whom and thru whom the Christian faith gained clear expression both in the sphere of thought and of life itself. Coupled with this faith was the love that appeared most splendidly in the period of the triumphant Church: hospitals and hospices were multiplied. She retained above all the spirit of brotherly love which conquered the antique world with its relentless egotism and its apotheosis of man. The marvelous thing about Christianity is just this that it could not be destroyed, but that it rather gained the victory even despite the limitations of its adherents. Christianity conquered not thru the Christians but in spite of the Christians, by the power of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, the invincible forces of truth and love. As long as the Church remains conscious of her opposition to the world, her victory over the world is and always will be perfectly assured. True, persecutions thereby become inevitable. But the very persecutions that brought pain and terror to the Church in early days, brought also greatest blessing, for they prevented her identifying herself with the world.

The Reformation a great Stride forward in Christianity's World-conquest

The second and by far severer test, which, however, Christendom stood as well as the first, was a conflict with the enemy in her own midst, the conflict of Christianity with Catholicism: a conflict of the spirit against the supremacy of the flesh. Catholicism was and is to this day an attack upon the innermost nature of Christianity. It forbids freedom of faith and thereby freedom of action. Christianity is a spiritual religion and its highest goal is freedom of conscience, the right of the free personality. Its object is to redeem man from the dominion of the world and the flesh. Its goal is a free man, the freedom of the Christian man. Despite its negation of the world, Catholicism was and is to this day a religion of this world and of the flesh. For its object is the enslaving of the conscience, the suppression of free and independent thinking and of unhampered research. Catholicism as a church demands the right of absolute authority; her subjects must yield blind obedience, for her goal is dominion over the world. Catholicism attaining its zenith at the close of the Middle Ages was already sure of its victory when suddenly the spirit of Jesus Christ arose in the Church and by the message of the Reformation made possible the rebirth of the Church in Protestantism. From the depths of religious nature and out of the inexhaustible springs of the Gospel which the Church still bore under her heart, new forces of life issued forth, which have transformed not only the Church but the whole world. This meant a victory for Christianity comparable to nothing in the history of the race. The ideas of the Reformation took the Western world, especially the Germanic races by storm. The Reformation laid the foundation for the entire modern conception of life, created the present moral ideal of the world. It gave the Church true freedom from the world of earthly things, a freedom which cannot be found in the negation of the world as practiced in the monastic orders, but only in the Church's assuming the right attitude, toward the world, i. e. the attitude of effecting its reformation.

Thus in the Reformation, Christ gave to Christianity the means of accomplishing the second phase of its great world-program: the winning of the world. Therein also has He paved the way for the great triumphal march of the Church in its foreign and home missions work and in its achievements of union. Does not the missionary program of the twentieth century: "the evangelization of the world in this generation," call to mind the rushing mighty wind of the first Pentecost? Does not the social movement sweeping our generation reaching its climax in the slogan: "the brotherhood of man" recall the Pentecostal tongues of fire? World-conquest calls for sacrifice, stipulates martyr-spirit. Evidence of the fact that Christendom retains to this day its original spirit of sacrifice, and is still ready to lay down its best and dearest in the service of Christianity, is found not only in the tremendous sums of money spent for missionary purposes at home and abroad, but above all in the names of such men as Boardman in the field of foreign missions and Charles Richmond Henderson in the social service field.

But what does the sacrifice of the many thousands of young lives in the great world-war signify? Has God's hour come for the realization of the great idea of the union of the kingdom of God? Has the Church ever heard so mighty a sermon on the earnest plea of its high-priest: "that they may all be one?"

The work of Christianity in this world is not finished. The kingdoms of this world are not yet our Lord's. Christianity must still endure severe conflicts with the enemy within and without, which is after all one enemy: the Antichrist. When this time will come we do not know. But the Lord has said: "Blessed is that servant whom the Lord when He comes shall find watching." To be watching does not mean watching idly but actively. An active Christian is a live Christian. The more active our Christianity is in Bible Study and prayer, the more victorious it will be outwardly. Blessed are the pure in heart, that is, they that have but one passion: the Lord. For they shall see Him as He is, when the Lord shall come in His glory to take us into the new world of eternal life. "He that overcometh, I will give to him to sit with Me in my throne, even as I also overcame and sat down with my Father in His throne," Rev. 3: 21.

THE PROBLEM OF THE "MOVIES"

The Church can neither afford to ignore nor to condemn the Motion Picture. It is easier to influence the character of the Pictures shown by sympathetic Suggestion and Co-operation than by narrow Criticism or rigid Censorship

ORRIN G. COCKS, ADVISORY SECRETARY NATIONAL BOARD OF CENSORSHIP OF MOTION PICTURES

III.

The legally constituted officials of any city, whether they be the mayor, commissioners, license clerks, chiefs of police, or departmental heads, are the individuals who are able directly to express and enforce the will of the majority. Those who are interested, therefore, in local motion-picture regulation should hold these officials strictly accountable for the performance of their duty. It is entirely possible for them both to be in constant weekly touch with the national body, and so to learn the action taken upon all pictures, and also to discover quickly and effectively the complaints of citizens on pictures which offend well-recognized canons of morality. In Minneapolis, after lengthy discussion, the mayor has decided to accept the judgments of the National Board on the mass of pictures, but reserves the right to submit to a committee of twenty-five carefully selected citizens any pictures upon which there is a well-founded question. This method concentrates the attention of these volunteers upon the few pictures which deserve serious attention. The committee quickly advises the mayor, who takes action in accordance with the will of the majority.

There are three things which may be undertaken by those groups who are concerned with this form of public amusement in a given city. First, they may encourage the exhibition of satisfactory pictures for children on selected days. Secondly, they may develop a skilled group whose approval will call attention to the appearance of especially fine pictures from time to time. Lists of such pictures may be obtained from the national organization. Thirdly, they may arrange to have questionable pictures viewed upon their first appearance and make complaint if necessary to the mayor or his official representative.

The Church and Motion Pictures

The Church, which is concerned with the sources of action, must recognize the power of this new instrument for the entertainment and the instruction of the people. Countless thousands who respond but seldom to the call of the Church and her teachings are thronging daily to the picture theatres. Here they see presented in the most vivid and gripping manner the interplay of motives and emotions. They think as they follow the fortunes of the hero and the personification of evil. They develop habits of mind which make it easier or more difficult to venture into the experiences of life. This is no new plaything of a few persons who are amusement-mad. It is an ever-changing vital force which catches people when they are care-free and relaxed. It must be reckoned with and guided in its development that it may do its share in molding character in wholesome ways.

Why is there so much inertia and dead weight of opposition to the motion picture on the part of the Church? Is it impossible for the show to be decent and wholesome, even if it is purely for amusement and for the brightening of life? Must things be frowned upon which are not serious, ponderous, and uplifting? Must church people continually eye the motion picture askance and be ready to pounce upon minor weaknesses? Shall the Church lose influence by refraining from whole-hearted approval of the photo-play which is within the limits of cleanness and decency? Shall the motion picture be called the most formidable rival or competitor of the Church when it can be made to assist? It is undoubtedly the fact that the Church has withheld its sanction to this form of public entertainment. Here and there daring individuals have set themselves against the current. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, thru its Social Service Department, is now granting an approval. Those daring souls who have recognized the desire of the people for the joys of life have been surprised at the returns in interest in their message and the institution which they represent.

After discussing some of the principles involved, a series of questions present themselves centering around the use of the motion picture. Some of these, like the problem of the Sunday opening of motion-picture houses in cities, can not be discussed in this article. A minister in Denver concluded that it was far better for him to co-operate with a neighboring exhibitor than to introduce the motion-picture machine in his church. This arrangement began by the expressed willingness of the exhibitor to help raise the money needed to put a new roof on the church. The results of this friendly interest were so complete that little money needed to be raised elsewhere. Following the venture, the minister established such close relations with his friend, the exhibitor, that he often came over to the photo-play house for a five-minute talk after some specially good film, to drive home the moral. The results in making friends for the church have been excellent.

A minister in Sweetwater, Texas, arranged with an acquaintance, who was an exhibitor of another denomination, to use his house on Sunday afternoons for a combination service of music, pictures and address. When he changed his parish to Jonesboro, Arkansas, he was able to develop the same friendly relations, and now speaks to an audience of from five hundred to eight hundred and uses carefully selected films with a religious or moral tinge, which seem to be effective in changing the lives of individuals in his audience.

The junior congregation in the Christian Church in San Jose, California, have used motion pictures for three years with success. W. G. Brewster says, "We have found the service to be the most valuable point of contact with the unchurched population of our city we have ever discovered. People who could not be induced to enter a church building for a distinctly religious service can be induced to come and see the pictures on Saturday afternoon. Thus it becomes a stepping-stone to a closer affiliation; the habit is formed, they begin to feel at home in the building; their steps turn naturally in our direction, and as invitations to attend our Sunday service are always presented before our junior congregation, the closer approach is made natural and easy."

A few clergymen have recognized the value of the motion picture in attracting the people in the small villages and rural neighborhoods for community purposes. They have felt the drift toward the cities and have attempted to meet it in a manner similar to that of Mrs. Porter in her new book, "Michael O'Halloran." The lives of many persons in rural communities are devoid of amusement. Such persons lead their independent lives on farms and have little of the community feeling which makes the city so attractive. When the motion picture is introduced into the parish house, the school, or the church, immediately the people gather and find themselves neighbors and friends. This instrument which brings the world to their door is the means of developing community centers and a common purpose. The Rev. H. F. Robbins, of Canasagera, New York, has a thrilling story to tell for those who have ears to hear.

But what of the young people? They are at the same time the inspiration and the despair of clergymen. They will have enjoyment. They will play. They will go to the motion picture whether you want them to or not. The appeal is stronger than the prohibition. With the development of self-consciousness, they determine that they will not be preached to continually. All life becomes an adventure and they will have their part in it. They desire the good rather than the bad, but they want something all the time, whether it is good or bad. Left to themselves, they will choose good, clean fun and wholesome thrill as well as judicially presented education. Nothing is gained with them, therefore, by polemics against the motion picture. When there is absolute opposition, the young person decides that this comes from narrow bias and the formal spirit. He reacts against the advice and warning which may be wise and sorely needed in other lines.

The age of transition from youth to manhood and womanhood marks the greatest falling away from the church. Possibly some of this can be arrested during this time of strain and stress if recognition is accorded to fundamental needs and support is given to such agencies as the motion picture in meeting these needs.

The Social By-Product

People are slowly recognizing the social influences of the motion picture, which have developed as by-products of its growth and appeal. Will you call to mind the aimless wanderings of hosts of young people on week days and Sunday nights in your town? Thousands of these were on the streets in small groups, searching for friendship, excitement, and mates. Many of the social and moral barriers were let down and parents were given many a heartache, and struggled to avoid or hide many a scandal. A certain amount of this is inevitable with every generation. But with the coming of the motion picture, another element has been introduced. All thru the day in the shops, factories and stores, on the street and in the cars, the films in the neighborhood picture houses are being discussed. These same young people, in large proportion, now find their way nightly to the "movie," and are at least held under the spell of something more impersonal than one another.

The motion picture has demonstrated in scores of cities and towns that it has a more powerful hold upon the men than has the saloon. Liquor licenses are falling off, the corner saloon disappearing, and sobriety in the home of workingmen is supplanting the waste of character, money, and home life across the bar.

Here, then, is a great new art which has laid hold of all classes of people. Its ethical influences are far-reaching and vital. Whether we desire it or not, it is here to stay. The part of wisdom would seem to direct that the Church co-operate in its development, and utilize it in every possible way in religious instruction and in reaching the unchurched masses.

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

April 23, 1916. Easter Sunday

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

LESSONS OF OUR IMMORTALITY

- M. Apr. 17. Life a pilgrimage. Heb. 11: 8—10, 14—16.
 T. Apr. 18. Life a preparation. 1 Pet. 1: 13—25.
 W. Apr. 19. Life a growth. 2 Cor. 3: 18.
 T. Apr. 20. Life a responsibility. 2 Cor. 5: 5—10.
 F. Apr. 21. Death a doorway. Phil. 1: 15—26.
 S. Apr. 22. Hope breeds patience. 2 Cor. 4: 14—18.

Sun., Apr. 23. Topic:—The Lessons of our Immortality. Rom. 6: 1—23. (Easter meeting.)

Suggestions to the Leader

When and where do you expect to hold your meeting? These two questions must be determined before you can proceed with the plans of your meeting. A sunrise, or early Easter morning meeting is suggested. This is a most appropriate time for the young people's Easter service. The societies which have tried an early morning meeting will want to hold another. There is a fragrance to the early Easter morning air which no evening air can produce. Easter morning is the time for an Easter message. Societies that have never tried a sunrise devotional meeting are urged to try out this plan this year.

Where will the meeting be held? Of course in your regular Sunday-school auditorium or meeting place. In the church auditorium, if the entire congregation is invited to participate. Let me suggest another plan to you. Why not plan an open air meeting in God's Acre, the city of our dead, if the weather permits, and your cemetery is not too far away. There is a suggestiveness to such a meeting which will make you realize the inborn faith we have in our immortality, and the joy we experience because of the message: He is risen!

But wherever the meeting is held, plan to make your meeting inspiring and helpful. Let us hasten to the grave of Jesus, as the women did of old, but with this difference: they came to find the dead Jesus, we come to meet the living Christ. Therefore let us rejoice and proclaim the triumph of our Lord to all the world.

The Topic Presented

Our Scripture lesson reveals to us the importance of our professed justification thru faith in Jesus Christ. If we believe in Jesus who died and rose from the dead, then our faith must exercise a regenerating and transforming influence over us. It is inconceivable that we, who believe in the resurrection of Jesus should continue in our old ways of living. The resurrection of Jesus, our own immortality, demand a new personality in the believers.

1. Faith in the resurrected Jesus demand complete renouncement of sin. V. 1—3. Shall we continue in sin that grace may multiply? Is it conceivable that he who has accepted Jesus Christ as his Saviour, and who has submitted to the rite of baptism will continue in sin, arguing that the greater the sin, the greater will be forgiveness, and correspondingly greater will be the grace of God that forgives? Baptism in Jesus implies participation in His death. Jesus died to destroy sin, and we who have been baptized in Jesus have thereby expressed a determination to die unto sin. The new graft is not budded on the tree to die, but to receive new life from the old tree. So when we are grafted on to the body of Jesus, we must completely renounce the old life. We cannot continue the old ways because our entire nature is changed. Our faith in our immortality impels us to renounce the life that is not in harmony with immortal life.

2. Faith in the resurrected Jesus produces a newness of life and conduct. V. 4—8. It cannot be otherwise. A renewed life, a changed person produces new conduct. For we live not by old rules, but by the rules of a new life. The dynamic of our life has been changed. Impelled formerly by low, sinful motives, we are now dominated by the divine Spirit. "In Christ the man has, in a sense as perfectly practical as it is inscrutable, new life, new power, as the Holy Spirit applies to his inmost being the presence and virtues of his Head. In Him he lives, by Him he moves." When springtime comes the trees must bud, the flowers must bloom, the lawns are radiant with life. When the Spirit of God comes into our life we cannot be otherwise than God-like, for in Him we live, and thru Him we have our being.

3. Our faith in the resurrected Jesus produces a new personality. V. 8—11. The Christian is a different being. He not only acts differently, but he is different. The motives of his life, his aspirations and expectations, his hopes and ambitions, his virtues and characteristics,—everything is changed. A regenerated man implies a changed man. Change the principles and you change the being. Progress in our industrial world has become possible thru the adaptation of man's work to the laws of nature. Thus our whole industrial system has undergone a regeneration, new principles have been developed, new powers applied. Progress in the inner man is only possible as we adapt and accept Divine principles. A new man will be developed, a new being created.

4. Our faith in the resurrected Jesus implies complete self-surrender. V. 12—13. According to Verse 6, the old body of sin is done away with, or cancelled.—Paul uses here a mathematical expression. The death of Christ has cancelled our sinful being, and henceforth we are no longer sin's servant, but God's children, to whom we have surrendered our all. Present your bodies, your whole being, centre and circumference to God as men living in the risen life of Jesus our Saviour, using all faculties and limbs as implements of righteousness.

Some Questions on the Topic

1. Why need we keep our immortality in mind?
2. How can we become assured of our immortality?
3. What does our immortality require of us in relation to our earthly life?
4. How can we best prepare ourselves for the blessed eternity?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Gen. 5: 24; 2 Sam. 12: 23; Psalm 16: 10, 11; 36: 9; Eccl. 12: 7; Matt. 16: 26; 19: 16, 17; Mark 12: 26, 27; John 3: 14; 17: 2, 3; Rom. 6: 22, 23; 1 Cor. 15: 53—55; 1 Thess. 5: 10; 1 Tim. 6: 12, 19; Rev. 22: 5.

A Prayer

Almighty God, who thru Thine only begotten Son Jesus Christ hast overcome death and opened unto us the gate of everlasting life, we humbly beseech Thee that we may ever be mindful of the newness of life to which we have been called. Even as Jesus died for the sins of the world, so shall we die unto sin. As He arose to a new life, so shall we arise to the newness of life, in which our whole being is transformed and made like unto our Father in heaven. May we walk circumspectly, not as children of sin, but as children of our heavenly Father, redeemed and delivered by the precious blood of our Saviour. Grant us, we pray the gift of Thy Holy Spirit, that thru Him we may receive the power of the resurrection of Jesus Christ, that by His continual help we may bring the new life into effect thru Jesus Christ our Lord, who liveth and reigneth forever. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson 4. The Glory of the Resurrection

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Apr. 17. 1 Cor. 15: 1—11. The Risen Christ.
 T. Apr. 18. 1 Cor. 15: 12—28. The Resurrection Gospel.
 W. Apr. 19. Luke 24 13—24. The Journey to Emmaus.
 T. Apr. 20. Luke 24: 25—35. Recognizing the Risen Christ.
 F. Apr. 21. Psa. 16. The Dying Saint.
 S. Apr. 22. 1 Thes. 4: 13—18. The Resurrection of Saints.
 S. Apr. 23. 1 Cor. 15: 50—58. The Resurrection Triumph.

Lesson Key:—"Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth on Me tho he die, yet shall he live." John 11: 25.

The striking thing about the testimony of the Apostles to the life and the power of Jesus Christ is the manner in which they lay stress upon His resurrection. The wonderful events surrounding His birth, the truth and forcefulness of His preaching, the striking ministry of His miracles, His spotless life and His unique personality are apparently given a subordinate place, while every opportunity is seized for proclaiming and enlarging on His death upon the cross and His resurrection from the dead. St. Paul is especially in earnest about the fact and the meaning of the resurrection, because it embodies the very heart of the Gospel of Christ; in his own personal experience the risen Christ represented the living irresistible force that change front completely in his most fundamental religious convictions and his spiritual aims and ideals. The very fact that Paul was an ambassador of Jesus Christ was the best possible evidence of the power of Christ's resurrection.

This emphasis upon the resurrection is entirely in line with Jesus' own idea and plan. In the very beginning of His ministry, when the Jews demanded a sign of His authority for cleansing the temple, the only answer they received was "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up," John 2: 19—22. And when, later on, certain of the scribes and Pharisees desired a sign from Him, He told them that no sign would be given them except the sign of Jonah the prophet; that just as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the whale, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth Matt. 12: 40. Unique and wonderful beyond degree as the whole life of Jesus Christ was, the most unique and striking part of it all, the one event that forced all who heard of it to come to an immediate and final decision in regard to Him, was His resurrection on the third day. The people who heard Him speak, who witnessed His remarkable deeds of healing and helping, or who saw His holy life, against which even His bitterest enemies could not bring a shadow of a charge, felt all along that sooner or later they would have to take their stand either for or against Him. It was clear to all who followed His ministry that He stood for something which men would either have to accept or reject, that He represented the truth from God that pierced even to the dividing line of soul and spirit, the issue upon which ultimately the fate of men would be decided.

The resurrection put that issue up to all who heard of it in such a manner that it was impossible to evade or avoid. When the news spread that the grave of Jesus of Nazareth was empty, and that He had been actually seen by His followers among the inhabitants of Jerusalem on that first day of the week, it immediately drew the line between His believers and His opponents. Those who believed in Him rejoiced with all their hearts when their doubts were overcome; those who opposed Him refused to believe, and when the weight of evidence was too great to be set aside, they gnashed their teeth in impotent rage. The facts were so clear that the feeble attempt to deny them by bribing the guards to spread the report that His disciples came by night and stole Him away while the guards slept, seems utterly ridiculous. It is worth remembering to-day that the first and finally the only ones to cast a doubt upon the reality of Jesus' resurrection were the enemies of Jesus, and only His enemies have since tried to follow their example. No other historical event is better attested, as the following six undisputable facts show: 1.) The disciples never expected Jesus to die, least of all upon the cross; 2.) They also never even thought of a resurrection, Luke 24: 21; 3.) Not even the empty tomb awakened the thought that He could have risen; John 20: ; Luke 24: 11; 4.) They were reluctantly convinced of the reality of Jesus' resurrection by physical demonstration; 5.) Thomas is first convinced by the Master's second appearance; 6.) With the aid of the Roman guard at the tomb it should have been an easy matter for the Jews to show where the body of Jesus was if He were not risen. That no one paid any serious attention to the denials of the chief priests is further evidenced by the fact that the Apostles apparently never needed to prove the reality of the resurrection; what they emphasized was the importance of the fact and its meaning to the believers in Christ.

The importance and meaning of the resurrection is very plainly and fully set forth in the answer to Question 81 of the Evangelical Catechism: "The resurrection of Christ clearly establishes the redemption as all-sufficient for all eternity. It is therefore the foundation of all faith, the source of all new life, and a positive pledge of our future resurrection and perfection."

Some Difficulties in Home Mission Work

Continued from Page 4

our missionaries surely deserve as much as baseball players get without even asking for it! Many a missionary has lost courage because he said to himself, "It's no use; my work is not appreciated and I get neither moral nor financial support." I know of one capable, faithful and experienced missionary worker who is thinking of joining another denomination just because the Evangelical Church does not appreciate its missionary work and workers as they deserve to be appreciated. Let us remember our missionary brethren constantly in our prayers so that they may go about their work cheerfully and with boldness. If it is difficult for any pastor to do his work with grief, it is actually depressing for a missionary if he receives little or no encouragement in his difficult and self-denying labors.

Very frequently it is not the missionary's fault if the work does not show the expected progress. Conditions are often such that even the best and most experienced worker cannot develop a field as he would like it. I know of one church that was organized under the most favorable circumstances. From the very beginning the services in the new church were well attended, and after a year it seemed that the future of that church was assured. But developments did not correspond to the beginning. Two other denominations began work in the same section of the city. German people, even those who had belonged to an Evangelical Church all their lives, now began to attend the more convenient places of worship, so as not to be obliged to use the street cars. When the business depression set in a number of people moved away, and those who might have been won under normal conditions held back. Instead of increasing, as all signs had seemed to promise in the beginning, the church became weaker from year to year in spite of the faithful efforts of the missionary. God knows what will yet become of the church. Only those who have been in missionary work themselves, or are still engaged in it, know anything of the pressure under which a missionary must labor under these conditions. A missionary on the foreign field is not expected to show visible results immediately, as is the case with a home mission worker. Our missionaries on the home field need our prayers and our moral support just as much as those on the foreign field.

Some things need to be Changed

Sometimes a missionary does not find the financial support in his Church to which he is entitled, and which he needs in order to make his work progress. One of our workers was sent out into a rapidly growing town on the Pacific coast. As we had no points of contact, as is usually the case where a new beginning is made, the work was doubly difficult. The missionary, however, was no novice, and as he was not easily discouraged he soon succeeded in gathering a small flock of faithful Evangelical Christians. The members and the pastor were agreed that a church building was necessary if the congregation was to develop in the proper manner. The members, by doing their level best, proposed to raise $1,000—$700 in cash and $300 in labor. The writer and the president of the Pacific District visited the place to confer with the members and their pastor and select a suitable location for the new church. A centrally located site was found and the purchase price of $1,700 agreed to. The Church Extension Board was requested to set aside its usual rule (according to which money for church building purposes is advanced only when the lot has been paid for by the congregation itself) and loan $2,500 to this church for building the church and for paying the balance on the lot. The completed property would have represented a value of at least $3,500. But the Church Extension Board did not see its way clear to grant the request. If, in a country congregation, a farmer member presents the church with, say an acre of land valued at perhaps $100, that church may, according to the rules laid down by the General Conference for the Church Extension Board, obtain money from the Board for building a church upon that land. But if a struggling city church has raised $1,000 with the utmost effort, the Board must tell that church, "You must do just twice as much as you have done before we may help you." And we need not wonder if a handful of church members, who had looked forward with joyful anticipation to having a church of their own, because they were sure of help from the Synod, is now discouraged, because more is asked of them than they are able to give. And we are not surprised that a number of members of this church have already withdrawn their support. Only those who have had similar experiences themselves know how discouraging they are to the mission worker. According to the law it is a father's duty to care for his child. If we aim to do missionary work in our growing cities, especially those of the far west and on the Pacific coast, we dare not leave our workers in the lurch when their demands do not quite tally with the letter of the law. If the missionary worker, under such conditions, says, "Send any one you want to, I have enough," we can well understand his position and cannot blame him.

Our missionary efforts in the great western regions can be successful only in so far as they are systematic. In order to secure such systematic and effective work we need a field secretary who could devote his entire time and strength to this work and who would have the full confidence of and work in harmony with both the Central Board for Home Missions and the Church Extension Board. In this way the work could be done systematically. The boards in the east would be better able to take the proper steps. Many mistakes could be avoided. The Central Board would not have to pay so dearly for so much of its experience and there would certainly be work enough for a man in such a position. Other denominations who have employed a field secretary have made progress on the Pacific coast and have a number of flourishing congregations. The sooner we abandon our antiquated system the better. Had we worked in such a manner during the last ten or fifteen years we should have accomplished far more by this time.

J. Nuesch.

The Gift without the Giver

Continued from Page 3

they packed away the things, and addressed the box containing them to the mission in which they were so much interested. As they worked Marion told of her visit to Miss Priscilla and its result.

"Auntie Brown," she concluded, "I really thought that God directed me, and that He had some special message for her, and just see how I have blundered, how I have angered her! Perhaps thru my clumsiness poor Miss Priscilla has lost forever the joys of giving."

"I believe that God did direct you," replied Mrs. Brown. "And you may have accomplished His work better than you suppose. But do not think it is finished. Keep on praying for her."

* * * *

Next forenoon there came a quick summons to the door, and there Marion found Miss Priscilla, agitated, trembling with emotion.

"Oh Marion," she cried, "I have had such a horrible night. I just had to come to you."

Marion drew her into the house and tried to soothe her, but Miss Priscilla could only find relief in telling her story.

"Such a night," she repeated over and over again. "It seemed as if I would die! I do not know whether I dreamed it, or it was a reality. God showed me myself—my life—as He must see me. Every year—every day—was unrolled before me. Such barren years—such misspent days—and nothing—nothing—done for Him; all—all—lived for self! What shall I do? Here is my life almost spent—and nothing to show for it. I have been shown such pitiful sights—needy ones—starving ones—sinful ones—and the world's vital wants—and I—yes,—have hoarded and kept all these years what God gave me for others. What shall I do? How can I ever atone? How can I ever get peace? Oh, if I could only live my life over—could only undo the past! All these treasures hoarded up on earth, and none in heaven! How blind—how wicked I have been! Can there be forgiveness—mercy for me?"

Tenderly Marion comforted and assured the exhausted woman. To her lips came marvelous promises from God's own word; promises of forgiveness and mercy, assurances of help and guidance; declarations of everlasting love, until the poor troubled, bewildered soul could grasp and rest upon them.

Marvelously happy times did the two have in dispersing and disposing of the accumulated hoards. And as her cherished possessions melted away, Miss Priscilla found that all of her burdens and cares vanished also. She had learned to know that—

"The Holy Supper is kept indeed

In whatso we share with another's need.

Not what we give but what we share,

For the gift without the giver is bare;

Who gives himself with his alms feeds three—Himself, his suffering neighbor, and Me."

Be a real man—not a shoddy sport or a sham aristocrat. Be sincere with yourself, your friends, and your work. With sincerity, a few talents and a little strength may go far. Without it, genius itself must fail!—Chicago Tribune.

Now Ready!

Order immediately!

YOU WILL NEED THIS BOOK
FOR YOUR EASTER SERVICES

Evangelical Book of Worship

MOROCCO. GILT EDGES

Size and Style like our German Kirchen-Agende
Antique

Price, Postpaid $3.00 Net

FOREWORD

The manner in which the service of the Evangelical Church is conducted not only distinguishes it from other Churches, but has at the same time a far-reaching, unconscious and continuous influence upon the essential elements of belief in the hearts of the worshipers. The great truths and historic facts of Christianity may be expressed in statements of doctrine; but unless they come to expression also in the common exercises of devotion, they are almost certain to be lost to the living consciousness of the Church. It is true that the language of devotion is different from the language of definition. It is simpler, warmer, less intellectual and more emotional. It falls naturally into an utterance reflecting the deep currents of experience, and moves under the impulses of the quickened heart. But the facts which enter into this experience, and the truths which quicken the heart to penitence, prayer and praise, are none other than those which enter into the fabric of the faith. Devotion, in order to be helpful and sincere, must translate the elements of our belief into the language of confession and petition, adoration and thanksgiving, consecration, intercession and benediction, joyful praise and solemn sacrament.

May this book go out and be the friend and companion of the Pastor in conducting the service, and may it help to achieve the true end of Evangelical worship, which is that all people should join in the service of God as He is revealed in Jesus Christ.

J. BALTZER, President-General.

A Survey of Ministerial Service for the Pastor of Today

Christian Ministry

By J. B. ROTHERHAM

109 pages. Cloth

75 Cents

Here is a book of rare freshness and charm. Mr. Rotherham, with his ripe scholarship and rich experiences, sketches with a masterhand the outlines of the sacred task of ministering, and then fills in the details of his picture with the skill of an artist and the ardor of an enthusiast. He deals most helpfully and convincingly with the subject of preaching, and gives sound advice to all who desire to preach with effectiveness; but he includes all Christians in the work of ministering and has something to say to parents and neighbors as to their privileges and responsibilities.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., APRIL 20th, 1916

NUMBER 16

The Resurrection and the Life

Why so many Christians are Missing the Meaning of the Easter Message

The crisis in Jesus' ministry was fast approaching. At the feast of the dedication, John 10: 22, etc., the Jews had demanded a plain declaration: "If Thou art the Christ, tell us plainly." And Jesus had told them again what He had emphasized before, "The works that I do in my Father's name, these bear witness of Me I and the Father are one." This provoked His enemies to attack Him as a blasphemer and He retired beyond the Jordan into the place where John was at the first baptizing. Here there came to Him the message from the home of Mary and Martha and Lazarus in Bethany, "Behold, he whom Thou lovest is sick." After two days, in spite of the danger to be faced, He set out to comfort His friends.

Lazarus was dead when Jesus reached Bethany, and apparently there was some reason for the mild reproach in the sister's greeting, "Lord, if Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." But Jesus had a purpose of His own, both in remaining in the place where He was for two days after He had received notice of Lazarus' illness, and also in departing again for hostile Judea after He knew that Lazarus was dead. He had realized at once that Lazarus' sickness was not "unto death, but for the Glory of God," and it was in order that Mary and Martha and the Jews who had come to comfort them in their sorrow at their brother's death might see the glory of God that He now proposed to face the danger of death to awake him out of sleep. If the whole gospel of John has been compared to an exquisite work of art, the words in which Jesus reveals an aspect of His glory that has hitherto been unknown and undreamed of, John 11: 25, 26, must be compared to the very center of its beauty and perfection.

It is worth noting, before attempting to understand the meaning of Jesus' words for us to-day, that when Jesus saw Mary weeping, and the Jews also weeping who came with her, He groaned in the spirit and was troubled, and then He wept. It was natural to suppose, as the Jews who saw Him did suppose, that His tears were tears of sorrow for the loss of a friend and of sympathy with the bereaved sisters. But in the light of what followed we must look for a deeper meaning of the Lord's emotions, and the care with which John describes them only serves to strengthen the conviction that there was a deeper meaning. No doubt Jesus had sympathy for the mourners and felt with them, but there was something manifesting itself in that assembly, even in the attitude of His closest friends, with which he could never be in sympathy. What caused Jesus to groan in the spirit and be troubled was the fact that this crowd of mourners, including some of His closest friends and most faithful believers, still looked upon death as an extinction of life, as a separation from God and from life. That even the best of God's children did not believe in God as greater than death, and in death as ruled by God and giving closer access to God and more abundant life, was almost more than He could bear. For one who lived in God and with God as did Jesus Christ it was unthinkable that death could mean the end of life or separation from God, that one who was bound to God by love could ever drop out of that love into nothingness of desolation. It was imperative therefore that He should reveal himself as the resurrection and the life, that resurrection and life are not in the future only as Martha thought, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day," but that it was actually theirs already thru their union with Him.

For uncounted hosts of sincere Christians the light and joy and brightness of the Easter message is blurred and dimmed by the tears of sorrow and bereavement. They hear the joyful message: "He is risen!" but they do not take from it the wonderful consolation and comfort which it holds. They read of the risen Lord's appearances to His disciples, and even over their spiritual life is fittingly expressed by the somber hues of the mourning garb which Christian custom has so strangely sanctioned, and which can have only a depressing influence upon their state of mind.

Into "the darkness between God and His creatures that gave room for, and was filled with, their weeping and wailing over their dead," there shines the glory of Him who is the light of the world, that the joy of His believers may be full, a joy that no one can take away from them. Into the gloom of their sorrow there comes the voice of Him who is the resurrection and the life, a life already present in each believer which death can never destroy. And the glory of that light and the power of that life is available constantly for every believer. Death is a conquered enemy ever since Lazarus came forth from the tomb at the voice of Him who is the resurrection and the life. When Jesus cried with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth!" it was because life was to Him, not two distinct compartments, a present life and a future life, with a great gulf fixed between them, but one continuous constant current, to be measured, not by its length, but by its depth and power. The eternal life He promises to His believers is not merely a blessed state to be enjoyed at some dim period in the far distant future, but a present condition inseparably united with the whole glorious fullness of God's own life. Immortality is not merely an endless existence after death, it is only life with God; life without God is death, it cannot be called life at all.

What does it matter then, if our loved ones who died in the Lord lie in the tomb, away from the homes to which they brought light and joy, away from the loving embrace that brought such pleasure and comfort? They still live, and thru Christ, our common Lord, they live with us and we with them. When we lose a beloved child, brother or sister, father or mother, relative or friend, those with whom the very joy of our own life was bound up inseparably, it may be some comfort to know that some day the associations that death has broken will again be united. But Jesus does not comfort Martha by pointing to a far-off, vague and remote period. He points to himself, His own living person, whom she knew, saw, loved and trusted. And He assured her that in Him there is resurrection and the life; that death could not affect those who belonged to Him, because thru their union with Him they all had a part of His own and God's present and continuous, infinite and endless life.

It was but a glimpse of this truth that was given to Mary and Martha and the Jews at the tomb of Lazarus. What Jesus revealed to His friends there was revealed in all its glorious fullness and power to all the world and for all time on the first Easter morning. Death and the grave can no longer strike terror into the hearts of men. Those who acknowledge Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Lord share His victory over death. It is but the shadow which human guilt has cast upon mankind. Those who are Christ's own may be as sure of eternal life as they are of sunrise after the darkest night. And victory means song and rejoicing, not sorrow and tears.

"Touch Me not," John 20: 11-17

of the abundant proofs He gave them that what they saw was not merely a vision but an actual reality, but they do not seem to realize what all this means for them. Words like "I am the resurrection and the life;" "Because I live, ye shall live also;" "Jesus Christ abolished death and brought life and immortality to light;" "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy victory? O death, where is thy sting? Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory thru our Lord Jesus Christ," are very familiar to them, but somehow they do not affect their inward life. The sense of loss, of separation, of sorrow at their bereavement is apparently so overwhelming that the real meaning and power of their faith in Christ has no chance at all. The gloom that surrounds their hearts and minds and casts its spell

Having Passed Thru Death

BY ARTHUR PEIRCE VAUGHN

In the Garden

Day resurrected from the tomb of night;
Dawn flaming from the dark; from winter, spring
New-born in bloom; and cold, stark roots that fling
Transfigured lilies upward into light—
These miracles on one sweet morn unite,
What hour a Man, from death awakening,
Enjoyed with joy that knew nor lack nor sting,
Earth's olden beauty and dawn's new delight.

Knelt Mary Magdalene in the pale gloom—
Mary, the woman who had loved this Man,
Whose pain-dulled heart hoped naught as guerdon than
To tend with holy care His corse and tomb.
Living again to minister and bless,
He sought her first who was most comfortless.

At Emmaus

Two foolish, startled men, their holden eyes
Fix on the door, thru which He has not passed,
And pierce the vacant air where He, that last
Heart-burning moment, sat without disguise.
His utter faith, His comforting replies
Dispel the doubts these fearsome days have cast;
While Christ-blest bread within their hands held fast
Confirms the vision and their need supplies.

The serving-maid draws near in dull surprise
To scan the place—His cup, His broken bread;
But these hold in hot hearts the words He said—
The wisdom wherewith only heaven is wise.
So ever, Lord of perfect ministry,
The soul hath succor e'er it loseth Thee!

By the Sea

The gray mists drift and mingle on the sea
Where dawn-stars glint in darkling waters still,
And fishermen, a-hungered, faint and chill,
Whose nets all night have sifted ceaselessly
The barren waves, make one cast more, as He,
A passing Stranger, bids, and finding, thrill
Amazed when prisoned shoals His word fulfill,
Assured by this who spake the prophecy.

Aye, Jesus, unknown in the dusk of dawn,
With nail-pierced hands broiled fish and toasted bread,
And stood, their Servitor, who breakfasted
In blessed luxury as day drew on.
Living the deathless life, He came a-speed
To find His friends and serve their common need.

With His Flock

At dawn beside the sea they broke their fast
Served by the risen Lord as minister,
Who spoke anon as the soul's arbiter,
The Judge of human duty, and the last
Sovereign of human love, before He passed
To the unseen. All future ages were
To know Him by the mirrored character
In lives He left transfigured, strong and chaste.

These twelve alone had shared His ministry,
Had heard His gospel, seen His works of power;
On them He leans, who failed Him Calvary's hour,
And takes again their pledge of loyalty.
Leaving a dying world scarce touched, He said,
"Lovest thou Me? Be shepherds in My stead!"

Father's Risen Sermon

BY ANNIE HAMILTON DONNELL

Louisa Hewes recognized trouble in the pad of her husband's slippers down the hall to her little sewing-room. It was a troubled pad.

Oh! she knew, she knew what he would say at the door, in his poor creaky-creaky voice. "No use, Louie; I shall never be able to do it in the world." He would say that, poor boy, and look as if never being able to do it in the world were a mortal sin. Actually Lincoln was ashamed of being hoarse!

He stood in the door.

"I shan't be able to make it, Louie; no use," he said; and his pale, clean-shaven face had a look of guilt. "I've been trying to preach to your grandfather's book-case, and I don't believe a book in it heard a word I said. My voice goes entirely after a few words. What am I going to do, little girl? I'm too hoarse to think."

"Get somebody else to preach the Easter sermon," she replied promptly. "The people must get along without you this year."

"Too late, dear." Now he was whispering. "I can't think of a single man. It isn't as if I were exchanging, you see, Louie; you haven't counted days, I guess."

"Yes, I have—three. Can't find a 'supply' in three days, dear boy?"

But in her heart she realized the difficulties. She had been a minister's wife eleven years. Poor Lincoln, to have to give up his eleventh Easter sermon! It would have been so beautiful a one, full of up-to-date, vigorous, modern theology. Beautiful touches of eloquence, too; Lincoln was a master of eloquence, and the church was proud of him.

Westlea was an up-to-date little suburb of a great city. The members of Lincoln Hewes's congregation were for the most part people of wealth and social ambitions. They wore their rich clothes unostentatiously, but with a certain quiet consciousness of their richness, comfortably sure of the admiration of on-lookers. The few poor members were set apart as if in a sub-congregation of their own.

The young pastor had not succeeded yet in welding the two parts together into the harmonious whole of his desire. Tho he himself did not in the least comprehend it, nor his gentle little wife, Louisa, it was yet a fact that Rev. Lincoln's sermons were preached to the congregation proper rather than to the little sub-one in humble Sunday clothes. He and his wife would have been the first to resent such a slanderous imputation.

Easter at Westlea was a season of considerable "celebration" of the modern and fashionable sort. Beautiful flowers vied with beautiful garments, and the smart little church congratulated itself always upon a most satisfactory Easter address. Their young pastor had never disappointed them. But now, this Easter—

"Louie, if it was any other time!" The words were a whispered groan.

"I know, dear boy. Oh, I know it all! This minute, if it will be any comfort, I'll cry all over this little Easter gown of Maidie's. Say the word, dear boy."

But he was beyond comfort by such simple means. She could not coax a smile to his troubled face. The severe cold that had cost him his good, resonant voice—one of his chief charms—had made him generally weak and indisposed. He came into the little sunny room, and sank feebly into a rocker. The little litter of toys on the floor failed to call into his pleasant eyes, for the once, the tender father-look the gentle wife and mother loved. The babies even had failed the poor boy.

Suddenly a thought came to the woman making Maidie's little dress. It was rather a startling thought, a disturbing one. She tried to dismiss it, but it insisted upon being entertained. Poor Father, dear Father! She had a sense of disloyalty in recognizing the shrinking of her own mind from the thought. For her to fail Father like that!

"I can't think of a soul to call on—not a soul," the minister sighed.

It was a mere breath of voice, but the ears of her heart were keen to hear. She looked across at the dejected "boy," and again the startling thought. She got to her feet abruptly, the little gown billowing about her skirt in a filmy cloud.

"Lincoln, dear boy," she began. She would suggest it.

"Yes?" he answered absently, absorbed in his own dilemma.

"There's—Father."

He heard with perfect distinctness then. Their eyes met instinctively across the little littered space. His expression surprised her; she had expected instant rejection of her suggestion. In both their faces was an underlying tenderness and love for Father.

After a moment he spoke. "I did not think of him; will you write, Louie? I don't feel equal to that even."

"Yes, I will write, dear boy," she spoke slowly, a certain wonder in her voice, "if—if you are sure you want me to. It frightens me a little, Lincoln. You have always thought—we have always thought—oh, you know what I mean! Don't make me say it. If he comes and preaches, he will be—Father. We couldn't ask him to be anybody else, and it would not do any good if we did. He will stand up there in your pulpit, with your fine choir behind him and your people in front, and—dear boy—he will be Father, in Father's clothes, and speak Father-things. Are you sure—shall I write him, dear?"

"Write him," the young minister said. "He will come, and there is no one else, Louie, you know for myself—"

"And myself," she put in hurriedly, "I know for both ourselves we would trust Father; you needn't say it."

On both their faces crept a softness. They were both seeing Father, stooping and old, in his quaint old ministerial garments, the long coat flapping about his knees, the high stock under his strong old chin. They were both hearing Father preach.

But they failed alike in this inward vision in the environment of Father. They could not set him in the luxurious little pulpit of the Westlea Church, with the beautiful choir behind him, the silken, listless congregation before. Father's earnest old face and the indifferent Westlea faces did not go together. And Father's theology—

He came on Saturday. Louisa, his daughter, unpacked his valise, and hung up his Sunday suit with tender misgivings. She found no closely written sheets.

"Father," she said at tea, looking across the dainty table at the dear, quaint figure, "I've unpacked your things—and I didn't find your sermon! I'm afraid you've forgotten it."

Father's smile was cheering to this new worry. He tapped his breast gently. "I brought it all right, Weezie, in here. Did you think I would write an Easter sermon? A risen one? Dear child, it would seem like insulting my Lord on His great day. As if I hadn't thoughts enough of Him in my heart! 'Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.'"

Silence fell over the little family; even the children oddly quieted. The young husband and wife looked into each other's eyes, the refuge of their thoughts in all times of inner emotion. Father's face alone was serenely calm.

The next day dawned, a perfect Day of Rising. The decoration of the church had been partially accomplished the previous afternoon, but there was much left still to do. A little stream of people went into the big swinging doors laden with pots of lilies; others at the altar arranged and re-arranged them.

The air was heavily sweet with the breath of them. It was a dim and lovely place. The organ softly boomed; the high, melodious voices of the choir caroled as they practiced.

Into this lily-laden place would presently drift the bright and gala-dressed people of Lincoln Hewes. They would whisper subdued greetings to one another as they settled into their luxurious seats; their clothes would rustle in a suitable Sabbath way; their pleasant, unmoved faces would compose themselves to endure the brief tedium of worship.

Into this lily-sweet place presently would come Father.

In the parsonage Louisa Hewes was getting Maidie into her little Easter dress and making the small sons of the minister sweet and fit for the beautiful day. But her thoughts were upon other things, for once, than little daughters and sons. She forgot to kiss the plump bare knees scrubbed so Sabbathly white. She was deeply concerned about the Easter service and sermon.

"I don't know what Lincoln's people will say to Father's doctrines," she sighed inwardly. "They are old-fashioned, and the people—" How new-fashioned Lincoln's people were! The "doctrine" they demanded would scarcely go by the name of religion in the clear, single vision of Father. "It seems," sighed the minister's wife, "like—like putting old wine into new bottles."

That was not an altogether apt illustration, she reflected; but she could not think of any other at the moment that would express her misgivings. She finished polishing off the children, and seated them in chairs with picture books, to wait for her to make her own toilet.

Father in his room was pacing the floor with steady strides, distilling from the deep vaults of his soul the rare old wine for the people of Lincoln Hewes; while Lincoln himself paced his study weakly, and struggled against misgivings of his own. He was not going to church at all. He told himself it was because his frequent fits of coughing would disturb the service, but in his heart he knew it was his own peace of mind that he was afraid of disturbing. It would be easier to stay at home and pray for his people's kindly acceptance of Father.

One of the members of the "sub-congregation" of the Westlea Church, in a humble home a little way off, was getting her little restless brood ready for service.

She was a frail woman, who had but lately come to the place, and, too, had lately been left alone to fight the battle of daily existence for herself and her babies. This peerless Easter morning held no comfort in it for her. Her thin hands moved slowly up and down the little bodies; and, like the minister's wife, she forgot to kiss them as she worked.

"We'll go there, and sit in a back seat, and come home again," she was thinking. "The minister won't talk to us, nor the choir won't sing to us; and, when we come out o' church, there won't a single one of those fine silk-n'-satin folks so much as look at us. As for shaking hands—" She looked down upon her own work-rough fingers wistfully. They were hungry for a friendly grip to put new courage into them.

"Louie," the minister called softly from his study, as she and Father and the little sons and daughter filed down the stairs to the front door, "I wish you'd try to remember to speak to that little Mrs. Cooper with the pewful of children—in the back, you know; she usually sits on the left side aisle. She's a stranger. I've meant every Sunday to get back to her after service. She looks forlorn, poor little thing."

"I'll try to remember, dear boy. You remember to lie down and rest; be sure to cover yourself up."

It was a curious Easter sermon for the little Westlea Church. There was nothing "advanced" in it, nothing new and scientific. Father stood in the luxurious little pulpit, and talked to them of the things he knew and loved. Father's sermons had always been a joy to Louisa, but she found something there now she had not noticed there before.

It was as if he introduced them to a Friend they had never quite known before, and the meeting hushed and held them. He took them with the two Marys to see the sepulchre where they had laid his Friend, and they seemed to see thru his clear vision the stone that was rolled back and the angel that sat upon it. They seemed to hear the angel say to them directly, "He is not here; for He is risen, as He said."

The joy of the resurrection that they saw in Father's rapt old face spread to them—a fainter yet sweet joy. In the sweetness of it they sat, reverent and still, their gaze on the quaint old figure before them.

He brought old truths and principles to life for them in his earnest old voice, with the Easter resurrection that was in his soul. He preached charity and hope and love and the gentleness of life, the happiness of it. It was a joyous sermon that Father preached.

On the back seat in the left wing a frail and burdened little woman took heart. Her eager eyes never left the strong old face up there; she drank in her portion of the hope and love in thirsty draughts. At the close of the service she gathered her brood about her, ready to begin again with fresh courage. Peace had crept into her tortured young face.

The minister, restless and disturbed in mind, had failed to sleep in the stillness of his study. At length he had tossed off his covers and got to his feet. He would dress and go into the church next door; he must see how things were going; he could not wait for Louie to get home.

In a little panic of hurry he found his pulpit clothes, and put them on. He stole into the rear door, and slipped into an empty seat in the dusk of a corner, where he would not be observed.

Father was talking of the Easter gift of hope. The beautiful little church was vibrant with the earnest, believing old voice.

From his safe corner, as the little congregation was dismissed after Father's benediction, the minister saw strange things. He saw cordial hands outstretched in greetings to those in humble clothes; he saw many stop and speak to the frail little Cooper woman with the wistful face, and many smile in a friendly way into the round, sweet faces of her little brood of children. Everywhere the minister saw faces made gentle and sweet. He slipped away without being seen, and, in his study again, prayed, not for Father and his people, but for himself.

"Dear boy, where are you, dear boy?" a sweet voice called him a little later. Louie came in with a radiant face.

"Dear boy, it worked! He was Father, but they liked him. It seemed—dear boy"—her voice dropped to a soft timidity as if on holy ground—"it seemed as if he didn't stand there alone—as if—"

"I know, dear." The minister's face shone. "As if the Risen One stood there with him. I saw them there together."—Christian Endeavor World.

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

Resurrection

BY REV. A. MESSLER QUICK

He is risen! speed the message
On the waves of Easter song,
While the echoes of redemption,
Their refrains of joy prolong,
Death no more o'er life victorious,
Boasts the Saviour's empty tomb,
Dawn of day, and life immortal,
Drive away the dreadful gloom.

He is risen! swell the anthem,
At this joyous Easter tide,
Now is perfect our Salvation,
Heaven's gates are open wide,
Buoyant hope dispels despondence,
In the hearts of those who weep,
For the tomb has lost its terrors,
Death is naught but tranquil sleep.

Resurrection of the Master!
Peal the bells of world-wide joy,
Saints enthralled, throw off your fetters,
Powers of life again employ,
Quickened now by grace and power,
Christ confers a purchased right;
At the great archangel's summons,
Join the hosts in realms of light.

He is risen! we shall see Him,
Seated on His ancient throne,
Oh, the transport of the vision,
As He bids us hither come,
All ye hosts of shining angels,
Strike your harps and with us sing,
While with gladdened hearts we render,
Alleluias to our King.

The Easter Roses

BY IRMA B. MATTHEWS

Mrs. Logan stood in her garden the day before Easter touching with loving fingers a few red rose buds. There were only a few, for even in California, where the roses are supposed to bloom all the time, there are seasons when those flowers are scarce, and this was one of those periods. There were other flowers in plenty, but only a few of the half-open red roses.

"May's roses," she whispered softly, and then her mind traveled back to the year before, when the laughing girl had plucked a rose from this very bush and fastened it in her dark hair. How lovely she had looked in her pure white gown, relieved only by that one red rose, as she sang the Easter songs with the other children.

But that was a year ago, and this year Mrs. Logan was planning to take the red roses on the morrow and lay them on May's grave. There were tears in her eyes now, and they blinded her or she would have seen a wistful little face on the walk close to her.

"Please, Missus," said a timid voice: "Will you give me one of the red roses?"

Mrs. Logan turned with a start to meet the wide open black eyes of a little colored girl.

"What did you say?" she asked pleasantly.

"Will you please give me one of the red roses?" the child repeated.

Mrs. Logan opened her lips for an indignant refusal, and then she remembered that sometimes her roses had disappeared without a request, so in place of the refusal she answered slowly: "I want the red roses this time. I want to take them to-morrow to put on my little girl's grave."

"Is your little girl dead too?"

"Yes."

"So is Susie; that is why I wanted the rose. Susie always liked red roses better than anything, and now she is dead, and mammy cries and cries, and says if she only had one red rose to put in her hand."

"Where do you live?"

"Over there," answered the child, pointing out a tiny house, and Mrs. Logan suddenly remembered that her husband had told her a week before that he believed a colored family had moved into the little house.

"Have you been here long?"

"No marm, we just came from Pomona, 'cause mammy thought she could get more work to do here, and then Susie died. She had 'gitts, the doctor man said."

Mrs. Logan understood, but a battle was going on in her heart. She noticed that the child, altho poorly clad, was perfectly neat, yet why should she give her the roses—May's roses? Then she remembered the day but a few months before when her own darling had left her. Friends had crowded around her and tried to help her. With her own hands she had filled the quiet fingers of her child with her favorite flowers, and this mother was a stranger, and in her sorrow was longing for just one rose for her dead child.

"Wait a minute," she said and turned and entered the house. She stood before the picture of a sunny-faced girl. "Sweetheart, you understand," she murmured softly, and, was it really imagination or did the picture smile at her? When she went back to the waiting child, she carried her garden shears. She cut the roses and placed them in the little one's hands, and then from the row of calla lilies she cut an armful mixed with feathery green.

"Now," she said with a smile at the wondering child: "we will go to your mother."

As they neared the house, a woman appeared in the doorway. "Where have you been Rosie? I wanted you," she began. Then as she saw the stranger and the flowers, she paused.

"Your little daughter has been telling me of your loss," said Mrs. Logan, coming forward at once: "and I have brought a few flowers for you. They are always such a comfort to me."

"May the good Lord bless you, marm," was the answer, as the quick tears sprang to her eyes. "We are strangers here and this came so sudden. It is much trouble I have had before, with my husband leaving me with the two little girls to care for, but we were well and I could work, but now this has come, and oh, it is terrible!"

"I know," her visitor answered softly, and reached out her hand soft and white, and took the hardened black one: "I know, for only a few months ago God took from me my only darling. These," and she touched the roses, "were her favorite flowers. I bring them to you, from her."

"I can never thank you."

"Don't try. We do not wish any thanks, May and I."

Mrs. Logan covered May's grave with flowers the next day, with great white lilies as white as the soul of her dear little girl had been. There was no bunch of red roses at the head of the grave, as she had planned; yet, there was in her heart a peace such as she had never expected to have again, and she was satisfied.

The Man Behind the Bars

Winifred Louise Taylor in an article in Scribner's quotes from a letter written by a prisoner, which gives a vivid impression of the moral effect of the system still in force in the majority of prisons:

"Try to imagine yourself working all day on a stool, not allowed to stand even when your work can be better done that way. If you hear a noise you must not look up. You are within two feet of a companion, but you must not speak. You sit on your stool all day long and work. Nothing but work. Outside, my mind was a pleasure to me; in here it is a torture. It seems as if the minutes were hours, the hours days, the days centuries. A man in prison is supposed to be a machine. So long as he does ten hours' work a day, don't smile, don't talk, don't look up from his work, does work enough to suit the contractors, and does it well, and obeys the long list of unwritten rules, he is all right. The trouble with the convicts is that they can't get it out of their heads that they are human beings and not machines. The present system may be good statesmanship. It is bad Christianity. But I doubt if it is good statesmanship to maintain a system that makes so many men kill themselves, go crazy, or if they do get out of the shadows alive, go out hating the state and their fellow men. As a convict said to me, 'It's funny that in this age of enlightenment they have not found out that to brutalize a man will never reform him. I have not been led to reform by prison life.'"

Denominational

DISTRICT CONFERENCES

South Illinois

The annual conference of the South Illinois District will be opened at Columbia, Ill. (Rev. W. Schlunkmann, pastor), on May 17, 1916 at 7:30 P. M. with a special service.

The papers to be read and discussed are: 1. "The Attitude of the Evangelical Pastor toward the Burial of Suicides;" Pastor Paul Wendt. 2. "The Place of Evil in God's Plan for the World;" Pastor D. Buchmueller.

By order to the president, Pastor G. Plassmann,
K. Dezheimer, Sec'y.

Pension and Relief Fund

The annual meeting of the Board for the Pension and Relief Fund was held on Feb. 21 and 22 at the home of Mr. Theo. Pundmann of St. Charles, Mo.

On the second day the honorable President-General of the Synod, Rev. J. Baltzer, honored us by his presence.

The reports submitted showed that in 1915 ninety-two pastors and teachers, 154 widows and sixty-three orphans received pensions amounting in total to $21,465.67. In addition they received the sum of $4,927.41 in annuities from the Relief Fund, to which they are entitled for services rendered before 1910, and to forty-four of the retired workers and fifty-five widows we were able to give relief in proportion to their needs amounting to $5,384.26. The sum total paid to pensioners was $31,777.34.

We were very glad to note an increase in donations to the Fund on the part of our churches in the year 1915. They amounted to $12,731.40, while in 1914 the sum was $11,071.98. This increase is very highly appreciated, because we had grave fears that on account of the Jubilee Offerings the needs of our Fund would be overlooked. The Lord however put us to shame regarding our doubts and gave to us beyond all expectations.

We have now learned anew that if our pastors and churches will all make a new effort this year, we shall not only have the same income again but may receive even more. May God grant it.

From the Jubilee Offering ten percent were appropriated to the Fund. We have thus far received $8,617.92, which sum was added to the endowment fund. For detailed information regarding the financial standing of the Fund, the kind reader is referred to the report of the treasurer submitted to the District conferences.

In view of the past year we have reasons to thank and praise the name of God and therefore we trust in Him to guide us in the future. During the year just concluded the following pensioners have as we trust entered into eternal bliss and joy: The Revs. Geo. Hirtz, F. Moeckli, Kaspar Ruegg and M. Mehl; Teacher H. Packebusch; the widows L. Kraemer, Amalia Seybold, Adolfin Witzke, Rosina Ruegg, F. Umbeck, Meta Dalies and Charlotte von Schelha. Their earthly troubles and cares have ceased.

Rev. Emil Rall has severed his connection with the Synod and thereby also with the Fund. Several of the retired pastors, to whom the Lord has given sufficient strength, have again taken charge of small congregations. A number of orphans, having reached the age of sixteen, no longer receive pensions.

On Feb. 1, 1916, we therefore had on our list of pensioners only eighty-two retired workers, 146 widows and fifty-one orphans. They are entitled to $21,194.00 for pensions, $4,464.20 in annuities, and to forty-two retired workers and fifty-five widows, who are in special need, we have promised $5,714.00. The sum total appropriated is $31,873.20. However, already we have received several new applications and others are in view, and so we will need considerably more than $32,000.

Mrs. Pauline Woelfle, Mrs. E. Stanger and Mrs. J. G. Koch have presented the pension and annuity to which they were entitled to the Relief Fund, and the Revs. O. Breuhaus and Chr. Mohr did the same with their annuities. They deserve our most hearty thanks. May the Lord repay them their kindness.

Let us not be weary in this year in supporting this cause of our Synod, which is fraught with so many blessings.

With kind regards,

J. Abele P., Chairman.

"Other Sheep I Have"

Pastor Goetsch gives a Glimpse of the Year's Progress at Bistrampur. The War is not hindering the Missionaries in their Work, but the need of Workers is more urgent than ever

A Review of the Year 1915

In looking back upon the year 1915 gratitude for the gracious help of God is necessarily uppermost in our minds. Altho the past year has brought us a large measure of toil and many difficulties, we have always experienced the help of the divine strength.

At Bistrampur the pastoral work claims more of the missionary's time and effort than any other activity. In view of the many temptations that come to the newly converted the development of Christian personalities is especially important. And it is this work which brings us into the closest possible touch with our people, who rightly regard the missionary as their spiritual leader. Tho there are of course many disappointments there is also a great deal of joy and encouragement.

In this work the catechists of Bistrampur and Ganeshpur were a great help to Mrs. Goetsch and myself. The members were visited in days of sickness as in days of health in order to establish and sustain their spiritual life. Trials are wholesome here as at home. With many of our Christians outward trials lead to victory over the past worldly life, and their faith in Jesus Christ subdues the old life of sin. At many a sickbed, and often where it is least expected, we have been privileged to witness the power of the Gospel.

The Sunday services were on the whole fairly well attended. The personal invitations and the exhortation of the indifferent have no doubt helped greatly toward this end, altho, we are sorry to say, lack of time prevented us from performing this duty as thoroly as we should have liked to do it. The morning services on the first and second Christmas day were especially well attended. When we came here in 1914 we learned that the morning services were as a rule poorly attended, while the evening service with its Christmas program was always well attended. Surmising that the people considered the attendance of the childrens' service on Christmas Eve sufficient the latter was changed to the evening of Christmas day. My supposition was correct and last Christmas the church was well filled on both occasions.

I confidently hope that the spiritual condition of the church has improved during the past year. Other signs besides the increased church attendance seem to indicate this. Deeds of violence, for instance, have decreased considerably. During the last months of 1914 a number of ugly fights and quarrels took place, resulting in dangerous bodily injuries, while during 1915 only a few less serious cases arose. There were, as usual, many quarrels but violence was rare. The number of thefts of mission property (especially grain) has been less by half than in the preceding year, altho there was greater vigilance. Altho it is disappointing that occurrences like these must be recorded, the low moral conditions from which the people have come must not be forgotten. In view of their heredity and their environment there is much to be grateful for.

The financial condition of the church is also far better than ever before. If the efforts in this direction in 1914 exceeded those of other years by far, the income for 1915 was nearly double that of 1914. It is true that the amount includes the Jubilee Offering of $80.00, to which every family contributed. The tenants all paid thirty-five cents for each year. All other missionary workers gave one-hundredth of their salary. The Sunday offerings amounted to $65.00, and the pupils of the two Sunday-schools gave $13.00.

The church now pays all its own current expenses, including repairs for the Bistrampur and Ganeshpur church buildings and the dwellings of the catechists. The members were greatly elated at their success, when the report of the year was read to them, and were anxious to do still more this year. I requested them, if possible, to raise at least the salary of the two catechists employed by the congregation.

The membership has also increased somewhat during 1915. Even if the increase is not large we are grateful for such as it is. A number of candidates for baptism are also being instructed, and we expect that some of them may be baptized during the coming year. In May last eleven boys and twelve girls were confirmed. Their instruction was rendered very difficult by the fact that some of them could neither read nor write, and that some of them were not able to comprehend even the simplest Christian truths. I hope, however, that my efforts to lead them to Jesus have not been in vain, and that they will endeavor to be true to their confession of faith.

Sunday-school work both at Bistrampur and Ganeshpur has been growing and the results have been apparent in the church. More could have been accomplished if better teachers had been available, but as we had only a few really good teachers, and as the growth of the school made an increase in the teaching force imperative, we had to be satisfied with some mediocre workers. Every Saturday afternoon we had teachers' meeting in which the lesson for the coming Sunday was discussed.

Unfortunately twenty-five of our members had to be excommunicated because of grave offense given. In these cases the offender's entire family is excommunicated, in order to induce a quicker repentance; the number of actual offenders was only seven. In four cases it was adultery, in two a relapse into heathenism, and in one a wedding according to heathen custom. An equal number of repentant offenders were restored to membership, after they had confessed their guilt and fulfilled the conditions imposed upon them. Others have also asked to be restored, but have not yet fulfilled all conditions. All these cases of church discipline are settled by the church officers with the counsel of the missionary. In only one instance was I unable to agree with them, as I was not convinced of the guilt of the accused. After a conference with Pastor Gass, president of the missionary conference, the action of the church officers was overruled.

Catechists and Evangelism

Two of our Catechists were dismissed during last year. One of them, Elijah, had gotten too deeply into debt. Since this debt not only crippled his usefulness but was held up as a reproach to every mission worker who served at his station, I had requested him to settle his accounts. This he could not do and therefore, with my consent, left our service to seek a more lucrative occupation, so as to be able to pay his debts. The other catechist, Nathanael Niohan, was dismissed because of unbecoming conduct.

Naturally I was in a better position to supervise the catechists of Bistrampur and Ganeshpur than those at the more distant outstations. Both have, on the whole, done their work faithfully and conscientiously. They did, however, especially in the beginning, show an inclination to conceal from me the unpleasant occurrences in the churches, but have manifested considerable improvement in this direction during the past few months, and will not, I think, disappoint my confidence in them again. The first catechist and myself have visited the outstations regularly. According to their records the catechists have visited a large number of villages, but there are candidates for baptism only at Kmui. They came at the instance of a relative who had been converted some years ago. They are being instructed by the catechist at Kmui, and I expect to be able to baptize them during the hot season.

The work at Tran Khamaria had to be abandoned. The town belongs to a native state, where missionary work is entirely dependent upon the pleasure of the Rajah, who last year expelled the catechists. My personal investigations disclosed the fact that this step was taken not so much from hostility toward the Gospel, but rather because the express permission of the Rajah had not been secured before beginning missionary work. But as the catechists had, in the meantime, been transferred to Bemetara, where a promising field was open, nothing has so far been done to obtain the Rajah's permission for renewing the work. Tran Khamaria is quite an important place, however, and something should certainly be done to have the Gospel preached there just as soon as it is possible without injuring the progress of the work at Bemetara.

F. A. Goetsch.

This and That from the Field

Information reaching the Board from India continues reassuring and there seems to be no need for anxiety as to the safety of our missionaries under

Concluded on Page 6

Easter Services in the Orient

In Syria and Palestine the Christians call Easter the "great feast." They give some attention to Christmas, but not so much as is given in Western lands. Easter is the greatest occasion of all; on that day they exchange presents, make calls and feast on the choicest of sweets. They prepare for the day by special fasting, particularly the week before Easter, when a very strict fast is observed, even oil being refused on the last two days.

The special services of holy week are most interesting. Palm Sunday is observed much as the Catholic churches in America celebrate it, everybody wearing a little cross made from the tender shoots of the palm trees. This is not a week of rejoicing, but a week of mourning. The churches emphasize this by having everything draped in black. Black curtains cover all the pictures, and the great altar is entirely concealed behind a black curtain that has represented on it all the implements used in the week of suffering. On this curtain, just below the cross, are skull and crossbones, in representation of the tradition that the tomb of Adam was immediately below the place where the cross was set up at Calvary. At the Church of the Holy Sepulcher in Jerusalem is shown a cave said to be the tomb of Adam, and a crevice is pointed out thru which they say dropped the blood from the cross. As these drops fell upon the skull of Adam, so the story goes, he was the first of those that rose and "appeared to many in the city." On some curtains a serpent is twined about the crossbones, in attempt to picture the whole system of theology, the temptation and fall, represented in the serpent and Adam, but over the fall of man the suffering and death on the cross of the Son of Man.

The hideous black curtain that hides the mysteries of the magnificent altar

Undoubtedly these representations and those of the services of the week originated in the early days when the people could not read, and this means was adopted to impress upon them the great doctrines of the Church as well as the story of the events in the life of Christ. On Thursday afternoon occurs the first service of interest. A raised platform is placed in the center of the church and on it are seated twelve boys representing the twelve apostles. The bishop, attired in his robes of office and attended by a number of priests, takes his seat at one end of the platform. Water is poured in a basin, the bishop removes his splendid regalia, girds himself with a towel, and commences to wash the feet of these twelve boys. He performs this service for two or three, then retires to his seat and is again clothed in his robe and miter. After a brief interval he rises and washes the feet of two or three more. So the service proceeds, with accompanying chants and responses and the reading of the gospel story of Jesus washing the feet of the disciples. When the bishop reaches the last boy in the line, the boy rises and exclaims, "Thou shalt

Concluded on Page 8

The American Bible Society in the United States during 1915

Remarkable Conditions revealed by the Report of the Bible Society's Workers in the different Agencies. More work done with less money than formerly

I.

This is the centennial year of the American Bible Society, and the Protestant people of the United States are naturally unusually interested in the condition of the Society and in the progress of its work. May 7, being the Sunday nearest to the date of the Society's organization (May 8) one hundred years ago, has been set aside as Bible Sunday by the Society, and very extensive preparations have been made for bringing the story of the Society's growth and work before the Protestant churches of the country. This story, which the Evangelical Herald will give to its readers in an early issue, will be most intelligible and interesting to those who are most familiar with the work which the American Bible Society is carrying on. Our readers have always been kept in touch with the progress and the needs of the Society in a general way, but comparatively few of the Society's friends and supporters are perhaps fully conversant with the vast extent and importance of its work, or with the great variety of needs, conditions and people to which it ministers in the course of the year. It is hoped that this resumé of the Society's report for 1915 will for this reason be especially interesting just at this time.

In the latter part of the past year the Society was obliged to issue a special appeal for more funds. The receipts from January until the end of August had fallen off $36,000 as compared with the previous year, while the demand for Bibles was never as great since the war began, a demand which was made yet more urgent by the fact that South America was looking to North America more than ever before for co-operation. If the gift of $500,000 from Mrs. Russell Sage a few years ago, conditioned upon the people of the United States contributing a like amount, and a few other larger gifts toward an endowment for the Society, have created the impression in some quarters that the Society had sufficient resources to continue its work that impression cannot be too vigorously and insistently branded as an error and a mistake. When it is considered that the income of about $75,000 from its endowment is barely enough to keep the Society going at its present rate for about two months, and that, tho the sales of Bibles reach about $200,000 per year, many of the Bibles must be sold at a loss and even given away if the aim for which the Society was founded is to be realized, the urgent need of sufficient contributions is quite clear. The lack of the needed funds made necessary some severe and discouraging retrenchments in the Society's appropriations for its work, but in spite of the reduced income there has been an encouraging advance of 119,349 volumes above the circulation of 1914. The grand total for 1915 is 1,184,991 volumes. That the total number of distributors and workers, 572, is only three less than in the previous year must, under these circumstances, be regarded as a most encouraging sign. The financial report is published at the close of the fiscal year.

Are the Negroes better provided with Bibles than the Whites?

These workers visited 353,516 families, of whom 59,597 were without Bibles, and in doing so visited 4,944 towns and traveled 265,886 miles. Truly no one can measure the comfort, the blessing and the inspiration that resulted from such faithful and earnest work, and from the circulation of the 1,184,991 volumes of the Word of God. Before giving some of the most interesting glimpses of the work in each of the Society's nine home agencies (Colored People, Northwestern, South Atlantic, Western, Pacific, Southwestern, Central, Eastern and Atlantic), it will be well to call attention to some remarkable conditions which the reports of these workers disclose, especially as regards the proportion of families visited who were found without Bibles. The percentage of families without Bibles in the different agencies were as follows:

1. Northwestern (Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, North Dakota): three percent.
2. Western (Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico and Arizona): a fraction less than eight percent.

3. Colored People (fifteen Southern states, New Jersey to Texas, inclusive): eight percent.
4. Central (Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi) a fraction less than nine percent.
5. Eastern (New York and adjacent regions in New England not otherwise cared for): nine percent.
6. South Atlantic (Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida): eleven percent.
7. Atlantic Agency (Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware): nineteen percent.
8. Pacific (California, Nevada, Oregon and Washington): twenty-one percent.
9. Southwestern (Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas): twenty-eight percent.

In comparing these figures it should be borne in mind, of course, that the bulk of the population in the territory of the Northwestern agency consists of Protestant European immigration, who brought with them a great reverence for the Bible. The astonishing fact is that the colored population of the south should outrank the population of the Central, Eastern and South Atlantic agencies; while it is perhaps no less remarkable that the population reached thru the Western agency, with its large Mormon contingent and the preponderance of Roman Catholics in Arizona and New Mexico, should be better provided with Bibles than the native and largely Protestant population of the Central, Eastern, South Atlantic and Atlantic agencies. The great number of Roman Catholics in Louisiana and Texas and the comparatively thinly settled condition of Oklahoma and Arkansas probably account in a very great measure for the alarmingly great percentage of homes without a Bible. But even after taking all these things into consideration the fact that the average proportion of Bible-less families visited by the workers of the Society is still nearly thirteen percent, or about one family out of every eight visited, affords food for thought, even when it is remembered that the Bible Society workers select the isolated and unchurched regions of the country for their ministry. Counting five persons to the family, and exempting, say, twenty million Catholics, who are not supposed to have or to want Bibles, barely one fortieth of the population of the United States has been visited. Perhaps half of the remaining non-Catholic population is unchurched, and it is not pleasant to imagine the conditions that might be found in a canvass that should aim to discover the percentage of Bible-less homes in this portion of our population. It is facts like these that show the very urgent need of redoubled efforts to evangelize the United States without in any way neglecting our responsibility for bringing the Gospel to the people of heathen lands.

A few glimpses of the peculiar conditions and needs of the different agencies may be of general interest.

The Colored People of the South

The agency secretary, Rev. J. P. Wragg, D. D., Atlanta, Ga., reports the demands as increasing with each year. "The records show," he says, "that we have ministered to the widows, orphans and the sick; to those in prison, on the farms and in the mines. Churches, schools and home missionary workers in general have had our help as far as we were able to give it. We are kept busy from six in the morning till seven in the evening, and many a time startled late in the night by a special delivery letter asking that a box of books be hastened at once. We wish we were able to do all for the people they ask us to do. The cries for the Word of God are indeed pitiful. Every sort of economy is being practiced in the effort to spread over this immense field. The Father has given me strength to interpret and answer letters; to be book-packer, book-keeper, messenger, preacher, lecturer—one who must be ready to listen to the sorrow as well as to the pleasant side of life."

From the Northwestern Agency

The Rev. S. H. Kirkbride, D. D., Chicago, Ill., reports a shrinkage of nearly sixty-five percent in the distributing force of his agency—the thirty-one colporteurs of 1914 became seven in 1915 and the 100 correspondents dwindled down to thirty-eight. In spite of this absolutely necessary retrenchment methods were found by which the circulation was not only kept from falling below that of 1914, but actually exceeded all previous records.

"If our chief concern," says Dr. Kirkbride, "were to put out the greatest possible number of books without any regard to the agencies thru which they were distributed, then we would be fully satisfied with the record made. But our greatest concern is about the manner of distribution rather than its volume. Our representatives are not mere booksellers—they are Bible missionaries. The ideal colporteur must possess some of the qualities of preacher, pastor, evangelist, teacher, expositor, comforter, friend and salesman. He sells Bibles not as an end, but as a means of helping people to find God and to know Him better. It is the house-to-house face-to-face character of his work that makes it so valuable an agency in advertising the Society, in reporting its work to old, and making new friends, in stimulating interest, and in raising funds. . . . There has never been so much inquiry and interest in foreign Scriptures, nor so heavy a sale of them. This interest has not been confined to the big cities, where the foreigners are found in greatest numbers, but it has existed as well in the smaller centers and towns, and even in rural districts. This increased interest in the Bible has not been confined to aliens, but has been general among all classes, and is so great that it may be termed a 'rediscovery of the Bible.'"

In the South Atlantic Agency

the year 1915 has been a time of unusual faith tests, of rare opportunity and signal accomplishments in the distribution of God's Word, according to the report of the Rev. M. B. Porter, Richmond, Va. In spite of a reduction of his working force by nearly one third on account of an unavoidable cut in his appropriation, the secretary of this agency reports an increase of 71,057 volumes in the annual sales, an increase which, humanly speaking, is due to unusual opportunities that came during the year.

A touching incident is related by one of the workers, who was shown a Testament that some soldier had carried thru the Civil War. "The Testament came home after many years, but the soldier never. On the battlefield, a soldier found a little blood-stained Testament in the keeping of an unknown and dead comrade, whose name was in it. The soldier kept the Testament, hoping some day to find the dead man's people and restore to them the little book. Thirty years after the old soldier found the brother of the slain soldier, and delivered to him the Testament. It had been published by the American Bible Society, in the year 1862, and, thought I, how many like it may have been steeped in blood! His niece was showing me this blood-dyed relic. 'See,' she said, 'there is his name and all, as he wrote it.' And there in a bold and manly hand I read: '—— (I omit the name) Co. E., 61st Reg., Mahone's Brigade, A. N. V.' In another place was written with pencil, in what appeared to be a weak hand, 'Oh! what a bloody day, the 12th of May, in Spottsylvania, old Va.' Far away from home and friends as his life-blood ebbed away, soaking in its crimson flow the little Testament that he held so dear, he had the comforting assurance of Him who said, 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.' The love of his Saviour was his stay, as his soul passed thru the dark valley. In his youth he had heeded the tender appeal, 'My son, give me thine heart.' At nineteen years of age he had been slain. A brave soldier, and—more than that—a Christian soldier, had gone to his reward."

This and That from the Field

Continued from Page 4

existing circumstances. Pastor Gass seeks to make this quite plain in response to a recent inquiry.

"You ask me whether it may be advisable to remove our unmarried women? I do not think so. Our work is not handicapped in any way and we never speak of the war. Everything is quiet and everything goes on as heretofore. The officials treat us nobly. Only recently we were invited to dinner with the foremost official of the Raipur-district, and attended several 'at homes' in the Club. I do not mention this because it would pass the censor, but because it describes the exact conditions prevailing here. We are grateful that the storm which is raging in Europe has hardly touched our coasts, where we labor in the work of peace for the cause of the Lord. Naturally matters might be different if we were German subjects.

"At present we receive the denominational papers oftener than formerly, but apparently a great deal of mail is lost. Annual reports and financial reports are at hand; I expect to send them forward in about a week.

"We are certainly glad to know that the Misses Wobus and Baur are coming, as we are in urgent need of assistance. Please do all you can to send us two more missionaries soon. We need two of them in Chandkuri, as Pastor Koenig is all alone there. We are all quite well and thank God for the confident faith we have in our work, which He has entrusted to us."

Evidently Mrs. Sueger is just as confident of the future as Pastor Gass, for she writes: "My dear Pastor: When do you expect to send someone to assist me in my work out here? It will take a new sister eighteen months to acquire the language before she can make herself useful, and as I have labored here nearly five years, I am anxiously praying for some one who may help me in this necessary work."

Involuntarily she supports this appeal for help by describing most vividly a four weeks' preaching tour which she made in January in the neighborhood of Bismampur, accompanied by Bible women. Such trips on the part of the female missionaries were originally not favored. Now it is realized that they are an absolute necessity if the women of the rural districts are ever to hear the Gospel. As a rule they are received very cordially. "In one village we found such dear people who received us most hospitably. I was cordially invited to visit several villages, and it was a great joy for me to accept these invitations. In this particular district we first spread the Word in the home of the village owner. Later we preached in other parts of the village. We will have to come again as a great many people live there and I must tell them more of Jesus and His redeeming love. To-day we preached the Word six times. I expect to remain here a week."

The following letter, written by one of our workers in India, proves conclusively that the work of our brethren there has not ceased, nor has it been handicapped, but still continues. Pastor Hagenstein's letter breathes the same contented and hopeful spirit.

"It was my wish to visit America this year," he writes, "and I already had cabled permission of the Board for a furlough; but as I am not overly anxious, and considering that our workers are few without any new assistants in sight, I have postponed my visit. I do not wish to leave here without knowing that my position is well taken care of, and this must not be done at the expense and to the detriment of other stations. I am perfectly satisfied with conditions as the Lord my God will permit. Only this morning I spoke to the Deputy Commissioner, the head official of the Raipur district, who called on me, and he thought the government would give me no trouble whatever.

"Just at present I am neither weak or sickly, so I need not be in any hurry. In fact, I feel better than I have for years, and have been able to perform all my work to date. Am also a member of the local board, (a kind of county representation). We also have everything in full and plenty; sufficient money, plenty of rice and other cereals, and we have every reason to be grateful to our Lord.

"The work in my school is progressing nicely despite the many annoyances caused by the school inspectors; I believe that the Lord takes special care of me in this work. At first I feared a decrease in the attendance, as the inspector refused an examination, which also eliminated certificates, on account of our Christian school books and the cost connected therewith. Instead our attendance has increased and several buildings had to be enlarged. This annoyance has now been overcome, as the director of public instructions has sanctioned the use of our Christian text books in the Parsabhadra district, and the perquisites are satisfactory to him also.

"We know not what the end of the war will bring, but can only surmise. One thing is sure: The Lord our Saviour is a mighty Lord over all, and will certainly take care of His own and of the progress of His cause.

Recently I have received very little foreign mail. Some may have been lost when the steamer "Persia" was sunk. I am long without news from many loved ones in America, who usually write to me promptly."

Our readers will be interested in the news that Pastor J. Koenig and Miss Rosa Baur were married on Tuesday, March 7th. The Herald sends its best wishes and extends its heartiest congratulations to the young couple.

The latest news from Rev. Nussmann is dated from his Swiss address, Lugano-Castagnola on Feb. 26. His general health is good, but he still seems to suffer considerably from his throat trouble. Fortunately he received a remittance thru the American consul, otherwise he and his family might have been financially embarrassed. A number of letters from America did not reach him.

A postal from Pastor Seybold in Raipur states that he has recovered from an attack of fever and is again busy with his work in the institute and high school. The new high school building has been completed to the satisfaction of all concerned and gives them great pleasure.

For ten days Pastor Koenig was deprived of the use of his eyes on account of the severe inflammation contracted from the attendants of the asylum, which was doubly disagreeable to him on account of his multitudinous duties at this time. According to the report at the close of the year the inmates of the Leper Asylum numbered 497. Fifty-one adults and one child had been baptized during the year, which makes the total number of baptized in the asylum 375. The inmates of the asylum attend services regularly and the church is not large enough to hold the crowd. The entire atmosphere is charged with Christianity. Twenty-nine members passed a successful examination of the "All-India Sunday School Association."

A letter from Pastor Twente reports him in the best of health and spirits. He writes: "I enjoy the study of the language more and more from day to day. The longer I am in the work the more I love it and the people connected therewith. The sacrifices required are not to be compared with the great privileges accorded us by our good Lord."

In the work among the women in Raipur, the benefits of the "Koehring Home" make themselves felt more and more. It is located in the Senana house enclosure and contains special apartments for women's meetings, instruction for Bible women, and, what is very important, affords an asylum for women who are alone in the world and who need protection and instruction, and seek Christian association. During the year 1915 quite a number of women, some with children, were housed and taken care of. Unfortunately, as is often the case, some of these women did not justify the hopes and expectations placed in them and in the Christian influences which surrounded them. Nevertheless our connection with the Home has made it possible to sow good seed and to do work which causes our helpmates, the Misses Kettler and Dieffenhaler to be very grateful.

From her tent in Newra, on February 8th, Mrs. Sueger writes as follows: "For three and a half weeks I am now tenting out and have visited thirty-four villages during this time, all of them strange to me. I found many attentive hearers and was repeatedly invited to call again. In the larger villages we preached the word from five to ten times. At present I am in a large village on a railroad, and am requested to call again to-morrow at the government school where we disposed of fifty pieces of literature, as they want some more. I have three Bible women with me. We always go in twos. At first the women of the village were frightened as they had never before seen a white face; but their fear was soon composed. Oh, the need is great and the workers are few. May the Lord impress those at home with the necessity of sending help to these poor souls. I long for others to join me in this work."

P. A. M. GES. Tr.

A number of stations report that some of the Christmas boxes sent during the summer and fall have just arrived and, tho delayed greatly, have nevertheless caused much joy to the recipients.

As to the manner in which Christian conditions are influencing the people Pastor Stoll reports an interesting incident. A young man from Nagpur came to Raipur and calling upon Pastor Stoll informed him that he was a Christian, that he had been baptized at Nagpur by the Rev. Cornelius, and now desired to marry a young woman who was however, unbaptized. Miss Kettler knew the young woman in question and had frequently visited her; both she and her mother had been asked to visit the Senana Home and receive further instruction. The young woman declared herself ready for baptism and after a satisfactory examination was baptized on Feb. 11 in the Raipur church.

Continued on Page 8

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

April 30, 1916. Quasimodogeniti Sunday

A Large Men's Bible-Class

It may be of some interest to the readers of The Evangelical Herald to know that the largest men's Bible class in Campbell County, Kentucky, is a class in one of our own churches. In a measure this is a fact to be proud of when we consider that there are fifty-two Bible schools of all denominations in the county. Furthermore it is interesting to know that this class is the result of but a few months' effort.

The class is found in the Bible school of St. John's Evangelical Church at Bellevue, Ky. In October 1915 the class numbered from twelve to fifteen regular attendants. After a careful study of conditions the pastor, who is also teacher of the class, came to the conclusion that a membership of 100 was possible. This fact was presented to the class and with great enthusiasm a movement was begun to get the hundred men. The date for the completion of this task was set as the first Sunday in January of this

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

USING SUNDAY

- M. Apr. 24. Sabbath rest. Jer. 17: 19—27.
T. Apr. 25. The Sabbath a reminder. Deut. 5: 12—15.
W. Apr. 26. Sabbath worship. Acts 16: 12—24.
T. Apr. 27. Sabbath work. John 5: 1—9.
F. Apr. 28. Sabbath meditation. Rev. 1: 9—20.
S. Apr. 29. Sabbath fellowship. John 20: 19—29.
Sun., Apr. 30. Topic:—Using Sunday for This World and the Next. Isa. 58: 1—14.

Suggestions to the Leader

This topic is assigned for discussion and study on the Sunday which may be considered the first Sunday of the summer. Immediately following our Easter services there is noticed a slump in the attendance of the services of the church and Sunday-school. The beautiful spring weather calls people out of doors,

2. Man's moral being demands the Sunday-rest. We need time to find ourselves. In the constant contact with the sin of the world we would soon grow hardened to these conditions. Sunday-rest offers us an opportunity for escape from the world, for retrospection and introspection, for meditation and prayer. The community that ignores the Sunday law will soon disintegrate morally. Moral laxness will soon destroy the sense of right and wrong.

3. Man's spiritual being needs the Sunday-rest. Spiritual strength is obtained thru contact with God and His divine virtues. To be able to concentrate your mind on Him who is life and truth, and to succor to the cravings of your inner soul life, means a restoration of these divine ideals and virtues.

Thus every phase of our being calls for the observance of the Sunday-rest. The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. The Fourth Commandment is no arbitrary decree of Jehovah, but a kind, merciful provision of a loving Father. Thereby our health, strength and life would be safeguarded and preserved.

II. How shall the Sabbath Day be hallowed? Our Catechism answers this question by declaring (Question 15)

"We hallow the Sabbath by resting from worldly employment, by devoutly using God's word in church and at home, and by devoting the whole Sabbath to our own and our neighbor's salvation, and thereby to the glory of God."

The trend of the answer is to lead us in our activities away from ourselves to the service of God and His children. In how far the work of a public nature, such as police duties, street car and train service, public officials, home duties, etc., is necessary cannot here be definitely outlined. But the law that one day's rest and relaxation is necessary to restore the physical and mental equilibrium of a human being remains true. Perhaps that day may fall on another day than Sunday. Being at work at the regular employment need not rob the Sunday of its spiritual significance. Unnecessary work, such as excessive Sunday cooking and entertaining, etc., ought not be done on a Sunday. As far as the public safety and needs are not endangered all work ought to be eliminated from the Sunday program. Neither can we here suggest the permissible in the pursuit of pleasures and recreation. This one rule, however, must be observed, all of our endeavors on Sunday must have the one aim to bring us into closer touch with God and with our fellowmen. Where selfish aims are pursued the physical, moral and spiritual man will decay. Describe the various kinds of helpful work that can be done by individuals. Jesus came to help men in their bodily and spiritual misery. The better the day, the better the deed ought to be.

III. Sunday is to be the pattern of the week day. Our week day conduct must be influenced by our Sunday activity. In reality no one day is better than the rest. The sacred associations recalled by Sunday constitutes this a special day. Which are these sacred associations? But as far as our conduct is concerned we dare not be different in our virtues and conduct on week day than we are on Sunday. Sunday presents to us an ideal which we must seek to realize on week-day. Week-day may bring its toil and problems, but the heart can nevertheless remain close to God and God's work.

Some Questions on the Topic

How is the Sunday profaned? How is the Sunday hallowed? How can we spoil a Sunday? How can we make our Sundays restful? What is the real aim of the Fourth Commandment? In what respect is the Sunday a type of the eternal Sabbath? Why do we observe the first day of the week instead of the seventh day?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Gen. 2: 2, 3; Ex. 20: 8—11; Lev. 26: 2; Psalm 118: 24; Isa. 66: 23; Matt. 12: 1—8; 10—13; Mark 6: 2; Luke 6: 6; John 20: 19; Acts 20: 7; 1 Cor. 16: 2; Rev. 1: 10.

A Prayer

Lord God, our Father, Creator of heaven and earth! This day is Thy day, when with Thine almighty word: Let there be light, Thou didst begin the work of creation. We beseech Thee, renew Thy work in us to-day, and speak unto our souls, Let there be light, that, delivered from all darkness, we may behold Thy works and ways in Thy holy Light and worship Thee in spirit and truth.

"Fischer's" Bible Class, St. John's Evangelical Church, Bellevue, Ky.

Rev. L. M. Kramer, Pastor

year. The general impression which this move evoked was that it was impossible. The pastor was told that there were not one hundred men in Bellevue who would attend a church, much less a Bible school. However, the enthusiasm was not to be cooled so easily, and to make a long story short ninety-eight men had been enrolled on the date set for the 100. This date happening to come near to the holiday season the remark was heard that this would be the climax and the class could expect a decrease with the beginning of the new year. This surmise proved to be a fallacy and the class has steadily grown since the beginning of the movement until at this writing there are 135 men enrolled, with an attendance of ninety-eight as an average.

The most encouraging feature about the class is the fact that most interest is shown in the Sunday services and Bible study. Lunches, smokers and things of this nature, which are often resorted to with the purpose of keeping up the interest or drawing in new members are unheard of in this class. All the emphasis is put on "The Man of Galilee."

Beside the regular Sunday sessions a monthly business meeting is held in which things beneficial to the class and church are discussed, and once a month an able lecturer is brought in to lecture on topics pertaining to secular things. Tho the attendance at these meetings is always good, the best attendance and the most interest is shown in the meetings for Bible study.

The class was directly instrumental in adding seventy-five new regular contributors to the congregation within the past six weeks. The secret of the movement lies in the fact that an interest was displayed in the men of the community, no work spared to bring them in and the whole movement dominated by a spirit of prayer. The enthusiasm of this class has been felt thruout the whole school to such an extent, that the enrollment of the Bible school has more than doubled itself within the last six months.

K.

and they begin their weekly exodus from the home and city into the country, to picnic, to enjoy the excursions, to visit friends far and wide. Our country people are the sufferers from such weekly pilgrimages. Many a mother who is hard at work all week looking after her own household, doing the necessary chores which the keeping of chickens and other stock involved, is compelled by the unwritten laws of hospitality and friendship to work doubly hard on Sundays, entertaining her eager visitors.

A discussion of the Sunday-rest question is therefore very much needed. Let the leader appoint one member to present the Old Testament Sabbath laws. What does the Old Testament say about the Sabbath and its use? Let another member present the teachings and sayings of Jesus concerning the Sabbath and its use. Another member can give briefly the history of the Sunday, showing why the Christian Church observes the Sunday instead of the seventh day of the week, known as the Sabbath Day. Also show the relation of the Old Testament Sabbath laws to the New Testament Sunday.

The Topic Presented

I. The principle governing the keeping and observance of the Sabbath Day is laid down in the words of our Lord (Mark 2: 27): "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath."

1. Man's physical being is in need of the Sabbath or Sunday rest. Sunday observance is a question of hygiene. If man were to continue in his regular week-day task without the interruption of one day out of seven, he would soon dissipate his physical strength. If our asylums for the insane are crowded, and the resources of the state are being taxed in taking care of the demented and imbeciles, it is because continued work year after year has undermined the physical strength of so many people. Sunday rest must be rest, and not continued exertion in the pursuit of pleasure and indulgence. It has been proven that it requires exactly one day's rest out of seven to restore the physical equilibrium of man.

Lord Jesus our Saviour! This day is Thy day, when by Thy glorious resurrection Thou didst reveal Thyself to Thy disciples as the Lord of life. Grant, that we, too, may know the power of Thy resurrection. Come with Thy benediction of peace, and manifest Thyself in this gathering as our living Lord and Saviour.

God, Holy Spirit! This day is Thy day, when Thou didst appear to devout men and gather them into the Church of the Son of God. Unite with us, we pray Thee, Make the Word of Christ a living power of God in us. Direct and lead this household of God to be builded together in heart and soul, immovable in faith, established in love, for a habitation of God in the Spirit.

Holy Triune God! Sanctify us more and more. Live and dwell in us, that we, both here on earth, and finally in heavenly glory, may live and rest in Thee. Amen.

(Evangelical Book of Worship)

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson 5. Jesus Transfigured

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

M. Apr. 24. Matt. 17: 1—12. Jesus Transfigured.
T. Apr. 25. Peter 1: 16—21. Peter's Testimony.
W. Apr. 26. Matt. 17: 14—21. The Impotency of the Disciples.
T. Apr. 27. Matt. Ex. 34: 29—35. Moses Transfigured.
F. Apr. 28. Acts 6: 8—15. Stephen Transfigured.
S. Apr. 29. 2 Cor. 12: 1—10. Paul's Vision.
S. Apr. 30. Rev. 1: 9—20. John's Vision.

Lesson Key:—"We were witnesses of His majesty," 2 Peter 1: 16b.

The increase in the intensity of the opposition He was experiencing in His teaching made it quite clear to Jesus that the hour was approaching in which His ministry would end. Nor was there any doubt in His mind as to how it would end. His enemies were determined to get Him out of the way at any cost. They represented the prince and the power of darkness and they would use every effort and every opportunity to gain their end. Moreover, all the advantage was on their side. The worldly power to put Him to death was easily within their reach and their hatred was so intense that they would be certain to choose for Him the most shameful and cruel kind of death imaginable in order to keep people from becoming His followers. In view of the way in which things were going it was necessary to use the short time that yet remained to the very best advantage. His disciples must be prepared for the inevitable so that they may be able to understand the things that are to happen, and they must have some absolutely conclusive sign that His work was in harmony with the eternal plans of God, so that their faith shall not fail them when He shall be taken away from them.

After Peter's confession, therefore, we find Jesus telling His disciples what He knows is in store for Him at Jerusalem, Matt. 16: 21—28, while Matt. 17: 1—13 records the wonderful story of the transfiguration. There are three things of outstanding importance in the wonderful scene this story unrolls before our eyes: 1. The light that surrounds Jesus; 2. The figures of Moses and Elijah, and 3. The voice out of the cloud. Each one of these had its special message for the disciples, as the whole remarkable occurrence has its special message for us to-day.

According to Luke 9: 29 the transfiguration took place as Jesus was praying. The content of the prayer can easily be imagined from the preceding; the one thing nearest the Master's heart was that the disciples might remain steadfast in the midst of the terrible trial that awaited them. The communion between the Son and the Father was so close and intimate in that hour that "His face did shine as the sun, and His garments became as white as the light." So complete was the reflection of the heavenly glory in the person of Jesus that "the fashion of His countenance was altered and even His raiment became white and dazzling." It seemed to those who stood by as if the earthly form had vanished and the heavenly form He had when He was with the Father had again become visible. The disciples as they looked and wondered could not help understanding that here was He who was indeed the light of the world; that the light He brought was indeed the light from God and heaven, and that the Son was indeed one with the Father.

Moses and Elijah were to the Jews the two dominating figures of the Old Testament. They stood for the law and the prophets, for all that was sacred in Israel's past, for the absolutely firm and unshakable truth of God that was the basis of the Jewish faith. To see these men who represented the best and the highest things of Israel together with their Lord and Master, to know that they "spoke of His decease which He was about to accomplish at Jerusalem," would be of incalculable value to the disciples when later on those who claimed to be the regular official representatives of the Jewish Church and the Jewish people should reject Him and make Him suffer many things and at last kill Him, and would also later on lay their hands upon the disciples who bore witness to His life and power. Henceforth there could be no doubt in their minds that Jesus was indeed what He claimed to be, and that His was but the fulfillment of what Moses and Elijah had begun in the power of the one true God. And that knowledge could give them added courage and comfort in any emergency that might arise.

And if anything more than this were needed there was again the voice from heaven, just as it had been heard at the baptism in the Jordan, bearing witness to the person and the mission of the beloved Son of the Father in heaven. John and Peter at least had heard this voice on the banks of the Jordan and it no doubt played an important part in inducing them to follow Jesus on that memorable day when John the Baptist had pointed Him out as the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world. The voice from the clouds at this time was to them a renewed confirmation that their first sacred enthusiasm that had led them to Jesus' side was from God, and that they would make no mistake if they followed Him to the end.

The transfiguration was a glimpse of heavenly light and glory vouchsafed to the disciples to help and strengthen them in the time of trial. It was at the same time a promise of that fuller and glorious development toward which the spirit of Jesus Christ is leading His followers. As the usual, every-day countenance and raiment of the Master was transfigured by the heavenly light, so the every-day, natural lives of Christians are to be transfigured by the character of Jesus Christ himself. Nothing less than this is meant by the work of sanctification, "that work of the Holy Spirit by which the whole man is transformed and daily renewed in all his actions and made acceptable unto God." "Wherefore, if any man is in Christ, he is a new creature: the old things are passed away; behold they are become new," 2 Cor. 5: 17.

This and That from the Field

Concluded from Page 6

The manner in which a Christian woman in Khanduwa, an outstation of Raipur, passed thru death into life was exceedingly touching and at the same time very encouraging to the missionaries. Pastor Stoll writes as follows: "Eleven years ago the village owner of Khanduwa married a convert who had for some time been teaching in the Methodist school at Jubbulpore. She was a truly devoted Christian, never failed in her attendance at church, lived peaceably with her mother-in-law—a very rare thing in Hindu every-day life—and was always ready to help any one in need, often arising in the middle of the night to give rice to those who asked from her. She was the organist of the little church, and her conduct toward all was uniformly kind and courteous. About a year ago she contracted tuberculosis. Pastor and Mrs. Stoll visited her frequently to comfort her in her affliction, which she bore with great patience and courage, well knowing that her case was hopeless. Her father, a preacher, came and stayed with her until the end. As the end approached she asked her husband to call together the catechists from the neighboring outstations and the Christians of the village for a farewell meeting. At the close she asked her father to pray, and during the prayer she passed away with the words, "My God" upon her lips. Contrary to the usual custom her father permitted the remains to be buried at Khanduwa instead of in her native village. Over 200 men of the village attended the funeral, all of them deeply moved by what they had seen as well as by the loss the village had suffered.

Again and again the stations suffer losses thru the removal of some of the church members. Not a few are never heard from again, and many no doubt lose their faith amid new heathen surroundings. Often, however, the missionary experiences the joy of learning that they have remained faithful to their Lord far away and amid trying conditions. Thus word came to Pastor Stoll recently of one of his converts from Aden, Arabia, where several families from Raipur had settled and were living the life of faith, and expressed their gratitude to Pastor Stoll for what his teachings had done for them.

Easter Services in the Orient

Continued from Page 5

never wash my feet!" Then follows the dialogue between Jesus and Peter. This service is attended by crowds of people, as are all the services of the week.

On Friday afternoon is held the burial service. A cross is erected in front of a curtain covering the altar, on it an image of the Saviour. After preliminary services and a sermon wherein the meaning of the ceremony is set forth, two white-bearded priests, representing Joseph of Armathæa and Nicodemus, take the body from the cross and place it upon a flower-covered bier. A procession is then formed, boys with candles and priests bearing the bier, the bishop following. This procession passes about the church, the women weeping and kissing the bier and a long train of men and boys following behind. One peculiar feature of this service is the attendance of Moslem women. Any Moslem woman who has been so unfortunate as to have no children tries to pass under the bier as it is borne about the church. This is supposed to bring a blessing and to remove the curse of barrenness. In the Greek Catholic Church anyone who desires some special blessing passes under the bier; children with diseases are passed under in the hope of a miraculous cure. After the circuit of the church is completed the procession passes to the tomb in one corner behind beautiful white curtains. There the body is laid to rest.

Saturday, at midnight, the crowds gather outside the church, but find the doors locked. Then the bishop comes and knocks. A voice within calls, "Who is there?" The bishop replies, "Open, that the King of Glory may come in." The voice inquires, "Who is the King of Glory?" "The Lord of Hosts, He is the King of Glory," is the answer. Then the doors are opened and the crowds rush in. They visit the tomb and find it empty. Candles are lighted, bells are rung, the chandeliers are set swinging in imitation of the earthquake, praises are sung, and the greeting is passed from mouth to mouth, "The Lord is risen," "He is risen indeed." The day of the "great feast" has come.

A Fourfold Test of MORMONISM

By

Henry C. Sheldon

151 Pages

Net 50 Cts.

Cloth

Mormonism is not a dead issue. While conforming in some ways to the spirit of the age, the real danger of the system still persists. This little study meets the needs of the hour. The name of the author is a guarantee of its quality and value. It has a keen, critical, dispassionate review of Mormonism, tested by history, by criticism of documents, by reason and by practical results.

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CHANGED ADDRESSES

Rev. Geo. S. A. Eyrich, Minnesota Lake, Minn.

Rev. Otto Kuhn, 5668 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill. (Change of address).

Rev. R. J. Kurz, R. R. 13, Mt. Healthy, Ohio.

Rev. C. A. Mennenoeh, Peterson, Iowa.

Rev. J. A. Weishaar, 202 East 3rd St., Williamport, Pa. (New parsonage).

Rev. Geo. P. Zimmermann, R. R. 1, Judson, N. Dak.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 5

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., APRIL 27th, 1916

NUMBER 17

The Keating Child Labor Bill, which opens the way for Federal control of child labor conditions in the manufacture of goods for interstate shipment, has at last been reported out of committee, and its advocates hope that it will be promptly considered on its merits and passed by the Senate before it must face the danger of being killed in the rush of closing legislation. The bill passed the House by a vote of 337 to forty-six, and the committee hearings have developed no new arguments against the bill. Mill-owners, of course, plead for the "inherent right" of young children to work, described the movement against child labor as a "mania," exhibited photographs of Sunday-school classes among their mill children, and bemoaned the future dearth of great men if the children of to-day are denied the "blessings" of poverty and toil. The amendments added by the Senate committee make the bill more practical in administration, its constitutionality more unassailable and its chances of passage brighter. The National Child Labor Committee recommends the passage of the bill and feels that it will pass if friends of the measure become active at once in urging their Senators to vote for it.

During the hearing of the Senate Committee two members of the executive committee of the National Congress of Mothers appeared in opposition to the Keating bill, stating that they represented the views of 100,000 members of the congress and that they were opposed to the bill because they considered a fourteen-year limit without exemptions too drastic. Many of the women, who without being consulted, were thus placed on record as opposed to the Keating bill are very indignant, since they not only favor the enactment of the bill, but have been very active in the campaign for it. Accordingly letters of protest from many states have been sent to the Senate committee stating that the executive committee has no power to speak for the whole association, and that it does not express the conviction of all the members. According to the secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, Mrs. Frederic Schoff, the president of the National Congress of Mothers, "has not been in sympathy with many of our programs of child labor legislation during the past ten years. Why this is we don't know." The Philadelphia court records show that only a few weeks ago Mrs. Schoff sold 1,174 shares of her stock in the Kent Mills at Clifton Heights, Pa. This matter came to public notice when the plant went into receivers' hands and she sued the receiver for depreciating stock.

Will the United States enter the War?

If the persons who signed the "Address to the People of the Allied Nations," some 400 munition manufacturers, their bankers and corporation attorneys, and the college professors who will some day be pensioned by Andrew Carnegie, and others, have their way, we are headed straight for the European war. This astounding document was prepared for simultaneous publication in the United States, England and France on April 17, and was mailed in a "confidential" letter from Boston to certain daily newspapers in the United States. Somebody blundered and forwarded a copy to the Toledo Express, a German newspaper of Toledo, O., which promptly exposed this remarkable attempt to misrepresent and betray the American people. The Address reads as follows: "We, the undersigned citizens of the United States of America, send to you, the people of the nations of the Triple Entente and your allies, this message: Our judgment supports your cause, and our sympathies and hopes are with you in this struggle. In saying this we are confident that we are expressing the convictions and feelings of the overwhelming majority of Americans. . . . The signers of this document are not unmindful of the great contributions which Germany has in the past made to the common treasure of modern civilization; all of us acknowledge our debt to Germany; many of us have had the advantage of German education; some of us are of German blood. But the welfare of the civilization for which Germany has done so much, the highest interests of Germany herself, demand that in this conflict Germany and Austria shall be defeated. We confidently and hopefully look forward to that result.

The Address is signed by well-known men like Lyman Abbott, editor in chief of The Outlook; James R. Angell, dean of the faculties, University of Chicago; John Kendrick Bangs, author; Cyrus Townsend Brady, Pastor and Playwright; John Burroughs, naturalist and writer; Winston Churchill, writer; Wil-

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

It is grand to look forward and see the heavens brighten with the dawn of a new day; but there never yet was light upon the sky which was not meant to illuminate the ground about our feet, and show each of us his bit of work waiting for him there—George Adam Smith.

Ham Dean Howells, author; Henry Churchill King, president of Oberlin College; William A. Quayle Bishop of the M. E. Church, St. Paul, Minn.; Daniel S. Tuttle, Protestant Episcopal bishop of Missouri, St. Louis; Otis Skinner, actor; New York; Henry L. Stimson, former U. S. secretary of war; Samuel Rea, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.; Charles F. Thwing, president Western Reserve University, Cleveland; Walter Wellman, writer, and many other of similar prominence. Undoubtedly individuals and organizations have before this uttered similar unneutral sentiments on behalf of the other side, but no group of men has ever dared to claim that they represent the "convictions and feelings of the overwhelming majority of Americans." To defy openly the neutrality laws and the spirit of America and the express commands of the President of the United States was left to the unfair, un-American and untruthful signers of this unique document.

At a recent Forum of the American Truth Society held at the Cort Theatre, New York City, Jeremiah A. O'Leary, President of the Society, told the people the ugly truth about the international situation involving the United States. He told them very plainly that unless they organize great peace parades thruout the country, that the United States would declare war on Germany. Up to a short time ago, he said he was firmly convinced that war was impossible. With the inauguration by the Germans of their new submarine warfare and with the construction by them of new and more powerful types of submarines, the United States is placed in the position where its foreign trade, which is dependent almost exclusively upon Allied shipping, will be destroyed. If the Allies should withdraw their merchantships from our trade to-morrow the result would be a shrinkage in war stock values which would create a panic in our country. Success in submarine warfare by the Germans must produce the same result. The Administration is therefore confronted with a panic or war. War, he asserted, will save the face of the Administration by compelling the people to re-elect it, because it is a precedent in our country that the Administration in charge of a war has always been returned by the people in a spirit of patriotism, which is best expressed in the phrase, "Stand by the President." The President would prefer peace, but he has no choice in the matter. Great Britain wants war, because she is reaching the end of her financial tether, and knows that a declaration of war by the United States against Germany would permit her to obtain unlimited supplies, both from North and South America upon the credit of war ships and men, who, under ordinary circumstances, would fight the battles of the Republic. By the assessment of war taxes, and the issuance of bonds, the Federal Reserve Banking system would be supported by the Government in its elastic money powers. In other words, British influences are so strong in the United States that it appears that they are now about to demonstrate their ability to foist upon the cosmopolitan American people the war burdens of the Allies. As Americans, however, we are not concerned with the outcome of the war in Europe, but only with the honor, dignity and peace of our country, and as Americans, it is our duty to resist this hideous and dreadful war clamor to the last resource. It is simply a struggle between the dollar and the man, between humanity on the one side and gold on the other.

Mr. O'Leary does not believe that the men of America are afraid to face the skulking agents of Morgan and the British Empire, men who control our newspapers, and who are making millions and billions upon the things that kill. How can the President of the United States be assured that he will be returned to political power by standing against these interests for the peace of the nation, unless the men who should support him show by their actions, that they will stand by him if he keeps this country out of war? The President may be pro-British, he may be of English descent, but he prefers peace to war. The influence of the money powers will be greater on Congress than they have been on the President, and the only way that influence can be met is for all true Americans to form great peace parades in every State of the Union, in every city of the country and show by the magnitude of the demonstrations and by the determination of marching men, that they are soldiers who will fight for peace, not figure-heads who can be dragooned into war. If the men of this country begin to march for peace their footsteps will be heard in Washington, and their significance will furnish to Congress the inspiration to resist the demands of the money powers of the country.

If we read the signs of the times aright the nation is facing a crisis as great and significant as that of 1860. Henry Ford's patriotic publicity, which must be paid for at advertising rates in order to get the papers to publish it, and the brave men of the Anti-Preparedness Committee, Drs. Washington Gladden, Charles E. Jefferson, Stephen A. Wise, Prof. Scott Nearing, John Haynes Holmes, General Sherwood and others, who in answer to the President's challenge have "hired large halls" in the large cities of the country to state their case to the public, are looked upon in many quarters as were the Abolitionists of sixty and more years ago. What the outcome will be no man can tell. As Christian Americans it behooves us to remember that we are called to peace, to freedom and to righteousness, and therefore to resist in every way possible the sinister influences that are in favor of war. Let Christian Americans unite in prayer for peace. Let them dare to think for themselves and assert their independence. Let them hold themselves ready to respond with their support to any practical movement that seeks to keep the nation out of the war. Then there will be no question as to who will win in the great struggle between dollars and manhood.

The Source of true Happiness

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the wicked, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of scoffers: but his delight is in the law of Jehovah; and on His law doth he meditate day and night," Psal. 1: 1, 2.

There is probably no human being but is in some way engaged in the pursuit of happiness. It is natural that it should be so, and it is God's will that it should be so. If all of us were agreed in regard to the true nature of happiness, and, above all, if all of us were in pursuit of the right kind of happiness, that which constitutes happiness in the sight of God, this old world would be as near perfection as human beings can bring it. As long, however, as one man's happiness involves sorrow and even misery for others; as long as people are careless of another's happiness and make only their own happiness, i. e., selfish profit or enjoyment, the chief end of life; as long as those who could know better will ignore the one way to real happiness, just so long this world will be a vale of tears.

Since God, who is the Creator of all things, and unto whom all must one day answer, desires that all should be happy, and has planted the desire for happiness into the hearts of all His creatures, it seems the most natural thing in the world that men should seek to discover and understand God's idea of true happiness, as well as to follow out His way of securing it. It is these two particulars that Psalm 1 endeavors to make clear and impress. Abundant human experience under all sorts and conditions and circumstances have demonstrated that the way here pointed out is the safest and the surest method of achieving real happiness.

No Happiness without Resisting Wrong

We note first that an essential condition of happiness is the not doing of certain things. Blessed, or happy, is the man who walketh not in the counsel of the wicked, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scoffers. All the things mentioned are inconsistent and irreconcilable with the happiness that God has in view for His people. Those who want happiness that is worth the name must therefore keep away from these things, just as those who want to keep in good health must keep away from the things that injure health. You cannot enjoy good health while living in foul air, subsisting on indigestible food or drinking contaminated water, and you cannot be really happy while walking in the counsel of the wicked, standing in the way of sinners or sitting in the seat of scoffers. As long as there is so much evil in the world, and human society is what it is, true happiness, or blessedness cannot be secured by swimming with the stream. One may be able to get a measure of amusement and perhaps a certain kind of pleasure out of the intercourse with the wicked, but that cannot be called happiness. Those who are in search of true happiness must not be afraid of being "different" from other people. Just as the man who would enjoy the best health must conform to certain rules of living and sufficient physical exercise, even if some amount of pleasure and comfort must be sacrificed, those who have their mind fixed on real happiness must be ready to pay the price. "Live fish can swim against the stream; dead ones must go with it."

No Happiness without Choosing the Right

But the mere swimming against the stream does not insure true happiness, just as mere abstinence from injurious habits or wrong living does not insure health. The body needs the proper kind of food and the right amount of activity in order that all its functions may be normally performed, and real happiness requires not only abstinence from evil, but a positive and definite kind of conduct. The man who would be happy must not only keep away from the counsel of the wicked, out of the way of sinners and the seat of scoffers; he must also find his delight in the law of Jehovah. "The true way of floating rubbish out is to pour water in." There is no better way of keeping out of the counsel of the wicked than by making the law of Jehovah our delight.

It ought to be very natural for men to delight in God's laws and in God's ways, and it would be so if the imagination of man's heart were not evil from his youth. Because of this condition, however, it requires an effort to delight in the law of Jehovah, and the full measure of true happiness is possible only for those who are willing to make this effort. Have you ever given attention to the kind of things in which you delight? Where do your tastes run? What pleases them most? Where do you feel most at ease? Nothing reveals character so surely as the things we enjoy most.

The things we delight in will ultimately shape our lives. Deeds will follow the current of desires, and they will be right if the hidden springs of conduct in the heart are right. And these will be right if our delight is in the law of Jehovah. To the psalmist the law was revealed by Moses and the prophets; for us to-day the law of Jehovah is fully revealed in Jesus Christ, who has perfectly fulfilled the law of God in our stead. The love of God toward man which He has revealed in His life and in His death awakens a delight in the truth He taught and the life He brought which is practically irresistible to sincere and open-minded hearts. To know Jesus Christ is to understand the heart of God, and to understand the heart of God is the greatest delight of which the soul is capable. And that is true happiness, because it alone is pure happiness and because it alone abides forever.

The Word of the Boyds

BY MRS. FRANK LEE

I

The mule team scented corn ahead and plodded steadily up the rough mountain road, Pete, the fat one, in the lead. Pete never led when they had the loaded wagon behind them; he was quite willing then that gaunt old Spot should pull it—and him too. Osman, mindful of this peculiarity, always put the burden of his own weight on Pete when the wagon was left behind, and now sat sidewise on the rotund body. High up on a spur of the neighboring mountain stood a large building, perhaps half a dozen miles away, as the crow flies. As the mules plodded on, the winding of the road caused it to appear and disappear. Osman's face was constantly turned toward it and he always whistled jubilantly when it came in sight.

The road took a sudden dip down, for Osman's home was in a narrow valley at the foot of the ridge. From farther down rolled up with surprising volume three lines of a camp meeting hymn.

"Gee, Spot! Gee, you old fool, you!" cried Osman, jerking hard at the halter, and Spot crowded against Pete's flank just in time to avoid a collision with the singer, a tall, muscular, gray-haired and gray-bearded man on horseback.

"Well, Osman! Trying to shove your onliest uncle into the gap?" cried the horseman, leaning forward with outstretched hand, which the youth eagerly grasped.

"Howdy, Uncle Jone, howdy! Why didn't you all stop at the shack?"

"I did aim to; but Brother Karney at 'Possum Pine was bound I should eat gobbler with him to-day, so I just howdy'd your maw and come on. She says you aim to start in at school on Tuesday."

"Yes, sir." The speaker's eyes strayed to the big building on its lofty height. "It's nigh four year since I set my mind on goin' there and began scratchin' toward it. I'd have scratched awhile longer if it hadn't been for you, Uncle Jone, and I'm mighty grateful—I am for a fact. But I'd have hung on—I'd have hung on f'rever."

"I reckon you would; it's the Boyd in you. All right if it's set right; if it isn't, Lord help them. I'm glad 'tis schooling you're bent on, Osman. I've got no learning myself except what I've found in the Bible, but it's a good thing—a grand thing. Stick to High Hill, now you've got there."

"You bet I'll stick to it."

Then they parted and it was months before they met again. Rev. Jonah Dunbar, faithful soldier of the church militant, rode away on his seventy-mile circuit, and in due time Osman climbed bravely up to the mission school on High Hill. For four years it had been the goal of his ambition. To go there he had slaved and saved, and with a thrill of victory he scrawled his name on the school register.

The reaction quickly followed. Osman found himself among unfamiliar ways as well as unfamiliar faces. He could neither sit, stand, walk, speak nor eat without exciting mirth. Still his eager desire to learn would soon have conquered the ridicule; but the invisible cords of school discipline drove him nearly wild. Many of his classmates were mere children, and he was obliged to accommodate himself to all the rules and regulations which governed them, he who for nineteen years had known little control, scant order and less law.

The break was sure to come. For two months he bore the pressure sullenly, and then on a certain Friday determined to make his first visit home, starting directly after school.

He had twelve miles to walk, and to gain time, when the line of march halted for a moment on the stairway as the students left the assembly room, Osman broke ranks and ran down the stairs. The teacher in charge called him sharply back; but he paid no attention. She repeated the command, reminding him of the rule that the line should not be broken until the lower hall was reached.

"It's a fool rule," Osman rejoined. "I never could see any use in it," and taking his cap from its nail he was soon striding down the mountain in jubilant freedom. The incident seemed to him worth so little notice that he scarcely mentioned it in the glowing account he gave of his progress to the company that quickly assembled at his home to see him.

He started on his return early Monday morning even more eagerly than he had made the first ascent. A warning of trouble ahead reached him in the greetings of a group of students gathered in front of the young men's dormitory.

"Hello, Boyd; comin' back to take your medicine? You-all air bound to ketch it."

"Ketch it—ketch what?"

When they enlightened him, his contempt was boundless. "Oh, shucks! 'Cause I didn't hang on the banister and come downstairs a step at a time!"

"But you sassed Miss Kemper. You'll have to apologize."

"Well, I won't, then—not me. No, never."

And the word of the Boyds had been passed.

The word of the Boyds! It was known from end to end of Shoestring valley. Three generations of history and tradition lay behind it. Whether for good or evil, great things or small, it was considered almost as fixed as the rocks themselves. There was "Wild-man" Boyd, who would neither cut nor comb hair and beard. There was "Dumb" Boyd, who, quarreling with his wife on their wedding day, vowed never to speak to her again, and did not, tho they lived together for over forty years; and so on down thru a long list.

Osman was summoned to the principal's office and there took his first lesson in the interdependence of all law, and its claim on small and tall alike. He also learned that in a well-regulated school as in a well-trained army it is no small matter to "sass" the commanding officer.

His lack of malice was so evident, his ignorance so frankly confessed, that the principal soon sat back with an air of relief.

"Well, Osman," he said, "I think you understand now why we must all conform to rules, even if they often seem unnecessary and annoying. Just run down and apologize to Miss Kemper and we will consider the incident closed."

A sudden pallor showed itself under Osman's tan. "I—I don't guess I can do hit, professor."

"Can't do what?"

"'Pologize to that woman. I've passed my word that I won't."

"To whom, pray?"

"Well, sorter to myself, I reckon. Anyhow, it's done passed, and there 'tis."

"But you owe an explanation to Miss Kemper. I can't keep you at High Hill unless you make it."

"I reckon not, but I've passed my word."

And down the mountain he went again, tramping over the ruins of his four years' hope and effort at every step.

At first he found some comfort in the reception accorded him by admiring kinsmen. He was giving a fine example of the trait that had made the family famous, and they tacitly applauded. But the novelty of being a hero soon wore off and Osman settled down to work, and as he hauled spoke-timber down the mountain, the sight of the mission building was a constant reminder of what he had won—and lost. Day by day the old longing returned, grown stronger because of its brief satisfying. Yet, tho pride in his loyalty to the family tradition at length lost all power of comfort, the tradition itself bound him as firmly as ever.

* * * *

Fifty miles away Rev. Jonah Dunbar was in the midst of one of the greatest successes of his ministerial career. The whole community of Roaring Hollow was shaken to its center. Sinners of all ages crowded to the mourners' bench with groans and tears, to leave it shouting hallelujahs, and later seal their change of heart in the ice-cold waters of Slicker's creek.

One of the Boyd kinsmen visited Rev. Jonah at his headquarters in the Hollow, and almost the first question the circuit rider asked was: "What about Mary Lizzie's folks? How's Osman getting on at High Hill?"

"Osman!" said the visitor. "Why Osman's done quit."

"Quit!" echoed Rev. Jonah. "Quit! After being set on going there for four years—and him a Boyd?"

"I reckon that's why he quit." The kinsman's pride in this latest example of the family trait appeared in every word of his recount.

"The dern young jackass!" exploded the circuit rider.

"Why, Brother Dunbar!" ejaculated the narrator, "I didn't look for—"

From a Father's Viewpoint

BY HELEN H. THOMAS

A certain lawyer who had previously been so preoccupied that he had held his children somewhat at arm's length, found that his only son was getting beyond the control of his mother, and fearing that if longer deferred counsel would be too late, he resolved to "get acquainted" with his own boy, aged 15, by taking him as a traveling companion on a business trip. He did not treat him as a boy to be watched, however, but as the wise man afterward said in the hearing of the writer:

"I treated him as an honored guest, and I was surprised, as the habitual restraint wore off, to find how many good points my own son had and how companionable he could be withal. After we had been together almost constantly for days I was surprised as well to feel the years slipping away from me and to find myself living over my half-forgotten boyhood.

"I had not premeditated reaching the heart of my boy by that means, however," continued the man, who was well along in years before he had a child and who had grown gray as a jurist, "but my confidence had that effect, for after I had told of the pranks of my youth and how I had once narrowly escaped being led into what would have ruined my character, my son, who had listened with incredulity as well as relief written on his face, cried: 'O dad, I'm so glad, so glad you haven't forgotten how boys feel and what they have to fight against, for now you'll understand!'"

"Then freely as if talking to a chum, my boy told me of his own temptations and how they had nearly mastered him, because, feeling that his mother could not see from the viewpoint of a boy, he would not confide in her. And judging as well that my youth had been faultless, he had naturally come to the conclusion that I could have no sympathy with his fight against harmful temptations.

"But," cried my boy, as he looked me full in the face after bringing to view what had been a heartbreak to bear alone, 'I feel as if I can face anything now, seeing I know you didn't always walk chalk. But say, why didn't you tell me sooner, dad? For it would have saved me more than one fall-down if I could have made a clean breast of everything, as I will now that I see you'll understand.'

"That was five years ago," added the lawyer, with glistening eyes, "and never since that day has the boy given his parents an anxious hour. For no matter how pressing have been legal duties, I have always taken time to strengthen the growing confidence on the part of my son. Consequently, he comes to me fearlessly, knowing that sympathy as well as counsel awaits him under all conditions."

The conversation then turned to lack of confidence between fathers and sons in general, but nothing said along that line was so to the point as the further remarks of the learned man:

"I should be slow to condemn in others what I was so guilty of myself, but I am firm in the belief that had I not won the confidence of my son just in the nick of time, he would soon have drifted beyond my influence. So experience has convinced me that fathers make a grave mistake in giving their sons to understand that perfection is expected of them, or that 'like as a father pitieth his children' does not apply to this age."

For the Heart and the Home

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

A Soliloquy

If I could only surely know
That all these things that tire me so
Were noticed by the Lord?
The pang that cuts me like a knife,
The noise, the weariness, the strife,
What peace it would afford!

I wonder if He really shares
In all my little human cares,
This mighty King of kings;
If He who guides thru boundless space
Each blazing planet in its place,
Can have the condescending grace
To mind these petty things!

It seems to me if sure of this,
Blent with each ill would come such bliss
That I might covet pain.
Dear Lord, my heart hath not a doubt
That Thou dost compass me about
With sympathy divine.
Thy love for me once crucified
Is not the love to leave my side,
But waiteth ever to divide
Each smallest care of mine.

—Selected.

On the Streets of Chicago

"I don't like the idea of your going to Chicago, Walter. There is so much wickedness in those big cities. I can't bear to think of it."

"But it's the only thing to do as far as I can see, mother." The boy looked up from the book he was bending over, his face troubled. He had gone over the matter in his own mind so many times. His eyes turned toward the book regretfully. He had been away at school, working for the civil service examination and had been within eight months of graduating when his brother George had developed tuberculosis. There was a chance that Colorado would help him, so Walter had at once left school and used the money he would have spent there to send George to Colorado. He did not regret doing it, but now he must find work. Chicago seemed to offer the best opening.

Two weeks later found him jostled by the hurrying throng, dodging street cars, automobiles, truck wagons, and all the varied traffic of the great city. He searched a long time for a boarding place where the prices were not too high. The one that he finally found was dirty and ill-kept and he had to share his room with a man whose looks he did not like. But he was too tired to think much about it that night.

When he woke the next morning his roommate was already gone—and he quickly discovered that his own pocketbook and suitcase were gone, too. Not even a quarter was left to get him a breakfast.

Work must be had at once. But the only work he could find was shoveling coal. He went at it manfully. His muscles, the muscles of a student unused to hard manual labor, ached so that he could not sleep nights. One day he worked eight hours in a cold November rain and the next morning was unable to get up. There was very little money in his pocketbook and he was at once sent to the Cook County Hospital.

It was here that the deaconess found him and learned his story. Under good care he finally regained enough strength so that he was determined to go to work again. The deaconess had already found an employer who promised to give the boy work, but she did not count on Walter's prompt action. He started out and reached the place before her card of explanation was received. The man, not knowing that this was the boy to whom he was to give the work, sent him away.

After that Walter literally walked the shoes off his feet trying to get work—and failing. Not a cent was left. He was at last driven to stay at the Men's Free Lodging House. Another week went by without work. Hungry, sick, and discouraged, he sat one day with his head down, too weak to go out and even look for work.

He started as a hand slapped him on the shoulder and a hearty voice exclaimed, "Cheer up, boy! You've been sick and need building up—that's all. I'll fix you up all right. Come on!"

Walter rose with a faint hope of getting help and stumbled along. His new acquaintance drew him into the nearest saloon, threw a nickel on the counter and pushing a foaming glass of beer over to the boy, said, "There, that'll brace you up! Then help yourself to the free lunch!"

Walter's eyes turned ravenously to the lunch. He had not eaten for twenty-four hours. The only way to get it was to drink the glass of beer. He raised it to his lips. The promise he had made his mother rose up in protest. He set the glass down. The lunch drew his eyes. He was weak and faint. He must eat! Again he raised the glass to his lips, and again lowered it without tasting. For the third time it went to his lips; he tipped the glass; the beer touched his lips. He flung the glass from him and it crashed against the wall. The boy broke into sobs like a two-year-old child.

"You'd better go home," the man advised gruffly. And the boy rushed headlong out of the saloon, back to the dismal rooming-house, and there flung himself on his hard bed.

When he was quiet again, without any real purpose, he took out his pocketbook and looked it thru. Not a cent, only a postage stamp. He turned the papers over. There was a card with the deaconess' address. The sight of the postage stamp and the address decided him. He wrote to the deaconess, the only friend he had in the city.

The deaconess was the kind of a friend who loses no time. Walter did not think his letter had reached her when she came to hunt him up. The boy's courage came back at the sight of her cheerful face. The job she had before found for him was still open. He could go to work at once.

To-day Walter is making good at work, is attending night school finishing his course for the civil service examination, and is working in the mission to give a helping hand to others who need it as he once needed it.

"I owe it all to you," he says gratefully to the deaconess. "If it hadn't been for you, I should surely have gone under!"

Uncle Remus on Housecleaning

Never was there a more delightfully "homey" character than the late Joel Chandler Harris, beloved by children of all ages as "Uncle Remus." His kindly simplicity and humor are nowhere better revealed than in the letters he wrote to his own daughters, of whom Tommy is one. From a back number of Uncle Remus's Magazine are taken these extracts:

"Dear Tommy: Your letter full of kisses was received, and you must imagine that mine has twice as many, tho I do not mark the places.

"J. C. had seven more little bantams to hatch yesterday, and they are behaving very well for such young children. They have already learned to wipe their mouths, using blades of grass as napkins, and, young as they are, they return thanks every time they take a drink of water. I wish that little hen would show people how to train their children as well as she has trained hers! Of course, I don't mean my children—especially my girls—but other folks'.

"Mamma continues to have general spring housecleaning twice a week, and I heard her say to-day that she was only waiting for good weather to have a genuine spring cleaning. I don't know where I'll go or what I'll do. If I were a housekeeper I wouldn't live in a house that had to be turned upside down every day to get the dirt out of it.

"A genuine spring cleaning means that Chloe, and Johnson, and John, and Lizzie, and Rufus, and Banks, and Calvin are to come in to the tune of one of Sousa's marches, played on the piano by Essie, tear up the carpets, knock down the plastering, break the clocks and drop a stove in the back porch.

"Mamma has made no attempt as yet to sun the bathtub, but I'm expecting it every day. When it happens, I'm going to have the chimneys taken down and dusted. When this is done, I'll have the woodpile cleaned and polished with that perfumed stuff they use on the stoves. And then I'm going to have all the dirt swept out of the garden. I think a clean garden—a garden with no dirt at all in it—is one of the loveliest sights on earth.

"Well, this is all for this time. Your loving "DADDY."

Denominational

Missouri District New Haven

"This is the day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it. O give thanks unto the Lord for He is good, for His mercy endureth forever." These words of the Psalmist expressed the sentiment of the members of St. Peter's Evangelical Church of New Haven, Mo., as on the beautiful Sunday morning, March 19, 1916, they gathered with their many friends from the neighboring congregations to dedicate their newly completed church to the service of the triune God. As it was an ideal spring day the new building was not nearly large enough to accommodate the many hundreds who had come from far and near to rejoice with the rejoicing.

The new St. Peter's Church, New Haven, Mo.

After a brief service led by the pastor, F. Tschudy, in the building in which the meetings had been held during the time the new edifice was being erected, the congregation marched in procession to the new church. After appropriate services at the portals the key was turned over to the pastor and the church opened. The dedicatory service was conducted by the pastor, assisted by all the visiting pastors, the Revs. J. Baltzer, President General of the Synod, Wm. Hackmann, president of the Missouri District, F. Stoerker, Hartsburg, A. Kuhn, Stony Hill, J. Daiss, Berger, E. Petschke, Boeuf Creek, K. Stadler, Casco, F. W. Fischer, Bernheimer, A. H. Bisping, Union, A. Alberswerth, Big Spring, R. Kassmann, Hermann, and J. N. Schuch, Washington. The German dedicatory sermon was in the evening. Rev. A. Kuhn delivered the German sermon, basing his remarks upon Ephes. 6, 13, and Rev. J. Baltzer the English, addressing particularly the young people, calling to their attention Luke 15, 31, and pointing out God's great promises to His children.

The choir under the leadership of the organist, Mr. J. Schroeder, provided special music for the dedicatory service. It also invited a Students' Quartet from Eden Seminary and the choirs of Bernheimer, Hermann and Washington who ably assisted in furnishing special music for the various services.

Much credit is due to the ladies of New Haven for the way they served meals to the many hundreds of visitors as well as their own people.

The church is a brick structure with a main auditorium 34x44 ft. and a Sunday-school room 27x33 ft., which can be combined into one large auditorium. There is also a room for the Bible Class, and a basement under the entire building, part of which has been arranged for a kitchen and a dining room. Artistic and instructive art glass windows representing Bible scenes and Bible teachings beautify both the church and the Sunday-school room.

The entire cost of the building is $17,500. Over $8000 were raised by subscription. The different church organizations vied with each other in assisting in the furnishing of the church. The Ladies' Aid society presented the pews at an outlay of $702.90. The Young People's League paid $225.00 for electrical fixtures. Former confirmands contributed $345.00 toward the art glass windows, which cost $1,000.00, and the Young Ladies' society furnished the carpet and altar covering for $180.00. The offering on the day of dedication together with the receipts at the tables amounted to $504.53.

There remains a debt of about $7,600. But if the individual members will continue to labor as they have labored in the past this burden will soon become lighter and finally be removed entirely.

St. Peter's Church of New Haven has a beautiful, well-equipped and modernly arranged church. And now may its usefulness be greatly multiplied and its influence for good vastly increased. May it not only have a better equipped building, but also find itself ready and prepared for better service.

J. N. Schuch.

William Shakspeare, Bard, 1564—1616

The Bard of Avon, the Poet of early Protestantism, is indeed, as Ben Johnson says, "not of an Age but for all Time."

FOR THE EVANGELICAL HERALD BY PASTOR THEOPHILE HAAS, BREESE, ILL.

I.

On the 23rd of April the entire English-speaking world united in commemorating the 300th anniversary of the death of William Shakspeare, the greatest of English poets. Nations of other tongues, moreover, will share in paying their tribute to the genius and lifework of the greatest of dramatists. Among these nations Germany, undoubtedly, is in the lead. For nowhere, for almost two centuries has the "Sweet Swan of Avon" been more popular than in the appreciative Fatherland, and even the present direful hostilities between the two great Germanic nations, with all its malignant campaign of vituperation, cannot preclude a just and beautiful laudation of the great poet's abiding worth and significance. "No, this Shakspeare will not be taken from us."

William Shakspeare embodies the spirit of the England of three centuries ago. More: he stands for much of the typically Germanic way of thinking and acting, of Post-Reformation, Protestant liberty and ambitions, exertions and achievements. He has been recognized by the Germans no less than by the English as the greatest literary representative of Protestant humanity in its seething, formative period, and has been studied by one as eagerly and profoundly as by the other. We know it is impossible to understand classical antiquity without Homer, medieval Catholicism without Dante or the more recent times, after the French Revolution, without the author of Faust, inasmuch as literature contributes to the intellectual development of a nation; and likewise it will forever be necessary to study Shakspeare in order to trace those innumerable intellectual currents which have united to produce the broad stream of modern literary activities.

The present article is to present a brief sketch of the author's life and to point to his importance as an ethical teacher. Every true poet, as according to the lofty conception of men like Carlyle and Wordsworth must show the "elevating tendencies," tho of course, these will never be obtrusively displayed. He is to be measured by the eternal, always the truly predominant factor in human affairs, and it is safe to say that the value and duration of Shakspeare's works have greatly rested upon the manner not only of his artistic but also his ethical treatment of man, in his entirety.

An early Life of Storm and Stress

Shakspeare's boyhood, born as he was in April, 1564, fell in a time of the rarest and richest national efflorescence. The Renaissance and the Reformation had ushered in new forces, productive of solid studies, greater freedom, vast explorations, religious and political readjustments. It was a time of youthful initiative; everything was undertaken, nothing seemed impossible. Literature, like the natural sciences and philosophy, once the handmaid of the Church, now became emancipated, and the dramatists, especially men like Peele, Greene and Marlowe, were leading in that fiery, forceful, but often so skeptical and pernicious intellectual independence, of which even traces are to be found in Shakspeare's productions.

The author's father was a prosperous farmer and glove-maker, living in the romantic Stratford on the Avon. He was ignorant of reading and writing, but was considered a man of honorable standing in his community. The year of the poet's birth saw the little village desolated by the plague.

At an early age the boy, who was the third child of the family, was sent to the free grammar school of the town, where he was taught English, some Latin and possibly a little Greek. It seems, however, that the wild youth never acquired any particular proficiency in the ancient tongues, for in later years he was accustomed to resort to translations when adopting classical subjects for his plays.

The town Stratford itself, but a few miles distant from the famous castle of Kenilworth, the scene in 1575 of the gorgeous spectacle so brilliantly described in Scott's novel, was often visited by itinerant players, assisted, it seems, by sums appropriated by the play- and pleasure-loving community. These visits surely had something to do with shaping the poet's later career of both writer and actor.

When Shakspeare was about fourteen years old, his father must have met with some serious financial reverses. He was deprived of the offices he held on account of his debts, was compelled to mortgage his farm and after all seems to have been arrested for non-payment of his obligations. Later years, however, owing, it appears, to his illustrious son's affection and assistance, brought a return to the comfortable position enjoyed in the days of his prosperity.

It is still a matter of doubt what mode of employment the young man at first assumed. He is spoken of as "an apprentice to a butcher," then again as a "schoolmaster in the country," and furthermore has been thought to have worked in an attorney's office. On the whole it is not before 1582, when the wild and boisterous fellow—for as such he is often described,—was married to Anne Hathaway, eight years his senior, that we meet with any reliable data.

The poet's union was blessed with one son and two daughters. Perhaps it was never very happy, tho hardly so miserable as is often contended. There were times of estrangements, even infidelities, it seems, on his part, but there was no permanent separation, for the last years of his life were spent with his wife and his two daughters.

The Stage lures him to London

In 1587 the "Queen's Players" came to Stratford and shortly afterwards Shakspeare is seeking and find-

Continued on Page 8

Picked up by the Way

A startling sign, which was merely intended to advertise a laundry that would relieve the housewife of the family wash, appeared, says a contributor to Everybody's, on the fence of one of our baseball parks. It read: "Don't Kill Your Wife! Let us Do Your Dirty Work. Mountain City Laundry."

Out of 100,000 words used in personal and business letters the word "the" heads the list in frequency, being used 6,933 times, according to a recent investigation. "And" comes next. "Mother" was used almost twice as frequently as "father" in these letters, and "good" was used eight times as often as "pretty."

Chinese shipyards may possibly yet build ships for us, as they are already building them for European owners. Hongkong is said to be enjoying a shipbuilding boom on an unprecedented scale, one yard being prepared to build steamships up to 10,000 tons. The labor employed, including foremen, is all Chinese, tho the white race supplies the technical staff.

The Woman's World appeals to women generally to follow the example of business women and cultivate the virtue of punctuality. "One of the lessons," it says, "the business and working woman has learned is to be prompt. Managers of large establishments tell us that as a rule women are more punctual than men. There has been a notable improvement in the punctuality of the home, due mainly to the influence of modern business."

The city of Boston is now constructing a dry dock to cost more than $3,000,000, which will be the largest in the western hemisphere. It will be 1,200 feet long, with a width at the entrance of 133 feet, and depth over the sill at high tide of forty-five feet. There will be a special gate in the center dividing it into two sections, so that two vessels of less than half the total length of the dock can be dry-docked at once. Using the entire dock, it will be possible to accommodate the largest vessel as yet constructed.

"I want a cake of the best toilet soap you have," a shopper in one of the big New York department stores said to a saleswoman the other day; "how much is it please?" "Two dollars and ninety cents," was the staggering reply as the clerk brought forth from a case a small, daintily wrapped package; "and you're lucky to get this, for we're not getting any more or them now." It was a French soap, and the high price, it was said, was due to the exquisite perfume used in its manufacture.

In a list of epoch-making inventions of the last fifty years given in an official report, thirty-six are credited to "people of the United States," fourteen to foreign inventors. The first ten in each list, respectively, are as follows: American—Telephone, typewriter, cash register, incandescent lamp, talking machine, electric furnace reduction, electrolytic alkali production, transparent photograph film, motion picture machine, button hole sewing machine. Foreign—Electric steel, dynamite, artificial alizarine (dye), siphon recorder, gas engine, wireless telegraphy, smokeless powder, Diesel oil motor, centrifugal creamer, maganese steel.

In a recent address before the Society of Automobile Engineers, the opinion was expressed that gasoline would never return to before-the-war prices, and that relief would come thru the use of kerosene. Reference was made to the phenomenal increase in the automobile industry and in the use of tractors, motor boats, farming machinery, stationery engines and other devices burning up gasoline. Control of the distribution and exportation of this fuel by a tax on exports was suggested, and the curtailment of waste, which the United States Bureau of Mines estimates at fifty million dollars a year, in crude oil, was urged. The Government figures show that in 1914 34,915,000 barrels of gasoline were produced, of which 5,000,000 barrels were exported. In 1915, out of a production of 41,600,000 barrels, 6,500,000 were exported. Conservative estimate of the consumption for 1916 places the American requirement for the year at 42,000,000 barrels. The Federal Trade Commission has recently completed an exhaustive study of the gasoline industry, its report having been laid before Congress on April 2, but the facts are not yet made public.

The American Bible Society in the United States during 1915

Seeking to let all hear and read the mighty Works of God in their own Language wherein they were born. Many Bibleless People even among the "best Families"

II

The Western Agency

The Rev. Arthur F. Ragatz, D. D., of the Western Agency, writes: "In some respects 1915 has been one of the banner years of the Western Agency. If success depended wholly upon the number of volumes distributed other years would show a small advance lar staff of colporteurs and correspondents, but of the churches and missionary workers in special work for Exposition visitors. The presence of President James Wood, Dr. Fox, and all the Agency Secretaries during the Bible Congress and the Secretaries' Conference was an added stimulus and encouragement.

"The one outstanding event in our regular work over last year; but from the standpoint of service rendered to neglected communities, the canvassing of almost entire states, hitherto only partially worked, and the finding of thousands of families without a Bible and supplying them with the Word—from this standpoint the 1915 record exceeds that of previous years.

Colporteurs selling Scriptures on a freighter in New York harbor (see "Eastern Agency") 2484

"This year we have placed special stress upon the work among the foreign communities in our great cities and upon the scattered settlements along the frontier in the Western states. In cities like St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, and Butte, unusual efforts have been put forth to reach aliens in their colonies, and the poor who crowd the cheap lodging houses, the tenements and the slums. These classes seem to be in an unusually receptive mood, but of necessity sales have been very small among these people.

"In working the Western states we have tried to follow a careful plan which aims at an ultimate, complete and thoro canvass of these vast empires.

"In Utah we have again co-operated with the Utah Gospel Mission, and for months had workers in nine covered wagons canvassing with our Bibles, covering the whole northern part of the state, calling at every home, no matter how humble or remote. . . . We look forward to the great task yet to be accomplished, and when the heart trembles we look back at the success already achieved and the rich trophies won and take courage, knowing that He is faithful who has promised: 'My word shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.'"

In the Pacific Agency

The past year has been an exceptional one because of the Expositions held on the Coast, which opened many doors of service and enlarged the field for special Gospel seed-sowing.

The year was also exceptional in results. Our appropriation has been materially decreased, yet God raised up for His work so many helpers that instead of having a decreased circulation the increase over last year was 4,100 volumes.

The World's Bible Congress and the Bible Exhibit at the San Francisco Exposition brought the work of our Society prominently before the nation. We had the hearty co-operation of not only our regular staff of colporteurs and correspondents, but of the churches and missionary workers in special work for Exposition visitors. The presence of President James Wood, Dr. Fox, and all the Agency Secretaries during the Bible Congress and the Secretaries' Conference was an added stimulus and encouragement.

The Southwestern Agency

The story of the Southwestern Agency might well be entitled "Success thru Defeat," for the record most surely proves that some of its greatest triumphs were born in the hour of great discouragement, and in the effort to accomplish the impossible.

"The Agency had already suffered a ten per cent cut in its appropriation at the beginning of 1915, and when another similar cut was announced in the middle of the year the task seemed impossible. In the Southwest there are no great munition factories to reap profit from the European war; only the ranchmen who sold horses to France were benefitted from this source.

"Retrenchment was the first order of the day. The extra colporteur so much needed for work among the Mexicans in Texas could not be put on (except for one month); the colporteur for the Indians of Oklahoma could not be continued; the work planned for the mountaineers of Arkansas had to be done thru correspondents rather than thru a salaried colporteur; in Louisiana the colporteur could only serve for part of the year, while in the office the reliable first assistant had to go. But, after all, the record shows that the Southwestern Agency has made a substantial advance in Bible distribution of more than ten thousand volumes! "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform."

"A fact significant of the missionary value of our work last year is that Scriptures were actually distributed by our workers in forty-one languages, and that our colporteurs were themselves able to speak in seventeen different languages. First consideration has been given to the supply of our foreign-speaking people, of whom there are more than a million in the four states, distributed about as follows: French, 240,000; Italians, 90,000; Germans, 300,000; Bohemians, 100,000; Mexicans, 450,000; Scandinavians, 60,000; American Indians, 100,000; other nationalities, about 25,000.

"For reasons obvious to all, Mexicans in Texas have been our special care this year. We have had a native colporteur (with horse and wagon), and an American Bible-woman at work all the year. Also we have fortunately had the valuable assistance of returned missionaries from Mexico. Worthy of special mention was a campaign to supply every Mexican home in San Antonio with Scriptures, resulting in a distribution of about 10,000 volumes.

"We have lately heard much of 'the men in the trenches,' and this is what we have been pleased to call our correspondents. Our colporteurs, or advance guards, were seriously hindered in their movements this year, and more than ever before we depended upon pastors and missionaries—the men in the trenches. Valuable assistance was also rendered by volunteer distributors who receive nothing whatever for their services. Not only pastors but doctors, lawyers, merchants, and women 'which labored with me in the gospel,' undertook this work simply for Christ's sake.

"Other aids were, better and cheaper Scriptures provided by our Bible House at New York; the removal of our Agency depository to a more central location in Dallas; and the fact that each year the American Bible Society is becoming more widely and favorably known to the Southwest."

The Eastern Agency

During the latter part of the year under review the work of this Agency was considerably disturbed on account of the failing health of Rev. William H. Tower. Mr. Tower tendered his resignation as agency secretary to take effect the end of October, and from November 1, 1915, the work of the Agency has been in charge of the Rev. W. H. Hendrickson, who has given such time as he could spare from his numerous other duties to supervise, without remuneration, the extensive work of our Eastern Agency.

Mr. Hendrickson reports that the returns show a decrease of 7,322 volumes in the circulation as compared with that of 1914. The Scriptures were distributed in forty languages during the year.

Mr. Hendrickson writes: "The places covered were Binghamton and all southwestern New York, Rochester, northwestern New York, the Italians at Lockport and vicinity, Brooklyn, Long Island and adjacent towns, lumber camps in the Adirondacks, and the Italian population on Manhattan Island. Some special work was done at the County Fairs. There is pressing need for sufficient funds to place new colporteurs in especially needy districts of the territory covered by the Eastern Agency." With reference to Mr. Hendrickson's concluding sentence it should be noted that the population of the territory of the Eastern Agency, including New York and Rhode Island, is over 10,000,000. Such a population must of necessity be very inadequately reached by a force of only thirty-three colporteurs.

A very interesting feature of the work centering in Brooklyn is that carried on along the waterfront. Our illustration shows two colporteurs selling Scriptures on a freighter. In his report one of these men records an encouraging evidence of the power of God's Word upon a rebellious person. In the year 1913 his life was threatened by the captain of a scow who insisted upon him confessing disbelief in the Bible; but he quietly maintained that it was the Word of God. His 1913 report reads: "In his fury at my unwillingness to give in, he rushed down below for a hatchet. With this in hand, he returned, continuing his insulting words against God and the Bible. With hatchet raised over my head, he threatened me. During all the excitement I had been quiet, but was praying for God's guidance and protection. As the hatchet was raised higher, ready to strike me, I said to the man: 'I am not out in my own name. The Master I serve could strike you down immediately!' At this he dropped his weapon, and with the others became an attentive listener to the words which I read them from the Bible. I feel assured in this case that the Word of God will not be without fruit."

The following extract from the colporteur's 1915 report is clear evidence of his faith:

"During the year 1915 I had an opportunity to be in a little soul-saving station on Manhattan Island. After the meeting was over a man spoke to me and said, 'You will be surprised to find a certain man here who wishes to speak to you,' and as we approached the coffee table the man referred to said, 'Come over here'—mentioning my name and pointing to an empty chair which he had reserved for the 'Sailor's Bible-

Concluded on Page 8

Religious News

Lutherans Preparing for Reformation Quadricentennial

Five general Lutheran bodies have united in a general committee to promote celebrations next year of the four hundredth anniversary of the Reformation. It was on October 31, 1517, that Dr. Martin Luther, Roman Catholic parish priest of Wittenberg, nailed the ninety protests to the door of his Castle Church. The act started not alone a religious reformation, but also a political one. Hence it is purposed by religious bodies in America to have both religious and civic celebrations of the event next year.

The Lutheran bodies to unite are the General Council, the General Synod, the United Synod South, the Joint Synod of Ohio and the Iowa Synod. These five make up about one third of all Lutherans in America, perhaps a trifle more. Providing its own religious celebration, but joining with others in the civic one, is the Synodical Conference, the largest of all Lutheran American bodies, and the most German and most conservative.

There are being formed at present in principal cities Lutheran societies, with laymen prominently in their management, to have charge of the celebrations next year. Into these societies Lutherans of all names are going, and they are meeting with some success in getting Christians of other Protestant bodies to join them. Cities in which such societies or committees have already gotten to work include Denver, Los Angeles, Charleston, Buffalo, Baltimore, Kansas City, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, Chicago and New York.

Part of the Lutheran celebration plan, already set afoot, is the arranging of groups of people, dressing them in costumes of old German times, and photographing them for moving picture use in churches, church halls and theatres. Another part is the standardizing of music. A third is the planning of pageants and plays.

Different Lutheran bodies are planning jubilee funds. For example, the Synodical Conference will raise if possible $5,000,000 and will not stop short of $2,000,000 at any rate. Iowa Lutherans are building a theological seminary at Dubuque that is costing $300,000 and in many cities memorial churches and buildings are planned. It is estimated that the total jubilee funds of all Lutherans will reach $10,000,000.

English Free Churches Urged to Come Together

The twenty-first annual meeting of the National Free Church Council of England was distinguished for the official sanction which it finally gave to the ideal of a "United Free Church of England." Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, one of the most eminent of English Baptist clergymen, has for six years past been arguing all over England for such a union of the non-conformist denominations and when a year ago he was chosen to preside over the Free Church Council of 1916, it was certain that his inaugural address would deal with this subject.

This prospect, during all the year intervening, drew special attention to the union proposition. And interest in it was intensified when Rev. Harold E. Brierly published in The Christian World a series of articles declaring that nonconformity in Great Britain was steadily losing because it persisted in cultivating absurd sectarian divisions. These articles raised a deal of excited discussion, and their effect was intensified when, in the late winter, the various denominations announced their statistics for 1915, showing with dismal uniformity a continued decline in their membership and Sunday-school attendance.

A well prepared mind therefore prevailed in the council at Bradford when Mr. Shakespeare arose to make his expected pronouncement on the union question. He declared that all the free churches, in common with their nation, are in the throes of a great trial. Current losses if unchecked will soon bleed them all to death. Plainly denominationalism is not making an appeal to the nation at large, and is making less and less appeal even to the members of the churches themselves. The waste of men and money thru overlapping in the villages and ineffective distribution of forces in the towns has become enormous, and yet competition remains almost as much the law of English denominations as the law of commerce.

Mr. Shakespeare, however, admitted that there is at present no hope of an organic union of denominations, even in England, where the free churches have so long worked together in alliance. But he does believe that a federal union, "on the model of the states of America," is possible, and while he does not regard such an adjustment as a final solution, he thinks it is what every free church man should aim at immediately. This federal church under a united board of strategy could at least close unnecessary chapels in the villages, and force the membership into a single congregation in each place. Mr. Shakespeare made clear that he did not mean such congregations to be independent, but would insist that each of them should have a distinct denominational relation.

The address was received with very much enthusiasm, and Dr. F. B. Meyer moved that the council should "record its strong approval of the principles and proposals outlined in the presidential address." This was carried amid hearty cheers without a single dissenting voice, and the executive committee of the council was directed to bring the plan to the attention of the representative national body in each connection for indorsement.

Preliminaries for Jewish Congress

Delegates returning from the preliminary conferences of Jews held in Philadelphia last Sunday, report the gathering far greater in breadth and achievement than they had expected. They say results amply justify the prediction of the promoters of a Jewish Congress, and discount the fears of the American Jewish Committee, which has long opposed such popular gathering, and still does so. The decision arrived at in Philadelphia was to call the Congress to meet in Washington at some date prior to the end of the current year. The aim of the Congress is to formulate plans and platform by which American Jews can assist the Jews of the whole world, about 13,500,000 in number, to gain rights enjoyed by all other citizens.

The Congress just held had in it delegates from almost all Jewish societies in America. The American Jewish Committee will, it is now said, hold its conference of leaders in the near future, and will probably arrive at the same conclusion as the Philadelphia conference has done.

The meeting in May of the Hebrew-Christian Alliance of America, according to The Continent, will receive from its Philadelphia branch a request for a public declaration that Jews who accept Christ as Messiah and Saviour do not need to abandon "the social and national customs" of Israel. Such a resolution on the part of the Jewish mission workers who compose this organization would have a far-reaching effect on the program of Jewish evangelization in America. It would mean practically that hereafter Jews would be urged to become Christians without being expected necessarily to join Christian churches. They would be recommended—or at least permitted if they so desired—to continue as Jews in their synagogues, confessing there a Messianic faith in Jesus but not withdrawing from any of the characteristic rites which Jews observe.

What the synagog authorities would say about the matter is, of course, something that the Hebrew-Christian Alliance cannot govern, but if Christian converts really insisted on maintaining their Jewish relationship in worship, it would certainly be hard for the rabbis to deny the privilege. And from the Christian side the precedent is apostolic, for Jewish followers of Christ long remained an integral part of the assemblies of their people in the temple at Jerusalem as well as in the synagogues of outlying communities. To this not even Paul demurred, for while he insisted that Mosaic ordinances must not be imposed on Gentile Christians, he never objected even to the practice of circumcision by Christians who had inherited the rite from their ancestry.

And should it not be seriously inquired by Gentile Christians of the present day whether when they look for converted Jews to join their churches they are not simply reversing the Judaizing error that Paul protested against so mightily. In the time of the apostles Paul made it clear that a Gentile did not need to become a Jew in order to be a Christian. Does not the modern Church attitude practically amount to holding that a Jew must become a Gentile in order to be a Christian? And as a multitude of new converts were brought to the Master when that exclusive rule of the first century was broken down, might there not be another great rush of converts to Him if the counterpart rule of the twentieth century were broken down?

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

May 7, 1916. Misericordias Domini Sunday

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

CONSECRATED TALENTS

- M. May 1. The teaching talent. 1 Tim 4: 6-16.
T. May 2. The witnessing talent. 1 Cor. 9: 16-27.
W. May 3. Varying talents. 1 Pet. 4: 7-11.
T. May 4. Trade talents. Exod. 31: 1-11.
F. May 5. Consecrated gold. 1 Tim. 6: 17-21.
S. May 6. Entire consecration. 1 Thess. 5: 23, 24.

Sun., May 7. Topic:—The Consecration of Talents.
Matt. 25: 14-30. (Consecration meeting.)

Suggestions to the Leader

In discussing this subject two facts needs to be emphasized: 1. All so-called talents are God-given. Therefore the use of these so-called talents in the service of God is an act of gratitude, which we dare not withhold. 2. Every person has some distinct aptitude, which if properly developed will grow into a talent. We owe it to God and ourselves to develop carefully and industriously whatever special aptitude or gift we have.

I would suggest that the leader have a representative of some of the special departments of Christian work present to plead the cause they represent, viz: the Sunday-school, the Home Department, the Official Board of the Church, the Church Treasurer, the Parish Visitor, the Church Choir, The Pianist of the Society, the Missionary Society, the Teacher Training Class, et. Bring the varied and extensive activities before the society in this manner, that the members can realize the many-sidedness of the work a Christian can do.

Do not fail, however, to point out the home duties, as daughter or son, sister or brother, towards the parents, and the younger sisters or brothers in the family.

The Topic Presented

The word "talent" as used by the Lord was applied primarily to a certain value or weight in gold or silver. Later on the word "talent" became the metaphor for every intellectual ability, natural or acquired, every special aptitude or accomplishment, every special gift in business, art, science etc.

Four facts stand out very prominently:—

1. Every talent is God-given. The talented boy or girl, the great musician or singer, entertainer and conversationalist, teacher or leader of others dare not boast of his talents or special gifts as self-acquired and developed. God has given them to him and endowed him with these special gifts. This ought to lead us to be grateful to God for such gifts. He who appropriates them in the mind of Jesus, who, the existing in the form of God, endowed with divine faculties and gifts, counted not on the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped, not taken as a robber grasps the thing he steals, will empty himself of all false pride, and will gratefully acknowledge that he is but the servant of God, to whom God has entrusted special tools and faculties for the performing of certain tasks, Phil. 2: 5-11.

2. Every talent must be increased. The Lord in the parable gave the talents to the servants for the purpose of having them put to use, that their number might be increased. On his return he expected the servants to report an increase. The one servant who did not report an increase, but only a saving of what had been entrusted to him, receives a punishment, while the others receive a reward. The talent is capable of increasing. A dormant talent will lose its effectiveness. Buried money is useless, only money that is put to use brings prosperity. If the country's money is hoarded in the banks it means financial disaster. But money put to use indicates busy and prosperous times. The talent not used at work will decay. The eyeless fish of Mammoth Cave once had lustrous eyes, but the eternal darkness in which the fish lived required no sight, therefore the power of vision died. The muscle you do not use will soon lose its strength, the faculty neglected will soon be no more.

3. The development of a faculty is our own personal care. God does not develop faculties for us. God made the waterfalls but left it to man to harness the power; He filled the atmosphere with electricity, but left it for man to discover the power and the way to use that power. God gave us a mind, but we must develop that mind. We have muscles, but we must develop them if we would grow strong. Every person has special gifts or faculties, which if properly developed and nurtured would soon grow into usefulness. Special talents will soon assert themselves, and once discovered, let us cultivate these special gifts. Studiousness and care, persevering application are necessary if we would succeed. There is too much time wasted deploring the success others have attained, instead of devoting that time for our own perfection and development. No talent will develop itself, and if it did, it would not be very valuable. "Genius," as Mr. Edison well says, "is ten percent inspiration and ninety percent perspiration."

4. Every talent reaches its highest development in the service of God. The service of God includes the service of fellowmen, the latter being the kind of service God demands. The true pastor and teacher will not be thinking of money values as he performs his duties. It is said of the true artist that he would rather die than go back on his ideals. Mozart died when but thirty, and was buried in a pauper's grave. Paul, Luther, and the great men in the Church of Jesus Christ endured untold hardships, but their talents used for God's purpose made them immortal. As a Jewish rabbi Paul would have been great in a limited circle and his name would not have endured; as a monk or professor Luther would soon have been forgotten, but Paul as an Apostle and Luther as a Reformer consecrated their talents to the highest purpose, the service of God.

Can you sing? Then cultivate and use your talent. Can you teach? Then instruct in God's truths. Can you give? Then give to God's kingdom. Do the best you can with what is at your command, but be sure that you are always doing your best, for the best and highest purpose.

Some Questions on the Topic

What is a talent?

Why are we responsible for our talents?

How can we learn to know what talents we have?

How can our talents be improved?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Psalm 84: 11; Dan. 2: 21-23; John 6: 27; Rom. 12: 6-8; 1 Cor. 7:7; 1 Cor. 12: 4-11; 1 Cor. 13: 2; Eph. 4: 7, 8; Jas. 1: 17; 1 Pet. 4: 10; 2 Pet. 1: 3.

A Prayer

We thank Thee, our heavenly Father, for every gift of the body, mind and soul. We pray that we may cultivate them faithfully, and use them truly for the uplifting of our hearts and the hearts of others unto Thee, the Giver of all such gifts. Save us from the sin of pride and arrogance, and help us ever to live in the mind of Jesus Christ, who became a servant to all that He might win all for everlasting life. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson 6. Entering the Kingdom

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. May 1. Matt. 7: 13-23. And Admonition to Enter.
T. May 2. Matt. 18: 1-20. What Citizenship in the Kingdom Requires.
W. May 3. Matt. 20: 20-28. The Way to Greatness.
T. May 4. Phil. 2: 5-11. Greatness thru Humility.
F. May 5. 1 Peter 5: 1-11. Girded with Humility.
S. May 6. Mark 10: 13-16. Jesus Blesses Little Children.
S. May 7. Ps. 131. Simplicity of the Soul.

Lesson Key:—"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," Matt. 5: 8.

When Jesus began His public ministry in Galilee it was with the message, "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye and believe in the Gospel," Mark 1: 15. It was the very same message with which John the Baptist had begun his preaching in the wilderness, Matt. 3: 2: "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." What both John the Baptist and Jesus Christ had in mind was but the completion of the rule of God over His people which had been established at Sinai, Ex. 19: 6, "Ye shall be unto Me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation." The Jews had mistaken the Old Testament idea of the rule of God to mean an earthly kingdom represented by a human king and restricted to the chosen people. The message which Jesus had for His people, however, was to make plain the spiritual character of the rule of God. We have already seen this character emphasized in the Sermon on the Mount (Lesson 9 of the first quarter), where the citizens of the kingdom of God and the kind of righteousness that will be expected of them are clearly set forth to the listening multitudes.

Just how firmly the minds of the disciples, in spite of their closeness to Jesus for more than two years, still clung to the old earthly conception of a kingdom of God, is evident from their question, "Who then is greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" They are taking it for granted that by virtue of their discipleship they are certain to play an important part in the establishment of the kingdom on earth, and their natural ambition leads them to desire a permanent position. In His answer Jesus points out the danger in which they are of losing their citizenship thru the very ambition they reveal. The question they ask would be impossible if they understood the true nature of the kingdom Jesus had come to establish.

As an object lesson of the character required for entrance into the Kingdom Jesus places a little child, i. e., one not yet weaned, and unable to think and act for himself, into their midst. Conscious of its helplessness and dependency on the mother's care, the child had not yet come to have any self-consciousness. There was no pride, no ambition, no desire to be anything except in the presence of the mother, only pure and sincere humility. They who would be citizens of the kingdom of God must turn and become as little children; they must learn to get away from any self exaltation, from the selfish ambition that seeks to secure an advantage over others, and come to be content with simply being near to the heart of God and of Christ. The true citizen of the Kingdom can have no other ambition than this.

Such a truly humble spirit will be anxious to serve, even tho it be in the smallest and humblest capacity. No one recognized the possibilities of childhood in Jesus' day, and religious leaders concerned themselves only with grown persons. But the greatness of the service implied in receiving one such little child in Jesus' name is such that it is equivalent to receiving Jesus himself. Because of the possibilities of greatness that slumber in these little children, His followers are to devote themselves to the training of childhood. Little children are natural heirs of the kingdom of God, and to train them into it and develop them for it is as great a service as any one can render.

There are also obligations resting upon the citizens of the Kingdom. Whoso shall cause one of these little ones that believe on Jesus to stumble deserves a punishment so severe that we are surprised to hear it uttered by the lips of the meek and loving Jesus. They who desire a part in the kingdom of God must not only think of themselves alone but of others. Are they giving occasion for stumbling to any one of Jesus' little ones? Are they keeping others out of the kingdom of God by any conduct of theirs? Far better were it, if need be, to even cut off a hand or a foot, or to pluck out an eye. The true subjects of Jesus' rule are willing to sacrifice anything, even their most necessary limbs or members rather than give occasions of stumbling to any of His little ones. Of course it is not the foot nor the hand nor the eye that really causes the stumbling, but the heart from which the actions expressed by these members come. But if anything we have, even the most precious possessions, are a danger to our own spiritual life or that of others it is far better to endure pain in parting with these things than to cause offense to others.

The true citizen of the Kingdom has obligations also toward those who have gone astray and those who offend. It is not the will of the Father that any one of these little ones should perish. Those who are under the rule of Jesus will go out to seek the erring and the fallen just as naturally as the man who loses one of his hundred sheep goes out to seek it until he find it. Nor will such a one be ready to condemn one who has sinned against him. He will rather try to show him his fault, first alone, so as to win his love and gain him if possible without humiliating him in the sight of others. And even if such an attempt should fail, still other means are to be employed before he is to be condemned as hopeless.

Thus does the kingdom of God set up the highest ideals for men to follow after. Men cannot find the Kingdom on any map; it is within the heart. It cometh not with observation; the only outward badge of membership is that which proceeds from a humble and helpful spirit.

William Shakspeare, Bard 1564—1616

Continued from Page 4

ing his fortune in London. He was prompted, undoubtedly, to leave his native village by his love for the stage, or at least for the wide, wide world. Directly even he may have been urged to do so by the much-debated deer-stealing, which brought about the hatred of Sir Thomas Lucy, a member of Parliament, and which is supposed to have inspired the author's first attempt with the pen—"O Lowsie Lucy"—in response to the nobleman's persecution. In 1592 he is already mentioned as a successful playwright, together with his forerunners and companions, Marlowe and Peele.

In 1593 the first "heir of his invention," Venus and Adonis, appeared. Both this poem and Lucrece were dedicated to the Earl of Southampton, his warm-hearted and generous patron. He had now gained the love of the highest in society, was literally supported by men like Essex and Pembroke and enabled to purchase a beautiful estate at Stratford.

The years from 1593 to 1613 now witnessed the appearance of his dramatic masterpieces, but it was also during this time, toward the beginning of the new century, that he was to suffer the turns of fortune. Banishment, imprisonment and even death had struck some of his best friends and the sad experience of human deceitfulness and ingratitude had given him an inclination for the sombre subjects of his most serious and powerful tragedies. The years after 1600 brought forth the great figures of Caesar, Hamlet, Lear and Othello with their sins and follies, their passions, their struggles and failures. It seems significant that Elisabeth's death in 1603 was not made the occasion of any poetical composition. Perhaps she was too much associated in the poet's mind with the ruin of Essex and others, and had given his tunes the twisting out of their joints.

Life's Evening Calm

After 1610 Shakspeare returned to the peaceful quiet of Stratford's enchanting surroundings. The "gentleman's" abode here had surely something of an assuaging effect on his melancholy spirit. He was passing thru the sins and sorrows to peaceful victory, henceforth to reflect something of the peace of a pious resignation in the last of his plays, The Tempest, The Winter's Tale and Cymbeline.

Meanwhile the times were beginning to change. Puritanism was beginning to exercise its rigorous influence. Players once so welcome to Stratford were now paid not to play. With what sentiments this change was received by the poet will be hard to determine, as it is always a very difficult if not impossible task to read his life out of his works.

The last years of his life, it appears, were spent in happiness with his family. Judith, the younger of his daughters, was married about two months before her father's death. In the latter's will, so notable for the words used in the beginning, his daughters Susanna and Judith, his sister Joan, some friends and a number of fellow-players are generously remembered, his wife having been legally provided for as sharing in his "freehold property." His end came on April 23, 1616, caused by a fever, if this is correct, as stated fifty years later by Ward, the vicar of Stratford at that time. Two days later the illustrious writer, the greatest thing that England has ever done, to use the phrase of Carlyle, was laid to rest in the parish church, having attained the age of fifty-two years to the day, as some authorities maintain. The following lines are his well-known epitaph:

"Good friend, for Jesus' sake, forbear
To dig the dust enclosed here.
Blessed be he that spares the stones,
And cursed be he that moves my bones."

It was a remarkable coincidence, that on the very same day of the same year (April 23, 1616) Spain's most popular literary genius, the good-natured and amiable Cervantes, passed into rest with all the consolations of the Catholic religion, and after a life of the most painful poverty and tribulations.

The Story of the American Bible Society, 1915 man.' He then said to me: 'You do not need to be afraid of me or of the hatchet any more. I am a new man now, and if you only can, forgive me.' The reader can imagine my feelings of thankfulness to Him whose Word is like a two-edged sword. It pays to serve the Lord."

Concluded from Page 6

The Central Agency

With forty-one men the Agency has endeavored to press the work to the very uttermost, and in the face of many discouragements, for the cotton and tobacco crops have not realized much money to the people of the South. It may surprise some to know that on many farms and plantations the crops of two and even three years are in barns or warehouses because the market will not justify making the sales. But in the face of clouds and rains and disappointments, the colporteurs have had many happy encouragements and have made the very commendable increase of 13,122 over 1914 in the distribution of the year's work which totals 96,968 volumes.

It is a cause for thankfulness to know that all the men co-operating with us in this Agency have been graciously kept in health and done very faithful work over our five states. Most of them are ministers of the gospel and every Sabbath finds them preaching the gospel and advancing our interests.

But there is a sadness which oppresses every one of us in this blessed work, namely, the large number of persons found without the Bible or any portion of it. If this lack were among the foreign peoples only it would not be so depressing; but it is found among the native-born Americans. Or, if it could be said that only the very poor of the English-speaking peoples were Bibleless, then we could press our work with redoubled vigor; but in very truth it must be said that there are many, many people in the middle walks of life, and even among the best of families, where the Bible should be found and read, who do not possess God's Holy Word.

From the mountains of Kentucky a lady colporteur reports: "I found a family on 'Sorghum Hollow' without a Bible or Testament, but eager to have one, at a reasonable price. The mother could not read but listened closely while I read from the Bible. Later they bought a Bible and soon asked for the prayer meeting to be held at their home. There was a change in that home after the Bible came to it; 'the entrance of Thy Word giveth light.' The only part of the Bible found at 'Happy Hollow' was a little portion brought in by a newcomer; and yet there were a dozen homes there. But they wanted a prayer meeting and a chance to buy the Bible for each home. Found two homes with no Bible to-day and left the Word in each. The husband in one of the homes was confined to his bed, but he told me that he read the Book night and day, and rejoiced in its teachings."

The good work has also been carried to the Florence Crittenden Homes, Rescue Homes and struggling mission schools, thru mountains and valleys, and many very thankful letters have been received, blessing the American Bible Society for its work.

The Atlantic Agency

"All connected with the Atlantic Agency can bear witness to the doctrine of particular providences. The year began with discouraging necessities involved at the loss of one-fifth of the usual income. This meant a parting with good workers ere the year closed, and the dropping of some encouraging work.

"We normally have large sales, because of the host of incoming immigrants. The call to the colors has taken thousands of these foreigners back to their homelands; yet new opportunities have presented themselves to us, and the output of volumes as compared with the recorded work of the last year shows an increase of 4,722 copies.

"An interesting statement in this connection is made by two individuals widely separated in their sphere of effort. Each reports having worked in a Catholic community where not less than twenty or thirty families had conference among themselves, in each instance accompanied by the search of the Scriptures which had been sold to them; the conclusion arrived at was that they would hereafter ally themselves with the evangelical Church. The power of the Word itself is constantly asserting itself. Sometimes results are not so immediate, but sooner or later they are manifest. God's own truth is mighty and must prevail.

"While promiscuous free distribution of books is not encouraged, yet as far as can judiciously be done we make partial or entire grants to public institutions, charitable organizations, prisons, mission congregations, and needy individuals.

"Altogether we are grateful for such encouragement as has been received. The full narrative of Bible distribution and its gracious and beneficent effects can never be expressed by pen or type. But the Great Day shall declare it."

Leaves of Life for Daily Inspiration.

By MARGARET BIRD STEINMETZ

384 Pages

Cloth. Net postpaid $1.00.

Leather. Gilt edge. Net postpaid $1.50

A most unusual and attractive collection of facts, quotations, Scripture verses and prayers, arranged for each day in the year. Every page gives the dates of some important persons or events, brief poetical or prose quotations, an appropriate verse of Scripture, ending with a beautiful prayer that crystallizes the sentiment of the quotations. As a gift book it will be most pleasing and helpful.

The Bible text used in this is taken from the American Standard Revised Bible.

A Pocket Manual of Prayer

By

WILLIAM A. PHILLIPS

90 pages

Texoderm, flexible, gilt edge

50 Cents

CONTENTS:

Part I. Pastoral Intercession.

Part II. Prayer in the Sanctuary.

Part III. Prayer in the Home.

In the Kingdom of Grace Sermon Library.

- | | | |
|---------|--|---------|
| Vol. 1. | "This do in remembrance of Me." Communion Sermons. Cloth..... | $0.85 |
| " 2. | "Be ye also ready." Funeral Addresses. Cloth | .85 |
| " 3. | "Blessed are ye!" Sermons on the Beatitudes. Cloth..... | .85 |
| " 4. | "After this manner pray ye." Sermons on the Lord's Prayer. Cloth..... | .85 |
| " 5. | "Go ye into all the World." Sermons on Foreign Missions. Cloth..... | .85 |
| " 6. | "What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." A collection of Matrimonial Sermons and Addresses.. | .85 |
| " 8. | "Be thou faithful unto Death." Sermons for Confirmation. Cloth..... | .85 |
| " 9. | "Golgatha."—Passion Week Sermons. Cloth | .85 |
| " 11. | "Sowing in Tears, Reaping in Joy." A collection of Funeral Sermons. Cloth | .85 |
| " 13. | "He is risen!" Three Easter Sermons. Stiff paper..... | .85 |
| " 14. | "The sure word of Prophecy." Twelve Sermons on the Reformation. Cloth. Net | .85 |
| " 15. | "The Law in the Light of the Gospel." A series of Sermons on the Precepts of Christ concerning the Law, in the Sermon on the Mount. Cloth..... | .85 |
| " 16. | "Behold the Lamb of God." Lententide Sermons. Cloth..... | .85 |
| " 17. | "The Divine Artist." Sermons of Consolation. Cloth..... | net .85 |
| " 18. | "Wells by the Wayside." Fifteen plain Sermons on fifteen great subjects. Cloth | .85 |

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CHANGED ADDRESSES

Rev. A. Grabowski, 2405 16th St., Moline, Ill.
Rev. O. Keller, R. R. 10, Box 81A, Evansville, Ind.
Rev. Max M. Schmidt, 106 Mill St., Merrill, Wis.
Rev. R. Stave, 105 Norton St., Rochester, N. Y. (New Parsonage.)
Rev. Hugo Vondran, R. R. 9, Jefferson Barracks, Mo.
Teacher D. Koenig, 70 Linden St., Schenectady, N. Y.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., MAY 4th, 1916

NUMBER 18

Negroes and "Social Equality"

What Negroes think of the "social equality" question so often raised by jealous defenders of the "integrity of the white race," appears very clearly from the reply which the Rev. Francis J. Grimke, pastor of an important colored Presbyterian church at Washington, D. C. recently sent in answer to an inquiry as to whether he "insisted on social equality, by which is meant intermarriage of the races," and which leaves nothing to be desired in the way of plainness and precision. As reported by The Continent the Rev. Mr. Grimke replied as follows to this inquiry:

"Have you ever seen any statement of mine in any shape or form intimating in any way that such a thought was even remotely in my mind? You seem entirely unconscious of the fact that colored people have some self-respect; you seem to be possessed with the idea that they are extremely anxious to be affiliated socially with white people. In this you are entirely mistaken. The colored people have no desire to force themselves socially upon anybody. Social intercourse is a matter to be determined entirely by the individual choice. Each one is left free to choose his own associates. That is in accordance with reason and common sense. All white people are not on terms of social equality, as you well know, and it is a mere subterfuge, a mere dodging of the question touching the treatment of colored people, to lug that matter in here."

No doubt this pastor knows something of the sentiments of his people on this question, certainly he is much more competent to be heard in regard to it than those Caucasians who are of the opinion that it is a Negro's chief ambition to give white skins to their descendants. Obviously this idea grows out of the notion that colored people inevitably regard their black skin as a curse to be gotten rid of at any cost. Why should it seem so hard for the Caucasian mind to understand that Negroes have self-respect as well as white persons, and that Negroes of sound mind,—who, we believe, far outnumber those of the other class—whose fathers and mothers were black may themselves be proud of their complexion and desire nothing better for their children? Why should a Negro be less determined to maintain the purity of his racial stock than a white man is?

As a matter of fact, the only reason why there can be any difference between white and black in the revulsion against mixed blood, is that a few Negroes have learned to despise their own color because white men despise it. And the remedy for that aberration which is the only cause that ever encourages among Negroes an inclination toward "intermarriage of the races"—is simply for white men to treat colored people with a respect which calls for self-respect. Especially must the education of negro youth be fostered in every way possible, for the educated negro always exalts his racial connection and works to make his people proud of their blackness and of the progress made in spite of its handicap.

The Ultimatum to Germany

It is interesting to observe the press comment on the last note President Wilson sent to Berlin. The German press, on the one hand, regards it as unthinkable that Germany should recognize the President as the representative of the neutral nations and grant his peremptory demands as long as the illegal British blockade and interference with the commercial rights of neutrals, which brought on the submarine warfare, remains in force, while most English papers admire "the President's courage, his inspiring faith in his countrymen," extol the "patience he has shown in dealing with this question," or regard it as our plain duty to "save what little remains of international law."

We do not believe that either kind of comment or the President's note reflects the sentiment of the American people. The President has never concerned himself with the sentiment of the people, but has gone his own way without any attempt to discover the policy the people would have him pursue, and this is apparently his great weakness. He has the unquestioned right to act as he did, and the responsibility for what may come of it rests upon him alone. He could have—and we think his position should have led him to do so—made an effort to learn the sentiments of the people and then suited his action to their will. There was no necessity for forcing the issue on the Sussex case just at this time, and drastic action was altogether uncalled for. It would also have behooved him to remember that if just as vigorous protest had been made against the British Order in Council declaring the paper blockade against

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

No one finds more pleasure for himself than he who knows how, without ostentation, to give himself that he may procure for those around him a moment of forgetfulness and happiness.

—Charles Wagner.

Germany—which was chiefly directed against the United States, and is still being pursued with that end in view—the submarine warfare would never have been inaugurated. And fairminded people will readily agree that there would have been just as much if not more basis for a stand for "humanity's sake" in opposing the British procedure, which aims to starve a helpless civilian population, as there is in opposing the submarine warfare. We do not attempt to say what motives the President may have had in determining upon the policy he has followed; we do not think, however, that he can claim to be neutral in his attitude, and we do not think that the people would ratify his action if they had an opportunity to express their opinion uninfluenced by a biased press service. The President may think that he knows better than the American people what stand this country ought to take on so momentous a question, and perhaps he does, but a government of the people by the people and for the people requires that the people, not the press, have an opportunity to say what they think ought to be done.

We do not know what Germany will answer to President Wilson's note. Possibly that government may conclude that since the active sympathy and aid of the United States seems to be on the side of the Allies in any event there is no use in tying its own hands in seeking to remain at peace with this country. And with the diplomatic relations between the United States and Germany severed no one could expect Germany to care very much whether the ships that were submarined carried an American flag or not. It may also be that Germany makes up her mind to modify her submarine policy because more might be gained from such a course than by straining the relations between the two countries to the breaking point, which would no doubt have the effect of strengthening the position of the Allied powers. In that event we shall have cause for gratitude toward Germany for helping us over a pretty rough place. It is well to remember, in view of the critical situation, that God Almighty has the balance of power. He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; He removeth and setteth up kings—and presidents, for that matter—and He is the ruler of the nations. As for us we believe that the American people want peace rather than war on such an issue as the one that has been raised, and that they desire to stand for fairness as well as for "humanity," and for righteousness rather than mere "rights."

The Roman Catholic Way

Up to 1897, home missionary agencies in all the churches accepted from the Federal government tuition for Indian pupils in home mission schools on Indian reservations. The government recognized its duty to educate these "wards of the nation," and it seemed more convenient to perform the obligation thru church schools, where they existed, than to set up real public schools. And, on the other side of the bargain, the Federal subsidy of $110 a year for each Indian child instructed was a very pleasing bit of income to cover into a home missionary treasury.

But twenty years ago the custom began to dig into Protestant consciences. The payment of public money to sectarian institutions confessedly violated a principle which the Protestant churches had theoretically approved from the beginning of the nation. And it was no matter of pride to any church to confess that it wasn't big enough to pay for its home mission work out of its own resources. So between the pressure of both considerations, home mission leaders of all Protestant denominations decided that consistency and Christian self-respect called for a different policy. They all bound themselves, therefore, to take no more money from the Government, and Protestant schools for the Indians have since been supported by Protestant cash only, given direct for the purpose as private benevolence.

To the Roman Catholic Church, every item of this reasoning applied quite as justly as to Protestantism. Ecclesiastical pride, if nothing else, ought to have prompted it to register the same renunciation of government aid. But unfortunately, Catholics did not take it that way at all. Congress greeted the change as a wise one, and if let alone would simply have wiped out at once all sectarian school support funds from the Indian appropriation bill. But priestly lobbyists took care not to let Congress alone. Every year they have had some plausible excuse ready on which to claim aid for as many of their schools as possible. And year after year the timidity of legislators makes them yield rather than confront the charge of religious bigotry that would be quickly disseminated among their Catholic constituents if they resisted.

Another Roman Catholic scheme is in process of enactment thru Congress and may get thru if the Protestants of the District of Columbia do not raise their voice in a mighty protest. The measure, known as H. R. 8348, seeks to enlarge the powers of the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia. It was introduced in January by Representative Johnson, of Kentucky, a Roman Catholic, and if passed, would give the judge of the Juvenile Court power to place any child in the District, without notice to parent or guardian, and without process, complaint or judicial hearing, in some Roman Catholic institution, which are not open to public inspection, and authorizes them to draw on the treasury of the United States for the maintenance of such child. The bill also provides that any person may, on mere information or belief, file in the Juvenile Court a petition charging any child with having improper or insufficient guardianship or control. Thus does the Church of Rome constantly aim to increase its support from the Federal treasure chest in order to advance its own sectarian ends.

Who rules the Nations?

"All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto Jehovah; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before Thee. For the kingdom is Jehovah's; and He is the ruler over the nations," Psa. 22: 27, 28.

Of all the Psalms there is none more remarkable than Psalm 22, entitled "A Cry of Anguish and a Song of Praise." No one will probably ever be able to name the sufferer whose experiences corresponded so startlingly with those of the crucified Saviour, or to understand how his wall could ascend so quickly from the very depths of desolation and despair to the sublimest heights of triumph and praise. The similarity that must have existed between the experiences of the unknown author—the superscription "A Psalm of David" in the original is so indefinite that it may mean either "by David," "to David," "belonging to David," or "referring to David"—is so striking that it is impossible to dismiss it as a mere coincidence. Nor is it at all unthinkable that He who resolved from all eternity to redeem fallen mankind thru His only begotten Son, and who revealed even the place where the new King of the Jews was to be born, as well as the work He was to do, should in some way have given a glimpse of the awful sufferings He was to undergo. There can be little doubt that the Psalm whose opening words occurred to Jesus in His terrible trial must also have been much in His mind at other times, and it would have been but natural if He had cherished it as a prophecy of His divine mission, His humiliation and His exaltation.

For it is important to remember that the Psalm as applied to Jesus Christ, not only brings out the depth of suffering thru which God's Anointed was obliged to pass, but also the joy and the triumph that was to come to Him as a result of His soul's travail. The suffering Servant of Jehovah was not only despised, and rejected of men; a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; His portion was also to be with the great, and His spoil divided with the strong, because He poured out His soul unto death and was numbered with the transgressors. In the midst of all the rise and fall of world-empires of which God's people were witnesses and victims it was not to be forgotten that finally and after all the kingdom is Jehovah's, and that He is the ruler of the nations. True, the appearance of things that were transpiring did not always seem to harmonize with such a statement, but that was because men looked only upon outward appearances. Those who knew nothing of or did not believe in the greatness, wisdom and power of Israel's God might trust to horses and chariots and cruel conquest and take pride in the vast empires and the glory of power. God's people, however, knew better. They trusted in the name of Jehovah their God, the scepter of whose kingdom was a scepter of equity; whose strength loveth justice and who established equity; whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and whose dominion endureth thruout all generations. Old Testament believers were thus fully prepared for the world-significance of the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Just at this time, when the ends of the earth have been stirred up by passion and strife, and all the kindreds of the nations are aflame with malice and falsehood, and as far removed as seems possible from worshipping before Jehovah, it is well to remember that all the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto Jehovah, and that, no matter how strongly appearances may seem to contradict the statement, the kingdom is Jehovah's, and He is the ruler of the nations. Wisdom and might are His, no less now than in the days of Daniel, and He changeth the times and the seasons, He removeth kings and setteth up kings. All the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing, and He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay His hand, or say unto Him what doest Thou? His power is everywhere apparent in Bible history, and the history of the world since Bible days only establishes more firmly the greatness of His wisdom and power. The nations of the earth may apparently disregard His laws and His will; they may seem to triumph in their opposition to His law and His will; falsehood, wickedness, injustice, mammonism may seem to win the day, as the nations rage and the peoples meditate a vain thing. But in spite of all this the Lord, our God, the Almighty, reigneth, and unto Him every knee shall bow and every tongue confess. We may not see clearly just how everything that now seems to go wrong can work out to His glory, and the things that seem to be most in line with His ways and thoughts may never come to pass, but nothing that can happen and nothing that fails to happen will ever be able to overthrow His dominion. His kingdom shall come and His will must be done, on earth as it is in heaven, and in some way best suitable to His world-wide and eternal plan of salvation all the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto Him, the kindreds of the nations shall worship before Him. For the kingdom is Jehovah's, and He is the ruler over the nations.

The Word of the Boyds

By MRS. FRANK LEE

II.

"No, I reckon you didn't, nor any other of the kin that's got horse sense. To think of that fool boy working like a nigger for nigh four years so's he could get to go to school, and then throwing the hull thing overboard."

"It ain't what I expected—"

"Taint what I expected, either. I knew he had the Boyd mulishness all right, but I didn't look for him to make it dumb foolishness quite so quick."

"Anyway, the Boyds that air perfessers don't bring shame on theirselves by bein' profane," snapped the visitor.

"Who's bein' profane? Me? Well, maybe what I said was a little unbecoming for a man in my profession, but I was that hot I wonder I didn't say somethin' stronger. I expect every Boyd of the lot of you has been sort of patting him on the back, and telling him he was like his gran'ther and the Wild-man."

This was so nearly a statement of fact that Darnell Boyd mouthed his quid in silence and spat into the fire.

"Well, we won't talk anymore about it. Osman talks of 'listing for a soldier, hey? And Mary Lizzie's 'most worried to death! You tell Osman to come over here and see me, will you?"

The speaker's power was at its height during the evening service, and the visitor, only half mollified, yet filled with reluctant admiration, delivered the message to Osman with this addition:

"Him talk about the Boyd setness—him! Jone Dunbar is as sot as any Boyd that ever was. When he gets after a sinner, ole Satan gotter le' go—yes, sir, he gotter le' go!"

The prospect of a severe tongue-lashing from his vigorously spoken relative gave Osman a certain dismal satisfaction. Mounted on Pete, he began his journey, his mother standing in the cabin door to see him off. "Don't jaw back to your uncle, whatever he says," she adjured him. "The Boyds air set, but they ain't sassy."

"I've done all the jawing back that I'm likely to do for one while," Osman answered as he rode hump-shouldered and with down-dropped head, the picture of despondency.

It was mid-afternoon when he entered the mountain basin that was the scene of his uncle's labors. A ring of hills surrounded it; at the northern side Slicker's creek poured down the rocky wall in a series of cascades which gave the basin its name of Roaring Hollow. Osman had scarcely passed beyond the louder roar of the falling water when he heard voices raised in jubilant song. Pete picked his way warily down the rocky path, and they soon came in sight of the singers, who were gathered on the creek bank.

At this point the stream had grown wider and slower of current. In its deepest part stood Rev. Jonah. The song ceased and the preacher's voice rose high and strong:

"In the name of the Father—and of the Son—and of the Holy Ghost! Amen."

A swift bending of the broad shoulders, a splash, and the hymn broke forth with renewed fervor, while eager hands were outstretched to greet the new disciple as he waded shoreward. The service continued until the last of the long line of candidates had received the rite of baptism.

The circuit rider once more raised his hand, this time in benediction, then waded quickly to the shore, holding out of his way a long black gown, and went to a near-by cabin, shaking hands with the congregation as he passed among them.

"How-dy, Osman, how-dy!" he greeted his nephew. "When did you come in? This is a great day for Zion."

"You-all certainly did have a big baptizing," said Osman gravely.

When the preacher emerged wearing his ordinary clothes he untied his horse, humming a gospel tune.

"They say it's been a dozen years or more since there's been such a stirring-up this a-way," said Osman.

"Yes. And it was needed—it was needed. Satan was hanging onto some of these poor folks like a—" with a twinkle at his nephew, "like a Boyd." Rev. Jonah introduced the subject nearest to the boy's heart with, "Well, Osman, what's this I hear of your going for a soldier? I thought you were dead set on getting an education."

"So I was," said Osman, sighing heavily. "And now I don't seem to have spunk enough to work or do anything else, so long's I see High Hill every trip and turn."

"Why don't you go back like a man and do what they tell you to?"

"Because I've passed my word, Uncle Jone. Cousin Darnell 'lowed he'd told you all about it."

Then the conflict began and raged. The raging was all on one side, however; the torrent of denunciation and persuasion that had overwhelmed Roaring Hollow dashed vainly against the rock of the Boyd setness. Osman listened humbly; he neither defended his course nor excused himself. He only said at the end, as at the beginning, "I've passed my word."

Out of breath, patience and temper the circuit rider at last paused. "Like all strong men he hated to be beaten; and to be beaten by something in itself so senseless angered him almost beyond endurance. But it was impossible not to pity Osman, and Rev. Jonah was half ashamed of his wrath, righteous tho he felt it to be."

"Going soldiering won't help you any, Osman," he said more kindly. "This thing is eating your very heart out. You look a dozen years older than when I saw you last."

"I feel like it had been a million years," said Osman dejectedly. "Do you mind when it was?"

He choked and put his hand before his eyes. The glow of the firelight seemed to kindle a spark in those of Rev. Jonah.

"Do I mind when it was? Surely I do—and where. It was the turn above the old sawmill. Now do you mind giving me your word there about something, Osman—do you mind that?"

Osman dropped his hand; the spark in his uncle's eyes lighted an answering flash in his own, and he sprang up trembling.

"Yes, you gave me you word—'twas about going to High Hill. 'Stick to it,' says I 'You bet I'll stick to it,' says you. And because of that word you gave me, Osman, this other isn't worth a rap."

"Uncle Jone!" cried the lad; "Uncle Jone!"

The circuit rider, too, was on his feet, and his strong hands grasped the youth's shoulders. "Look here, you've given two words, and one of them is square agin the other. In that case you're in honor bound to keep the first, and that's the one you gave me. You'll go back to High Hill, Osman, and you'll stick there—if you're a Boyd."

"And while we're about it," Rev. Jonah continued, gently releasing himself from a pair of strong young arms that suddenly embraced him, "you may as well give me your word now that when you make any other fool promise that will do neither yourself nor other folks any good, you'll use your common sense and break it."

"Oh, God bless you, Uncle Jone! I will, I will!"

* * * *

"What do you think?" said the principal, entering Miss Kemper's classroom and closing the door carefully after him. "Here's that stubborn young mule of a Boyd come back at last to apologize. Queer story—I'll tell it to you later. This way, Boyd." He reopened the door, and Osman stood in the presence of the teacher he had disobeyed.

"Good morning, Osman. Welcome back to High Hill," said Miss Kemper cordially.

"Yes'm. I've come—I've come to say—to tell—" Three generations caught him by the throat and left him dumb. Then Miss Kemper rose to the occasion.

"You want to tell me that you did not understand how necessary it is that we have order everywhere in school, and that there will be no trouble with you henceforth. No, Osman, I do not think there will be. We'll shake hands on it."

The hand he took opened for him once more the golden gate of opportunity. He entered it, and kept the Boyd word.

Perennials for the Busy Home-Maker

BY ADELINE THAYER THOMSON

Every woman who has even a wee bit of yard at her disposal should find a place in it for growing plants. Gardening will not only draw her out into God's life-giving air and sunshine, and afford unlimited pleasure, but many a disheartening day will be made brighter, and many a problem will be easier in the solving because of the cheering influence of beautiful flowers. Who has not felt the quickening spell of the sunny nasturtium, or the quieting peace of the fragrant violet, or been moved by the chaste purity of the stately white lily?

Among all classes of plants suitable for outdoor culture, hardy perennials are the best adapted for the busy home-maker. This is true because perennials succeed with far less attention than is required by annuals or tender bedding plants, and being hardy enough to withstand the cold of winter, they will thrive a lifetime after being once established.

Success with annual plants requires so much preparation of soil, and the growing seedlings demand so much transplanting, weeding and cultivating thru-out the summer, that many a busy woman deprives herself of growing plants because she feels that she cannot spare the necessary time from her household cares. The planting of perennials will not only demand a minimum amount of care, but the owner will be insured a glorious blossoming from early April until late fall—and, think of it, not only during one summer, but for an indefinite number of summers.

Perennials are enjoying a greater popularity to-day than they were accorded even in the days of yore, when no yard was considered complete without its garden or border of hardy plants; but while many of the old favorites are the same, there is a host of varieties for present-day planting unknown in our grandmothers' time.

Perennials possess as great a beauty as annuals, and have the advantage in a number of characteristics. They succeed in almost any condition of soil or location; they give permanent results; their flowering season begins six weeks earlier in the spring, and lasts later in the fall, and they multiply so quickly that it is easy to work up a large stock from a few varieties.

Unlike annuals, hardy plants do not blossom continually thruout the summer, but their varieties average a season of bloom from one to four weeks. This is an advantage in the minds of many, however, for perennials possess such a diversity of flowering times that one may have a constant succession of changing form and color.

It is more expensive, seemingly, to stock the yard with perennials than it is to buy annual flower seed, but when it is remembered that annuals die each fall and must be replanted each spring, it is not hard to realize that perennials not only are, after all, the cheaper plants in the end, but that they are time-savers as well.

Just a word as to the culture of perennials. To have the best success with hardy plants, the soil in which they are to be grown should be well spaded and enriched with old manure. This work is all-important, for it must be borne in mind that perennials remain in the same place year after year. The plants should be set about a foot apart, leaving room for them to increase easily. They, too, should be given a good dressing of manure, carefully spaded about their roots each spring, and a winter's protection of litter or leaves in the fall, while their roots should be divided every third or fourth season. These points are really the only ones to bear in mind to bring success, tho like all classes of growing things, they will respond quickly to added care and attention.

As a help to the amateur the following varieties of hardy stock are given as being, perhaps, the most satisfactory for the busy housewife:

Perennials for April blooming—Hepatica, Arabis albidia.

May—German iris, iberis, primrose, lemon-lily, peony, bleeding heart, columbine.

June—Delphinium, Job's tears, sweet William, foxglove (biennial, but self-sowing from year to year), Oriental poppy, valerian, pentstemon, pyrethrum, Shasta daisy, Canterbury bell (biennial), clove pinks.

July—Platycodon, coreopsis, gaillardia, hollyhock, monarda didyma, agrostemma, monkshood.

August—Stoksia, lobelia, phlox, liatris.

September—Aster, Japanese anemone, uliginosum.

October and November—Chrysanthemum.

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

Time

EMMA KOCH BOMHARD

What's the year made of
That comes and goes
Quietly, silently,
As the petals unfold of a rose?

The year's made of days
That are born and die
Quietly, silently,
As night veils the blue of the sky.

And the years and the days
Time bears on his wings
From the limitless realms,
Where the voice of Eternity sings,

Thence, too, my soul came
And Time stays not nor waits,
But quietly, lovingly,
Safe on his bosom he
Bears me back home to Eternity's gates.

On Trial for Her Faith

BY SUSIE BOUCHELLE WIGHT

The story of the early Christian martyrs is one which it is impossible to recall without a shudder. Those men and women, weak and shrinking from pain, who faced death, and worse than death, for the sake of the belief they held, have their own high place in the history of the Church. It matters little now whether their courage was actuated by the fear of eternal ruin in case of their apostasy, or by a love for their faith born of a strong and firm conviction of its truth. They kept it alive, and to-day the whole wide world is being blessed by the fruit of their loyalty and devotion. They were faithful unto death. Are we, their successors, being as faithful? Do we look consequences in the face when temptation comes?

A man of another race once came to visit America, a cultured, thoughtful man, but an unbeliever and what we call broadly, a heathen. He admitted the superiority of Christianity as a code of ethics, but cited other religions with ideals almost identical, and was outspoken in his doubt of the vital principle of our faith—the changed nature, the indwelling of a divine Spirit. It was all in vain that his friends took him to hear the finest preachers and threw about him the most beautiful ecclesiastical influences. He only shook his head and smiled. "There is nothing in it all," he said, except the strong religious instinct which is as much a part of human nature as love or friendship.

During his stay a terrible ordeal came to a young girl in the family in which he was visiting, an ordeal which involved humiliation and defeat. If ever revenge is justifiable it would seem to have been so in this case, so unprovoked and malicious were the circumstances. The keenness of the anguish of it passed after a time, as the keenness of sorrow and despair always does. When the foreigner was about to return to his home, he asked the girl to go with him for a quiet walk in her father's garden.

"I am sorry," said she timidly, "that your visit has been spoiled by—what came to me."

He was silent for a moment. "I am sorry," said he, "for your hurt—so sorry. But may I tell you something?" She lifted her tear-filled eyes to his face, and he went on:

"You have been on trial before me for the reality of what you profess to believe. I knew that you had confessed Christ, as your saying is. I thought of your Sunday-school class, your three days each week in the mission school, your singing in the choir; but none of these things counted at all when the trouble came beside the claims that Christians make for their religion. I said to myself, 'I'll watch her carefully now. If this faith of hers will keep her patient and sweet under trial, if it will uphold her in defeat, if it will plead against the impulse for revenge, I shall know that it is something more than human will and nature, for she is just a weak young girl. She has not had the age or the experience that would make her able to reason out things for herself, and get at the science and philosophy of it all—she has nothing but her religion to fall back on.'"

The girl covered her face with her hands, remembering only the weakness of the sobbing and crying hours, but the stranger removed them gently. "Look up," said he, "and do not be ashamed of anything. I am convinced of the truth of what you believe—not by your creed or your churches, but by the way a young girl can answer, all unknowing it, the arraignment of her faith."

The man went back to his own country and his own people, and in after years his Christian work brought life and light to hundreds in his native land. But the girl in America just grew into busy womanhood in a life filled with the simple, everyday cares of a wife and mother; and tho she treasured his words in her memory, neither she nor the world ever realized how much she had done for the stranger within the gates.

Every day each one of us is on trial for the faith he holds dear. And every trial well met means strength and faith and courage for some other struggle. If it was an awful thought that a failure in loyalty would cause the loss of a martyr's soul, is it less appalling that your defection or mine may cause the loss of the living faith to some one else—that living faith which means a saved life?

Day by Day

"How is Mr. Ellis?" asked one of the ladies at the missionary society.

"He's getting well rapidly," a cousin answered.

"Did they take some of Mrs. Ellis' skin for covering the burned surface? I thought it was such a brave act for her to offer it," gushed a member. "She would have given it without flinching."

"That's right," affirmed another, "no sacrifice would have been too great for Bruce."

"Excepting," said the cousin, dryly, "letting him lie on the parlor couch. I'm not trying to be catty and say mean things about Nell; but it is a fact that she would cheerfully die for Bruce, and believe she was expressing her love for him by her sacrifice, but in the sixteen years of their married life, she hasn't loved him enough to sacrifice her heaps of cushions and the upholstering of the parlor couch. Bruce would no more dare to throw himself on that couch in his work clothes than a tramp on the roads would. Nell hasn't given him any more rights to comfort and freedom from restraint in his own home than that same tramp. I've seen him all humped up in a rocking chair asleep after dinner, waiting for the team to be rested enough for the field."

"I'm perfectly certain I couldn't let my husband loose in the parlor when he comes in from the fields," asserted a stern faced woman. "There's no call to turn everything in the house over to the men; is there, Grandma?" she appealed to an elderly lady who had taken no part in the conversation.

"Some things a woman ought not to stand," Grandma said, slowly; "carelessness in tracking in dirt from the barnyard and lots to make unnecessary work with no corresponding benefit to the husband is a fit subject for rebellion; but it seems to me a woman has a good chance of winning jewels for her own crown by putting up daily with things which annoy her but which add to the comfort or satisfaction of her husband, as by doing some great deed of courage. If Nell made up her mind to Bruce resting on the parlor couch in his work clothes, and will think of the comfort it is to him, she will get pleasure herself. She might as well smile tenderly at his foibles before death as after death. A woman who groused every day of her life because her husband would put his slippers by the fireplace in the sitting room, wouldn't let them be moved after the poor man died. But, mind you, girls; I'm talking about husbands. It may be best to pick up after a husband who has not been trained to pick up after himself; it may be wise to fold up the papers he drops on the floor, to hang up his clothes, and put in his collar buttons, but your sons should be taught to wait on themselves and on their mothers. A house which isn't for the comfort of the family isn't a home; the mother's duty to herself, to her sons and their future wives is to teach her sons the care of a house—to have them 'housebroke.'"

"I think," admitted the cousin, "that since Nell has come so near to losing Bruce, she will let him lie on the parlor couch with his boots on if he likes."

"And Bruce will put the cushions carefully away, throw a cover over the couch, and adore Nell for making him comfortable," Grandma said, positively.—Wallaces' Farmer.

Denominational

South Illinois District

New Orleans, La.

On Monday, April 10th, the brotherhood chapters of this city assembled at St. Matthew's Church for a joint prayer meeting. The attendance was very good, and the songs were sung with a vim seldom found in men's meetings.

Rev. Schweickhardt had charge and introduced Rev. Becker, who spoke on Acts 9: 11, "Behold he prayeth." He dwelt at length on the right kind of praying, drawing a distinction between real prayer, i. e. a heart to heart conversation with God, a pouring out of the soul to its Maker, and the prayer usually indulged in, the request for help and favors, which he designated pure and simple "begging." "No man in this city would refuse an answer to anybody, if questioned in a civil manner, and so our heavenly Father will never refuse an answer to our conversation with Him."

Rev. Becker was followed by Mr. Frank Brightsen, a member of Salem Chapter, who compared every Christian with a salesman, who tries to dispose of his goods. Our failure to "deliver the goods" was due often to selfishness and pride, which caused us to ignore or slight another brother, and in turn would make him timid and retiring, thus depriving him of the opportunity to make advances to other brethren. He therefore advocated the giving of the "glad hand" to our fellow-men. Others, he said, lacked the proper faith in the goods they had to sell, and this acted as a hindrance to make a sale. Christians must have absolute faith in the goods they have to offer others and in having this faith they are able to make the proper claims, to press the merits of their article, and to dispose of it to their customer.

Rev. E. Kockritz led a round-table talk, during which the following questions were propounded and answered by the men: "What specific service could laymen render the Church?" "What advantage can the brotherhood movement bring to our Evangelical Church?" "What should be the chief aim of every Brotherhood?" "What influence should the Brotherhood exert upon its members?" "Upon the men and boys of the Parish congregation?" "Why are apparently so many men not interested in religious work?" "What general 'religious work' can a Brotherhood, or its members, undertake?"

This last question resulted in the appointment of two pastors and two laymen for the purpose of taking up Bible reading in two of our car-barns, where conductors and motormen lounge around waiting for their turn at the street cars.

It also resulted in the appointment of a committee for the purpose of ascertaining the feasibility and advisability of entering the lower district of our city, for the purpose of organizing another Evangelical congregation.

Of all the Brotherhood prayer meetings ever attended by the writer, this one appears to have been the most inspiring and uplifting, and hopes are held forth that it may result in much good work in our community for the good of the Evangelical Church.

GES.

Indiana District

Dayton

Sunday, March 26th, 1916, was a joyful day for St. Paul's Evangelical Congregation at Dayton, Ky., for on that date it dedicated its new Sunday-school auditorium to the service of the triune God. For years this congregation has longed for just such an edifice as it now possesses. Its aim is to have an entirely new church within a few years, but the congregation is not strong enough to finish the entire building at once. So it did the next best thing. The church was built so that outwardly it looks complete. The Sunday-school auditorium is the basement, but in reality it is not a basement. It is but four feet underground and about eight feet overground. This basement is eighty feet in length and forty feet in width having a seating capacity of about 400. It is finished and equipped in a beautiful style and furnished with all modern conveniences. It has among other things a collapsible stage and may in a moment be transformed from a Sunday-school room into the best auditorium in our little city of 11,000 or more inhabitants. The main church auditorium remains unfinished. It would cost approximately $3,500 to finish this second auditorium

Concluded on Page 6

"I will make you Fishers of Men"

Loyalty and Devotion to Christ and His Church in the small Parish. Florida also offers many Opportunities for aggressive Mission Work

Pioneering in Idaho

The writer has been requested to contribute something on Idaho to the Herald. I am glad to accede to this request for the good of the cause. I always enjoyed mission work, and took special pleasure in bringing the word of God to such as were unable to hear it thru regular channels.

In size Idaho is not among the smallest states of the Union, but in population it is far behind. There are no large cities, and Boise, with 18,000 inhabitants is the largest. Little can be noticed of business, and progress is unknown. Since the State has gone "dry" it has the appearance of a deserted mining camp. Since the days of the pioneers, when rich gold "finds" were made in the "Boise Basin," Germans have settled here, as they have done in all other parts of the world. This influx of Germans has never ceased entirely. But altho those first pioneers are not to be considered in connection with a German congregation, those of the later generation are, and they made it possible that an Evangelical congregation could be organized nearly two years ago.

St. Paul's Evangelical Church in Boise, the only one here, is very small. During the past year there has been no increase in the number of members. No matter how carefully I look I can not find more than twenty voting members on my list.

The few that joined last year hardly filled the gaps caused by those who died or moved away. But the Lord not only counts, but also weighs, and so we will also turn from numbers to weight. The attendance of the services is rightly considered the standard of spiritual life, and of the few faithful ones belonging to my charge, in city and country, rather scattered, my average attendance was twenty in the morning services. But spiritual life may also be measured by the sacrifices brought by the Christian. A selfish man can never be a live member of God's Church, where every member considers first the needs of his brother. And when a congregation thinks only of itself, and ignores the requirements in the Lord's work in general, it is a safe sign of a diseased condition of their spiritual life. Our small number of active members, without ever being urged, has raised the pastor's salary of $300.00 without any trouble and paid every cent of it promptly. The running expenses of over $150.00 were also contributed and paid.

In addition this congregation remembered its debt to the Synod, and contributed $60 towards benevolences and for the Jubilee Offering, altho it has known the Synod only for the past eighteen months. And this was not all. Our members do not belong to that class of demagogues who contend that ammunition manufacturers ought to be encouraged in their activity in every way, but on the contrary, they belong to the "hyphenated" class, anxious to heal the wounds caused by American ammunition, and desirous of wiping out the shame brought on America by its "official neutrality," by contributing, as far as lies in their power, towards this end. For this purpose the entire German population, Protestant, Catholic and unbelievers, were enlisted, and with a wonderful result. Since July 1915 the Aid Society, organized thru the efforts of our members, could report receipts to the amount of over $700.00, and the undersigned, as president of this society, was enabled to forward to the treasury of the German and Austro-Hungarian Red Cross Society the sum of $665.00. In addition to this all kinds of clothing, blankets and handwork was given and three large cases of such were forwarded to the prisoners of war in Siberia via San Francisco.

This activity in the interest of the Red Cross brings to my mind a mission field which has remained untouched to date, viz: Caldwell, in Canyon County. It is situated thirty miles from here and can be reached by means of the Belt Railway, either thru Boise valley or over the "Bench." At least six families may be found there scattered thruout the town and country. For the time being we can use the town hall for our services. This place is served twice a month from here. After morning services in Boise the pastor rushes thru a light lunch and then hurries to the electric railway. He can consider himself lucky if he still finds a vacant seat in the overloaded "car," as this is the means by which many church attendants from English churches reach their suburban homes. The ride thru the winter landscape is without interest. After a ride of forty-five minutes the three-peaked "Squaw Butte" is seen in the distance, its slopes surrounded by the famous groves of peach and apricot trees. Walnuts and almond also abound. After crossing the Boise river in a canyon the electric line lands you at your destination in a few minutes. For several squares you must carry the unavoidable hand-satchel, containing the robe, song book and Bible, until you reach the hall which serves as our meeting place. While it is not very pretty, it serves the purpose. It contains benches, and in front there is a raised platform, a desk and chairs. The hall is clean and warm, there is no musical instrument, but vigorously the congregation joins in the wellknown choral singing. The service comes to an end, and after entering orders for Evangelical Year Books, a few German text books for the children, and arranging for eventual official duties, the journey home is begun. This time we complete the belt ride thru the Snake River valley, and from Nampa, a railway center, over the "Bench" back to Boise. Night has already settled over us, but in the distance the snowcapped Boise mountains still reflect the rays of the sinking sun. At the foot of these mountains, far up in town, is the home of the mission worker, who hurries there to rest from his day's labors.

E. G. Albert, GES. Tr.

Home Mission Work in Florida

For the past few years repeated requests for the establishment of missions in various parts of Florida have reached the Mission board of the Indiana District. True, Pastor E. Bratzel has been doing mission work in Fort Lauderdale and Miami for the last two years, but otherwise no serious effort has been made. As it was impossible to ascertain all about the conditions there thru correspondence, the writer was instructed to visit this state and gather all the information possible. This trip, lasting twenty-five days, in November and December last, covered some 3,000 miles.

Florida, measuring about 520 miles from Jacksonville to Key West, and having an average width of 100 miles, offers unlimited opportunities. There is no state in the Union which is praised more highly for its beauty and condemned more soundly for its worthlessness. Most of this criticism comes from people who have visited one or the other place for a short time, and are influenced by the impression thus gained, without going any deeper into the merits or demerits of the matter. As a rule persons once settled in Florida never leave it again. If he does it is because he has invested every cent he had in some land from which he expected to obtain early results. If this expectation comes to naught on account of some unforeseen reasons, he is simply compelled to return home. Any one taking the precaution to provide for at least one year will seldom ever leave again.

The greatest mistake people make is to purchase land without ever having seen it, something which occurs in the North. But hundreds of people will fall for the catchy circulars sent out by swindling land agents, make their payments, and when the time comes to inspect their purchase, find that they have either bought a portion of a desert, or are compelled to don a rubber suit in order to go over their land, as it is located in a swamp. When he gets home Florida has to take the blame, which rightly belongs to no one but himself.

Florida has vast stretches of land which are absolutely worthless, but it also has a vastly greater area of fertile farm land of the very best kind. The reclamation work undertaken by the United States and the State in the Everglades has wrought some wonderful changes for the better. The surface of Okeechobee Lake has already fallen considerably, and when the locks to the unfinished canals will have been completed, which will be in about two years, thousands of people who now have "claims," will be able to settle down there.

Others prefer to cultivate hilly and undulating land, and such is found plentifully in the central part of the State. The ground is rich and fertile. There

Concluded on page 6

Picked up by the Way

Interesting Items gleaned from many Sources

The number of immigrants who came to this country via the port of New York in the year 1915 was only 95,467—about one-tenth of the number who came in the year preceding the war.

The 35,000 employes of the International Harvester Company are to become co-partners with their employers thru the privilege of purchasing profit-sharing certificates. These may be paid for in small monthly installments.

"New York Now Biggest of Cities," declares a newspaper headline. The figures read: Greater London, population 7,251,358; Greater New York (including "the Westchester and New Jersey suburbs"), 7,383,871. Another newspaper statement indicating New York's size is that during a recent snowstorm 42,000 men got jobs in clearing the streets.

Don Simon Patino, of Oruro, Bolivia, is called the Tin King of the world. Beginning as a store-keeper, he developed the tin industry of his country until now he owns a line of steamships to carry his tin and has made Bolivia's exports of that metal amount to five times as much as those of all other metals—and Bolivia, it will be remembered, has for centuries been a great mining country.

Many experiments in lightening heavy castings in various machines, including motor cars, by the use of aluminum, must await the end of the war, apparently, on account of the great rise in the price of that metal. Within a few months aluminum has risen from 20 cents a pound to 55 cents. In part, this increase is ascribed to the use of aluminum in the percussion caps and time fuses of shrapnel and other high explosive shells.

In 1907, when typewriting contests were instituted in New York City, Miss Rose Fritz won with a speed of 87 words a minute for one hour's writing. This year she wrote 129 words per minute for an hour; but another contestant, Miss Owen, exceeded even this speed, writing 136 words a minute. During the hour Miss Owen struck the keys 39,285 times—a fraction under eleven a second—and made only forty-two mistakes. Let any one try to tap a pencil on a sheet of paper eleven times a second, and he will appreciate the dexterity of the champion typist.

The highest price ever paid by any magazine for a serial, according to Miss Jeanette Gilder, writing in the New York Sun, was that given to Messrs. Nicolay and Hay for their "Life of Lincoln," by the Century Magazine. "Roswell Smith, the president of the Century Company," she says, "first offered $25,000. Hay and Nicolay looked at each other 'in wild surmise.' Mr. Smith took the exchange of glances to mean dissatisfaction. He left the room, walked up and down outside tearing bits of paper to fragments, then came back and offered $50,000. The offer was at once accepted."

The little girl with a taste for learned words formerly lived in Boston. With the shifting of the center of population, she seems to have migrated to Chicago, to judge by this story in a Chicago paper: "A little Chicago girl was crying. 'What's the matter, Noreen?' asked her father. 'I fell and bumped my patella,' she replied. Father was sympathetic. 'Poor little girl!' he said, and proceeded, with the best intentions, to examine her elbow. Noreen broke away. 'Huh!' she sobbed. 'I said my patella! That isn't my elbow. My elbow is my great sesamoid.' Father went for a dictionary."

Has any other invalid in the world a record like Mollie Flancher's? For half a century she has been lying day after day and year after year in her bed in her home in Brooklyn as the result of an accident when she was seventeen. She has recently celebrated the golden jubilee of her invalidism, and among the testimonials she received was a letter of sympathy from President Wilson. A curious fact about Miss Flancher's illness is that formerly remarkable psychic powers, which were widely discussed in scientific circles, were attributed to her. These powers of "mind-reading" have now disappeared. Her optimism and her humor remain, however, and she "reads everything in the papers except the war news."

William Shakspeare, Bard, 1564—1616

Tho Shakspeare never aims to teach, his Characters all point deep moral Lessons.

His language is sometimes uncouth but never unclean

FOR THE EVANGELICAL HERALD BY PASTOR THEOPHILE HAAS, BREESE, ILL.

II.

One must necessarily be very careful before passing any definite judgment on Shakspeare's character and convictions. From his works, of course, some claim to be able to read that he was a skeptic, for he shows no interest in the theological controversies of his day. Others prove that he was utterly unpatriotic, for he is untouched by the great political awakening of his country. Words like "to die is to go we know not whither" have, we are told, palpably shown that he was a disbeliever in immortality; if he had any faith at all, again, we hear, it cannot be ascertained whether it was a Catholic or Protestant.

that shall he also reap," may be grasped. The fact of man's innate consciousness of his moral responsibility is not to be considered lightly and it finds expression in some of the poet's most monumental dramatic characters.

It would be preposterous, however, to assert that Shakspeare's dramas were rooted in specifically Christian conception or even to put him down as an advocate of Protestant confessionism. He was far from being to Protestant England what Dante was to the Catholic Church of the Middle Ages. He is no religious poet like Milton and it would be vain to seek in him the teaching of any particular Protestant dogmas.

King Lear disinherits Cordelia for what seemed lack of filial love. Act I. Scene I. 2341

The folly of this method of infallible interpretation must be apparent, tho on the other hand while gathering too little, it cautions us not to infer too much. In the first place, Shakspeare never sets himself to the task of teaching, something much more potent in writers like Wordsworth or Browning. Moreover, his chief purpose being to please, the very nature of dramatic poetry with its portrayal of character and action leading to a crisis necessarily requires the author himself to remain in the background. Dramatic productions, if truly excellent, will plainly be impersonal and objective.

Shakspeare, however, was likewise too close and accurate an observer of human nature to fail to detect the necessary interrelation between pleasure and justice or between the virtuous and the beautiful. This connection is not always chosen in his works, just as it is not always manifest in life with its painful contrasts and collisions. But so much at least: sin and vice are generally represented to be what they are, inherently ugly and shocking, and they are never permitted to triumph in the end. It was left to later ages to cast over them the spell of attractiveness.

Deeply Religious that specifically Christian

In Shakspeare the influence of the Reformation with its greatest gift, the open Bible, can surely be found. He was certainly familiar with Tyndale's translation and later with the Authorized Version appearing in 1611. He sometimes refers to Scriptural words and facts, but it might be too much to claim that he intentionally alludes to such distinctly Protestant doctrines as the justification by faith, or the forgiveness of sins from grace alone with the peace that surpasses all understanding. The best of his dramas are intensely moral; they had something of the genuine Biblical realism and from some of them the solemn truth of such sayings as: "Whatsoever a man soweth,

But his rigid insistence thru plastic examples open the value and the power of the human conscience, his stern emphasis upon man's moral responsibility and the lofty manner in which he extols the good and condemns the bad will forever secure for him the highest position as a preeminently ethical teacher. He instructs and incites, he warns and strikes, not by precept and dogma, but by life and example, life itself with its inflexible laws and inevitable developments being both judge and judgment. And therein he indubitably has grasped something of the substance of all true religion: first example, then precept; first life and then words, or better: the example is the precept and life is the message.

His Characters emphasize righteousness

Where in the modern drama, following as it does almost exclusively the theory of a "beyond all good and evil," is there found anything to even approach Shakspeare's profound consciousness of the bitter antagonism between light and darkness or his acute valuation of God's justice and man's iniquity? Man's sin and guilt are the greatest of evils. He is responsible for them and therefore evidently also for his fate. The old law of necessity, once so nobly applied in Greece, now often so degradedly applied, is hardly discernible. Yes, where there is no watching and praying, to use the Christian expression, where inordinate selfishness and self-conceit are allowed to breed sin and guilt they even gradually and irreparably ensnare and enslave the good in man, thus rendering it utterly fruitless. Meanness, baseness, falseness, wickedness are suicidal. That devil in human form, Iago, must die a miserable death; others of unscrupulous depravity, Richard III., King Claudius, Queen Gertrude or Macbeth with his wife, are without rest or peace, tortured by the pangs of a guilty conscience and must end as it was fit and just. There is scarcely any more powerful, more terrible commentary to the condemnation of a wicked conscience or to such Scriptural sayings as Ps. 73:18a, 19, or as "whose end shall be according to their works," than that afforded by some of Shakspeare's most famous characters. He was rude and coarse at times in his faithful portrayal of contemporaneous life. But he would have utterly abhorred anything like the theory of "sin's in the blood," so prevalent, alas, on the stage to-day, and followed to disgust in the shameful days of the Restoration.

A few short remarks on some of Shakspeare's characters will suffice to show the author's deep and earnest treatment of moral problems. There are Lady Macbeth and her husband, embodiments of a worldly, sinful ambition. Honored at first, called upon by the sinister voice from below, they cast away the best they had, love, peace and happiness, and deliberately embark upon a course that must lead them to the throne. Coldly, shrewdly, cruelly calculating they proceed to their aim, finally attaining it by means of deceit and murder. But Macbeth has found his hell; his worse half in vain attempts to strengthen him. She too must soon break down, even before her husband. They had murdered sleep, conjured up all the evil spirits and ghosts from the awful deep; they are tortured in bloody visions, are shattered and tottering in the innermost recesses of their soul, until finally death comes almost as sweetness compared to the hell they had so ruthlessly sown and reaped.

Or there is Richard III., planning and plotting in his stubborn, colossal grandeur. Brave, shrewd, virile; but false, cruel, diabolically determined in carrying out his work of destruction. He has thrown himself into the arms of the tyrant whose aim is man's annihilation. It is the curse of the King's bloody crimes that they constantly bring forth new sins and guilt. At last there remains no possibility of return to a better life. His conscience blasts his soul; he feels his wretched helplessness, but alas too late. The death sought and found in the midst of his conquering enemies merely ends a life which had long been dead to everything ennobling and vivifying in its influence.

Lear, the king, is no true king, no man that can do things at all. He is full of whims, unjust and obstinate, losing control over himself—how will he be able to rule and must learn the solemn lesson that self-conquest is the greatest of victories. It is plain enough to every diligent reader of the Bible how this thought can be used in connection with many a Christian admonition.

Or there is a later and greater citizen of the great Republic: Anthony, extraordinarily gifted, honored as orator, soldier, statesman. He might have been happy with his virtuous Octavia, might have gained imperishable fame as one of his country's most illustrious benefactors. But the great soldier lacks the power of self-control, he casts himself into the arms of the beautiful but voluptuous Cleopatra, he becomes the slave of his sensual passions, and it is again too late, with the winds already smiting against the house about to fall, that the poor debauchee lugubriously exclaims: "I followed that I blush to look upon, my very hairs do mutiny."—And what a picture of that intoxicating enchantress, the "false spell of Egypt," the old "serpent of the Nile," the object of his love, and the author of his ruin "who makes hungry where most she satisfies."

To Hamlet the world is an "unweeded garden," possessed by things "rank and gross in nature" because the foul lust of a faithless mother calling "virtue hypocrite" and making "sweet religion a rhapsody of words," has made it so to his flaming indignation.

He pictures Woman at her best

But there is also that wonderful gallery of female beauty and loveliness, those faces so radiant in virtue and patience, in chastity and constancy, in fidelity, forbearance and forgiveness. The explanation of their transcendent beauty has engaged writers like Heine and Mrs. Jameson and the constant recurrence of others to-day to the pleasant task of elucidating the charms of Shakspeare's heroines proves to what extent these characters have been able to captivate the artistic interest. There is no denial that in the delineation of these women presented as patterns of moral strength and beauty the highest excellence of the master's art is to be sought. The nature of the strength and beauty exemplified is such as to render Ruskin's strong claim, that, broadly speaking, Shakspeare "has no heroes, he has only heroines," fully comprehensible.

"The heroes all more or less stand in flawed strength and fall by their vanities." The heroines "are all faultless, conceived in the highest heroic type of humanity." This if anything speaks volumes for the high importance of Shakspeare as a moral teacher. He cannot portray the finest of his women as vicious, impure and faithless, and this fact alone would seem to dispel the thought that he was immoral or irreligious. The greatest men "have never been wholly so."

The wellknown examples of youthful love, a love often stronger than death, in all its days of gladness and of sadness, in all its sweetness, purity and constancy, the examples of Ophelia, Perdita, Juliet, Portia, Viola and Rosalind, have all been beautifully dwelt upon again and again. Maidens all, good, faithful, virtuous, in splendor undefiled. And yet still more, if possible, there shines forth the lofty beauty of Imogen's and Desdemona's conjugal fidelity. Like the sensitive plant, drooping at the mere touch of the hand, the pure, artless, innocent victim of Othello's gruesome suspicion shrinks back in the spotless chastity at the mere mention by her husband of the word which of all she has ever heard must strike her delicate refinement as the most shameful and abominable.

Imogen, surrounded by meanness and falseness, remains true to her ideal. No one can cause her to cast aside that love towards her husband which thinketh no evil. He is hers and she is his. Good, tender, truthful, forgiving, she shows the redeeming qualities of the eternal feminine to perfection, preserving her unshakable faith and unwavering fidelity up to the victorious issue.

There is no need to refer to the solemn warning conveyed by the example of those "two pernicious daughters," Goneril and Regan, nor to the powerful stimulus to noble words and deeds given by such patterns of filial love as Cordelia, of sisterly love as Isabella, or of motherly love as Volumnia. In short Shakspeare is so rich in characters showing that sin is the fatal course to ruin, and in others no less, that virtue is beauty and felicity.

For this reason as much as for his strictly artistic excellence, it has never been possible to dethrone the Olympian. Efforts to at least belittle him have been made in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. They are being repeated to-day by a morbid modern naturalism and symbolism. In vain: like the other three of the greatest, Homer, Dante and Goethe, he will remain. He is "an ever-enduring man," as Coleridge said of Wordsworth. And this is plain enough. For the best, the truly imperishable in him, rests upon eternal realities. Nothing human was strange to him; humanity in all its aspects had his sympathy. He was universal in thought as in the wonderful command of his mother tongue. Intensely human as he was, with the gift of the most accurate observation and of the keenest psychological analysis, the divine had to be on his program. Of course this was not primarily so; but it was found in the laws that govern our human affairs and shape our ends.

Much, of course, in his works will shock present day conventionalism. But it is faithful to the rude and rough manners of that youthful, boisterous period in which he lived. Nor is all of his work to be considered of equal merit. Some of his earlier comedies and those blood and thunder stories of the Titus Andronicus type will hardly ever claim much more than the interest of the literary student.

But the most beautiful in Shakspeare is, generally speaking, also his best in moral wholesomeness. It surely has the elevating tendency. It was written for all the world, for all ages. It is true to life and above all to the best in life: to life's solemn tasks, lessons, warnings. This best in him throws out a trumpet call, as it were, to the most serious battle, to a fight for the ethical and truly personal, and thereby for the true eternal values. Reading and seeing Shakspeare, so grossly, alas, neglected to-day, is like being appealed to in the estimate of the writer, by another "He who has ears to hear and eyes to see let him hear and see." Yes, our true Poet thus becomes a Prophet. He "has in him an infinitude and communicates it to others." It is with such a thought in mind that some have termed Shakspeare's works as second only to the Bible.

Indiana District

Continued from Page 4

of the church. The church is located on Fourth Ave. in the heart of the city on a lot 110 feet in depth and 96 feet in width. The cost of the building so far as it is completed now is a little over $13,000, of this sum over $8,500 is already paid.

Possibly it would be of interest to many to state that the St. Paul's church of Dayton has been erected in the face of many difficulties. The church was organized in 1863. Thru all these years its members have worshipped in a little frame edifice located in the flood section of our little city. In 1913 that building was inundated to the depth of about 11 feet. Handicapped by its location it lost members from time to time. The present pastor came here from Eden Seminary in St. Louis in 1912. He preached his first sermon and quite a few more after that to about twenty-five or thirty people. Dayton people have never asked for support from the Mission Board. They have worked hard. We now have a membership of 138 instead of thirty-five a few years ago. We have a church attendance ranging between 125 and 150. We have a Sunday-school of 233 members including an Adult Bible Class of fifty-four. The young people's society numbers about forty-five, the Ladies' Aid forty-seven, the Brotherhood, hardly two weeks old, numbers thirty, and the future looks bright.

The services on Dedication day were very well attended. The usual farewell service was held at the old church. When the members arrived at the new church Mr. F. Lange, a charter member of the congregation rang the old bell in the new place. The key was turned over to the Pastor by the President of the church, Mr. F. C. Riebel, since the church Board were their own contractors. The Pastor, Rev. F. G. Brune then performed the dedicatory ceremony. Rev. H. S. Von Rague of Middletown, O., delivered the sermon in the morning in the English language. At the afternoon service Rev. Emigholz of Alexandria, Ky., a former pastor of this church delivered the English sermon and Rev. A. E. Viehe of Cincinnati, O., the German sermon. At the evening service Rev. Wm. F. Mehl of Louisville addressed a large audience on Sunday-school work. The two choirs of the church and an orchestra and quartet of the local Baptist church as well as several other soloists rendered the special music.

St. Paul's of Dayton is happy, for it has tried, and God has given success. G. B.

Home Mission Work in Florida

Continued from Page 4

is a colony of German farmers, consisting of a large number of families, near Lowell. Pastor H. Niedernhoefer went with them in order to find healthful and remunerative work for his own sons. It is wonderful to see the results obtained by these people. They raise cattle and hogs; produce corn, oats, potatoes, sweet potatoes, tomatoes, lettuce, cabbage, beans, peanuts, etc. They would never think of leaving this land, but on the contrary, their number is added to continually, as there is plenty of good land.

Upon my arrival Pastor Niedernhoefer called the people together for a service and I was privileged to preach to them. After the services they decided to build a modest little church and this building is now about completed. Lowell has a great future. Ocala, a town of 6,000 inhabitants is only twelve miles from Lowell, and Gainesville, a University town with 12,000 population is thirty miles away. Both of these cities are laid out in modern style. Germans are found here also, and altho there are not sufficient to organize an independent congregation, they have been embodied in one parish and are served by the Rev. Niedernhoefer.

Jacksonville is a rapidly growing city of 80,000 inhabitants, of whom about ninety percent are said to be negroes. There are a number of beautiful English churches, but not one German, not even a German Catholic church. The writer believes that there are enough Germans here to start an independent congregation.

Pastor Schulz, who has from time to time been occupied with farming as per his physician's instructions, has taken up his calling again and is working very successfully in Jacksonville since March 1. Many who had left their old German home five and more years ago were grateful when the writer delivered the first German sermon they heard in this country.

In Tampa, a city of 68,000 population, a thoro survey was also made. The negro population is very strong here also, and there are many churches, but among the white residents there are also many Germans who have a desire for an Evangelical congregation. For the past eighteen years the Missouri Synod has supported a congregation which now numbers

Continued on Page 8

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

May 14, 1916. Jubilate Sunday

Official Call

Seventh National Convention of the Evangelical League, Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 15 to 20, 1916

To all District Leagues of the Evangelical League and all Young People of our Churches

Dear Friends and Co-workers:

The seventh bi-ennial national convention of the Evangelical League will be held in the city of Cleveland, O., as the guests of the thirteen Young People's Societies of our Evangelical congregations of that city, beginning Tuesday, August 15, and ending Sunday, August 20. With our convention will be combined the first national convention of Evangelical Sunday-schools.

Cleveland has a peculiar charm for our young people's work, since it was in this city that much of the work outlining the federation of our societies was done and the preliminary conference held in the year 1903. Thus we are to assemble on historic ground, and, God willing, are to have the pleasure of personally meeting Rev. Wm. Behrendt, pastor emeritus, who may be considered the father of the young people's organization in our Church.

All District Leagues will kindly observe Article VIII, Sec. 2, of the constitution of the Evangelical League, providing for this convention, as also Article V., Sec. 1, which grants to each District League the right to send one (1) official delegate for each 200 members in the local Young People's Societies affiliating, or fraction thereof exceeding 100 members; providing, however, that each District League is entitled to at least one delegate if the total membership of the societies affiliating is not 200. Sections 3 and 4 of this article are also important, providing that these official delegates shall constitute the voting body at the convention, and that the traveling expenses of all official delegates shall be apportioned, as is the custom at our synodical conferences and gatherings.

Aside from the above official delegates as many visitors from local Young People's Societies and District Leagues may attend this convention as desire to come. These visitors will be accorded the same privileges as the official delegates except the right to vote at the business sessions. These visitors are expected to bear their own traveling expenses and do not enter into the apportionment of the traveling expense of official delegates. (Art. V., Sec. 5.)

Both official delegates and visitors must pay a registration fee of $1.00 per person upon arrival at the convention, only those paying this registration fee to be entitled to the courtesy of the entertaining societies, namely: board and lodging from Tuesday afternoon to Sunday evening, inclusive, official badge, program, and such other advantages as will be provided by our friends at Cleveland.

The convention proper will mark an advance in the work of our young people and the conduct of our conventions. The morning sessions are set apart for Bible study, an address and the transaction of all business.

On three afternoons there will be four simultaneous conferences held at adjacent churches. One afternoon offers special conferences for our Sunday-school workers, the second conferences for the officers and members of our Y. P. S. and for pastors, while the third afternoon will be spent in considering four vital subjects relating to the work of the church.

Three week-day evenings will be given over to mass convention meetings, with German and English addresses by those who have messages for us. The Sunday evening meeting will be the farewell meeting.

Part of one afternoon will be spent at one of the city parks with a twilight service in the open, while Saturday will be spent at one of the beautiful resorts on Lake Erie and provide for a pleasant ride on the lake.

Sunday morning all delegates and visitors will attend services with their hosts, convention visitors occupying the pulpits at our churches and addressing the Sunday-schools. The afternoon of Sunday is left free for our convention family to enjoy as each one sees fit.

Our young people at Cleveland are alive to their opportunity and awake to their duty. We shall find everything in readiness upon our arrival and shall be well taken care of at this, the seventh national convention, which will open with the service on Tuesday evening, August 15.

May the great Captain of our salvation, Jesus Christ, bless the young people of our Church as they prepare to attend this convention, as also the young people of Cleveland as they prepare to entertain us.

Sincerely,

Wm. N. Dresel,
President Evangelical League.

Evansville, Ind., April 10, 1916.

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

CHRIST'S WISHES

- M. May 8. To follow Him. Matt. 4: 18-23.
- T. May 9. To love Him. John 21: 15-17.
- W. May 10. To witness for Him. Matt. 10: 32, 33.
- T. May 11. To love men. Gal. 5: 13.
- F. May 12. To shine. Matt. 5: 14-16.
- S. May 13. To serve Him. John 12: 26.

Sun., May 14. Topic:—What Does Christ Want Us to Do? John 15: 12-16. (Union meeting with the Juniors.)

Suggestions to the Leader

It is suggested that this meeting be held in connection with the Junior Society, or Juniors of the Sunday-school. The membership committee ought to take part in the preparation of this meeting. Canvass carefully in advance the Junior classes in the Sunday-school, inviting the members to attend this meeting. If possible give them some definite part in the service, such as singing a song, or a special hymn,—possibly individual Juniors can read a Scripture lesson, or recite some appropriate poem etc. Give them something to do, in order that their interest may be stimulated. Do not forget to make special efforts to secure the attendance of the newly confirmed, especially those those who have not yet been won for the society.

In presenting the topic point out the great fact that all of our actions and movements in life, socially or otherwise, must be governed by the standard of Christ's approval. It is impossible to reduce the conduct to a set of rules, that would develop the dead legalistic, hypocritical spirit. Our conduct must reveal the life within and the principle that controls that life. We cannot tell our young people with definite precision what is allowed and what is forbidden. But we can urge them to compare their desires with the Christ whom they have confessed. That comparison will reveal the harmony or disagreement of the desire with the spirit of Jesus, and will determine the permissible.

The Topic Presented

Three things are suggested to us by the Master in our Scripture lesson.

1. That we love one another.
2. That we serve each other even to the limit of laying down our life for the other.
3. That we develop a definite Christian character, that will reveal itself in fruit-bearing.

What does Christ want us to do? Christ does not want us to become self-centered, concentrating and limiting our actions and desires within and upon self. Self must be the center from which activity radiates towards others. It is more blessed, i. e. a happier state,—to give than to receive. The machine that only exists for its own sake is worthless, because unprofitable. But the machine that reduces labor is valuable. Human life exists not for its own sake. It is the mechanism thru which divine blessings are to be distributed, and human life made more blessed and happier. Therefore Christ demands—

1. That we love each other. Center your desires and interest not in self but in others. Love means to give one's self to others. The selfish man cannot love, for selfishness demands, while unselfishness gives. The standard of our love is fixed in the life and surrender of Jesus. His divine powers were at the disposal of all who were afflicted, but could not be used for the alleviation of His own wants. He could not feed himself when hungry, nor drink when thirsty, nor save His life when in danger, when these acts would have involved a display and use of His divine powers. The man who uses his gifts and abilities merely to enrich himself, forgetful of the needs of others is prostituting that gift.
2. Jesus declares that love is limitless, involving even the sacrifice of life itself for the sake of others.

Service is the supreme law of the kingdom of God. Jesus gave us His own life as an example. He came to surrender himself, and to lay down His own life for sinful men. He was the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. No one dare think he is doing too much. You cannot do too much in Christ's service. We need to emphasize this service in presenting the claims of the Sunday-school, Young People's Society, and other organizations of the Christian Church. That service is limitless. But we must not fail to heed the opportunities given at home. To relieve the burdens of father and mother, to perform the thousand and one little helpful deeds, to avoid friction, to smooth the way with cheerfulness and kindness, these too, are sacrifices worthy of the Christ whom we confess. Christian life demands complete surrender, even to the giving of our own life for the sake of others. Where pleasure interferes with this service, pleasure itself is sinful, because it hinders our best development.

3. Christ demands that we grow into His likeness, develop into a perfect character. Jesus calls us His friends. We are only His friends when we become habitual doers of His will. He demands that we bear fruit. Only that tree is a fruitful tree, which bears fruit persistently and regularly. Fruitbearing is a habit, the result of a sound healthy condition of the tree. Only the man and woman who has attained a character can bring forth much fruit. Spasmodic fruitbearing at irregular moments is not expressive of character. In a true Christian character the will and all mental and spiritual faculties are centered on one thing, to do the will of God. Such a life will bring forth fruit unconsciously, but regularly, and continuously. Character is not mere emotion that compels action, but a persistent doing of God's will. All things in life that hinder such a character development, even tho they be as valuable as the eye or hand or foot, need be cut off and cast away, Matt. 5: 29, 30. This is what Jesus wants us to do, to grow in spiritual health and strength, in habit and character, that thru us and in us the glory of the Christian life may be revealed.

Some Questions on the Topic

1. How can we learn what Christ wants us to do?
2. What must at all times determine the right or wrong of contemplated action?
3. How is the doing of God's will rewarded?
4. What is the penalty of disobedience?
5. What does Christ mean, Matt. 5: 29, 30?
6. What must ever be the supreme purpose of so-called pleasure. What does Jesus say John 4: 34?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Matt. 12: 50; Mark 3: 35; Luke 11: 2; John 4: 34; 5: 30; 6: 38-40; Acts 18: 21; Rom. 12: 2; 15: 32; 1 Cor. 16: 7; Heb. 6: 3.

A Prayer

Thou, O Saviour didst give us an example of complete submission to the Father's will. Thy life reveals to us the glory of such a submission. We pray that the doing of Thy will may also be our meat and drink, life's greatest necessity. Help us to consider in all things the debt we owe to Thee for the blessings of Thy great sacrifice. We would not seek our own interests but the glory of Thy name, and the salvation and blessing of an erring world. May we ever serve to bring Thy kingdom into the hearts of seeking men. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson Material for the second year: New Testament Studies—the Messianic and the Apostolic Eras.

Second Quarter

- May 14. The Light of the World. John 8: 12-20.
- May 21. The Seventy Sent Forth. Luke 10: 1-24.
- May 28. The Problem of Suffering. John 9: 1-12.
- June 4. Praying in Jesus' Name. Luke 11: 1-13.
- June 11. Raised from the Dead. John 11: 20-44.
- June 18. The Coming of the Kingdom. Luke 17: 20-37.

Optional Lessons

Pentecost Lesson—The Power of Pentecost. Acts 2: 14-38.

Lesson 7. Jesus and the Seventh Commandment

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. May 8. John 7: 53-8: 11. Jesus, the Woman and her Accusers.
- T. May 9. Matt. 5: 27-32. Jesus and the Seventh Commandment.
- W. May 10. Matt. 18: 21-35. Be Merciful in your Judgment.
- T. May 11. Mark 7: 2-9. Think of these Things.

- F. May 12. Phil. 4: 4-9. Purity a Condition of the Heart (tr).
 S. May 13. Mal. 3: 1-6. Who can Abide His Coming?
 S. May 14. Psa. 24. Who shall Stand before the Lord?

Lesson Key:—"He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her," John 8: 7.

It was part of the peculiar trials thru which Jesus had to pass that His enemies should, in any manner that promised success, seek to trap Him in some kind of an utterance that would permit them to bring charges against Him, or at least to injure His standing before the people. Their hatred was such that they had no scruples whatever as to the question with which they confronted Him. No weapon was too base for them to employ in their wicked scheming.

The scribes and the Pharisees were the leading citizens of the community, educated, religious, and supposed to be as refined in their morals as any one of their day and nation could be. One should have thought, therefore, that they would have drawn the line at the means they are here using to lay a snare for Jesus. The kind of question with which they approach Him is one that pure persons will greatly hesitate to discuss in public, because of the danger to popular morals which always accompanies it. Exposures of this kind will always draw a crowd, and there always seems to be a very good reason for making public a scandal of this kind. But it is practically certain that some one, if not most of those in the gathering, will take with them some vile suggestion that will in due time kindle the slumbering fires of passion and poison the mind and heart with immoral thoughts and desires, and perhaps even lead to acts of impurity and immorality. The newspapers of to-day which publish more or less detailed accounts of every scandal that becomes known, are guilty of a great wrong against public morality. It is impossible to tell how far the seeds of future immoral deeds are scattered thru these accounts, especially among the young of both sexes, who have no idea of the seriousness of the danger that threatens them.

But Jesus does not evade the question that is put up to Him. He does not answer immediately. His silence is a reproof and a rebuke to those who would use even the shame of another as a weapon of attack. As one who is in deep thought He traced lines on the ground while formulating the answer that would harmonize with the divine pity for the woman as well as with the divine wrath over her heartless and shameless accusers. Their sin was one that needed to be openly branded, in order to convict them of the corruption that was beneath their pious countenance and demeanour. The woman needed to understand that there was hope of forgiveness for her and that He at least would not condemn her.

No answer could have been found that fitted the case better. Had Jesus condemned the woman by upholding the Mosaic law, which imposed death by stoning as a penalty for adultery, He would no doubt have been accused of disregard and even disobedience of the Roman law, which was quite lenient in this respect. If, on the other hand, He had acquitted the woman, His enemies would at once have denounced Him before the people as one who set aside the Mosaic law. But the answer Jesus gives neither sets aside the Mosaic law nor did it justify the woman, but it revealed the hidden sin in the lives of the accusers and silenced them far more effectively than anything else could have done. His own purity was so manifest as compared with the hidden, vicious nature of the scribes and Pharisees on the one hand, and the open immorality of the woman on the other, that there was no need of pronouncing judgment. The woman, tho convicted of sin and, to all intents and purposes, condemned because of it, felt at ease in Jesus' presence, because He awakened a desire for a new life. Her accusers, tho no one had brought a charge against them, stole out one by one, because they could not bear to listen to the voice of their conscience which Jesus' words had awakened.

It is not always the flagrancy of the offence that determines the measure of impurity. Many a fallen woman, disgusted with the life she is practically compelled to lead because of the double standard of morality which society imposes, is judged far more leniently by the just and righteous Judge than many a man of position, reputation, wealth and influence who is a victim of secret vice. Purity is not so much a matter of conduct as of conscience. The evil thoughts, passions and desires proceed from within out of the heart of men.

Home Mission Work in Florida

Concluded from Page 6

fifteen members; lodge members were consistently refused, but in the meantime fourteen of their own members have joined lodges. An Evangelical congregation would have the best opportunity here, and we are already negotiating with a worker to take charge.

Petersburg has only 11,000 inhabitants, but altho the German element is not so very strong, the idea of organizing an Evangelical congregation took well, especially with such who formerly belonged to one elsewhere. One man stopped me in the street and overwhelmed me with offers of assistance. After close questioning he admitted that he was a son of Abraham, but being the only one in the place he and his wife, who came from Nuremberg, longed for association with German people. A photographer's wife, on the other hand, had no use for a church; she had been "bathed in Spree-water." She declared very frankly: "We belong to the educated class; such people never go to church in Germany, and consequently we will not either." The mission in Petersburg will be served from Tampa.

A boatride of twenty-four hours brought me to Key West, an island containing 24,000 inhabitants; strong government fortifications and unusual dock facilities. Everybody speaks Spanish. I only found two German Jews and one German Catholic, who naturally did not show much sympathy with my plans. Unfortunately I was compelled to leave the next morning in order to keep my appointment with Pastor Bratzel on Saturday evening. Without accident the exceedingly interesting Key-railway brought me to Fort Lauderdale, where I preached on Sunday morning; in the afternoon I preached at Miami. Both congregations are still small, but prospects are bright. The people, together with their pastor and his family, greatly enjoyed the presence of a member of the Mission Board.

Lack of time prohibited further investigations, but in St. Augustine I stopped off and stayed over night. The next day I inquired for Germans, and was told that I certainly must call on the "German Kaiser of St. Augustine." Naturally I expected to find some real energetic German, but instead I found—a negro, but a real handsome, manly shoemaker. He told me that the Kaiser's pious utterances in the beginning of the war had convinced him of the justice of the German cause; in the beginning he had been laughed at, but now everybody was espousing the German cause. I congratulated him heartily on his stand. Anyone visiting St. Augustine should not fail to see the old fort which was once the home of the Spanish Inquisition and has a most interesting history. Filled with innumerable impressions gained on the trip, overwhelmed by the many good and interesting things I had seen, I was permitted to return to my loved ones at home. Praise be to God that He has opened the door for our Evangelical Synod in Florida.

Those desiring to move to Florida at one time or the other, should not fail to get the advice of our brethren there. The addresses of Pastors E. Bratzel and H. Niedernhoefer can be found in the Year Book, and others will be supplied in these columns. Anybody having relatives or friends in Florida is requested to kindly furnish the undersigned with names and addresses.

G. Schaeffer, Pastor.

121 James St., Dayton, Ohio.

News from Oklahoma

On Sunday, March 26th the cornerstone was laid for the First Evangelical Church in Oklahoma City. Unfortunately the inclemency of the weather kept many people away. A cold rain, intermingled with snow flakes, fell upon the bushes and trees, which were already budding. The church is a frame building, arranged for gas and electric lighting, containing 250 seats and represents a value of $4,000.00. The building site, valued at $2,000.00, is advantageously situated, and if the town will develop in the future as it has in the past, we will soon be located near the center of the town. The little Zion Church, trusting in the Lord, has taken a decisive step forward. Considering the peculiar conditions in church work of the West, a German congregation has to contend with many difficulties. In the country conditions are much more favorable. Wherever city congregations in the Kansas District erected inadequate churches to begin with, they have seldom been able to develop properly. There are no industrial cities with a large German population, and among the few Germans you will seldom find an earnest Evangelical person. And the few there are, often are lost to us on account of their connection with some other, English-speaking church, or their total neglect of all religious matters. Partly the fault lies with the insignificance of our mission churches, which do not appear worth while for them to join. Not long ago a most respectable shoeman told me: "Pastor, you are too late; I have joined the Episcopal church. It is much nicer there than with you." Men who are accustomed to large and crowded churches at home, seldom take to small ones, especially if the congregational conditions are unstable and uncertain. To overcome these difficulties causes much apprehension to our Church Extension. Only with their help can we obtain the necessary real estate for the erection of suitable churches which are so necessary for the proper development of our mission congregations. The question: "How will we get a suitable church?" has wrecked many a mission congregation. If the Synod could have assisted in the erection of a church in Oklahoma City years ago, we could have a large congregation to-day. But neither the Home Mission Board or the Church Building Fund can satisfy the demands made upon them, as much as they would like to, unless our friends in the Synod assist them more liberally than in the past.

The laying of the corner-stone for Zion Church was made possible only by the liberal assistance of our mission friends thruout the Synod. There are many more promising missions in the West, as far west as the Pacific ocean, which are merely waiting for the assistance of the Synod to enable them to erect a church. With very few exceptions mission work out here is slow work; we can not claim great conquests, but can only urge perseverance and patience, and that "stick-to-it-tiveness" has brought such renown to the Germans in the recent past.

A. Walton.

Biederwolf's Pamphlets against

RUSSELLISM,

SPIRITUALISM,

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

Russellism Unveiled

"Millennial Dawnism."

By W. E. BIEDERWOLF.

Paper Cover. Postpaid 15 Cts.

Spiritualism.

Divine? Devilish? or a Deception? Which?

By W. E. BIEDERWOLF.

Paper Cover. Postpaid 15 Cts.

The Unvarnished Facts about

Christian Science.

By W. E. BIEDERWOLF.

Paper Cover. Postpaid 15 Cts.

Christian Science

So-called

By H. C. SHELDON

A Critical Estimate and Appraisal of this Modern Cult

102 pages. Cloth

Price, 50 cents

"Christian Science" is much more than a peculiar type of medical theory and practice. It presents itself in the character of a distinct religion no less than does Mormonism, which it strongly resembles both in the scope of the prophetic function assigned to the founder and in the employment of a concentrated money power in the interest of propagandism.

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

1716-18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716-18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., MAY 11th, 1916

NUMBER 19

The American Bible Society Anniversary

On May 8th the American Bible Society celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of its founding. On that date, in the year 1816, sixty men met as representatives of various local Bible Societies, whose aim was to give the largest possible circulation to the Holy Scriptures in their own respective localities, and organized the American Bible Society. The consistory room of the Garden Street Dutch Reformed Church witnessed this historic meeting. There were men of prominence in that first convention: Dr. Boudinot, who, as president of the National Congress of the American Colonies, had signed the treaty of peace with Great Britain, at the close of the Revolutionary War; Samuel Mills, the father of American Foreign Missions; James Fenimore Cooper, who later became so prominent in literature, and a number of others, whose names are so closely identified with early American history.

In American Home Mission work, this society has been spiritual mother to the work, providing the Book, the Bread of Life in printed form, by means of which the great West was won for the kingdom of Jesus Christ. In South American countries the agents of the Bible Society are frequently the only missionaries of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Often persecuted by the Catholic priests, they nevertheless continue their work, and help spread enlightenment in those dark countries. In remembering the hundredth anniversary of the founding of this Society we center our attention again on the importance of the Bible relative to our own national life, and on the great development of our country and of the world which this Society has helped make possible.

The men who founded this Society were men of vision, who realized that the world's civilization could be saved only thru the message of salvation which this Book proclaimed. But more than this, they were men of eminently practical turn of mind, for they immediately busied themselves with the problem, how this vision might be materialized for the immediate benefit of their generation. The great Bible House in New York, with its millions of dollars of investment, the millions of dollars of endowment, and with the millions of eager hands stretching out after the Bread of Life which this House is furnishing, is an irrefutable evidence of the fact that the Bible is the Book of eternal life.

The centenary of the American Bible Society ought to mean much to the Evangelical Church. The fathers of our Church were warmly supported by its liberal donations, and one of the founders, Pastor Joseph Rieger, was for several years one of its colporteurs in the Central West. The first settlers had given their all to come to this country and establish a home. They sought cheap land and therefore came to the far West. The old German Bible given to the immigrant by loving hands as they left the fatherland became a sacred possession, as duplicates could be obtained only with difficulty. Many of the early settlers were hostile to the Book because they saw in it only a means of crushing the freedom they sought in the new world. They did not understand the meaning of real truth and freedom, tho many of them were learned and even scholarly men. Their example affected entire communities and greatly hindered the work of the missionaries. The American Bible Society sent out its colporteurs into these scattered German settlements, who offered the Bible for sale, or gave it away, and spent the evenings in teaching the men and women of the neighborhood the precious truths of God. Our missionaries were gratuitously supplied with copies of the Bible, and many a Sunday-school received its entire equipment from the American Bible Society.

Our Church is thus under a great obligation to the Society, as well as to the Kingdom work which it represents. The former custom of an annual offering for the Society proves that this obligation was recognized, and the centenary celebration would be a fitting opportunity to restore this offering and thus help pass on to other needy souls the blessings that helped our fathers in the pioneer days. K.

The National Missionary Congress

During the past week it has been the privilege of the writer to attend the National Missionary Congress at the National capital, the climax of the series of Laymen's Missionary Movement conventions that have been held during the past six months in the seventy leading cities of the country. It is impossible to express the meaning of the Congress in the brief notice to which we are obliged to confine ourselves

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

There is no such thing as finding true happiness by searching for it directly. It must come, by the service, the love and the happiness we give to others.—R. W. Trine.

today, a brief resumé of the proceedings will appear in the next issue. To those who yielded themselves to its atmosphere the Congress gave the inspiration of a new and a larger vision; a new spirit of consecration, devotion and sacrifice, a clearer realization of the place and the power of prayer as a force for building and extending the kingdom of God on earth, and a firmer determination to make Jesus Christ king in the lives of every one of His followers, thruout His whole Church, and in needy and non-Christian America as well as in war-stricken Europe and in heathen and Mohammedan Asia and Africa. If the hearts of all the delegates present were open for the powerful spiritual and missionary messages and appeals there will be liberated in the churches that were represented, and thru the machinery of the different denominations to most of those who were not represented, such an impulse for spiritual growth and the development of the latent human and material resources as will put an entirely different face upon all the Christian activities of the country and will stimulate and invigorate Christian work in every part of the world. Only indifference to the voice of the Spirit and disobedience to the heavenly vision can prevent such a result becoming manifest during the years that are to come.

To the writer the journey from St. Louis to Washington and return, with its change of surroundings and occupation and the kindly and fraternal hospitality he was privileged to experience at Pittsburg for a few brief hours, and at Washington and Baltimore for the week that followed, furnished a beautiful and unforgettable setting for the message of the Congress. The rugged everlasting hills, with their message of God's greatness and majesty, among which the iron horse wound its way from the fertile farms of the Central West to the seaboard, the beauty of blossoming trees and budding verdure that told of God's infinite goodness and loving kindness, means more to the imprisoned city dweller than those can know to whom these gifts of God are a matter of course. The opportunity to meet and greet a goodly number of Herald readers was a particular pleasure and has helped, we trust, to make the relationship between the writer and his readers still closer and more personal.

Improving the Rural School

Those of us concerned about the greater development and efficiency of the country school will be interested in the advance movement in this direction reported from Oregon.

The improvement in the rural schools of Oregon has followed four distinct lines: 1. A plan for standardizing school buildings and grounds; 2. Parent-teacher associations in the rural and village schools; 3. Boys' and girls' club and school fairs; 4. The playground and supervised play. The plan for standardizing school houses and grounds covers thirteen points, such as the proper lighting of the school house, its proper heating and ventilation, an average attendance of more than ninety-two percent for the year, also a school term of not less than eight months, flag, equipment, sanitation, outbuildings, teacher, library, etc. This plan not only received the strong indorsement of the state superintendent, but also the hearty support of public sentiment, which is already in a very fair way of getting what it needs.

The legislature of 1915 authorized the use of the school house for community gatherings or as civic centers, and there are now more than 300 well-organized parent-teacher associations in the state, which have supported the school boards in securing new buildings and sites, improving the old ones, beautifying the school grounds and securing the close co-operation of all efforts to better school conditions, thus making doubly effective the work of all bodies concerned with school and county betterment, and also that of the boys' and girls' industrial clubs and kindred organizations.

These industrial clubs enroll 12,000 children between the ages of ten and eighteen. They are divided into ten different organizations, which embrace corn growing, pig and potato raising, girl's canning and preserving, cooking, baking and sewing, and boys' and girls' poultry, gardening, dairy herd record keeping, and manual arts. The co-operation of all these clubs is brought about by the united effort of the state superintendent of public instruction, the State Agricultural College and the United States Department of Agriculture. An annual appropriation of $6,000 enables the superintendent to employ two assistants who devote their entire time to field work, organize clubs, hold community meetings and act as judges at local fairs. The State Agricultural College prepares special bulletins on each project and enrolls the members of the clubs in the extension department of the College, thus making the boys and girls familiar with the work of the college and stimulating them to look forward to resident work at the college. The beneficial work of the United States Department of Agriculture in disseminating knowledge and promoting scientific farming is well known.

The superintendent of public instruction has issued a special bulletin which gives valuable information concerning games, playgrounds and equipment, and also standardizes and organizes play. The playgrounds are not as well supervised as they might be, nor will they be until all the teachers take an interest in this important part of their work.

In two years Oregon has by these methods increased the length of her school term more than ten days, the average length is now five days less than eight months. Many other rural school problems in that state still claim attention, but the school authorities have confidence in the people and hope to continue and enlarge the work so well begun by keeping them informed concerning the needs of the rural districts, and by working thru the efforts of the local organizations.

The Fellowship of God a Land of Plenty

"Jehovah is my Shepherd, I shall not want," Ps. 23: 1.

To a pastoral people like those of Palestine no relationship appealed more strongly and tenderly than that of shepherd and sheep. It was familiar to all and it could have only one meaning to any one who heard the words used. The sheep were wholly dependent upon the shepherd for everything, and the shepherd's very life and being was bound up with the welfare of his flock. The sheep recognized the shepherd as their provider and defender, and to care for them faithfully and successfully was the one aim of the shepherd's life. The sheep came to know the shepherd's voice, and the shepherd was proud of the personal attachment that existed in the hearts of the dumb and helpless creatures. The whole life of each was wrapped up in the other and each found true contentment and real joy in the constant daily associations.

It is therefore only natural that the psalmist should seize upon this relationship as a fitting expression of his idea of the true relationship between God and man. Man is just as dependent upon God for all he is and has and needs as the sheep are upon their shepherds, and the happiness and welfare of mankind is just as vital a part of God's life and being as the well-being of the flock is the great concern of the shepherd. Tho men do not always recognize it, it is just as much a fact that God is the Provider and Defender of mankind as the shepherd is of his sheep. He has created the heavens and the earth and His eternal laws keep the world in order and minister to the life and needs of every living creature. The plan of salvation for the human race expresses the divine yearning for human happiness. The passion to save was so powerful that not even the sacrifice of the only begotten Son was too great a price to pay. Men who are not opposed to their own best and highest interests recognize and respond to the voice of God as it is revealed in His word just as the sheep know the shepherd's voice, and the heart of God knows no greater joy than to give of that fullness of His life and blessings to all who come to Him. The greater the need the greater is His readiness to give and His joy and satisfaction in giving. What should be more natural than that, in response to this tenderness and beneficence, the lives of men should be as fondly devoted to their God as the sheep are devoted to their shepherd. That gratitude for the presence, the sympathy, the love and help and the guidance of God should lead to attachment, obedience and devotion toward God seems almost as inevitable as the operation of the law of gravitation.

As far as the psalmist himself is concerned the comparison holds good. He knows that the Lord Jehovah is his shepherd and that therefore he shall not want. Because of Jehovah's shepherding he may lie down in green pastures or wander contentedly along still waters. Not only his bodily needs are supplied, but his soul also is fed, strengthened and restored so that it is able to follow the divine guidance into and upon the paths of righteousness. Even in the valley of the shadow of death, where every earthly help fails, and everything else vanishes, he will fear no evil, because Jehovah is with him and His rod and His staff they comfort him. No enemy, no fiery darts of the adversary and no trials and difficulties of the wandering can injure him, for Jehovah has prepared a table before him in the presence of his enemies. As a sign of divine favor and the prosperity attendant upon it his head has been anointed with oil. The cup of contentment is overflowing, as well it may since he is confident of Jehovah's goodness and loving kindness all the days of his life. And the joyous and blessed experience of the psalmist has been duplicated in uncounted lives that have recognized his God as their shepherd and have gratefully and lovingly obeyed His voice. For three thousand years the "Shepherd Psalm" has faithfully reflected the deepest, holiest and most satisfying experiences of God's children all over the earth.

Those who have realized something of the bliss of such an experience have an absolute guarantee of far greater and more satisfying things for their inner life as the reward of persistence and increasing obedience and devotion. God's power to bless and to give is limited only by our power to receive and retain. The more we want the more we can get. If we have not gotten enough, it is not because He has been unable or unwilling to give, but because we have not entered fully into the relationship that enables us to receive all we desire. If the road seems rough, the pastures burned up and the water courses dry; if the burdens of life and the fear of death weighs heavily upon us; if the goodness and loving kindness of Jehovah seem beyond us: there's a reason. And the remedy lies with us. To the same extent that we lay hold on and hold on to Jehovah we too shall not, nay cannot want.

His Missionary Dollar

By SALLY CAMPBELL

PART I

Jimmy Banks looked guileless. He had soft, flat, yellow hair and a fair skin and blue eyes "like a girl-baby's" as the other boys said. He had a bright, ready smile and, when it suited him, a slow, unready form of speech that was the living likeness of shyness. But Jimmy was not shy. He was not guileless. No, Jimmy Banks was neither.

Jimmy was talking to a stranger, a tall, broad, grave young man, from whom he had expected little when he accosted him. "But," he had reminded himself, "when you haven't got any choice you can't pick and choose. This chap don't look easy, but you can't always tell. It won't do any hurt to try him." So when the "chap" drew near Jimmy was seated on what would answer to the curb in a less dilapidated street, his tow head hanging between his knees, his fists in his eyes, while he sniffed very gently, very unobtrusively. He felt a hand on his arm.

"What's the matter, boy?" asked the stranger.

Jimmy was motionless and soundless.

"What's the matter with you?" persisted his questioner.

Another pause before Jimmy in choked tones replied that nothing was the matter. But finally, by degrees and in a spiritless, disjointed way he set forth a sorrowful story of illness and aching poverty and devoted brotherly affection. He did not enter into details. Jimmy knew enough to be sketchy and leave the blackest shades to the imagination.

He got up from the ground at last and, as a climax, demanded in a sudden outburst of bitter energy:

"Who cares if he lives or dies?"

Richard Heath, to whom the question was put, cared a great deal. He took a very healthy interest in being alive. As for Jimmy, his whole heart was set on living long enough to go to see the moving pictures around the corner, if by any means he could acquire the nickel that would let him in.

He caught himself up quickly: "I don't mean that! I don't want to die before—before Jack. Jack depends on me."

Jack was his figurative brother who lay slowly coughing his life away on a hard pallet in the top story of the tallest, bleakest and altogether the most unmodel tenement in "Spain."

Jimmy turned away.

"Wait," said Richard Heath. "Wait a minute."

Jimmy waited. From the tail of his eye he noted the expression on Richard's face and saw his motion toward a coat pocket.

"He ain't what I first thought he was," Jimmy chuckled inwardly. "He comes from up-country somewhere, I guess, where the grass is green."

"You say your brother needs medicine and you haven't any money for it?" recapitulated Richard.

Jimmy nodded.

Richard frowned helplessly. "But how am I to know that it is true?" he asked.

Jimmy was silent. But when Richard's keen dark eyes looked into his blue ones they seemed transparent wells with the truth at the bottom, and nothing but the truth, except some timidity.

Richard drew a dollar bill from his pocket.

"I worked hard to earn this," he said. "I am poor; dollars don't grow on bushes for me. If what you tell me is straight I'd like to help you out. I was going to give this money away, anyway; I was looking for the Association men who are doing a good work somewhere along here, I understand."

The Association building was half a square distant, a fact which Jimmy did not see fit to point out.

"I was raised in the country," continued Richard, "where there was air and food and sunshine enough to go around. I feel sorry for city boys like you who have missed all that."

Jimmy remarked within himself that he was not breaking his heart for a country life. He had been on a farm once for two weeks with the rest of a fresh-air bunch, and it was plenty. He was glad to quit and get back to New York. Incidentally it may be stated that the farm also had been glad for Jimmy to quit.

"I meant," said Richard, "to hand this dollar to our Association man and ask him, if he knew any boy that was in a hole, to give him a lift with it. It would be pleasanter, of course, to do it myself, but—"

Jimmy did not asseverate. Certainly he was not guileless.

Richard occupied the pause by looking up and down the street.

"I can't find the Association building," he said, "and all the time I had is gone. I'll have to rush like forty now. I can't go home with you to see your brother." Suddenly he decided, and put the money into Jimmy's hand. "Buy him his medicine and maybe there'll be a little left for something else. I believe you are all right. But if you are not, just remember that you are taking the money away from some other boy who is in a real hole. And I am coming back this way in two weeks. Where do you live?"

Jimmy gave an address readily, and, having watched his benefactor out of sight, betook himself in the direction of the moving pictures. Gathering up two or three friends as he went, they sat thru the first performance, after which Jimmy, with lavish hospitality, paid out another round of nickels, and yet another, until he was penniless.

So it came about that Richard Heath's hard-earned missionary donation was expended in steeping four slum boys more thoroly in the knowledge of evil.

The entertainment finally ended with the dollar and Jimmy's guests bade him good-by. This was one of the nights, which were none too few, when Jimmy had his own reasons for keeping late hours.

"The old lady has got the fight in her still, and I ain't pining for her to work it off on me. I'll just wait till she starts in solid on her twelve-hour nap; for then she's a loving mother that won't harm a hair of my head. Whew! This is a wind! It's cold!"

He did not hesitate as to where he would seek shelter. Above all things Jimmy liked a "show," and he knew of one which, if by no means his first choice in other respects, had the preeminent qualification that it charged no entrance fee.

Passing swiftly down a street or two he came to a door over which hung a brilliant, much-lettered transparency, and turning into a warmed and lighted room of some size, he joined the motley congregation of a midnight rescue meeting.

Jimmy was a well-behaved attendant. He kept awake, and his passive countenance gave no sign of the thoughts that were behind it.

First he took a survey of the benches.

"There's quite a few old-timers here," he remarked with dissatisfaction. "They'll hand out the same old hot air that don't hardly fool the head ones any more, let alone them that's on to the whole game all right. If it means a bunk or a meal ticket for some poor bum that's down and out, I haven't a word to say against it. But, don't you know, it ain't funny." And Jimmy lurched over into a corner in a pet and composed himself for the enjoyment of mere creature comfort, if he couldn't get entertainment. He felt ill-used. For it was largely for fun that he came to the rescue meetings, his sense of the humorous being greatly stirred by the successful professions of some husky scamp, of whose true colors Jimmy felt luxuriously sure.

"Sometimes, if he's a cool one and knows the game, he gets his pay in raw cash. Then is when it is worth watching. These fellows that are winding themselves off now won't pull anything but a cold-water feed on the premises, or maybe some place to sleep over the telephone. There won't be any feel of money in it for them. And there ain't any sport in it for me. I wish the doorkeeper didn't get his feelings hurt so quick; I'd go to sleep."

He was perilously near to doing this when, after a short lull in the meeting, a man arose from the bench but one behind him and began to give his testimony. There was nothing unusual in its manner or matter, uttered as it was in a high singsong and consisting of phrases which had been repeated many times by those preceding him. But the new speaker himself was different. He was young and big and strong, better nourished and better clad than most of the human derelicts around him.

At the first sound of his voice Jimmy Banks was wide awake, and twisted about in his corner in an eagerness that almost forgot to be unsmiling.

"Albert Hinkle!" he ejaculated mutely. "Think of him being saved! If this ain't a frolic! Think of Albert Hinkle getting saved, will you! What happened, I wonder. His luck must have gone; he must be cleaned out. I wouldn't have missed this to be Rockefeller and Vanderbilt and Carneggy all in one big roll of bills. It's the best ever. It's sure a joke for Albert to play a dodge like this."

It was a "dodge" which had been suggested to Jimmy's own use many time. Tonight he was not hungry, having earned a quarter early in the day by carrying a grip to the subway. But this had not always been the case by any means. And, moreover, he was very vain of his ability to trick the public, and had had frequent urgings from his chums to "make up a nice little party of friends and get a rise on the glory crowd."

"Aw, go on, Jimmy!" they would plead. "You know we are poor. There's not the price of a theater ticket amongst us, and we are pining away for pleasure. Go on!"

But he never "went on." He based his refusal upon their many misdemeanors at the two or three meetings to which he had taken them, and which they had enlivened with such whispers and titters and fidgetings that the man at the door had put them all out.

As to why he resisted the private appeal of a dinnerless and supperless state—well, there were times, deep in the night, when even the slums were quiet, and Jimmy could see a few stars above the heads of the tenements. Then the silence and the emptiness and the far stars gave him certain vague feelings to which none of his words fitted. It was the reminiscence of those feelings that held him back from the exchange in the gospel prayer meetings of "playing for a square meal."

Even now, underneath the rush of joyful excitement with which he had recognized Albert Hinkle's entrance upon a dull stage and the breathless interest that hung delightedly upon every conventional phrase that fell from the young man's lips, there was a thread of sensation, fine and remote, of a different sort. Jimmy admired Albert Hinkle greatly.

When at last Albert emerged into the street from under the transparency at the door, Jimmy awaited him there.

"Hello!" he whispered. "What did they give you? How much money did they give you?"

Albert looked down at him in the strong light and answered briefly:

"None."

"None!" echoed Jimmy with a blank change of countenance.

"I didn't ask for any," said Albert. "Good-night, Jimmy."

Jimmy stared after him.

"Good-night, Jimmy, eh!" he murmured. "It's the cork in, is it? What did he ask for, then? It couldn't have been a job! A person would have to get mighty fast asleep to dream of Albert Hinkle turning in a check at the Whatsoever Bureau for leave to chop wood." Jimmy paused to chuckle. "Albert hasn't ever felt the first wish for a job since he was born. Well the next for me is to go to bed, I guess. I guess my mother is safe now."

He turned to face the wind with a shiver. "I wouldn't go so far if it wasn't for the loony notion I've got about fire. When my dear mother gets to thinking of other things she ain't very careful if she puts that head of hers alongside the lamp or not. She's a drunken old woman," said Jimmy candidly, "but mother has always had it hard. When she's herself she is more peaceable than plenty of others that look down on her. And, anyway, a person's mother is—different."

With a sudden impulse he lifted his face to the strip of sky high above the tenements and realized that his footfall was the only sound in the street.

At the end of two weeks Jimmy confessed that he was baffled. "I don't know where Albert can be keeping himself. He hasn't showed up at the prayer meetings since I saw him at the mission, and he isn't at the old stand ever any more. I can't see where he can be."

Just at the moment Jimmy was at Albert Hinkle's "old stand" himself. That is to say, balanced with a precarious foothold on a shed roof while he clasped a somewhat unsteady water leader with one hand and a rickety shutter with the other, he peered into a second story back room of a house whose front was discreet and subdued above its fellows.

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

Faith's Warrior

BY FREDERICK W. PALMER

Be not dismayed at doubts. 'Tis such things make Men's ventures grand. What happiness is good That is not earned? Where no doubts are withstood, Some powers, for lack of challenge, never wake. His heart who knows them not escapes some ache, But scarce has lived. Tho won with sweat of blood, Richer such conquests than on field or flood. Fine souls with foes within must issue take. "To him that overcomes," was said for all Who bravely do; and Heaven will write large Their names who fought with doubts and put them down.

Tell me but this: Does love or conscience call? Misgivings, then, are foes. Faith, sound the charge! And, soul of mine, press thru and get thy crown!

Sunday School Times.

Discovering the Back Yard Glories

Dr. J. H. Jowett has passed on to us from the Winona Lake platform an illuminating incident from a book little known on this side of the water. It is the story of the life of James Smeetham, and in the recital of this man's ability to see the halo around common things, this illustration occurs: John Ruskin once begged James Smeetham to go with him to Venice to "see the glories of Italy." The reply came quickly: "I have not yet exhausted the glories of my own back yard."

The commonest bit of back yard that is a yard at all, is roofed over by the fathomless blue, and he is not "cribbed, cabined, confined" who has a sky view. No straggling fence or hideous wall can shut it out or shut it in. From this little patch of ground, as well as from the boundless prairie, we catch the revelation of the changeless hue behind the clouds, when they are swept away, or break to let the glory thru. Variety in perpetuity is written for eyes that see, in the changing colors that shine thru the sunset gate, foretelling the "glory that excelleth." How can a lifetime exhaust these marvelous revealings?

There is proprietorship in the back yard. It may be a fragment, but it is our own. We do not expect the neighbors to take care of it, or to care for it particularly, peering over the fence to discover its possibilities; but it is our business to explore and to utilize it. Moreover, it is a good point of departure. If we have no starting place, what avails the pilgrim staff? "Everybody's little dooryard opens into all outdoors," of which, indeed, it is a piece, and we have not exhausted the back yard's glories till we see where it leads and follow the beckonings. And then, too, even a few feet of soil may have green things growing in it, even if it be nothing but a cabbage patch. In spite of limitations, heart's ease may grow in a corner, and sprigs of that savory herb that is called "content." And who knows but it may furnish room for a common bush that may someday be "afire with God!"

Some householders have no front yard at all, and the back yard must furnish the only garden plot. Very well. Let us not sigh for other worlds to conquer or explore, till we have exhausted the glories that grow and glow at the back door of daily life.

—Julia H. Johnston.

Women

It was ten o'clock on the downtown streets. They seemed strangely deserted; for the stores were closed, late shoppers and loiterers had gone home and the theater crowds were still housed inside, absorbed in their evening's amusement.

Then in the darkness there came a startling sound—the sound of women's laughter.

A dark mass, like a small army come down the street—women. They were black-garbed, old—past youth at least. They wore queer, small hats, and each carried a bundle loosely wrapped in newspaper.

They cut the corner and scurried—like a flock of sheep, perhaps, that follow a leader; or rats that flee a building—only they were going in—across the street to the great building that loomed on the opposite corner. Some time between the hour of the departure of the last lingering worker and that of the arrival of the morning's first comer, this huge building must be gone over, cleaned, and put in order.

The scrubwomen were going to work—and they went laughing!

Yea, verily, the woman's place is the home! Women must be sheltered, protected! Womanhood is sacred! Woman's hands must be kept unsullied, her shoulders free from burdens!

The Worn Dime

The afternoon session of the conference was just over. Two ministers, whose ways led them to the same part of the city, left the church together, and began to talk over the happenings of the day as they waited on the street corner for their car.

When it came, they found seats side by side, and continued their earnest conversation. The conductor came thru the car, and one of the ministers handed him a ten-cent piece to pay both fares. The man looked at the coin carefully, turned it over and looked at the other side, and then said:

"I'm afraid I'll have to ask you for another dime."

"What is the matter with that one?" asked the minister, a little embarrassed at having his money returned. "It isn't counterfeit, is it?"

"I guess not," replied the conductor, "but it's worn down so thin and smooth that I can't tell what it is. The company wouldn't take it from me."

So the minister found another ten-cent piece, a bright, new one this time, and took back the worn one. Then he turned to his friend, and said:

"I wonder whether there is not a lesson for you and me in this little incident? Isn't there danger that our methods of presenting the truth may become so outworn and flat by unending repetition that the message itself may grow thin and almost meaningless to our people? Isn't it necessary to fuse it again in the heat of positive conviction, and remind it, as it were, in order that the inscription and superscription may be read and clearly understood by men? The gospel is good for every age and every man. It is only when it is interpreted in ways that are stale and perfunctory that men are doubtful or skeptical. When it is presented in terms fresh and vital, they embrace it gladly."—Ex.

The Golden Rule in Business

"It seems to me from my own observation—and I find other manufacturers I talk with have the same impression—that there is a growing tendency among young men to go after business by sharp practice where they can't get it any other way."

So spoke the president of a big Eastern manufacturing firm who is the active operating head of the firm's plant.

"It isn't that these young fellows would do anything that could be branded as outright dishonest or mean, but they will cut the corners of a square deal if they think it's necessary to land an order. I've had some young fellows apply to me for positions, and just to show how valuable they could make themselves to the business, they have told me how they have landed orders for former employers by some neat trick or other which got ahead of their competitors."

"I have had to tell them square and plain that there wasn't any recommendation in that kind of talk with me. If I caught one of our salesmen saying he would deliver a bill of goods at a date he knew the firm couldn't meet, I'd fire him for it—or at least I'd talk to him and give him another chance, and fire him if he did it the second time."

"I have made up my mind that I am going to write out some plain talks on righteousness in business and post them up around the offices and shops where everybody will have a chance to read them. I'm going to make it plain some way or other that we are going to run our business on the Golden Rule. If we can't run it that way, we'll quit. I have explained my plan about these bulletins to a number of other manufacturers, and I think several of them are going to do the same thing."

"Besides the moral reasons for that policy, it's the only policy to build up a sound business on. Take even the men who would be willing to make profit for themselves by shady deals, and they all want to buy goods for themselves of a firm that they can depend on. I think our history this past year has proved the wisdom of it; business has been rolling in from points that we never had any idea of getting anything from. The Golden Rule works."—Selected.

Denominational DISTRICT CONFERENCES

Indiana

The thirtieth annual conference of the Indiana District will be opened, God willing, on the evening of May 17, 1916, 7:30 P. M., at St. Paul's Church, Piqua, Ohio (the Rev. Paul Gehm, pastor). The annual convention of the District Federation of Brotherhoods will be opened at 2:00 P. M. of the same day. Pastors or delegates coming from the west or south via Louisville, Ky., should arrange to leave Louisville on the evening of the 16th with the special car provided by the B. & O. Ry., which goes thru to Piqua via Cincinnati without change. By order of the President, Pastor P. Repke, C. Held, Secretary.

Texas District

The pastors and delegates of the Texas District will assemble for their twenty-eighth annual conference on May 17, 1916, at Robinsonville, Texas (the Rev. J. Strauss, pastor), where the opening service will begin at 8:00 P. M.

The following papers have been prepared: "The Aims of the German American National Association," by Pastor A. Romanowski; and "The District Conference and the Resolutions it Adopts," by the undersigned.

By the authority of the District president, Pastor C. Wolff, Jul. J. Kasiske, Sec'y.

Missouri

The thirtieth annual conference of the Missouri District will assemble on May 18, 1916, in St. Peter's Church, Washington, Mo., and will be opened with a special service at 10:30 A. M. A special service in the interest of the Brotherhood work will be held on Sunday afternoon, May 21.

By order of the District president, Pastor W. Hackmann, F. Grabau, Sec'y.

Installations

In accordance with the instructions of the respective District presidents the pastors named below have recently been installed in their new charges:

On April 2, 1916, Pastor R. J. Kurz at Barnesburg, O., by Pastor Ed. Schmidt.

On April 9, 1916, Geo. P. Zimmermann at Bethel, N. D., by Pastor J. Fontana.

Application for Admission

Pastor H. Tessmer, at present with the Evangelical Church at Fayetteville, Ill., has applied for admission into membership with the German Evangelical Synod of N. A.

G. Plassmann, Pres. S. Ill. Distr.

The Pastors A. Boether of Lodi, Cal., and Chr. Walton, at present serving churches at Capay and Hungry Hollow, Cal., have applied for re-admission into membership with the German Evangelical Synod of N. A. Otto Satzinger, Pres., Pacific Distr.

Pastor Otto Rapp, Long Prairie, Minn., has filed his application for admission into membership with the German Evangelical Synod of N. A.

A. Debus, Pres. Minnesota District.

Young People's League of Cincinnati and Vicinity

The Sixteenth Semi-annual Rally of the Young People's League of Cincinnati and vicinity will be held Sunday, May 30, 1916, at First Evangelical Protestant Church of Price Hill, Cincinnati, Ohio. (Rev. G. G. Press, Pastor).

The speaker for the occasion will be Dr. E. A. R. Torsch of Louisville, Kentucky. Special musical selections will also be features of the program.

The afternoon session will begin at 2:30. Evening session at 7:00 o'clock.

Supper will be served by the young people's society of the local church at 5:30.

The League has a membership of about 1,000 young people of near twenty-five Evangelical churches of Cincinnati and vicinity.

Everybody—both young and old—is cordially invited to both sessions of the convention.

THE BIBLE THE BOOK OF THE NATIONS

An Outline Story of the Centennial History of the American Bible Society

HENRY OTIS DWIGHT, LL.D.

I. BEGINNINGS

Influences Making the Bible the Book of the New World

The story of the Bible in the United States begins with certain notable features of the settlement of the thirteen colonies. A place for the English colonies in North America was made available in the last half of the sixteenth century by the revolt of Henry VIII. against the pope, whose assignment of that region to Spain therefore became no longer binding upon England. The translation and dissemination of the Bible pared an address, eloquent and convincing, which invoked the good will of the whole people of the United States.

Not in a single instance during a century has the Society departed from its simple, distinctive object—the increase of the circulation of the Holy Bible without note or comment. It belongs to no party, no denomination, is subject to no alien control. It is sustained by generous contributions of different denominations, from which its Managers, Officers, and Agents are chosen. Into the Society's grants of Scriptures discrimination does not enter on account of religious affiliations. Whether a society, a church, or a single individual asks for Scriptures the only question is, What is the need?

Early Methods and Means—Auxiliaries

The plan of the new Society required the aid of the local Bible societies already formed or to be formed for the same simple object. Such societies, because pledged to help the National Society, were called auxiliaries. By the exertions of auxiliaries the necessities of the destitute have been discovered and the needs of districts thousands of miles distant from

New York have been made known. On them, too, the Society has depended for contributions from churches and individuals in all parts of the land, which fall into its treasury as rivulets and brooks fall into a reservoir for the needs of a great city. Up to the time of the Civil War the number of auxiliary societies steadily increased until there were 2,800 of them in every state and territory from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Many of the county auxiliaries had branches in the townships and these branches numbered several thousands, all working together in the Bible cause. The Civil War was disastrous to numbers of auxiliaries in the southern and border states; the growth of denominational missionary organizations gradually diminished the resources of all, and since 1891 the auxiliary system has little by little ceased to be a main reliance of the parent Society for information, distribution, and the means of extension in due proportion to the increase of population. The Society now has a little more than 200 auxiliaries (some of which have already completed a century of fruitful service) which press their effective and valuable Bible distribution to this day.

Notable Supporters

Men of public renown fostered the growth of the Society. Elias Boudinot, its first President, as President of Congress in 1783 had signed the treaty of peace with Great Britain after the Revolutionary War; John Jay, its second President, was one of the statesmen who shaped the foundations of the republic; John Quincy Adams, one of the first Vice-Presidents of the Society, lost no whit of his interest in its affairs when he became President of the United States; Richard Varick, the third President of the Society, like his two predecessors, was a personal friend of George Washington. The influence of these men at once commanded the confidence of the people, and this confidence has been maintained by the long line of distinguished men who have succeeded them as officers of the Society. The Secretaries of the Society have also been men of might. "A Secretary of the Bible Society," as was said when Dr. Brigham passed away, "is not a man who merely writes a few letters at different times. He is surrounded and aided by committees of the Board of Managers giving him counsel and sharing responsibility, but the Secretary must arrange, devise, project, and accomplish. He must supervise the many Agents and employees in all fields, in every district of this country and of the world. He must report, weigh, and interpret changes and events thruout the vast field, which has no limit save that of our own ability and capacity in possessing and cultivating it. On numberless occasions, public and private, he must have in mind facts of the Society's work with manifold details which are to be used for stimulating the indifferent, and informing churches. The tact, the patience, the gentleness, the

The Dutch Reformed Church, New York, in which the Bible Society was organized in the colloquial languages of England, Germany, Holland, Sweden and France in the same half-century, before important emigration to America began, made many of the common people familiar with the book. Later the wilderness of America became a safe asylum for oppressed lovers of the Bible, like the Puritans of England, the Quakers, the Scotch Presbyterians of Ulster, the German Mennonites who for a century "had been hounded up and down the country from Lake Geneva to the North Sea," the Swedes of Gustavus Adolphus, the Palatines of North Germany, the cultured Moravians, and the sturdy Huguenots of France. All these were men who had no "opinions"—only convictions; all belonged to nations whose people had received the Bible, and all carried their Bibles with them. The Bible pervaded civil laws and moral standards in the civilization set up by these refugees. It was not a mere coincidence that the people and the book came together in a suitable place, with the result that the Bible became the Book of the New World.

When the population spread westward many people settled in regions without church, preacher or Bible to keep afresh the sense of need of God. Christian men dreaded the permanent loss to the settlers and the nation which would surely follow. The hearts of individuals who longed to remedy this condition were heavy because no remedy seemed possible. Light came when the idea of Bible distribution, in sustaining which all denominations might unite, was copied from the British and Foreign Bible Society in societies formed in 1808, 1809 and succeeding years, at Philadelphia, New York, Boston and many other places. These eager local Bible societies did effective service, but difficulties of communication soon showed that combination only could effectively deal with the wide expanses of the destitute area.

The American Bible Society Organized

In May, 1816, representatives of thirty-five local Bible Societies in ten states met in New York City to consider some form of combined action. This Convention unanimously voted to form the American Bible Society, supervised its organization, and prescholarship and piety needed in the man who is invested with such an office can be imagined."

Clamorous Needs

The men of affairs composing the Board of Managers were overwhelmed by clamorous needs which waited at the door of the Convention. There was yet nothing in the treasury. The situation was as novel as it was difficult. Happily the generosity of two auxiliary societies in New York City supplied the Board with a set of stereotype plates of the English Bible, while the kind welcome of the British and Foreign Bible Society took practical form in a gift of plates for a Bible in French that might supply Louisiana. At the Society's tenth anniversary it reported that it had put into circulation 439,580 Bibles and Testaments in seven languages.

Aims Adopted

The Hon. R. C. Winthrop, of Massachusetts, in one of his Bible addresses said, "Diffuse the Bible and everything else will follow." This was an article of faith with the founders of the Society. The one aim was to make Jesus Christ known, thru His own words

The old and new City Hall, New York.

In the old City Hall the mass-meeting was held which ratified the organization of the Bible Society and His life upon earth, to the settlers flocking, like bees to a flower garden, into the vast regions of the Mississippi valley. That multitude, if left without Bibles, could not escape degeneration. To supply every family in that country which was destitute of the Holy Scriptures would permanently enrich the life of the Nation.

The first general supply of all destitute families was undertaken at the suggestion of the Monroe County (N. Y.) Auxiliary Society in 1829. The day when this decision was taken was a day of decision like the day in Old Testament history when Elisha tested King Joash by telling him to strike on the ground with the arrows. The king languidly struck three times and stayed his hand, and the prophet told him that if he had struck several times, he would have utterly defeated Syria, but because he had stayed his hand he could have only temporary success. The Board of Managers had reasons for hesitation. It had not the money to supply all the people of the land. It could not be sure of the help of all the auxiliaries in so great an undertaking. But it none the less made the momentous decision, believing that God would support the difficult enterprise. The decision was justified, and it fixed a habit of expecting help from God which led to repetitions of the undertaking in after years.

II. SERVING AMERICA

The United States in 1829 had a population of 13,000,000. In 1856 a second general supply was decided upon, the population being somewhat over 26,000,000. Ten years later, when the population of the United States had increased to 37,000,000 another general campaign for this purpose was organized, and in 1882 a fourth systematic supply of the destitute was taken in hand, the population being at that time 53,000,000. With such multitudes to reach, the task was appalling: This last "general supply" was finished in eight years, during which time 8,146,808 Bibles and Testaments in twenty-seven languages had been distributed. Since the supply of a growing country can never be finished, this supply of the destitute has now been made continuous thru the Home Agencies of the Society. In all these brilliant and dauntless campaigns for the home-land many families refused the Scriptures, by order of timid and pessimistic spiritual directors.

During the Civil War

In 1861 a Civil War became certain. The foundations of the Bible Society and other institutions were shaken, as one of the Secretaries at that time expressed it, "to their corner stones." The auxiliaries in the Southern states were broken up or refused to recognize relationship with the Society. In the border states many auxiliaries melted away, and part of the members going into the Southern, and part into the United States army. At the Bible House a beloved and efficient Secretary, the Rev. James H. McNeill, resigned when his state seceded, and became a field officer in the Southern forces. It was not long before a separate Bible society, called the Confederate States Bible Society, was organized in the South. In such an era of calamity it could not accomplish its objects, but Testaments which it issued and distributed in the Southern armies are preserved as precious relics in the libraries.

Bibles for Soldiers

In the North the Society and its auxiliaries labored without pause to supply soldiers passing to the front, for the soldier who has no portion of Scripture is not merely destitute of the Bible but destitute of its stimulus and comfort. Nor were the needs of the Southern troops ignored. During war, to write or send anything whatever to the enemy is treason. But in the Civil War the generals commanding on both sides, in the spirit of their ancestors, recognized the soldier's need of the Bible. Thru the Maryland Auxiliary and those in other border states, or by direct correspondence, the Society ascertained needs and its gifts of Scriptures for the Southern troops were allowed to pass the clashing lines under flag of truce, the two governments providing transportation whenever necessary. More than 300,000 volumes were sent to Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi, while all other intercourse was stopped. The episode was perhaps unique in the annals of war.

The Scriptures circulated by the Society in the United States army thru the good offices of the Christian Commission amounted to 1,466,848 volumes. During the four years of the war the issues from the Bible House reached a total of 5,297,832 volumes. Of course expenses were enormously increased, but by the kind providence of God money more than was needed came into the treasury, and the Society had no need to accept a generous offer of $10,000 from the British and Foreign Bible Society. The opening of the war had beset the hearts of the Managers and the executive officers of the Society with a foreboding such as oppresses the soldier as he marches toward a clash with hostile forces, knowing neither at what moment, in what place, nor in what guise the battle will open. But the promise, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be," was kept, and those who had almost fainted ended by singing praises, like the Psalmist who said, "I waited on the Lord, and He helped me."

Aborigines and Immigrants

An undertaking such as occupies the Society in the United States naturally includes grants of Scriptures to needy churches and Sunday-schools, to city missions, and very many evangelistic associations. It also includes supplies for several special classes of the population. Provision of the Bible for the blind in three separate systems of embossed letters has been a blessing to thousands who can only see with their fingers. From its first year the Society undertook to supply Scriptures to missionaries among the American Indians. The Delawareans, the Mohawks, the Ojibwas, the Senecas, the Cherokees, the Choctaws, and the Dakotas, or Sioux, all began their acquaintance with the Bible in the first quarter-century of the Society's history thru its expending considerable sums for printing in these strange languages of American aborigines. After the Civil War the four or five millions of newly-freed colored people formed another special class of the population and soon absorbed the energies of a special department. Millions of immigrants, alien in language, manners and beliefs, were landing on our coasts, in startling, and perhaps alarming numbers. The Society in this emergency brought into action a social force of wonderful power, able to unite the most diverse peoples in likeness to Jesus Christ, thru distribution of Scriptures in all languages. Many people then, as now, ridiculed the notion that mere circulation of the Bible can have appreciable influence upon the nation. So Goliath regarded as ridiculous David's equipment of pebbles and a sling. In each case the scornful critic did not realize the power of an enterprise carried on in the name of God and with his manifest direction. The book which we circulate is the one which has lighted our path and fed our souls. Each year of our passing on the light to others adds more proofs to belief in its power.

Present Methods and Means—The Home Agencies

Intermittent efforts to supply the destitute in our growing population would overlook many persons as helpless as the cripple at the troubling of the waters. The distribution has to be continuous. One of the great events of this Society's history was the Board's decision in 1907 to establish Agencies to supervise and steadily press the distribution of Scriptures in the United States—Agencies like the one there already at work for the colored people of the South, employing colporteurs continuously to seek out and supply all, whether citizens or immigrants, who are wholly without Scriptures. As a result of this great decision, 575 people were occupied during the past year with Bible distribution under the care of these Agencies in the United States. By all the means which the Society could devise it has issued for the growing population of the United States during ninety-nine years 68,828,334 Bibles, Testaments and separate portions in eighty-five different languages.

Some idea of the efficiency of the Home Agencies is given by the increase since their establishment in the circulation in the United States of the Holy Scriptures in English. In the year ending March 31, 1907, before the establishment of the eight Agencies, 682,692 volumes of Scriptures in English were circulated at home. Five years later, in 1912, the issues were 1,274,787 volumes, and during the eight years since these Agencies were established the issues in the United States in English have amounted in the aggregate to 9,120,440 volumes. How great a service the Agencies render to the immigrants is suggested by the number of Bibles Testaments and portions in the alien languages put into circulation in all parts of the United States during the same eight years. In eight of the principal languages of eastern and southeastern Europe the issues in the United States during that time were:

	Volumes
Greek	62,695
Croatian	55,215
Bohemian	71,287
Hungarian	81,007
Italian	386,263
Lithuanian	31,884
Polish	285,778
Russian	110,149

In the distribution of these Scriptures many devoted volunteers, many churches, many home missionaries of different denominations, and many auxiliaries and book and tract societies have had a part.

III. THE CALL ABROAD

Bible work for the United States was to American Christians like the expenditures of a congregation for its own pulpit and Sunday-school. Warm devotion to Christ naturally urged the Society to work in foreign lands, also. The Board of Managers in its earliest years, as tho in obedience to an audible command of the Master, began to make grants for Bible distribution abroad.

Europe

One of the earliest of these grants went to France to help pay for an edition of the New Testament in French. A little later the Bible Society of France received grants which have been continued almost every year up to the present time to help the printing operations of that struggling society. Other grants went to Russia, for the Lutherans of the Baltic provinces and for the exiles in Siberia. About 400,000 volumes of Scriptures in Esthonian, Finnish and Russian were circulated in that distant land up to 1886, when the Russian government stopped the distribution. One grant of $500 went to English missionaries who needed help in printing Scriptures in Mongolian for the Buriats of Lake Baikal. Another grant was sent to the Serampore Mission, where Carey, Marshman and Ward were printing their twenty-six versions for India. Small parcels of Scriptures were also sent by the hands of friends to the West Indies, Mexico, and different parts of South America.

Latin America

In the Society's first decade Latin America was adopted as a field for its neighborly solicitude. The South American republics were then struggling for independence from Spain. In 1825 Colombia, in the first joy of freedom, let two Bible societies be formed, one at Bogota and another at Caracas, both receiving grants of Scriptures from New York. A few years later two prominent statesmen of Bogota were elected Vice-Presidents of the American Bible Society. The hopes thus raised were soon dashed, however, by political strifes and ecclesiastical opposition to the general dissemination of the Bible.

Before permanent Bible Society Agencies were planted in Latin America, the Society had scattered 750,000 Bibles and Testaments by sale or gifts in the West Indies, Mexico, and many cities of South America on both the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts. Some of these shipments of Scriptures may have been like shots fired at a venture, yet some were later seen to have found a target; and it is worth noting that long before permanent American missions were opened there, the Society's expectant persistency prepared in many a district of the southern continent a way for the gospel preacher.

Since 1864 the Society has established five permanent Agencies at strategic points in Latin America, each maintaining colporteurs and having the co-operation of American missionaries and other Christian residents in Bible distribution. The record of the men sent with Bibles to this great, sparsely settled field resembles that of St. Paul in his daring journeys for Christ; adventures, oppositions, imprisonments, losses, even deaths by violence appear in the story. Thru the Agencies with their colporteurs and correspondents the Scriptures distributed in Latin America up to 1915 aggregate 4,266,644 volumes.

Serving American Foreign Missions

In 1832 an important principle respecting Bible distribution in foreign lands was fixed by a vote of the Society to the effect that the Society is under obligation to supply Scriptures to all American missions which ask the aid. While considering this action, as in every momentous question, many reasons weighed against it. The business sense of the Board of Managers, because the treasury was inadequately supplied, almost clashed with its missionary sense of an opportunity of large service which ought to be seized. It was only a small step forward—hardly a greater thing than the four-inch movement of a rail in a switch that decides whether a train shall go to Washington or to Chicago. Yet that decision of 1832 fixed the future of the Bible Society, and men afterwards understood that the decision was in accord with the will of God, and the natural development of the spirit of service. By grants of money for printing and distributing versions of Scriptures prepared by missionaries, the Society led in the early equipment of American missions in Turkey, Persia, India, Burma, China, South Africa and the Sandwich Islands.

Twelve Foreign Agencies

As the missions extended their work, missionaries, like the Apostles in the early Church, felt their duty to be evangelization; their time must not be occupied by the purely secular service of accounting for grants which they received. The appointment of permanent Bible Agents in the mission fields followed understanding of these facts. Besides the five Agencies in Latin America, the Society has seven permanent Agencies in Asia and its great island dependencies of Japan and the Philippines.

These Agencies are directed by picked men. One Agent, for instance, has charge of the Society's printing operations and Bible distribution in the whole vast expanse of China. The Agent in the Levant has to plan the printing of Scriptures in four or five different languages and their distribution over an area stretching from the Danube to the forks of the Nile at Khartoum, and from the Mediterranean to the Persian frontier. Every cent of money entrusted to Agents has to be accounted for as strictly as if they were mere bankers. So the Agents are men of God, able administrators, alert, resourceful, and accustomed to prolonged labor.

Colporteurs

The twelve Foreign Agencies of the Society direct 1,367 colporteurs and others, continually engaged in Bible distribution. Commercial travelers are proud of the firm for which they travel. These men are travelers for Christ—Christian men who are able to give a reason for their belief, who can endure hardships in long tours, and who go into danger, when necessary, with a confidence in God that is heroic. The total of Scriptures distributed in all foreign lands by the Society during ninety-nine years is 41,097,880 volumes, and the total cost to the Society of its labors abroad is something more than nine million dollars.

IV. PRODUCING BIBLES

In 1852 demands for Scriptures beyond the ability of the Society suggested that the time was ripe for a new advance of God's purpose that all men shall know Him. It opened before the Board of Managers visions of a splendid destiny. A Bible House in New York, covering three-quarters of an acre, sprang up under compulsion of that vision.

Bible House, New York

At the Bible House

In that plain brick building are the records of the Society's issues of Bibles, Testaments and portions of Scripture published during the century. The total issues in ninety-nine years is 109,926,214 volumes. Acceleration of the development of yearnings for God's Word appears in the fact that 55,662,502 volumes, or a little more than one-half of this total were issued since 1891. Thruout the whole of the ninety-ninth year of the Society issues from the Bible House have averaged sixteen volumes every minute of the working hours.

At the Bible House, also, are studied the problems of the translation of Scriptures, commonly by missionaries, and their adequate publication at the expense of the Bible Society. Twelve of the versions printed by the Society are in languages of the American Indians; eight are in tongues of the islanders of the Pacific; four have their unique home in Latin-America; seven are intelligible in Africa only. At the Bible House, too, have been printed Scriptures in five leading languages of Europe; namely, Spanish, Portuguese, French, German, Italian, besides Bulgarian and Estonian. Other versions are printed at the expense of the Society by the Agencies abroad. Eleven of the languages of the Philippine Islands are in this class.

Many Versions

A score or more of other versions which to Americans are mysteries of Asia, but which stand for much in the story of the awakening of the nations, are among those printed abroad at the expense of the Society. By help to early missionaries in India, the Society at a cost of some $250,000 indelibly impressed Christian ideas upon the Tamil, Telugu, Marathi, Urdu, Hindi, Junjabi, and Uriya languages. It gave $23,200 for the printing of Dr. Judson's version of the Scriptures in Burmese. Of the Armentan Version it has printed 500,000 volumes, thus furnishing directions and permanence to a great reform movement in Turkey. Dr. Gutzlaff's attempt at translating Scriptures into Japanese was aided by a grant from the Society to support his Japanese assistants; and after Japan was opened to the world the first translation of the whole New Testament into Japanese was brought out at the expense of the Society in 1880.

It is because of a vision of the important use which the Holy Spirit will make of multiplied copies of the Scriptures used in evangelistic work, that the Society rejoices to find issues during the year ending April 1, 1915, amounting to 6,406,323 volumes, of which 2,426,418 volumes were issued from the Bible House in New York, and 3,979,905 volumes from the Agencies of the Society abroad.

V. SOME RESULTS.

The nature of Bible work among the nations is shown in the reports of the American Bible Society. But just ideas of its extent would require reports of the twenty other Bible societies which unceasingly multiply copies in different languages. No space can be here given to the thrilling details; but the merest outlines are food for thought. The British and Foreign Bible Society, first among all its followers, in the year ending March 31, 1915, sent forth 10,162,413 volumes; the Scottish National Bible Society 2,762,616 volumes; and the American Bible Society 6,406,323 volumes.

Twenty-one Million

The aggregate issues of these three societies in the one year were 10,331,352 volumes. The eighteen other Bible societies (chiefly in Europe) which print Scriptures, according to the last reports received, issued in one year 1,584,816 volumes. The tremendous aggregate annual issues of all the Bible societies which print may be reckoned as over 21,000,000 volumes. These societies work as one for the simple object of increasing the circulation of the Bible and these startling figures show them to form the largest and most potent single agency that furthers the advance of the kingdom of Jesus Christ, in obedience to Christ's command to preach the Gospel to all nations.

A Century of Obedience. The Ubiquitous Book

But a century of obedience to that command has shown what the Almighty does when kings set themselves against His rule. Proud empires have been humbled, barriers have been broken down, doors are thrown wide open; Bible societies have carried the Book into all these lands, for every man in the tongue wherein he was born, and missionaries are everywhere expounding and illustrating its teachings by word and deed.

The Bible as a Missionary

The Rev. H. T. Chen, D.D., of Peking, China, is deeply impressed with the importance of the influence of the Bible circulated among the people. He says: "Thousands of copies of Scripture are distributed among the people every year. Multitudes having thus attained a little knowledge of the Saviour are induced to come to church to learn more about Jesus Christ, and consequently in many cases become Christians. Thus, thru the influence of the Bible many of the

Concluded on Page 7

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

May 21, 1916. Cantate Sunday

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

BLESSINGS OF PEACE

M. May 15. Peace with God. Rom. 5: 1-10.
T. May 16. Peace of God. Phil. 4: 6, 7.
W. May 17. Peace with men. Heb. 12: 14.
T. May 18. Peace and prosperity. Isa. 11: 1-10.
F. May 19. War and waste. Joel 2: 1-14.
S. May 20. Unselfishness the way. Matt. 20: 25-28.
Sun., May 21. Topic—The Blessings of Peace, and How to Get Them. John 14: 27.

Suggestions to the Leader

The present tumultuous state of the world suggests to us the blessing and need of peace. The peace of a nation depends primarily on the condition of her citizenship and the ambitions of her neighbors.

Only when we have peace within our own heart, and peace with God can we hope to be at peace with our fellowmen.

Have some one tell the history of the Peace Palace in the Hague. Have some other member, who is familiar with history tell of the great treaties of peace made by nations: The Treaty of Westphalia at the end of the Thirty Year War, the Treaty of Paris, at the close of the Revolutionary War; the Treaty of Versailles at the close of the German-French War, 1871; the close of our Civil War.

Then, in applying the descriptions, point out the great fact that Jesus Christ is the greatest factor in mankind that makes for peace. There can be no peace among individuals or nations if Jesus does not rule in the human heart.

Make this meeting an influence for peace among neighbors and associates, individuals and the citizenship at large. Jesus Christ is the peace of the heart.

The Topic Presented

1. What is peace? Peace is defined as harmony, concord, tranquility of mind and conscience. These are really symptoms, signs of peace, the effects of peace, but not peace itself. Harmony, concord, tranquility describe what are really normal conditions of mind and heart. They have become so uncommon that the re-establishment of such conditions is the object of social human endeavor. If harmony, concord, tranquility are normal conditions, then they must find their source in a perfect condition of human life. Where human life is not developing normally, where interruptions and disturbances have occurred, there abnormal conditions must ensue, which we call strife, disturbance, discord, etc.

These are the pain in the mental and spiritual organism of man.

Peace is therefore growth and development. It implies activity and must never be substituted for indolence, indifference, carelessness, thoughtlessness, which are but the symptoms of stagnation of mind and soul. Peace is possible even tho the body, mind and heart be afflicted with growing-pains. It is not incompatible with enmity of evil, fight with evil, a struggle for righteousness. God's kingdom has ever been aggressive, and aggressiveness must always overcome opposition. Such opposition fits in with this definition of peace, a condition in which the perfect development of man is possible.

2. How can such a condition of peace be secured? In the Old Testament God gave His law. This law was not the expression of a capricious will, but the way to perfect life because the objects of the law met the inner needs of man.

However, the law proved to be a taskmaster, because it appealed primarily to man's will, and offered Him no means of strengthening that will. But nevertheless the law became a teacher, because it kept before the mind of the people the ideal conduct which some day would be realized.

Jesus Christ came into the world. He was the life and light of mankind. Thru Him perfect life has been established, and His sacrifice opened the way to that perfect life. He who thru the indwelling of the Spirit of Jesus Christ seeks the true life, must experience the peace that passeth beyond all understanding. But this condition presupposes a perfect surrender on our part to the will and mastery of God, a complete union with Jesus Christ who, dwelling in us perfects our conditions. Henceforth not we are masters of our actions, but Christ. His presence will effect activity in establishing the reign of Jesus, opposition to all evil, but this strife is but a sign of healthy growth, of normal development.

3. What is the result of the rule of sin? If the rule of Jesus Christ bring about perfection and the harmonious development of all our faculties, then sin, opposition to God's rule, the rebellion against the mastery of Jesus Christ must effect the opposite result. Jesus' indwelling produces the perfect life,—peace,—sin produces the incomplete, decadent life,—strife, disharmony, decadence of power and faculties. War with sin is a process of elimination, of hindering and obstructing elements, but war with Jesus Christ is an absorbing of the poisons of our being, a gradual destruction of all life, ending in spiritual death.

Christ gives His peace. Like His death, the imparting of His personality is a voluntary act on His part, a gift that is not earned, a faculty which we cannot will.

Christ is the Prince of Peace. His kingdom is peace, because it brings the perfect, abundant life to all who would become His subjects. There is no road to peace except the one that leads thru His kingdom.

Some Questions on the Topic

What is peace? What does peace effect?
How can it be secured?
What is the peace of Jesus Christ?
How does Christ's peace differ from the peace of the world?
What kind of strife and turmoil does Jesus' peace not eliminate?
How can we preserve peace among each other?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Gen. 45: 24; Psalm 34: 14; 133: 1; Prov. 15: 17; 17: 1, 14; 20: 3; Isaiah 2: 4; Matt. 5: 9; 10: 21, 22; Mark 9: 50; Luke 2: 14; Acts 7: 26-29; 1 Cor. 14: 33; 2 Co. 13: 11; 1 Thess. 5: 13; 1 Peter 3: 10, 11.

A Prayer

Thou Father art the God of all peace. From Thee comes abundant life, and Thou alone canst guide men in attaining that abundant life. In our frailties and shortcomings we seek to walk paths of our choosing. Our sins lead us into strife and discord, quarrels and dissensions. Show us the way to peace, O Father, that comfort and harmony may come into our lives. May our friendships be true, our neighboring be more helpful, our associations with others conducive to peace and understanding. Help us to show others the way to Jesus Christ, whose rule in our hearts alone can assure peace, because it destroys selfishness, and assures loving, helpful service. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson Material for the second year: New Testament Studies—the Messianic and the Apostolic Eras.

Second Quarter

May 14. The Light of the World. John 8: 12-20.
May 21. The Seventy Sent Forth. Luke 10: 1-24.
May 28. The Problem of Suffering. John 9: 1-12.
June 4. Praying in Jesus' Name. Luke 11: 1-13.
June 11. Raised from the Dead. John 11: 20-44.
June 18. The Coming of the Kingdom. Luke 17: 20-37.

Optional Lessons

Pentecost Lesson—The Power of Pentecost. Acts 2: 14-38.

Lesson 8. The Light of the World

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

M. May 15. John 8: 12-20. Jesus the Light of the World.
T. May 16. John 8: 21-29. Faith in Him Essential.
W. May 17. John 8: 30-40. True Freedom in the Son.
T. May 18. John 8: 41-49. Children of God or of the Devil.
F. May 19. John 8: 50-59. Jesus Conquers Death.
S. May 20. 1 John 1: 5-10. Walk in the Light.
S. May 21. Rev. 21: 23-27. The Lamp of the New Jerusalem.

Lesson Key:—"In Him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in the darkness; and the darkness apprehended it not," John 1: 4-5.

It was not an accident that God's first creative word was "Let there be light!" It was an absolute essential to every form of life. No fully developed life can exist in perpetual darkness. What life does exist without sufficient light is stunted and transient. There is a stimulus to life in abundant light that is essential to all normal growth and fruitage.

The same law holds good in the realm of spiritual things. Just as physical life requires a sufficient amount of physical light, the higher life of the soul needs intellectual and moral light, which is truth, and spiritual light, which is holiness. The fullness of light is God, the source and beginning of every kind of light, as He is the source and beginning of every kind of life. As the fountain and embodiment of all light the Catechism describes God as "true, omniscient, all-wise, holy, omnipotent, just." He is truth itself and certainly does fulfill all His promises and threats. He sees all, hears all and knows all, the past, the present and the future, and He discerns everything as it is. He orders and directs all things to His own glory and the salvation of Man. In His being and in His will He is good and pure; therefore He loves only that which is good and pure, but judges and condemns that which is evil. All things are made and sustained by Him; He can do and create whatsoever He will. He is just in all His ways. He rewards the good and punishes the evil. In His law and in all His dealings with men God has revealed himself thus to men from the very beginning, and the prophets have pictured Him as such to their people.

In the fullness of time Jesus Christ came and dwelt among men and revealed himself as the light of the world. In His person God's light was shown to men and all its heavenly power and glory, so that all who saw Him might recognize and accept its truth and purity. On the feast of Tabernacle, which commemorated the blessings of God shown to Israel during the pilgrimage thru the wilderness and always attracted many visitors to Jerusalem, He used the pillar of fire that guided Israel in its wanderings, as an apt illustration of the way in which He would be to men the light of the world. The pillar of fire was to Israel by night what the sunlight was by day, and the life and the message of Jesus Christ means to the spiritual world what sunlight means to the world of nature. Just as a sunless world would be a dark, cold, dead, cheerless world, so a Christless world would necessarily be an evil, loveless, lifeless, hopeless world, without all that makes life here on earth worth the living.

The light means the fullness of life to the world, its effect differs greatly according to the objects which it reaches. The living plant absorbs the light of the sun and as a result grows in size, strength and fruitage, while the dead plant repels it and decays. The same sunlight awakens the beautiful lily in the garden, ripens the fruit of the autumn, and grows the poison ivy of the forest and the malaria of the swamp-land. Under the trees of the same forest all sorts of birds find shelter together during the night. But in the morning, as soon as the sun sends forth his rays, some close their eyes and seek the darkest retreat, while others flap their wings and joyously salute the sun with their songs.

Dead plants cannot, of course, receive the light of the sun as do the living ones, neither have the poisonous plants or the stagnant waters any choice in the matter. But man is a free moral agent and each one of us can choose whether he will receive or reject the light that is risen upon the world in Jesus Christ. "Everyone that doeth evil, hateth the light, but he that doeth the truth cometh to the light," John 3: 9-22. There is always a reason for the attitude one takes towards Christ. The Jews of Jerusalem rejected Christ not because they could not comprehend His meaning, but because they did not want to accept the truth He taught and lived. They would not receive Christ because they did not want to surrender their selfishness and worldly ambitions. They loved rather the darkness than the light because their ways were evil. Those who accept Christ do so because they desire His light and His life. They walk in the light because they desire to be cleansed from all sin thru the blood of Christ.

The choice is up to you, dear reader. What shall it be?

The Bible the Book of the Nations

Concluded from Page 6

people become members of the Church. It is not too much to say that in many places the influence of the Bible is first felt, and that Bible sellers are the first preachers the people hear. The workers of the Bible Society are co-operating with us in a remarkably harmonious way. They lead the van, we follow; they sow the seed and we reap the harvest. In order best to carry on evangelistic work in China it is vi-

50% Great Cash Bargain Offer 50%

Until July First

Any book or books listed below we will send you postpaid if ordered before July First at just one Half of the List Price. In this list we quote the regular publisher's (mostly net) prices, you deduct 50%, send us the money and we agree to mail or express the books selected prepaid.

The copies offered are all in a first-class condition and are not cheap re-prints. A few copies might be slightly shopworn.

Because of limited quantities these prices are good only on our present stock and it is advisable to send your orders at once.

If possible make second and third choice when ordering.

If we cannot fill your order we will return your money, unless otherwise stated.

50% BARGAINS!!!

Cash must accompany order as we can positively not enter these Bargains on account

Bartoli, Giorgio. The Primitive Church and the Primacy of Rome. 284 pages. Cloth.....	$1.50
Black, J. The Pilgrim Ship. An Allegory of the Church and the Soul. 359 pages. Cloth....	1.50
Breed, D. R. Preparing to Preach. 455 pages. Cloth	2.00
Broadus, J. A. A Treatise on the Preparation and Delivery of Sermons. 562 pages. Cloth	1.50
Carus-Wilson. The Expansion of Christendom. A study in religious History. 338 pages. Cloth	1.50
Chadwick, W. E. Christ and everyday Life. 203 pages. Cloth.....	1.25
Dargan, E. C. History of Preaching. 2 vols. Cloth	4.00
The Day that changed the World. By the Man who was warned. A narrative. 289 pages. Cloth	1.25
Deismann, Ad. St. Paul. A Study in social and religious History. With an entirely new map of the world as known to St. Paul. 316 pages. Cloth	3.50
Denney, James. The Church and the Kingdom. 160 pages.....	.35
Dobschuetz, Ernst von. The Eschatology of the Gospels. 207 pages. Cloth. Net.....	1.25
Dods. The Prayer that teaches to pray. 176 pages. Boards.....	.40
Drummond. The Life of Henry Drummond. By G. A. Smith. 541 pages. Cloth.....	1.00
Fleming, D. H. The Reformation in Scotland. 666 pages.....	3.00
Forsyth, P. T. Marriage, its Ethics and Religion. 152 pages.....	1.25
— The Work of Christ. 244 pages. Cloth....	1.50
— The Principle of Authority in Relation to Certainty, Sanctity and Society. 475 pages. Cloth	2.50
Garvie, A. E. The Christian Certainty amid the modern Perplexity. 475 pages.....	2.00
Hinton, J. The Mystery of Pain. A Book for the Sorrowful. 148 pages. Cloth.....	.35
Jones, J. D. The Hope of the Gospel. 312 pages	1.50
Kelman, John. Thoughts on Things eternal (Ephemerata eternitas). A book of short studies in life here and here-after, arranged for the Sundays of the Christian year. 340 pages. Cloth.....	1.50
Kilpatrick, T. B. New Testament Evangelism. 313 pages. Cloth.....	1.25
King, H. C. Theology and the social Consciousness. A Study of the Relations to Theology. 252 pages. Cloth.....	.50
Latimer, R. S. With Christ in Russia. 239 pages	1.00
Lees, H. The Sunshine of the Good News. 218 pages. Cloth.....	1.25
Mackay, W. M. The Man in the Street and the other Bible Types of modern Men. 324 pages. Cloth	1.50
Mason, A. de Witt. Outlines of missionary History. 338 pages with index. Cloth.....	1.50
Orr, J. Sin as a Problem of To-day. 324 pages. Cloth	1.50
— The Faith of a modern Christian. 240 pages	1.50
Ramsay, W. M. The Revolution in Constantinople and Turkey. Cloth.....	3.75
Ryder, A. R. The Priesthood of the Laity. Historically and critically considered. 286 pages. Cloth	1.50
Sclater, J. R. P. The Enterprise of Life. Addresses mostly to those who stand at the Beginning of the Enterprise. 371 pages. Cloth	1.50
Simpson, J. Y. The spiritual Interpretation of Nature. 383 pages. Cloth.....	1.50
Smith, D. The historic Jesus. Being the Elliot Lectures delivered in the Western Theol. Seminary, Pittsburgh. 128 pages. Cloth....	1.00
Spurgeon, C. H. Treasury of David. 7 volumes. Cloth	7.00
Young, D. T. The unveiled Evangel. 212 pages. Cloth	1.25
Banks, L. A. The World's Childhood. Sermons on Themes drawn from the first three chapters of Genesis. 363 pages. Cloth.....	1.30
Bornemann, D. W. Jesus as a Problem — Teacher — Personality — Force. 237 pages. Cloth	1.00
Brain, B. M. Holding the Ropes. Missionary Methods for Workers at Home. Cloth.....	1.00
Bryan, W. J. The Prince of Peace. A Lecture. 63 pages. Boards.....	.30
— The Price of a Soul. A Lecture. 72 pages. Boards30
Burrell, D. J. The Lure of the City. 22 chapters devoted to the young man who is just leaving the rural home to take up life in the city. Cloth	1.00
Comstock, A. Traps for the Young. With Descriptions and Warnings. 257 pages. Cloth	1.00
Cooper, C. S. The Bible and Modern Life. 208 pages. Cloth.....	1.00
Farrar, J. M. A Junior Congregation. Special Talks to the future Men and Women of the Church. Cloth.....	1.20
Gregg, D. H. Between the Testaments or Inter-biblical History. 124 pages. Cloth.....	.75
Hervey, G. W. Manual of Revivals. Practical Hints and Suggestions. 360 pages. Cloth..	1.25
Mac Donald. Mind, Religion and Health. Cloth	1.30
Norden, Van C. Jesus an unfinished Portrait. 295 pages. Cloth.....	1.00
Pierson, A. T. Forward Movements of the last half Century. Philanthropic, missionary and spiritual movements of the past 50 years. 428 pages.....	1.50
— The Miracles of Missions or Modern Marvels in the History of Missionary Enterprise. 4 vols. Cloth.....	4.00
— Seed Thoughts for Public Speakers. Over 500 suggestive and illustrative paragraphs for the use of Preachers and other public Speakers. 361 pages. Cloth.....	1.50
Pierson, D. L. The Pacific Islanders from Savages to Saints. 354 pages. Cloth.....	1.00
Rankin, J. C. The Coming of the Lord. 83 pages. Cloth75
Robert, Richard. The High Road to Christ. A popular Essay in Re-Statement. Sermons. 171 pages. Cloth.....	1.00
Scott and Stiles. Cyclopedia of Illustrations for Public Speakers. Containing facts, incidents, etc. for illustrative purposes. With cross-references. 836 pages. Cloth.....	5.00
Stall, S. Bible Selections for daily Devotion, also for Church Festivals and other Occasions. 686 pages. Cloth.....	.75
Stevenson, J. G. Religion and Temperament. A popular Study of their Relations, actual and possible. 323 pages. Cloth.....	1.25
Thomas, K. J. Personal Power. A Book for mental development. 304 pages. Cloth.....	1.75
Wallace, A. R. Social Environment and moral Progress. 181 pages. Cloth.....	1.25
Wells, A. R. That they may all be one. Unification of Denominations etc. 209 pages. Cloth..	.75

St. Louis, Mo.

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

Chicago, Ill.

tally necessary that we should co-operate with the Bible Society."

Seed and Fruit

A few days ago the Emperor of Japan gave $1,500 to the Christian "Doshisha" University in token of appreciation of its work. It is worth while to recall the seed of which that University is the fruit. Some fifty years ago a young Japanese of Yedo, named Neesima, came across a Chinese Bible in the house of a friend. The very first verse of Genesis won his assent to its doctrine of God. His friend told him that the book came from the Bible Society of America. Neesima had never seen a missionary, but from reading the Bible he was led to decide that he must go to America to learn more about God. According to his own story, when he landed in Boston after a long, long voyage in a sailing vessel, he uttered this prayer: "Oh God! if Thou hast eyes, please look on me. Oh God! if Thou has ears, please hear me. I want to read the Bible and be civilized by the Bible!" God heard his prayer. The owner of the ship which brought him to Boston was a member of the Prudential Committee of the American Board. He helped Neesima to learn of Jesus Christ and to get an education in order to teach young men in Japan. In due time the American Board helped him give expression to the longing of his heart. The Doshishi College was founded with Neesima as its principal, and has prospered and grown exceedingly. Neesima is dead, but the Doshisha is his memorial which the Emperor of Japan has delighted to honor.

The story of Neesima is but one of thousands illustrating what the Bible is doing among the nations. In China, Korea, Turkey, the Philippines, Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, and among the immigrants in our homeland, Bibles or Testaments left by the Bible colporteurs in some unspiritual Sahara have proved in scores of cases the seed of living, active congregations. The French Academician De Tocqueville, in 1831, visited a Sunday-school in one of our country districts where he observed with surprise that each child had a Testament and knew how to use it. After leaving the building he said, "What a mighty effect this system must have upon the character of the nation!" In India, pagans and Mohammedans testify to the same effect by vying with each other in attempts to prove that their decrepit religious systems were meant to teach the kindly regard for the poor and afflicted which is found in the Bible. In Turkey, eighty years of Bible distribution have so affected the nation that Mohammedans defend their conduct by unconscious appeals to Christian standards of ethics.

The Rev. Dr. Rufus Anderson, Secretary of the American Board, in addressing the American Bible Society on its fiftieth anniversary, said, "The effect of Bible distribution (in pagan lands) is like the lighting of Central Park in New York. The night is not converted into day; the distant bystander sees no perceptible impression made upon the darkness, but the traveler in the park, finding his path illuminated, goes on his way rejoicing." The Bible has everywhere become its own unanswerable argument against attack. By the simple effort to increase circulation of the Scriptures the Bible societies bring from all nations a thousand proofs of the living power of the written Word and set them before the eyes of all who have eyes to see, that God may be exalted.

A Beckoning Task

Notwithstanding a century of labor, the task of the Bible societies is not finished, nor can it be duly advanced unless Bible distribution keeps pace with mission expansion. That army is already defeated whose ammunition trains are empty. All denominations of Christians should know that the Bible societies are their own, and entitled to their unceasing gifts and prayers as much as are their own denominational missionary societies.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716-18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 5

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., MAY 18th, 1916

NUMBER 20

Promoting International Friendship

"We believe it is time for the Christian Church to speak and act in strength and assurance of a deep and full loyalty to Jesus Christ." These are the opening words of the declaration made by the American Council of the World Alliance for promoting International Friendship thru the Churches, whose first National conference was held at Garden City, L. I., April 25-27. The Council consists of 250 of the most prominent Christian leaders and citizens of the country, of whom about 150 were present at the meeting. None of the members were officially appointed by their respective communions, but in their denominational affiliations they represented forty denominations with a church membership of more than 23,000,000.

There was no particular discussion of the questions of "military preparedness," or "anti-preparedness." In regard to their issue diverse views occasionally came to the surface. But all were agreed that the permanent peace of the world ultimately depends on the development in many nations of a "spirit of goodwill and brotherhood" and that it is the special work of the Church "to make all men believe that the Gospel of love and faith and hope is practical, the only practical way of life for men and nations." Loyalty to the Kingdom of God" was declared to be "supreme above all loyalties." The special and essential contribution of the Church and of Christians to "preparedness" for permanent peace is not physical but moral and spiritual.

Besides a varied array of addresses from distinguished Church men, there were reports of conditions in Europe by Dr. Chas. S. Macfarland, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, and Prof. B. F. Battin, of Swarthmore College, Swarthmore, Pa., who for two years has been the agent of this church Alliance for International Friendship in forming similar groups in the continental countries of Europe. In spite of the hostilities branch councils have been established in Germany, France, Denmark, Holland, Italy, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland, and Prof. Battin has succeeded in holding a council of delegates from England and all these countries, except France, in the neutral city of Berne, Switzerland. Prof. Battin thinks he has paved the way for a hearty spirit of reconciliation among the church people of all belligerent countries when peace returns to Europe.

To aid in this highly important and highly difficult work every communion and denomination in the United States is invited to establish a Peace Makers' Commission, if it does not already have one, in order to enter thus into close affiliation and practical co-operation with the American Council of the World Alliance. Every local congregation also is invited to connect itself with this world movement by establishing its own Peace Makers' Committee. The service which these Committees can render is unique and essential.

The main executive outcome of the conference was the adoption of a resolution providing that immediate steps be taken to organize a delegation of outstanding Church leaders of America, who should hold themselves in readiness to proceed to Europe as soon as peace negotiations are initiated in order to convene there a reconciliation conference appealing to the Christians of all lands now at war. Meanwhile it is believed that thru Prof. Battin's efforts similar delegations can be formed in all the lands that he has touched, and that just as soon as an armistice is declared these deputations can be brought together to receive the American visitors and to join them in efforts to awaken the spirit of international Christian brotherhood. For information regarding this movement and the work proposed for Peace Makers' Committees, inquiries should be sent to Rev. Sidney L. Gulick, 105 East 22d Street, New York City.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Federal Council the week before that at Garden City Dr. Macfarland had presented a lengthy report of his recent quiet and unofficial visit to the Church leaders in all the countries now at war. While the citizens of these countries have apparently lost none of their faith in the justice of their particular national cause, the thought seems to be spreading that their enemies are honest men, following duty as duty is seen from an opposite view-point. As a result Dr. Macfarland thinks that the bitterness of feeling that characterized the beginning of hostilities is rapidly toning down, and that, when the time comes for peace negotiations, and after peace has been consummated, these sentiments will greatly aid in the international reconciliation.

It is interesting to note that Dr. Macfarland found abroad a "certain degree of contempt" for Amer-

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Suffer, if you must; do not quarrel with the dear Lord's appointments for you. Only try, if you are to suffer, to do it splendidly. That's the only way to take up a pleasure or a pain. —Phillips Brooks.

ica because of the feeling among the European nations that "Yankee greed" sees in the present anguished condition of these nations hardly more than a grand opportunity to make money. We have always contended that the European nations have had far more reason for such a feeling than Americans should have given them, and we doubt very much whether such a feeling could be offset by greatly increased contributions to for the relief of war sufferings, as Dr. Macfarland suggests. Even if it were possible to give for this purpose all the enormous profits that have been coined from the export of war supplies, the offering would be tainted by the ineradicable stain of its origin. The fact that the Churches of America have raised no protest against America's participating in the unholy gain from the manufacture of munitions and war supplies has greatly diminished if it has not destroyed America's opportunity for ministering to Europe's spiritual needs. The spirit of Christian ministry is unselfish, and Americans cannot consistently help to minister unselfishly as long as America is helping to destroy life for the sake of selfish gain.

How can the Christian take Part in Politics?

There can be no doubt that the Christian should be in politics. There is absolutely no warrant for the idea that those who devote themselves to things religious are thereby excused from having anything to do with secular things, as we call them. In fact, there is no such dividing line, as Jesus clearly indicated when He said, "Render therefore unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." To Him life was one indivisible inextricably mixed mass of duties and responsibilities that could not be "unscrambled" without injury to all of them. If politics in the United States are corrupt it is because they have been left to the management of corrupt people. If the Christian citizens of the country were to take the part in politics that justly belongs to them all the corruption that can be found in American politics would vanish in a year. In a democracy being in politics is a patriotic duty which it is actually treasonable to shirk.

In the light of this thought the practical side of the question, i. e., just how the Christian citizen should take part in politics, becomes a matter of great importance. And the question cannot be answered offhand. If it were merely a matter of a certain party, platform or program the thing would be simple enough. There are those who are in politics for the love of the "game." They believe in the principles of their party, and their political convictions are to them almost as sacred as their religious beliefs. The victory of their party means the salvation of the country, and the man who deserts his party is like unto Benedict Arnold. Because party success means everything to them they love the excitement of the struggle in every election campaign and their decision as to what their part shall be is easily and quickly reached. Your practical politician, however, is in politics for what he can get out of it for himself, and he balks at no method that promises to give him control of the spoils. Platforms, parties and principles are of little moment, and he works for the candidate that gives the biggest share of profit, even if he belongs to the opposite party. For them too the question of how to take part in politics is easily settled.

The Christian, however, is in politics for a very different reason and to a very different purpose. He has moral principles rather than political convictions, and he seeks not his own selfish gain but the welfare of the community and the glory of God. His aim is not primarily the success of any party, platform or candidate, but the destruction of evil and of wrong conditions and the establishment of righteousness and justice in the interest of the ultimate triumph of the rule of God over all the affairs of men. If he is fully consecrated to his Lord he will be in the struggle just as passionately as the party follower and with just as much determination as the practical politician, but he will have to choose different methods. He will not tie himself down to any political party, for partisan politics may lead him very far astray from the things he wants done. He will not follow any leader, for political leaders are but human and have often betrayed the very principles for which they were supposed to stand. His primary duty will be to stand firmly for the principles of righteousness and justice which he has come to regard as the will of God and the spirit of Jesus Christ under the conditions and circumstances with which he may have to deal. In accordance with these principles he will have to select his candidate and his party as the means best suited to attain the desired end. Having done this it will be his duty to persuade as many of his friends and acquaintances as possible that in this election this is the candidate and the party to support, because they promise most for the things Christians want most to see done.

In doing this he will of course come into contact with persons of opposite convictions, and will probably learn a great many unpleasant facts and expose himself to the gossip and the slander of those who are seeking private profit. He may be in danger of losing his standing in the community, his business and even his reputation may suffer, because of the things for which he stands. Friendliness, tact and good sense may mitigate many of these things, but no Christian ought to fear the price that may have to be paid for standing up for the will of God and His rule in all the affairs of men. If the Christian is to be in politics he must be there with the same firmness and fearlessness that characterized his Lord in other things. To be disloyal to Christian ideals and principles in politics is just as serious a matter as it is to be disloyal in one's personal life.

Trust in God Means Safety

"Jehovah is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? Jehovah is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" Psa. 27: 1.

As the "hymn-book of the Hebrew people" the book of psalms reflected every aspect of their spiritual life. It had grown out of the experience of the faithful under all kinds of circumstances and conditions, and it held comfort and consolation for every mood and every situation. It pictured the blessedness of the righteous and the destruction of the wicked, so that the righteous might take heart amid many discouragements, and the wicked might be warned to turn from their evil ways. It asserted the greatness of Jehovah as the ruler of the earth, so that His people might take new hope in spite of the apparent victory of His enemies. And the beauty and joy of fellowship with Jehovah is shown to be great and satisfying enough to outweigh even the fear of death or the secret plottings of enemies. In Psalm 27 Jehovah is shown to be great and powerful enough to protect those who depend upon Him even in the midst of the greatest adversities. Because those who fear Jehovah do not selfishly insist on their "rights," but are rather inclined to be meek and humble and patient, the world is tempted to consider them cowardly. But the knowledge that Jehovah is with them and back of them makes them brave and fearless even under the most discouraging circumstances.

The very names here given to Jehovah, "light," "salvation," strength—or stronghold—"of my life," seem to tell of some period of darkness or danger through which the writer has passed, of some powerful, plotting enemy that is still seeking to destroy him. Only one who is actually in danger, who has been or is threatened on all sides, and who has gained a victory only because Jehovah helped him do it, could speak, as the author of this psalm does, of evil-doers who came to eat up his flesh, of hosts that encamp against him, and of wars that arise against him. If, as the inscription seems to say, the psalm is actually from the hand of David, it would fit very closely into that stirring experience of the shepherd king's life, when Goliath rushed at the young Hebrew lad and boasted that he would give his flesh to the fowls of the air and to the beasts of the field, 1 Sam. 17: 41-48. It is not at all improbable that when David was a fugitive before Saul the remembrance of his victory over Goliath should have cheered and comforted him, just as that of his earlier prowess over bear and lion heartened him to face the Philistine bully. Indeed, such recollections would seem all the more natural since Saul's hatred had been born of the jealousy Saul had felt because of the fame which that feat had brought to the slender, untrained shepherd boy. There could be no doubt that the same God who had protected him then and given him the victory over the enemy of his people, would still be his light in any hour of darkness, his salvation in any kind of trouble, and his stronghold against any kind of attack from any source whatever. With a God of such power to fall back upon there was no reason for fear.

Few of us remember at the right time that our fears and anxieties in the face of many troubles are merely signs of our little faith. We see only the things against which we must contend, and they seem so large and overwhelming that there is apparently no chance at all for the poor or weak resistance we have to offer. Like Elisha's servant, 2 Kings 6: 15-17, we see only the host that surrounds the city and cry, "Alas, my master! how shall we do?" but fail to understand that those that are with us are more than those against us. We see only the discouragements, the weaknesses, the difficulties, the depressing and trying conditions that make it so hard for us to be what we should like to be or do what we should like to do. Some thorn in the flesh saps our strength and energy until life seems unprofitable and almost worthless; the indifference and indolence, or even the hostility, of this or that person on whom we had counted to help do great things seem to render our own best efforts practically useless; the prince of darkness, with the injustice, falsehood, greed and wickedness that has always characterized his sway, seems to be having everything his own way, as though there were no God of love, truth and righteousness.

All this is hard to bear and still harder to understand, unless our eyes have been opened to see the invisible forces of Jehovah encamping round about them that fear Him. If we could only always be as sure of going forward in the name of Jehovah the God of hosts as David was when he went out to meet Goliath, we might be just as fearless as he was and just as sure of gaining the victory. What made John and Peter and Paul, Luther, Calvin and Knox and all the men of God of all ages strong and courageous to face the great tasks before them was the fact that their eyes of faith were open to see the horses and chariots of fire round about them. That made them brave and fearless in the face of the greatest odds and the fiercest opposition and helped them win the day where defeat seemed inevitable.

If we can be as sure of being on God's side as David was; if we are sure that we want to be and to do only what is God's will for us we may be just as sure that He is our light, our salvation and our stronghold in the small every-day affairs of our life as He was the light, the salvation and the stronghold of His greatest servants in the most important affairs of His kingdom. The consciousness of being with God always inspires courage, confidence and patience, and no one who ever depended upon Him in faith and obedience was ever disappointed. Discouragement and defeat is only for those who do not depend on Jehovah.

His Missionary Dollar

BY SALLY CAMPBELL

PART II

The room was a flare of light. Jimmy's ear caught the click of balls, but his gaze passed more insistently to the tables in the corners, where the card-players played their noiseless game.

He slid down to the ground and, turning the corner of the house, almost ran into a man who stood hesitating before it.

"Ah, here you are!" said Richard Heath. "This is the right number then."

It took Jimmy an instant to recall the facts. In recounting the adventure with zest to his friends he had explained his motive in appointing a rendezvous, as the kind one of showing Richard the sights of the city.

"How is your brother?" inquired Richard.

"My brother is—gone West on a farm. There wasn't any other hope for him. He started two days ago."

It was a promising beginning.

"I got his medicine out of your money. Then enough was left over to buy him a Testament and a hymn book. There's good reading in a hymn book. Jack and I are fond of good reading."

Richard's black eyebrows drew together.

"What is your favorite hymn?" he demanded dryly.

"We haven't any favorite. We like them all. It's hard on a boy to lose the only brother he's got and maybe never see him again, but when all the Testament and hymn book there was between them goes, too, it's worse yet. I suppose you wouldn't let me have the cost of a couple more, would you?"

"No," said Richard. "So you cheated me? You cheated me and the other fellow."

"I guess that was about it," said Jimmy. "But don't worry. When anyone comes to town for the first time he is bound to learn a few things. A dollar for a lesson ain't high; a good many pay considerable more."

While he spoke he was edging away. But Richard followed.

"Why did you tell me to come here where you live?" he asked.

"Because I thought you'd ought to get your money's worth. Just knock at the door and say Jimmy Banks sent you to Muldoon's, and in ten minutes you'll have more to remember than is on all the picture postals you've collected in all your travels."

Jimmy came back a few steps as two men opened the door of Mr. Muldoon's badly lighted hall and came into the street.

"Do you see them?" he whispered while they walked rapidly away into the night. "The small one is the dinkiest card-player in the city. The stakes are his every time. Maybe it's luck and maybe it's not. But if it isn't nobody can say so for sure; he hasn't ever been caught. And all the time he looks as if he'd got the blinds up and the windows open, airing out the place. Oh, I tell you, Meeks is great!"

The vexation on Richard Heath's face faded.

"What a poor little tough you are!" he exclaimed.

With a shrug of disdain Jimmy marched off once more.

"Downtown here in these streets," he called back, "we haven't a chance to keep fresh. As soon as we can talk we don't talk mush. The other fellow knows it unless he is a new hand, and then he must learn. We have to think for ourselves. We can't think of him."

"I am sorry for you," Richard made answer promptly. "Thinking of the other fellow is the best of life."

Richard had walked about a square from the tenement that held Muldoon's when he was stopped by an outstretched hand.

"Will you give me a quarter?" asked the man to whom the hand belonged. "I am starved."

"I haven't the quarter," said Richard. "Besides, I have just found myself tricked out of money by a youngster who laughed at me for a tenderfoot. But I don't own a loose penny."

"It is the first time I have begged since I was 12 years old," said the man. "I don't like it. There is nothing for me to do but to go back to my trade."

"What is your trade?" asked Richard.

"Cards."

Instinctively Richard glanced over his shoulder.

Albert Hinkle laughed sneeringly. "If you know where Muldoon's is, maybe you are not such a tenderfoot after all. I guess I am one myself. I thought I was never, never going to Muldoon's any more if I lived a hundred years. That was a month ago, and I am on my way straight there now. It isn't so much hunger as"—he paused with a gesture of impatience. "In five minutes I'll be drawing up to a table and leaving the last month and all the muddle I have made of it behind me."

"It isn't so much hunger," quoted Richard, "'as'—what?"

After a moment of indecision Albert yielded to the desire to unburden his mind.

"Listen, then," he said. "Not far from Muldoon's there's a church. It's an old place. One pouring night I went in to get where it was dry, and the man at the front began to pray. I had heard praying before, of course, at the Association and the gospel prayer meetings, and one place and another. But this was different. This man was old. He was very quiet and plain. He wasn't wordy. I don't know," Albert interrupted himself to ask, "whether you go in for such things as church?"

"Yes," replied Richard briefly.

"This preacher prayed as if the One he spoke to was there beside him, as if they had been well acquainted a long while and were always together now and hadn't any doubts of each other. Well, you see, I liked that. I never had a chum."

"Yes," said Richard again, as the rapid flow of words halted abruptly. He made no further comment.

"So," continued Albert, "I made up my mind that that was for me, if I could have it, and I supposed I could. They all say so. I knew what I'd got to cut out, and I cut it out. Meeks had cleaned me up as bare as a bone; my next meal was twenty-four hours away from me and the others since haven't been scattered very thick. I did well enough the first two weeks, but it has got worse and worse till it's pretty near famine now."

"But it isn't so much the famine," hinted Richard. Albert gave a short nod.

"I meant it all. I have tried," he said. "And a chum is for hard times. It—it seems as if"—his voice grew husky—"if He cared—He might have helped me out more."

It took Richard an instant to understand and another instant to bring the response that flashed into his mind to his lips. Already Albert had turned away.

"Oh, but remember," Richard cried after him, "how He hungered and would not make the stones into bread! When He must choose for us He cannot choose bread instead of life!"

Richard hung about Muldoon's for an hour or two and returned the next night. He sought out the white-haired minister of the church near, and that good man's sympathy was prompt and optimistic. Albert had been in his church on the last Sunday; they would hope for him to come on the next. But on the next Sunday Albert did not come.

Shortly after he had left Richard, Jimmy Banks caught a glimpse of him and, giving chase, was soon at his side.

"What have you been doing with yourself?" he asked.

"Keeping away from Muldoon's."

"Why?" Jimmy regarded his companion's face and clothes critically. "It hasn't made you rich."

"But I thought it was going to make me—straight," said Albert.

"The gospel talk was honest then!" Jimmy cried. "You weren't shamming?"

"I wasn't," answered Albert. "Half an hour ago I started back to Muldoon's. I haven't eaten anything since yesterday morning, and then it wasn't as much as a half meal. I was hungry. I was worse; I had lost my nerve and I wasn't sure of any of it. So I started back. But when I saw a man coming who wasn't our class, I turned in a call for help. I said, 'If I am not just running this myself, if there is Anybody else, give me this way out.' Then I asked the man, and he said he hadn't a penny, and I knew it was so. I thought I had been foolish."

The dim, elusive regret, which had underlain Jimmy's amusement two weeks before, as he listened with expert interest to Albert's profession, had sprung now into full consciousness.

He ran his hands thru his pockets, but he knew before he did it that it was useless. He had nothing.

And Richard's reproach rang in his ears—"You have cheated the other fellow." "Remember, if you are not all right, you have taken the money away from another one in need."

Jimmy did not attempt to argue that the connection between Richard's dollar and Albert was in any case unlikely. In his own eyes he was personally and miserably guilty.

"The man had no money, and I am hungry still," said Albert. "But—I see it now, Jimmy—I've a Friend that went hungry for me. And now I can feel sure of that, I could starve for Him!"

While Jimmy waited to find an answer and a voice to utter it, the street filled at an alarm of fire.

The fire was two squares away in a tall apartment house. When Albert and Jimmy reached the place the attention of the crowd was centered on a pale-faced, shaking lad who was vehemently justifying his own course of action.

"Who is he?" asked Jimmy.

"Elevator boy. Says he wasn't hired to roast himself."

Jimmy felt a movement past him and saw Albert Hinkle cleaving a way thru the living mass. Like a shot Jimmy went squirming and kicking after him, in time to see, by the red light that leaped ever nearer, the elevator in the gaping hall speed upward, to the sound of a great roar from the crowd.

But, after that, the stillness grew and deepened, until Jimmy felt sickened by it. For dense clouds of smoke, lightened with darting tongues of flame, whirled about the entrance and thickened there. It was only when a group of persons broke thru it, blinded and coughing, or were dragged out by the men, that Albert was known to have brought down another load of passengers in safety and to have gone back for more.

Over and over again Jimmy watched them come.

"Albert don't think of himself," he fretted, moistening his dry lips. "He just thinks of those men up there who don't know how to get their women down, and of the mothers who don't know how to get their babies down. He just thinks of them."

Jimmy's memory brought back to him, in echo of his own, the words which Richard Heath had called after him at last.

"I suppose," murmured Jimmy, "that country man would say that such thinking as Albert's is now, of men and women that he wouldn't know if he was to see them in the broad daylight, was the best of living."

And suddenly Jimmy knew that the "country man" was right.

At last, after a longer wait than usual, a solitary figure came staggering thru the smoke, at sight of which a second wild cheer burst from the crowd, breaking off abruptly as Albert swayed backward to the pavement.

"He is dead!" wailed a woman. "After saving so many he is dead himself."

Jimmy was crouched beside him when the poised, keen-faced surgeon, who had left his automobile at the moment that Albert appeared, leaned over him.

His examination was short.

"He is not dead—yet," he said. "I prescribe a supper."

The reason why Richard Heath and the good

Concluded on Page 8

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

My Lady Daffodil

My Lady Daffodil looks out
Upon the sweet spring morning,
A golden fillet 'mid her locks
Meet for such fair adorning;
She waves the winter's dreams away:
"Tis past the time for sleeping,
For now the world's awake with song,
My tryst with Spring I'm keeping."

She dons her quaint hooped petticoat,
Flings off her mantle clinging,
Then stands in gown of rich brocade,
The very fairest, sweetest maid
That e'er the wind set swinging.
And Spring comes by, and sees her there,
Golden her gown, and gold her hair,
Kisses her lips, and calls her fair,
And woos her with sweet singing.

—Augusta Hancock.

Had He Failed?

"I have failed in almost everything I ever undertook. I hope that none of my children will have to make such a confession."

Thus spoke an aged man not long before his death.

In youth he wished to be a minister, but could not get the necessary education. A severe attack of pneumonia left him subject to hemorrhages, and he was thought to have consumption. But he wandered out into the fields, gathering herbs for his own use or that of his neighbors; and whether the herbs did him good or not, the outdoor life certainly did.

He studied medicine with the local physician, and became a doctor, but he could not endure the long, cold rides inseparable from a country practice. So he set up as a druggist, in the hope of finding time to study for the ministry; but he had to give up that hope, for his business proved exacting. Still, he taught in the Sunday-school, and often helped at religious services.

When he opened his drug-store, altho he abandoned medical practice, he gave his services freely to the poor. He trusted every one, often to his hurt. After the Civil War he suffered from the fall in prices that culminated in the panic of 1873. Goods had first to be marked down, and then to be thrown away. He could not collect his bills; his debts accumulated. He lost his store, his business, even his home. Then he met with an accident that almost cost him his life.

He toiled bravely on a new house, only to have it wrecked by a tornado. That night he and his family sat amid the debris in the cellar; the pitiless rain beat upon them, and the blackness was cut by blades of lightning that disclosed nothing but disaster.

It seemed to him that his every hope blossomed only to be crushed. Nevertheless, this man, refusing any compromise, assumed the whole burden of his debts, and dollar by dollar he began to pay them. His children not only worked their way thru college, but were able to help him a little. In a measure he recovered his health, and slowly but surely he reduced the burden of his debts. But youth and hope were gone; he was an old and disappointed man.

Still, his last years were years of peace. His home was modest, but it was his, and he lived in reasonable comfort. He owed no man, and he died free.

His funeral was attended by almost every person in the community, and among them all there was scarcely one who was not indebted to him for some kind deed; who was not the better for his example of honesty and steadfastness and courage.

He felt that he had "failed" in everything, but he left an honored name and a memory of righteousness and integrity. And God counted his life a success.—Selected.

Real Riches

"Miss Ann always makes me think of something I have read somewhere," says a writer. "I don't know who wrote it, but he was a wise man, whoever he was. He said that many a man has found the real riches of life by looking into the faces of the poor."

"There's Miss Ann—a little old maid, making her small living by country dressmaking, living alone with her cat and her flower garden. One might think her life was poor and dull enough. Yet when you look into her face, and get to know her, you have to change your mind. She is rich—largely wealthy in real riches. Could mere money give her that smile, or that look of quiet happiness and peace? It would frighten them away, more likely. Sometimes it keeps company with the things that fill Miss Ann's real life—but those things can get along very well without money."

"For they are made up of the love that takes in those who need it most, asking for nothing but the opportunity to help; the willing service that finds joy in the making over of a shabby old dress for some poor soul who cannot do it herself or afford to hire it done; the word of cheer or sympathy to the one who is starving for more than actual food; the sharing of every small possession of time or strength or wisdom with those who are in need. Oh, yes, Miss Ann has lots of riches—and she puts them out at an interest which cannot be reckoned in dollars and cents."

The young men and women of today are ambitious to make the most of their lives. They are laying the foundations of the future day by day. They are beginning the store which is to be theirs when they are no longer young. Wise indeed are those who look carefully after the real riches. Cora S. Day.

Averaging Matters

A man who prided himself on his morality, and expected to be saved by it, was constantly saying: "I am doing pretty well on the whole. I sometimes get angry enough to swear; but then I am perfectly honest. I work on Sunday when I am particularly busy; but I give a good deal to the poor, and I never was drunk in my life."

This man hired a canny Scotchman to build a fence around his pasture lot. He gave him very particular directions. In the evening when the Scotchman came in from work, the man said:

"Well, Jock, is the fence built, and is it tight and strong?"

"I canna say it is all tight and strong," Jock replied, "but it's a good average fence, anyhow. If some parts are a little weak, other parts are extra strong. I don't know but I may have left a little gap here and there, a yard or so wide; but then I made up for it by doubling the number of rails on each side of the gap. I dare say that the cattle will find it a good fence, on the whole, and will like it, tho I canna just say that it is perfect in every part."

"What!" cried the man, not seeing the point; "do you tell me that you built a fence around my lot with weak places and gaps in it? Why, you might as well have built no fence at all! If there is one opening, or a place where an opening can be made, the cattle will be sure to find it, and will go thru. Don't you know, man, that a fence must be perfect, or it is worthless?"

"I used to think so," said the dry Scotchman, "but sir, I hear you talk so much about averaging matters with the Lord, it seemed to me that we might try it with the cattle. If an average fence will not do for them, I am afraid an average character will not do in the day of judgment."—Selected.

Both in the Same Boat

The American in the corner of the non-smoking first-class carriage insisted on lighting his cigar. The indignant Britisher in the other corner protested, but in vain. At the next station he hailed the guard with hostile intent, but the placid American was too quick for him.

"Guard," he drawled, "I think you'll find that this gentleman is traveling with a third-class ticket on him."

Investigation proved him to be right, and the indignant Britisher was ejected. A spectator of the little scene asked the triumphant American how he knew about that ticket.

"Well," explained the imperturbable stranger, "it was sticking out of his pocket and I saw it was the same color as mine."

Denominational

DISTRICT CONFERENCES

Nebraska District

The twenty-seventh annual conference of the Nebraska District will be opened with a special service on the evening of May 24, 1916, at Plattsmouth, Neb., (the Rev. H. Steger, pastor). Two papers are on the program: "Christianity and Culture," by Pastor H. Steger; and "Our Missionary Work in India and the World-war," by Pastor G. Deckinger. By order of the District president, Pastor H. Krueger, Adolf Matzner, Sec'y.

Now is the Time to apply for admission to Elmhurst College, academic year 1916-17. A large class will graduate in June, and about fifty places will be open for the new year. We need talented and Christian young men ready to begin their preparation for the ministry or teaching in parochial schools. Applicants for admission into the lower classes should not be under fourteen or over twenty-one years of age. Admission to the preparatory department requires the completion of the eighth grade of the public school. Terms of admission are fully explained in the Elmhurst year-book, which is sent free upon request. Blanks and all other particulars and information will be gladly furnished by D. Irion, President.

A Chat with the Editor

In the course of a year the editor, by means of correspondence, naturally comes into personal contact with many readers. The editor welcomes and enjoys this pleasant change from the daily professional routine and even when differences of opinion are revealed the frank and friendly exchange of ideas is helpful to both sides. It is only seldom that a writer does not seem to understand that the editor is responsible to the General Conference for the conduct and the contents of the paper, and must therefore exercise his own judgment as to what can or cannot be published.

Nothing would please us more than if all manuscripts accepted could be printed in the form in which they reach us. This millennial condition, however, seems quite remote as yet, and as long as style and syntax and punctuation still show so many traces of human error and weakness it must be the editor's business to supervise the form as well as the contents of what is to be published. Correspondents and contributors may rest assured however, that for the editor's own sake, if for no other reason, only the necessary changes in style or expression are made. Changes involving the sense of an article are not made without the consent of the author, tho it has occasionally happened that lack of time compelled us to make such changes without notice to the author. The mechanical arrangement of articles on the pages often unavoidably requires an addition or abbreviation of a line or more, but the greatest care is taken to leave the meaning intact.

Why some Articles are "cut up"

In a recent communication one of our readers says, "Your first page is always splendid. But why are other articles so awfully cut up?" As there may be others who have been moved to the same inquiry it is perhaps well to explain the reason for this procedure. Let us say right at the outset that the dividing up of the longer articles in one issue is a matter of choosing the lesser of two evils, and a necessity which the editor by no means enjoys. It has been our experience that readers always like to turn to certain pages of the paper for a certain kind of reading matter. Each page of the Herald therefore as a rule, has its particular subject: pages two and three are devoted to the spiritual life and to the home and the family; pages four and five to denominational announcements, reports concerning various Evangelical activities, or other material of interest or importance to the work of the Church or the congregation; page six is usually devoted to religious or church news, and so on. If all the articles coming under these different heads could be accurately fitted into the space of these pages, so as to end with the last line of the column or page, the matter would be quite simple. It is not difficult on pages one, two and three and usually on six and seven, where the articles are short. With the longer articles on pages four and five this happens only in the very rarest instances, and so additional space must be found for the remaining material where it is available, which is then indicated by the bold-faced line in type at the close of the column. The only other alternative would be to let each article continue until its close, to be followed by the next, which would not only make it impossible to devote any one page to a certain kind of reading matter, but would also tend to make the pages appear monotonous. In making up the pages it is our aim to make, prominent the subject for which readers have come to look on that particular page, and to make each one as attractive as possible, even tho the article appearing on it may have to be divided and concluded on another page. Every effort is of course made to avoid this "cutting up" of articles, and it is only on a few of the pages that this method is resorted to at all. The same thing is done in the daily papers to a far greater extent.

Manuscripts

Manuscripts too closely written constitutes one of the severest trials of editors and compositors, as it makes the reading difficult and places an unnecessary strain upon the eye. Care should be taken to have the lines far enough apart to make them easily legible, as well as to permit any insertions that may become necessary. Typewritten manuscript is always preferred; if written by hand it should be as legible as possible so as to avoid errors and delay in reading.

It is assumed that contributors do not desire the return of manuscript which has been published, unless the contrary has been plainly stated when submitting it.

Abbreviations do not look well in print and should therefore be avoided in manuscript. Don't try to save your own time at the expense of others who may be busier than you are.

The editor should not be expected to translate material which has appeared or is intended for the German periodicals. His time is fully occupied with other duties, and it is only fair that contributors send in the material ready for the compositor.

The General Conference ruling that all pastors' obituaries require the written approval of the respective District president, applies to the Evangelical Herald as well as to the "Friedensbote."

The Round Table

About a year ago the first article was published in the Herald under this department, which is intended as an open parliament for the discussion of subjects related to the work of the Evangelical Church, in regard to which there is difference of opinion. If silence is an expression of consent our readers have thoroly agreed with the position taken by the author of the article "Uniformity of Cultus in the Evangelical Church." Subjects may however turn up on which there is no such unanimous agreement, and the department will be held open in order to facilitate a free and democratic discussion of topics and questions of general interest that serve the advancement of the Evangelical Church. Communications of the character indicated will be welcomed from any reader. Naturally writers making use of this privilege are alone responsible for what appears above their signature, while the fact that articles appear under this heading is by no means a sign of editorial disapproval. No articles not intended for the Round Table will be placed there without the consent of the writer. The editor acts merely as chairman of the meeting and must see to it that the discussion is carried on decently and in order. Matter intended for the Round Table must therefore be written in a dispassionate, objective spirit and in a courteous manner. Anonymous contributions, communications, personal grievances or criticisms, or harsh or offensive statements will not be published.

A Final Admonition

Please don't send orders or remittances for the Evangelical Herald to the editor. We are always glad to serve our readers in any way possible, but readers will have their business correspondence attended to much more quickly and regularly if letters of that character are addressed directly to Eden Publishing House. It is therefore to the reader's own interest to heed the announcement at the foot of the last column on page eight: "All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor. All communications relating to business matters, orders, remittances and notices as to change of address should be addressed to Eden Publishing House, 1716-18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Missouri.

Picked up by the Way

Interesting Items gleaned from Many Sources

The chestnut blight has swept into nineteen States, according to a report of the Office of Forest Pathology, and done damage estimated at $50,000,000. To take the place of these blighted chestnut trees a cross between the Japan chestnut and our native chinquapin is proposed. This is said to bear nuts of excellent quality.

A curious result of the "jacking up" which all departments of the British Government have experienced as a result of the war has been the final abolition of the quill pen in Government service. An English correspondent of "Office Appliances" says that these relics of mediævalism had hung on in certain leisurely places, but at last they have had to go, to make place for the more businesslike metal pen.

George Niper, who died the other day at Stanhope, New Jersey, at the age of 108, worked at farming till he was ninety, then went into the ax-handle business; never wore glasses; never was ill till three days before he died; chewed tobacco for ninety-six years; and while born a few years too late to serve with Washington at Valley Forge, did the next best thing to tell about in his old age—voted for Andrew Jackson. Among his numerous descendants are eight great-great-grandchildren.

Owing to a regrettable oversight the paragraph on page six of our issue of May 4, beginning "Or there is a later and greater citizen," etc., conveys a wrong impression. The words as far as "Republic" should have been omitted, as they refer to a part of the article that could not appear for lack of space. We are sure that no one who read the scholarly and thoughtful article will think the writer capable of saying in effect that King Lear was a citizen of the Roman Republic.

Nettles, according to a writer in the Rural New Yorker, have some claim to being called the only native plants which are really poisonous to the touch, for they injure practically every person who happens to touch them, while many persons are immune to the poison of other so-called poisonous plants. But may not nettles also be exempt from the aspersion, if a familiar rhyme is true:

"Tender-handed stroke a nettle,
And it stings you for your pains.
Seize it like a man of mettle,
And it soft as silk remains."

In his recent book, "Lights and Shadows in Confederate Prisons," Professor Homer D. Sprague quotes statistics as to the relative morality in Northern and Southern military prisons during the Civil War, showing that of 270,000 Federal prisoners 22,576 died, while of 220,000 Confederate prisoners 26,436 died—a larger percentage of Confederates. He explains the discrepancy by saying that multitudes of Confederates were physically unfit when enrolled. But, if this is true, why did not the United States Government at once exchange them when taken prisoners? The common explanation for its refusal to exchange has been that it did not wish to give up its own well-conditioned prisoners for the emaciated wrecks of Andersonville, Salisbury, etc. If its own prisoners, however, were inferior physically and dying faster than the Confederates' prisoners, why the unwillingness to exchange? Here is a seeming mystery for some old soldier to explain.

Professor Sprague, tho he suffered severely in Southern prisons, writes in a kindly spirit and tells many stories of friendly acts by Southern men and women toward Federal prisoners. In Greensboro, North Carolina, a trainload of Union prisoners was in dire straits. A well-dressed young Southerner approached Colonel Sprague and asked, "Will you have a snack?" The word was a new one to the Northerner. "I don't know what you mean," he answered; "is it a snake? Yes, I could eat a copperhead—boiled. Snake for one, please—well done." The young man put his hand in a well-filled haversack, and took out and gave to Colonel Sprague the most delicious sandwich he had ever tasted; and then, seeing his enjoyment, emptied his satchel, giving away to the hungry prisoners all the food he had prepared for himself for a long trip over the mountains. Fifty years after, the Union soldier records this good deed with glowing gratitude.

CLINCHING A CONTINENTAL CAMPAIGN

More than 1,200 Laymen from all parts of the Country consider Ways and Means of raising the Standard of Christian Life, Church Work and Kingdom Support at Washington

I.

The National capital is accustomed to large and important gatherings, and during the last decade it has harbored a number of conventions and congresses that have had world-significance in the way of religion, science and politics. It is hardly probable, however, that any of these gatherings, or the discussions to which they gave occasion, possessed such significance for the highest temporal and eternal interests of the United States or all the nations of the world than the National Missionary Congress which met in Memorial Continental Hall from April 26-30. The Congress was the climax of the National Missionary Campaign with which the Laymen's Missionary Movement had stirred the Protestant churches of the seventy-five leading cities of the Nation during the fall and winter of 1915-16. The Congress had as its motive the three-fold purpose of "a survey of achievement, a council of war and a summons to advance," and the report of the general secretary, Mr. W. B. Millar, the salient points of which will be given at the close of this report, presented all three of these aspects in a concise and inspiring manner.

Undoubtedly the past ten years have been one of the most inspiring periods of missionary development in the history of the Church. They have brought a new spirit of brotherhood among Christian men; have increased missionary gifts more than the past ninety years, and in nearly three thousand conferences and conventions have presented the call for a larger active service in the Church and for the Kingdom to about 200,000 picked representatives of American manhood. In view of these achievements it was manifestly time to get together in the spirit of fraternal council in order to review the victories won, discover and remove the causes of defeat or partial success, provide adequate leadership and plans for the future, and inspire the leaders in the various states and communions with a larger vision and purpose. It was in this state of mind that the delegates heard the call to a fuller obedience to the will of God, the appeal to undertake the program of Christ with greater intelligence and sacrifice, the challenge to carry the Movement's message to the unreached areas of American life, and the fresh call to all men to enlist for world service, to which the Congress gave clear and powerful expression.

Memorial Continental Hall is unique among the monumental halls of the country in that it was built solely by women and in honor of women as well as of men. It was built at an expense of nearly $700,000 by the Daughters of the American Revolution in memory of all the heroes and heroines of that momentous struggle, and houses a priceless historical library and a museum of valuable relics. Its classic lines and columns of purest white Vermont marble present a coldly beautiful exterior, but the interior glows with a wealth of comfortable and rich furnishings of the best Colonial designs, and the up-to-date details and twentieth century conveniences made it an ideal meeting-place for the Congress.

The meetings opened on the evening of April 26, chairman James M. Speers of the executive committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement presiding. Mr. Sumner F. Vinton, a former missionary in India, showed a number of motion picture films illustrating life in India and the customs of the Buddhist. This was a new departure for a missionary congress, but no more striking and effective method of presenting native life in India and many of the phases of Buddhism could have been devised. President and Mrs. Wilson arrived on the platform during the opening song and were greeted with applause. After a song by the famous Association Quartette, Mr. W. B. Millar summarized the report on the past ten years of the Movement's existence and activity. Copies of the report in full were distributed at the close of the meeting and a committee appointed to prepare resolutions and present them to the delegates on Saturday morning.

The address of Mr. John R. Mott, chairman of the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Missionary Conference, and general secretary of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A., perhaps the best known man in religious work in the world today, set forth the unprecedented opportunity that the European war placed before the Christian men of America. The titanic struggle in Europe, in which 24,000,000 men and boys are engaged cannot be without a far-reaching influence upon the people of this country. If, in the face of the unprecedented destruction of property which the war involves,—more than thirty billions of dollars so far, which are withdrawn from useful channels—the economic basis of Christian work is to be maintained, the great burden of it must fall upon America, and she must give as she has never given before.

The call, however, is even more for the gift of life. Nearly 3,000,000 men have been killed already, and approximately 5,000,000 are stretched upon beds of pain in the hospitals of Europe and Asia. Mr. Mott said that he had sometimes been accused of extravagance in asking that the colleges and universities of the world give 1,000 students a year for the evangelization of the world in this generation. About seventy percent of the students of the belligerent nations are at the front, and in view of the great losses in human life in Europe, America must send a greatly increased number of men into aggressive missionary work.

Memorial Continental Hall, Washington

And we must enter more deeply into the sufferings of our fellows in Europe. The wounded and disabled in the belligerent countries present probably the greatest concentration of physical pain which the world has ever witnessed. Ambassador Page told Mr. Mott "You will not find a selfish man in Europe." Holland is caring for 1,000,000 Belgian refugees, which is as if we should take in 18,000,000. If we could forget ourselves as Holland and Switzerland are doing we could fill the world with beauty. In the training-camps and trenches, and in the hospitals and prison-camps vast numbers of men are open to Christian ministrations. Germany was the first to open her prison-camps to the International Committee, on condition that Russia do the same, and all the other nations have since followed suit. It is possible to reach a great army of Russian prisoners who, if the opportunity is seized, will return to their country with a great message from America. Ours is the responsibility to prepare for constructive and reconstructive tasks after the war in the Far East, Africa and Latin America. All Europe is in the melting-pot. Old things may become new, if we in America will seize our opportunity. It would be a national disgrace if all America got out of the war were the huge financial gains from the munitions trade. Indeed, the Mr. Mott did not say so, one could hardly help feeling that if America had stopped the war by refusing to send munitions to any of the belligerents, she would be in a far better position to enter into the spirit of Europe's suffering. Is America capable of unselfish sacrifice for the sake of suffering humanity as long as she is helping destroy life for the sake of selfish gain?

The subject for Thursday morning was "the possibilities of missionary achievement as illustrated by actual experiences in parishes, in groups of parishes and in entire communions." On this topic seven men, representing as many different communions, spoke briefly.

Dr. John M. Moore, secretary of the Baptist Department of Missionary Education, told of the steps leading up to the establishment of definite, systematic missionary educational work in the Baptist Church and the adoption of a "Ten-Point Standard."

Mr. John W. Wood, secretary, Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church, told of the great financial and spiritual advance made by that communion during the past ten years by adopting the methods emphasized by the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Mr. Wood stated that the missionary contributions of the entire communion had increased during this period from $810,000 to $1,687,000 or from $1 per capita to $1.63 for each communicant.

"As Much as" Churches

Charles A. Rowland, Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement of the Southern Presbyterians, told of the splendid gains that Church has made in the past decade, and of the rapidly increasing number of "as much as" churches, those that give as much for missions as they spend upon themselves. Mr. Rowland mentioned one layman who is supporting a whole mission station in Korea with thirteen American missionaries, and the same man supports representatives in Cuba and in Africa.

J. L. Clark, of Ohio, a business man representing the General Synod of the Lutheran Church, spoke of a number of congregations, which, under the influence of the Laymen's Movement, had made notable increases in missionary contributions. This development has been largely due to ten men, captains of industry, who had put into church organization the acumen that had enabled them to succeed in business.

Gain in Business Management

Dr. George Heber Jones, of the Methodist Church, described ways in which the Laymen's Missionary Movement, both denominational and interdenominational, has helped that Church. There has been a remarkable gain in business management, and there has been increased financial returns. Between 1910 and 1912 the gain for the boards had been about $10,000; between 1912 and 1914 the gain had been $130,000.

W. P. Schell, a secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, spoke of the Presbyterian Forward Movement which was organized in 1902 and had made wonderful progress under the wise leadership of Daniel McConaughy. Mr. Schell emphasized four definite achievements: first, the large number of churches adopting the every-member plan; second, increased receipts; third, a new policy that no church should receive aid that did not adopt the every-member plan, and fourth, the bringing of all organizations together in a unified attack. He gave a stimulating report of the Presbyterian Synod of West Africa, composed of native Africans, where every church of the synod has become self-supporting, this being the only synod in the whole denomination of which this can be said.

One Thousand Lives Wanted

The last speaker on the morning program was A. J. Cory, the leader of the Men and Millions Movement of the Disciples of Christ. Mr. Cory thrilled the delegates with his earnest presentation of the achievements of this movement, which has for its goal an every-member canvass in every church; $6,300,000 in special gifts of $500 or more, and 1,000 young people enlisted in missionary services in the next five years. He told of a single layman in Kansas City who had pledged $1,000,000 on condition that the whole amount was raised.

The subject of the afternoon was "The Present Day World Appeal to American Laymen," and it was divided into four parts.

The Mohammedan World

Dr. James L. Barton, of Boston, Foreign Secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions, spoke on the "Appeal from the Mohammedan World." One-eighth of the world is Mohammedan, he said. Its opposition to Christianity is uncompromising. It started out to reform Christianity, and to win its way by the sword. What are the conditions in Mohammedanism today? It is broken up into sects. There is no Pan-Islamism. The political power of Mohammedanism is broken. The 200 million Mohammedans are under alien powers, mostly Christian. The leaders are hopeless of union, and thousands of the Mohammedans are inquiring the way to Christianity.

The Hindu World

"The Appeal from the Hindu World" was presented by Dr. John P. Jones, for thirty-six years a missionary in India, who spoke of the people of that country as a remarkable people in intellectual ability and in religious zeal. He stated that one-third of the whole world is today worshipping at shrines originating in that land. He spoke of the remarkable progress of missionary work in recent years, and said that the greatest result was the leavening effect of Christianity upon the whole civilization. Dr. Jones declared that Christ had come to be recognized by the non-Christian classes as the One who is to redeem India. He mentioned the significant fact that the most read book in India is Thomas A. Kempis' "Imitation of Christ."

The Buddhist World

S. Harrington Littell of China, for seventeen years a missionary of the Episcopal Church, presented the appeal from the Buddhist world. What it has not done for its followers in 2,000 years, he said, shows its fundamental lack. It has a degraded view of womanhood; it tries to terrify people into being good, and hardness of heart results; it produces a false estimate of the end of the body. No blind asylum or deaf and dumb institution have been produced by Buddhism. It does not believe in human brotherhood. In Japan it has not prevented the weakening of its old standards. So there has been a turning to Shintoism and Christianity in that country. In China religion has become ineffective, except Christianity.

The Christian World

The session closed with an address by Bishop Francis J. McConnell, presenting "The Appeal from the Christian World." He emphasized the fact that many of the relationships in the Christian world are still un-Christian, that the Christianity of many Christians is not the real dominating power in their Christian lives. Bishop McConnell said that the great work of Christ was only accomplished because He went the full length, pouring out His life completely in service and sacrifice, and appealed earnestly to American men to pour out their lives in the fullest measure of their brothers who need Christ.

Evening Session

Motion pictures of mission lands were thrown on the screen prior to the formal opening of the evening session. Sumner R. Vinton, with a few words of explanation, indicated the steps in the progress of mission work for the past fifty years shown by the pictures. Among the pictures shown were fine buildings for missionary work, erected entirely by native Christians. One striking illustration was that of 500 students pouring out of the doors of a Christian school, which never cost one cent of foreign money, having been built and supported entirely by the natives. The last picture showed nearly six thousand delegates to the Los Angeles convention of the National Missionary Campaign last February, leaving the great auditorium in that city.

There were two speakers on the general theme of the evening, "The Christward Movement in the Non-Christian World," former Bishop W. F. Oldham and George Sherwood Eddy. Bishop Oldham spoke on the branch of the general topic, "The Christward Movement Among the Masses."

Among the Masses

Mr. Oldham declared it has ever been a mistake to attempt the elevation of people from the top. Spiritual Christianity has always risen and spread from below. In India, said he, is not only illustration but absolute demonstration of the thrust of Christianity towards the masses. There, society is constructed in the form of a perfect pyramid, the low caste masses below, the high caste handful above. This social order, cemented by religion, has kept the masses in almost abject servitude thru centuries.

Now comes Jesus Christ, the liberator and democrat. His Gospel of enfranchisement reaches the ears of the masses and a most amazing movement is begun among the fifty million or more that are at the very base of the pyramid. Nearly half a million of these people have been openly baptized in the Christian Church in the past four years. Moved by a sense of divine love and the clear call of Him who recog-

Continued on Page 8

Religious News

Strife among Presbyterians

Presbyterians of New York admit the seriousness of a situation created by action of Presbyterians of Cincinnati in adopting an overture to the General Assembly of both of them, meeting at Atlantic City on May 18, to oust New York from the Presbyterian Church. It is said that never before has one presbytery taken such step against another one. The cause is the act of New York, often repeated, in receiving graduates of Union Theological Seminary, New York, into membership, licensing and ordaining them as Presbyterian ministers, whom Cincinnati Presbyterians, together with others, hold to be unsound in the Presbyterian faith.

It is further said that in the history of the Presbyterian Church, no presbytery has ever been thrown out for any cause. The General Assembly has several times in recent years adopted warning resolutions, worded in general terms but aimed at New York, that they must be more careful to observe the Westminster Standards when examining candidates for the ministry. There is now talk in New York and in some other presbyteries to the effect that present conditions are not unlike those dividing the New and Old Schools sixty years or so ago.

There is said to be a powerful element in the Middle West and on the Pacific Coast determined both that New York presbytery take its view of orthodoxy from this element, and that the question of the title to some of the endowment funds held by Union Seminary be submitted to the courts, so far as can be learned, no graver situation has obtained since the troubles over the famous Briggs case, and the withdrawal of Union Seminary from the Presbyterian Church.

Episcopalians developing Christian Education

Episcopal Church leaders of the Southern States are bending their efforts to put the University of the South on a firm foundation. Bishop Knight of Cuba, who succeeded in putting that missionary district upon a firm basis, was induced to resign his see to become vice chancellor. Dioceses east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio pledged annual gifts equal to interest on certain sums supposed to stand for endowment, and for immediate needs a campaign was entered into for $300,000. Of this sum $100,000 has been secured.

These church leaders urge the necessity for education upon a religious basis, and under church control. They say in their pleas that if Manila, Calcutta and Peking need Christian colleges the United States needs them not less but more. They are also pointing out how many colleges, once allied with churches, have cut such alliance. The Episcopal Church of the South, say they, are determined in one case at least to put a great seat of learning on a firm foundation, and yet keep it under church control.

The University of the South is located at Sewanee, and has a tract or site of no fewer than eight hundred acres. Its mountain site renders its scholastic terms different from all other colleges, in that the long vacation comes in winter, sessions being carried thru the summer months. A feature of the course of studies is a combination of college and divinity school by which candidates for the ministry get both college and divinity degrees in six years, provided they have suitable preparation to begin with. Efforts are now being made by Bishop Knight and others to complete the $300,000 fund, and later to enlarge the plant to meet needs of students of the South, who attend in larger numbers than can now be accommodated well.

Presbyterian Missionary Finances

Presbyterian missionary finances, to be reported at Atlantic City's forthcoming General Assembly, are far more favorable than had been expected. The foreign board, one of the largest missionary societies in the world, had receipts last year amounting to $2,286,000, a decrease from churches of some $33,000 as compared with the previous year. A debt of $101,000 at the beginning of last year has been reduced by $51,000, and since the books closed, by a further reduction, to $44,000, where it now stands. In a year of difficult financial times receipts were greater, in all of the different accounts, by $27,000 over last year, when financial times were on the up grade.

In their home mission board Presbyterians last year made an even greater reduction in debts. The year began with a deficit of $217,000, and closed with one of $88,000. Last year a new arrangement was made by order of the General Assembly, when women interested in home missions conducted their own affairs, including the keeping account of their own receipts. These receipts amount usually to upward of $500,000 a year. A year ago the combined receipts amounted to $1,450,000, and this year the home board's receipts alone amounted to $1,065,600. This is an increase of no less than $73,000.

The showing is, however, that of gifts from those no longer living. Of the $1,065,000 received, more than a half, of $556,000, came from bequests. Nevertheless, mission financial managers profess to be hopeful of the outlook, especially so if the war comes to an end at an early date. They point out that during the past year large sums have gone to war sufferers from Presbyterian Churches, that they think, in normal years, will go to missions. Presbyterian women, in the home field, now manage their own stations.

Third Quadrennial Meeting of the Federal Council

The Christian forces of America will be gathered as never before in their history at the third quadrennial Council of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, which will convene for a week beginning Wednesday evening, December 6, at St. Louis. The headquarters of the Council will be the commodious Second Baptist Church. The local arrangements will be made by a committee of the St. Louis Federation of Churches, of which Rev. W. C. Bitting is the Chairman.

The reports of the various commissions on evangelism, social service, peace and arbitration, Christian education, foreign missions, temperance, family life, Sunday observance, and country life will this year consist of a thoro and complete survey of all these movements on the part of the churches and allied interdenominational organizations. The Home Missions Council will present a complete review of the entire field committed to that body. The commission on state and local federations will give a four years' review of the progress of these bodies, and the more recently organized commission on federated movements will present its program, past, present, and future, for the development of the local field, including a session to be given for a review of the interdenominational movements participating in the work of this Commission, including the following bodies: United Society of Christian Endeavor, Laymen's Missionary Movement, Missionary Education Movement, The Young Men's Christian Association, The Young Women's Christian Association, International Sunday School Association, American Sunday School Union, Sunday School Council for Evangelical Denominations, Council of Women for Home Missions, Home Missions Council, The Epworth League, Adult Bible Classes and Brotherhood Movements.

There will be a two-day session of the conference of representatives of theological seminaries, and the joint commission appointed four years ago on the study of social and industrial questions in the seminaries will present its findings. In addition, there will be reports of several special committees, including the Committee of One Hundred which carried on religious work at the Panama Pacific Exposition, the Commission on Relations with Japan, and the committee appointed on the special interests of the colored denominations.

The official delegates from the thirty constituent bodies of the Council will number about four hundred and fifty, and in addition there will be a large attendance of members of the various commissions which number in all about one thousand.

Each commission has been instructed by the executive committee of the Council to present a complete review of all the activities of the churches and religious bodies relating to the various phases of Christian work covered by these Commissions. A committee of fifteen has been appointed which is under instruction to present to the Council a review and appraisal, not only of the work of the Federal Council itself for the Quadrennium, but of the federative movement in general, with recommendations for the future policy of the Council.

Owing to the large extent to which the Federal Council has recently participated in international movements and because of the present world situation, it is probable that large attention will be given to the international relation of the churches.

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

May 28, 1916. Rogate Sunday

Correction in Date

Sixteenth Semi-annual Rally of the Evangelical League of Cincinnati and Vicinity

In forwarding previous announcement of the Sixteenth Semi-annual Rally of the Evangelical League of Cincinnati, Ohio, the date of such Rally was inadvertently given as May 30, 1916, whereas it should be Sunday, May 28, 1916.

Edward A. Puff, Secretary.

644 Monroe St., Newport, Kentucky.

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

MISSIONS A BLESSING

- M. May 22. Light-bringers. 2 Cor. 4: 1-7.
T. May 23. Educational blessings. Prov. 22: 17-29.
W. May 24. Changing lives. Acts 8: 5-8.
T. May 25. Making men brothers. Eph. 2: 11-22.
F. May 26. Planting spiritual ideals. Rom. 8: 1-14.
S. May 27. Creating happy homes. Luke 10: 38-42.

Sun., May 28. Topic—How Missions Are Blessing the World. Ezek. 47: 1-12. (Foreign missionary meeting.)

Suggestions to the Leader

I would suggest that this topic be discussed by the society in the form of a debate. Word the topic as follows:—Resolved, that missionary work has been a blessing to the world.

Select two leaders of the discussion. If there is an opponent to mission work, select him as leader of the negative side. If a competent leader for the negative side, who is really opposed to mission work, cannot be found, choose some good capable person, who can group all reasons advanced against missionary work, and can in this manner make the society familiar with the negative side of the argument.

Let the leader of the positive side of the discussion gather carefully all data to be had, that will show what the influence of missionary work has done for the development of our civilization. Let him draw a vivid word picture of the probable condition of the world had there been no missionary activity. Two or more members ought to be added to each side, and each one ought to be limited in his address as to time in presenting the subject. The maximum might be five minutes to the leader, and three minutes to each of the assistants. In view of the brief time allotted, every speaker ought to come thoroughly prepared.

After the debate the society ought to vote as to which side offered the best argument. Call on the members of the society to voice their sentiments and opinions.

The Topic Presented

Our Scripture lesson describes the increasing influence and power of the Christian Church in the picture of the deepening stream, that flows from the throne of God. With the descent from the throne the stream deepens, first the waters only touched the ankles, then the knees, then it came up to the loins, finally it became so deep that the man could not pass thru.

1. This is a vivid picture illustrating the growth of the kingdom of God. God's kingdom came into the world sent and established by God. Sinai, Bethlehem, Golgatha, Pentecost Day, Paul going to the Gentiles, mark the steps of God's revelation. The stream grew deeper as the revelations progressed. This fact expresses the character of the revelation. Every step marked a more complete, perfect revelation. The beginnings were small, elementary, adapted to the understanding of the human individual. With every onward step the revelations took note of human progress. Therefore the revelations grew more complete, and more embracing.

2. The growing depth of the stream expresses also the carrying-power of God's revelation. At first God's manifestations affected only a few, but when Paul received his Macedonian vision to go to the Gentiles, the salvation of God was able to provide for the saving of all the world. The manifestations of God's saving truth affected (a) the numbers of the human race, all people, all nations, all ages; (b) the faculties of the human race, form of government, intellectual equipment, arts and sciences, business and social life. No phase of human life was to remain untouched.

3. The growing stream expresses the manner in which the kingdom is to grow. Growth seemingly comes from within, there is no adding of other waters. So the Church must grow thru her own efforts, from within, thru the complete consecration of her members. As the leaven permeates all human relationships, the kingdom of God will grow, thru the added influence and power of these relationships. Christianity must grow in geometric progression, every Christian must win another.

Some Things Missions Have Done

They have made the name of Christ the best-known name in the world.

They have planted in the leading foreign lands the Church of Christ, with a Protestant membership of over 2,750,000.

They have created a great system of Christian schools and colleges, with an enrollment of more than a million and a half of pupils.

They have introduced modern medicine, surgery and sanitation into the darkest quarters of the globe, by means of 675 hospitals and 963 dispensaries.

They have been the principal agents of relief in famines, and have made scientific investigation of the causes which lie at their root.

They have taught people habits of cleanliness and the laws of health, thus lessening the spread of plague and pestilence.

They have established a multitude of trade schools in which development of Christian character keeps pace with growth in manual skill.

They have helped to abolish human slavery and shown the Christian way of caring for the aged, orphans, blind, deaf mutes, insane and lepers.

They have lifted women from a condition of unspeakable degradation, and trained a new generation of Christian mothers, wives and daughters, who are making homes and introducing new ideals of social life.

They have translated the entire Bible, or portions of the Scriptures, into more than 500 languages and dialects, distributing during 1914 alone 9,272,221 copies.

They have reduced many strange tongues to writing and have created a literature for whole races, producing annually a vast amount of good reading in the shape of books, hymnals, and papers.

They have been the main agent in the extraordinary awakening of the people of China by which, turning their backs on the history of 4,000 years, they have adopted Western ideas in government, education, and commerce, and are showing an amazing readiness to receive the Gospel of Christ.

The victories of the past and the opportunities of the present constitute a sublime challenge to the Christian Church for the conquest of the remaining strongholds of Islam and paganism. Such considerations as these should convince us all that we are indeed living in a great era of missionary work.—Evangelical Tidings.

Some Questions on the Topic

1. What do our duties towards foreign missions include?
2. What benefits do I receive personally from foreign mission work?
3. In what respect has America profited by foreign mission work.
4. Name at least four great blessings which the world has received thru the work of our missionaries?
5. What benefits does our Evangelical Church derive from her work in India?

Some Scripture on the Topic

Isa. 43: 6, 7; Psalms 18: 49; 96: 3, 10; Jonah 3: 1-9; Matt. 24: 14; 28: 19; Mark 13: 10; 16: 15; Luke 24: 47, 48.

A Prayer

Thy kingdom, O Lord, must become a kingdom of the world. The nations of the earth must receive Jesus as King of kings. Before Him must bow every knee, and every tongue shall confess His name. We pray, O Lord, that we may witness the final glory of Thy kingdom, when all the earth shall be filled with Thy glory, proclaimed by the nations of the East and West, North and South. But we pray that we may be active and earnest in the spreading of Thy kingdom. Thy glory overshadows Thy workers, Thy blessings shall enrich them. We would consecrate ourselves anew at this time to the great task assigned us. Bless our missionaries in these trying times. May they witness the victory of the cross, the glory of saved souls. Guide and strengthen us in our work, that we too, may share the glory of Thy kingdom embracing the world. Amen.

The Advanced Bible Lessons

Lesson 9. The Seventy Sent Forth

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. May 22. Luke 10: 51-62. Christ on His last Journey to Jerusalem.
T. May 23. Luke 10: 1-24. The Seventy sent forth.
W. May 24. Luke 10: 25-37. The Good Samaritan.
T. May 25. Luke 10: 38-42. One Thing is Needful.
F. May 26. 1 Cor. 12: 1-31. Every Member to Serve with his Gift.
S. May 27. James 1: 22-27. Service Commended.
S. May 28. Eph. 6: 10-20. Virile Forces in the Lord's Service.

Lesson Key:—"As Thou didst send Me into the world, even so sent I them into the world," John 17: 18.

In the Sermon on the Mount Jesus had called His disciples the salt of the earth and the light of the world. Both the salt and the light make their presence felt in no uncertain manner, salt to the taste and light upon the sense of sight. Just as the presence of salt in food is immediately detected and the presence of light is at once apparent, so the followers of Jesus are immediately known by the influence they exert upon their surroundings. True followers of Jesus always bear witness to the life of Jesus Christ by their speech and their actions.

It was for the purpose of witnessing for Him that Jesus sent out the seventy disciples. They were to tell the people whom they met of His coming, of His message, of the help He brought, and they were to prove by the things they themselves did that they were actually sent of Him. He sent out these men that they too might have an opportunity to serve Him. He was training twelve men to be His special representatives and to complete the work He had begun. But in addition to these He had work that any one who had seen and experienced something of His life and power could do. And so the seventy "laymen," as we would call them, were sent out in pairs to the various villages of Galilee to prepare the hearts of the people for His coming. We may therefore well regard the mission of these men as a model and an ideal for the work of the modern Brotherhood movement.

It must be borne in mind that these men were sent out to present Jesus' claim upon men and to serve in His interest. It was not their business to "see the country," or to "study the problems" of the different classes of people and sections of the country; they were not supposed to get anything out of it for themselves. Their work was to witness for Christ and to win men for Him. Whatever they got out of it for themselves was merely a by-product of their mission. The Brotherhood must not forget that the object of its existence and the aim of its effort is not the entertainment, not even the education of its members, but the enlistment of men for service in the kingdom of Christ. It is not getting a crowd of men together and generating enthusiasm and enjoyment by providing all kinds of physical and intellectual attractions that makes a Brotherhood really successful, but the way in which Jesus Christ is put up to others by the lives and the character and the service of the men in the churches. Brotherhood service is measured not by what the pleasure or profit the members may get out of it but by the service and the sacrifice they put into it.

The seventy were to begin their testimony in the homes of the people. That presupposed that their own home was dominated by the spirit of Jesus Christ. If it was not they would not be able to bear witness for His life and power in the homes of others they might enter on their journeys. You will not know how to bring Christ into any one else's home if He is not the controlling spirit in your own. People will feel instinctively that you do not know what you are talking about. There are countless practical difficulties in the way of witnessing for Jesus Christ in the every-day life of a home which only prayerful, persistent practice can conquer, and the people you are trying to teach will notice at once whether or not you have been trying to do it in your own home. And those who have succeeded in getting the Christ spirit into their own homes will be sure to find ways of getting it into the Christless homes they may enter.

From the home the influence of witnessing for Christ will naturally spread into wider circles. The supreme purpose of Christ's coming was to reveal the saving and healing love and mercy of God. For the sake of that love the members of the Brotherhood must be interested in the physical welfare of the individual and the social uplift of the community. Relief of whatever need he may find in his neighborhood and the prevention of suffering, wrong conditions and evil for the purpose of showing the love of Christ for men is the natural channel of service for those who are filled with the spirit of Jesus Christ. There will always be those who will not receive the message thus brought; a constant struggle with unbelief, indifference and wilful, malicious opposition will have to be waged, and a good many hearts will not be won. But that is no excuse for lagging, rather a new incentive for added devotion, earnestness and effective service.

Clinching a Continental Campaign

Continued from Page 6

nizes the worth of each of them the people are steadily moving in increasing numbers toward the Christ who calls.

George Sherwood Eddy, secretary for Asia, of the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, spoke upon "The Christward Movement Among the Educated Classes." Mr. Eddy was a missionary in India for a number of years, and from the beginning of his service has lived upon his own income.

What a Change Today

Twenty years ago, said Mr. Eddy, Japan was in the midst of the anti-foreign reaction against Christianity; Korea was the "hermit nation," with a corrupt government; China, conservative and reactionary, was approaching the Boxer uprising; India was caste ridden and conservative; Abdul Hamid, probably the greatest destroyer of human kind, that the world has ever known, was on the throne of Turkey.

But what a change today! Japan is advancing and has recognized Christianity as one of the great supports of national life; a mighty revival has swept Korea and the nation has been transformed; China is open to the Gospel and her officials and students are considering its claims.

Mr. Eddy described his evangelistic tour of China characterized by intense interest in the Gospel message on the part of the official and student classes.

In North India this year, audiences of a thousand high-caste students listened earnestly to the Christian message, while in South India the audience rose to two or three thousand a night.

"Turkey and the Near East will be reconstructed after the present war, and its doors are open before us. Asia has been undergoing a radical reconstruction and its great intellectual awakening is tenfold greater than that which took place in Europe during its Renaissance of five centuries ago."

President Wilson received the members of the Congress in the east room of the White House at 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon. Including members of the families of many delegates, there were more than a thousand persons, with whom the President clasped hands.

The general theme for the Friday morning session was "Practical Ways in Which Laymen Can Best Use Their Property for the Extension of the Kingdom." In introducing the subject the chairman emphasized the fact that while we have made good progress in ten years our present standard is entirely inadequate to meet the world task.

The Doctrine of Property

E. W. Poteat, president of Furman University, spoke upon "The Christian Doctrine of Property." He said there are three factors in the doctrine of property: the basis of ownership, the factors in production, and the principles of distribution.

In a masterly way he traced the basis of ownership from the barbaric conception of might, up thru various stages to the Christian recognition of God's ownership. In discussing the factors in production, Mr. Poteat substituted for land, capital and labor as given in political economy, God, society, and the individual. He showed that God contributed all the original material and that society contributed character and increased value. Mr. Poteat said the principle of distribution is based on service; that a man had a right to use for himself whatever was necessary to make him the most efficient servant of his Lord and Master.

The presiding officer, Mr. White, said if Mr. Poteat's message could be delivered thruout the entire country, it would make men out of a good many who are now "only millionaires."

A Business Man and Stewardship

The second speaker of the morning was George Innes, of Philadelphia, a layman who gave up the active management of a large business to devote himself to missionary work. Mr. Innes said no exact formula for Christian stewardship had yet been found. The relationship to God in the matter is clear, but the relationship to men must be variously applied. All property is God's. What one don't need for oneself as servants of God should all be devoted to God's work, not merely a tenth.

When a man needs money for his business the case is different, providing he is consecrating his business to God. For example, six years ago a business man was impelled to take an entirely different attitude toward life. At first he thought he would leave his business, but on sober thought he decided to stay in business, and since then his business had quadrupled, which means that his ability to help financially in the work of the Kingdom has quadrupled.

Answering the Call

R. A. Doan, of Cincinnati, another layman who has turned aside from an active business career to give his time as an unpaid missionary worker, spoke upon "The Call We Must Answer." He told, in a manner that touched his hearers, of the struggles thru which he passed from a business man who recognized God as a silent and minority partner, to the point where he was not satisfied to give his life to making gold for God to transform back into life, but gave his own life to active Christian service.

Loyalty to the Church Enterprise

The last address of the morning was given by Dr. John F. Goucher, of Baltimore. Dr. Goucher said that as business men we must be first loyal to church activities, not to temporary and subsidiary enterprises outside the church. Second, we must be loyal to a crisis. Crises in the church are as continuous as they are in business. Third, be loyal to the great strategic enterprise of the Kingdom. Fourth, be loyal to the great international educational enterprises. Education is the most efficient form of evangelism. The greatest hope in China lies in the great Christian educational institutions that are being established at important centers.

His Missionary Dollar

Concluded from Page 3

pastor near Muldoon's did not see Albert at church on the next Sunday was that the surgeon lived miles away at the other end of the city. His driver was soon to leave him and had undertaken, before he went, to train a successor.

"If, in a few days' odd job, you can learn to work a lift with such efficiency," the surgeon had said to Albert, "I take it you can learn to motor."

A month later Richard Heath brought $5 to the white-haired minister whom he had found in the slums.

"My last dollar was wasted by that scampish boy," he said. "I put these in safe hands."

At about the same time Jimmy Banks took a dollar to the Association office.

"It is for the plant," he said to the young secretary who received him. "Don't throw it away on a dead beat. It took pinching to get it."

The young man thanked him cordially and pulled out a ledger to enter the gift.

"What name?" he asked.

"Don't know," answered Jimmy. "Maybe I'll bring you some more myself sometime when I've fattened up some."

Here and There

"May I copy your reading notes for this week? I've been so rushed to death with committee meetings these last few days that I simply couldn't get one bit of reading in. Professor Gordon will never know the difference, tho, for he marks the notes on bulk not on subject matter. He never reads them. Thanks—you're a dear!"

She was such a winsome slip of a girl that no one ever thought of refusing her anything. It was not the first time Gretchen had supplied her with notes to copy the last minute. But to-day as she turned the manuscript over she caught a sharp glance from a pair of almond-shaped eyes on the other side of the fair plagiarist. They belonged to a Japanese girl who was being educated in the university side by side with the American boys and girls.

After class Gretchen drew her aside.

"I'm afraid you don't quite understand about Bessie," she began. "She really will do that reading some time—she's been so busy she couldn't this week, that's all. You understand, don't you?"

The Japanese girl smiled the inscrutable smile of the Orient. "Yes," she said slowly. "I understand. She's a Student Volunteer, too. Is that what she's going out to teach my people in Japan?"

And even Gretchen wondered.

Evangelical Book of Worship

MOROCCO. GILT EDGES

Size and Style like our German Kirchen-Agende Antique

Price, Postpaid $3.00 Net

FOREWORD

The manner in which the service of the Evangelical Church is conducted not only distinguishes it from other Churches, but has at the same time a far-reaching, unconscious and continuous influence upon the essential elements of belief in the hearts of the worshipers. The great truths and historic facts of Christianity may be expressed in statements of doctrine; but unless they come to expression also in the common exercises of devotion, they are almost certain to be lost to the living consciousness of the Church. It is true that the language of devotion is different from the language of definition. It is simpler, warmer, less intellectual and more emotional. It falls naturally into an utterance reflecting the deep currents of experience, and moves under the impulses of the quickened heart. But the facts which enter into this experience, and the truths which quicken the heart to penitence, prayer and praise, are none other than those which enter into the fabric of the faith. Devotion, in order to be helpful and sincere, must translate the elements of our belief into the language of confession and petition, adoration and thanksgiving, consecration, intercession and benediction, joyful praise and solemn sacrament.

May this book go out and be the friend and companion of the Pastor in conducting the service, and may it help to achieve the true end of Evangelical worship, which is that all people should join in the service of God as He is revealed in Jesus Christ.

J. BALTZER, President-General.

EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE,

1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.,
202 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CHANGED ADDRESSES

Rev. H. Baumgaertel, Greeley, Colorado.
Rev. C. A. J. Buck, Arlington, Minn.
Rev. H. W. Freytag, Em., R. R. 4, Freeport, Ill.
Rev. A. B. Gaebe, Monee, Ill.
Rev. M. F. Giering, Mayview, Mo.
Rev. H. J. Hahn, 667 Phillips Ave., West Toledo, Ohio.
Rev. J. C. Kramer, 405 Hoffmeister Ave., St. Louis, Mo.
Rev. J. J. Meyer, R. R. 4, Alhambra, Ill.
Rev. C. Oberdoerster, Hankinson, N. Dak.
Rev. A. Satory, Dumfries, Iowa.
Rev. M. R. Sennwald, Forks, N. Y.

The Evangelical Herald

Published weekly at Eden Publishing House by the German Evangelical Synod of North America and devoted to the advancement and the interests of the Evangelical Church in America. Subscription Rates, $1.00 per annum, payable in advance. Advertising Rates on Application.

All communications relating to editorial work, all contributions and exchanges must be addressed to the editor, REV. J. H. HORSTMANN, 1716 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

All communications relating to business matter, orders, remittances and notifications as to change of address must be addressed to EDEN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1716—18 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Entered as second-class matter January 23, 1906, at the Post Office at St. Louis, Mo., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Evangelical Herald

Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling. Eph. 4: 3, 4.

A Paper for Evangelical Churches and Homes

Published every week by the

German Evangelical Synod of North America

One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and thru all, and in all. Eph. 4: 5, 6

VOLUME XV

ST. LOUIS, MO., MAY 25th, 1916

NUMBER 21

England learns Something

The other day the press despatches contained the refreshing and encouraging information that, "after months of bewilderment Englishmen were learning that American opinion about the world war is not formed only along the Atlantic seaboard." If this was the opinion of responsible Englishmen, they are certainly to be congratulated on having discovered their mistake. And it is greatly to be hoped that they will act upon this discovery and remove their "illegal, ineffective and indefensible blockade" by which they are seeking to capture American trade while at the same time attempting to starve the civil population of Germany. For if the people of the East and the influences which seem paramount there have tolerated such a condition, there are no uncertain indications that the people of the West are getting ready to assert their most emphatic dissatisfaction. And the expression of this dissatisfaction is not at all likely to be favorable to England. While therefore congratulating the people of England on the progress they have made in the grasp of American conditions, we trust it will not take their statesmen as long to act in accordance with the newly acquired intelligence as it has to discover their mistake.

The trouble with Englishmen—and with a great many Americans who ought to have known better—was that they accepted the utterances of some prominent Eastern newspapers and citizens as representing the sentiment of the East and therefore of America. Recent developments in Congress, which indicated that there were a good many people in the United States who disagreed radically with the foreign policy of the "first British President the United States ever had," must have taught them that there were people west of the Alleghenies with views of their own which they were not afraid to utter very vigorously when occasion demanded. We are glad to chronicle the progress that has been made in the "mother country," because it indicates that many Americans in the East, who are accustomed to get their opinions from England, will now also be inclined to learn something they very much need to know.

How urgent the need for such information is at least among certain classes of the people of New York, appears from a complaint registered by The Outlook in its latest issue because the American Rights Committee, which was organized "to support the right of American citizens to demand the protection of their Government when they are lawfully travelling about their business on the high seas," and which recently called upon President Wilson to break off diplomatic relations with Germany, was not permitted to hold a mass meeting commemorating the sinking of the Lusitania on May 7. The aim of this meeting, as stated by The Outlook, was "to honor the Lusitania dead, and to call upon the American Government to suffer no further delay in bringing about the severance of diplomatic relations." Fortunately Mayor Mitchel intervened and urged the officers of the Committee to abandon the meeting, as it might embarrass the National administration in its negotiations with Germany, and because a previous meeting of the Committee for a similar purpose had been the scene of interruptions and riots by persons who opposed action such as that contemplated by the Committee. Because of this intervention The Outlook seriously asks, "Are we living under martial law?" and compares Mayor Mitchel's request with the Russian policy, which prohibits public meetings of any kind without the permission of the police, and with the suppression of anti-slavery meetings before the Civil War, because they tended to embarrass President Buchanan. If the American Rights Committee and The Outlook represent the people of the East, yea, verily, it is high time that the people of the West rise up in their intelligent Americanism and teach them some plain common sense.

A Very Valuable Book

One of the drawbacks about the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America was the fact that the constituent bodies knew comparatively little about each other's history, beliefs and methods of organization and administration. Each denomination had naturally been so deeply concerned with its own development and problems that comparatively little interest had been taken in other bodies, and as the constitution of the Council expressly eliminated questions of belief and doctrine from the sphere of the Council's activities, the chief aim being to get together and work together, no one paid very much attention to what the different bodies composing the Council really stood for in their belief, history and their organization. The more the different representatives

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Wouldst shape a noble life? Then cast
No backward glances toward the past;
And tho somewhat be lost and gone,
Yet do thou act as one new-born;
What each day needs, that shalt thou ask;
Each day will set its proper task.

—Goethe.

met and mingled, however, the greater the interest in one another became, and the more apparent was the need of knowing more about each other. The people had come together, and they were ready to stay together and work together, but they very naturally wanted to be introduced to one another.

It was this need that prompted the executive committee to authorize the general secretary to publish the volume "The Churches of the Federal Council," which has just appeared, and which is as interesting and indispensable a volume to any one who desires to become familiar with the character and the meaning of the religious forces of the country as has appeared in recent years. The volume of 263 pages states in a brief and popular manner the history, organization and distinctive doctrines of the thirty denominations which make up the Federal Council, with a short statement of the development of the Council itself. It may be had for one dollar at the Federal Council Book department, 105 E. 22nd St., New York City.

The various articles were written by men selected because of their familiarity with the life and history of their denomination. And tho the sketches are by many different writers and not made after a common pattern, they reflect the spirit of unity much more plainly than they picture the denominational diversity. To each sketch is appended a bibliography for the use of the student who desires to know more about any particular denomination. In the main the contributors have evidently sought to emphasize those things which have been popularly misunderstood, and have omitted matters on which there is common and adequate knowledge. The various writers were simply asked to state the case for their denominations. It is not at all unlikely that some things may be claimed, and some other things left unclaimed by the writers, to which other representatives of the denominations would take exception. All the bodies have federated fully and officially with the Federal Council, with the exception of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which is, however, represented by its commissions on Christian unity and on Social Service.

In order to supplement the permanent information conveyed in this volume with the constantly changing statistical and administrative information there has been prepared by Dr. H. K. Carroll, associate secretary of the Council at the Washington office, the "Federal Council Year Book," which is a concise and complete directory of the Federal Council, its commissions and constituent bodies, and of all other religious organizations in the United States. The book is sold at fifty cents by the Book Department of the Federal Council.

Dr. Josiah Strong

It is a little over a year ago that we were obliged to report the passing away of Dr. Charles Richmond Henderson, the pioneer and foremost American exponent of the science of the common welfare. The death of Dr. Josiah Strong on April 28 at his home in New York City after a serious illness of several weeks removes another leader of world-wide reputation from this important field of service. He has been called "a prophet of righteousness," and to the end his thoughts were of the coming of God's kingdom on earth.

The passing of Dr. Strong cuts off at its source a steady stream of books, articles, lesson outlines, etc., that have had a powerful influence in turning the Protestant churches of the United States toward the vast and hitherto almost untouched field of social service. Born in Illinois of New England parents, Dr. Strong was a graduate of Western Reserve University and Lane Theological Seminary. His first charge was a missionary church of thirteen members in Cheyenne, Wyo. Later pastorates in Sandusky and Cincinnati were in reality but brief interludes between his home missionary work for the Ohio State Society and the Evangelical Alliance for the United States. His appointment to the general secretaryship of the latter followed on the publication of his first book, Our Country, which reached a circulation of 176,000 copies. Others of his ten volumes reached as many as 50,000 readers. The combined circulation of Dr. Strong's books in English has been at least 325,000 copies, and several have been published in European and Asiatic languages. Our Country has been called "one of the best books in the world," and his other books have been used as text-books in a number of colleges and seminaries and also by Bible classes. A secretary of one of the denominational home mission boards has said that a very wealthy member of his denomination, who was never known to give anything, was about sailing for Europe soon after Our Country had appeared. As a parting gift some one presented him with a copy of the book. He was gone some time, and immediately on his return sent a check of $10,000 to the secretary. It is stated by competent persons that this book alone has put $1,000,000 into Christian work. Many denominations have used the book in their home missionary work; or have published the last chapter for special distribution.

In 1898 Dr. Strong organized the American Institute of Social Service, of which he was made president, remaining at its head until his death. In 1904 he was invited to England to aid in organizing the British Institute of Social Service, and organizations on the same plan have been formed in five European countries and in America and Australia. For the past eight years he was editor of "The Gospel of the Kingdom," studies in social reform for Sunday-school classes, which has had an enormous and greatly helpful influence in stimulating social service thought and effort in practically all American churches.

The Way to Real Happiness

"Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom Jehovah imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile." Psalm 32:1, 2.

It is easy to see that this psalm of David is the product of a deep and searching experience. No particulars are given, but verses 3-5 give us a glimpse of the anguish of mind and even bodily misery thru which he must have passed. When we are told that

"my bones wasted away
Thru my groaning all the day long.
For day and night Thy hand was heavy upon me:
My moisture was changed as with the drought of summer," we realize that the very fountains of life and being have been stirred up. The hurt must have been very deep and painful to have left such a plain and permanent scar.

It is not necessary to search the records of David's life for something that will fit the circumstances. The words "When I kept silence," verse 3, leads one to think that whatever the transgression may have been, it was one of which the world knew nothing. It was some secret, hidden sin that clung to him in spite of an outwardly blameless life, as such sins will eat into life and character. He thought he could hide it, forget it, blot it out himself, but like a virus in the blood it must break out. The memory of his wickedness gave him no rest, it even caused unbearable agony of mind and body. Like a fire eating up his very bones the knowledge of his sins consumed his strength and his courage; like a crushing burden it weighed him down until all hope of relief and freedom seemed gone. Only when he acknowledged his sin unto Jehovah and no longer sought to hide his iniquity was the fire quenched and the burden lifted. When he confessed his transgressions unto Jehovah the iniquity of his sins was forgiven, the sins themselves covered and put out of sight and the guilt not reckoned up against him. It was only then that he began to feel something of the blessedness of forgiveness, of the peace and joy of being reunited with his God. It is the happiness of one who has recovered his health at the very brink of the grave; of one who has been saved from the death penalty as by a miracle thru a pardon pronounced just in time.

If sin were a natural part of human life, something that belonged to it and could not be separated from it such an experience would be unthinkable. It is only because sin is a disturbing element, something that does not by rights belong into human life and experience, a foreign body, as it were, that sets up an irritation and festers until an inflammation has been caused, that an experience such as that which has been described, is possible. If sin were something that belonged into our lives it would not cause any troubled conscience nor any regret or remorse, it could be simply overlooked or forgotten or ignored. But David's experience is bound to be the experience of every man or woman who would treat it thus. "There are two ways of covering up sin," Mr. Moody tells us, "man's way, and God's way. You cover your sins and they are bound to have resurrection some time. Let God cover them, and neither devil nor man can find them. God 'puts sin behind His back'; He 'casts them into the depths of the sea.' Some one has said, 'Thank God that it is a sea and not a river: a river might dry up but the sea cannot.' God removes our sins 'as far as the east is from the west.' Do you know how far that is? Perhaps some good mathematician will figure that up. The greatest blessing that ever comes to me this side of heaven is when God forgives me. Have you been forgiven?"

And confession of sin is our part in obtaining the blessings of forgiveness. Just as sin does not fit into our life and experience, so God's forgiveness does not fit into lives that will not acknowledge their sin and cut loose from it. Our confession of sin is a sign that we have recognized it as something that ought not and cannot have a place in our lives, as something that must be removed if our lives are to run in their normal channel. It is like consulting a doctor about some physical ailment, an acknowledgement that something is wrong and that we need help. Without such an acknowledgement no help is possible, and without confession of sin no forgiveness is possible. Such a confession must of course be "without guile." The spirit in which forgiveness is sought must be sincere and true and candid, like that of the earnest disciple whom Jesus found under the fig-tree, John 1:47. He must utter no falsehood, either to himself or to his God, must conceal nothing, disguise nothing, extenuate nothing. Those who acknowledge their sins before God must keep back no darling sin, hidden in the secret places of their heart. They must make no false excuses. God's forgiveness can flow only into an open and transparent soul, like a clear window, thru which the light of God may flow unhindered.

And when God has thus pardoned a sin it is done away with and cancelled, destroyed, obliterated, gone forever. There is no more heavy weight to be carried, no more shame to be endured, no more fearful reckoning to be paid. The heavy-laden heart is lightened; the debtor is released from his prison and his debt, and penitent's faith is accounted unto him for righteousness and he walks forth a free man under the favor of God in Christ Jesus. Rest and cleanness and liberty—these are the happinesses (the word "blessed" in the original is not singular but plural, as if to express the number and variety of the joys which the psalmist has found) of the man who has sought and found the mercy of God. And surely the world holds none that can be compared to them.

For ages past, therefore, this psalm has been a favorite with those who have found peace with God. Year after year it was chanted in Hebrew at the close of the service on the day of Atonement; Rom. 4:7, 8 makes us think that St. Paul had it in mind as proof of his doctrine of forgiveness; St. Augustine had the words written upon the wall opposite his sick-bed for daily comfort and meditation; Galileo had to repeat this psalm every week for three years as a penance, and it proved a consolation and an encouragement to his soul; Martin Luther called it one of the four most precious in the whole book, "because it teaches that the pardon of sin comes without the law and without works to the man who believes." Like an unfailing stream of help and refreshment this psalm has been flowing down thru the ages. Every man may drink of it, and it is not diminished but increased and filled with a new sweetness. Those who have tasted of it know nothing better.

"The Unknown Dead"

By FRANK E. CHANNON

"On Fame's eternal camping-ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And Glory guards, with solemn round,
The bivouac of the dead."

Arlington cemetery never looked more beautiful than it did on the morning of that thirtieth of May. Andrew Gooding and his wife were walking slowly along the tombs of its sleeping ones, but every few moments they stopped to feast their eyes upon the refreshing greenness of the foliage, and to drink in the balmy, yet invigorating breezes, which came to them from the Potomac River.

It was very quiet in "God's Acre." The day was yet young, and the crowds from the city and surrounding country had not commenced to assemble to do homage to the fallen soldiers. The season was forward, and the trees in full leaf, yet retaining all the freshness of spring. The air was remarkably clear, making the view even more beautiful than usual. The river, like a silver thread, wound its way in stately grandeur between the Maryland and Virginia shores, while in the distance the great Washington Monument, like some tapering finger, showed where lay the national capital.

Andrew Gooding straightened up, and intertwining his wife's arm with his own, drew in a deep breath of the morning air.

"Mary," he whispered softly, as he bent over her, "all is very good."

The white-haired old lady, with her calm, peaceful face, looked up into the features of the man upon whom she had leaned thru the long years, and nodding in quiet contentment, answered: "All is good."

Yet even as the words left her lips, one might have observed a shadow flit like a cloud across her serene face, and her husband, noticing it, contracted his shaggy brows and gave an embarrassed little cough.

"We must not think of that now, wife," he half remonstrated. "We know our lad did his duty, and tho we cannot point to one of these little stones and say: 'Here he lies,' yet we have every reason to believe that with two thousand other brave men he rests at peace, and that to-day a nation does honor to that resting place."

"The Tomb of the Unknown Dead," murmured the wife. "Oh, Andrew, I wish—I wish that we could have known in time to have prevented this. Why did they not tell us when he fell?"

The husband shifted uneasily. He always dreaded this visit to Arlington, with its harrowing up of the bitter memories of the past; yet he always felt impelled to make it.

"What matters it?" he replied. "'Tis but his bones lie there, and not so many years must pass, wife, ere we shall see him again."

The old couple had passed on as they talked, and presently they stood before the massive monument which a grateful country has raised to the memory of its dead unknown soldiers, bearing this inscription:

BENEATH THIS STONE REPOSE THE BONES OF
TWO THOUSAND ONE HUNDRED AND ELEVEN UNKNOWN SOLDIERS

GATHERED AFTER THE WAR FROM THE FIELDS OF BATTLE
RUN AND THE ROUTE TO THE RAPPAHANNOCK THEIR REMAINS COULD NOT BE IDENTIFIED, BUT THEIR NAMES AND DEATHS ARE RECORDED IN THE ARCHIVES
OF THEIR COUNTRY, AND ITS GRATEFUL CITIZENS HONOR THEM AS OF THEIR NOBLE ARMY OF MARTYRS

MAY THEY REST IN PEACE

The tomb is girt about with a green, well-kept lawn, and at the four corners stand cannons; beyond is the temple of Fame. The green leaves of trees sweep caressingly the summit of the monument, and all around is peaceful and quiet.

Arm in arm Andrew Gooding and his wife stood silently before this tomb of the unknown heroes. Their thoughts were busy in the past, in the years of long ago, when their boy went out from their home to shoulder a musket and do his duty. How swiftly, yet how slowly the years had rolled past! And now they were old, standing on the brink of the river, and gazing trustfully forward into the promised land. Long past the allotted three-score years and ten, they waited patiently until their Father should call them.

Only one disturbing thought arose within them. Their boy, young Andrew, who would have been their comfort and support, was not with them. Somewhere, amid the confusion of that great strife of the long ago, he had disappeared. Bravely had he carried himself in the early battles. His letters, filled with affection and love, were treasured among her keepsakes by his mother, but her boy, her only child, was gone; somewhere, sometime, amid the terrible slaughter of the Wilderness his life had been blotted out. His remains had never been found. He was among the "missing." Every possible trail had been followed, but without result, and now, as a last hope, the aged couple were forced to believe that his bones rested among those of "the unknown dead."

They stood before the monument silently and solemnly. Once the old man drew his knotty hand across his eyes and turned away, that his wife might not see his grief. She, busy with her thoughts, had seated herself upon one of the upturned cannons, and for a time they forgot each other's presence. Not a soul was in sight; the place was deserted. They had purposely come early, that they might be alone with their grief.

Presently the old man turned again toward his wife. "Come, Mary," he said, "let us be going."

They turned about to go, and as they did so, they came almost face to face with a tall, bearded man. Altho gray, he was a well-preserved man, and carried himself with the straightness of an old soldier. He smiled as he stepped aside to allow them to pass, and raising his hat, said pleasantly:

"I beg your pardon. I didn't know you were going to turn around."

So engrossed with their thoughts had the old couple been, and so silently had the stranger approached, that they had not known of his near presence. Andrew Gooding acknowledged the apology. "It was our own fault, sir," he remarked.

"I came," said the newcomer, "to see the monument to the unknown dead; this is it, I suppose."

"This is it," repeated the old man. "I see from your button, sir, that you are an old soldier; have you never visited this cemetery before?"

"Never," replied the stranger. "I am in this part of the country for the first time in many years. Altho born not fifty miles from here, I am making my first visit in thirty-five years. You probably know more of this cemetery than I do; will you be kind enough to give me some information regarding its arrangement?"

There was something very pleasant in the man's address, and in a few minutes Andrew Gooding found himself talking to him as if he had known him for years. The trio seated themselves upon a nearby bench while the old man pointed out the beauties of the grounds.

"But this tomb, this monument to the unknown dead, what an imposing, yet what a sad sight it is," commented the man.

"You may well say so, sir," acquiesced Andrew Gooding. "My wife and I have visited it once a year for the last twenty odd years."

"You—you have some one whom you think may possibly be buried here?" questioned the stranger.

"Yes," was the reply, and then Andrew went on to tell of his son, and of his disappearance, while the man listened attentively, throwing out a question now and again, as the narrator proceeded.

"But are you sure he is dead?" he inquired, smilingly, as the old man concluded.

"What else could he be but dead?" demanded Andrew, throwing out his hands with a challenging gesture. "If he were not dead, he would have returned long ago."

"It is early yet," remarked the stranger, looking around the grounds. "No one will be about for an hour or more. May I tell you of an experience that once happened to some one I know very well?"

"Go on, sir," said Andrew, "I shall be pleased to hear."

The unknown man leaned over so that the old couple could plainly hear all that he said, and then commenced:

"Long years ago, when the war first broke out, this boy, like your son, went off. He was in the Army of the Potomac—"

"So was our lad," interrupted Andrew.

"And," continued the narrator, "he fought in several battles without receiving a scratch until the battle in the Wilderness, where he was seriously wounded."

"Our boy was in that campaign," commented Andrew.

"But," went on the man, "now comes the strangest part of my story. 'When he recovered, he had completely lost his memory. After the battle he had lain for three days amongst the dead, and during that time some prowling marauders had stripped him of his uniform, and in fact, of everything. I will not burden you with a recital of all his adventures, but, remember that he was utterly unable to recall a single thing of his past life. The Army of the Potomac moved on rapidly, fighting, as you know a series of fearful battles, and at the conclusion of that campaign scarcely a soldier of this young fellow's company was left alive. After the war he endeavored, in vain, to remember who he was or where he came from. It was impossible. His memory was gone. He found employment. He succeeded; he made money, for altho his past life was a sealed book to him, his brain was unaffected; in fact," and here the stranger smiled one of his cheerful smiles, "men called him smart."

As that smile illuminated the face of the narrator, old Andrew Gooding suddenly started up and leaned forward with an eager, wondering face. He started to say something, but the stranger gently pushed him back, and raising his hand for silence, went on:

"As this young fellow grew older, he suffered terribly with most violent headaches. He consulted many physicians, but obtained no relief until a few weeks ago, when one, more skilled or more daring than the rest, undertook to perform an operation upon him. This doctor removed a bone from the brain of this man, and—what do you think happened?"

Again the stranger smiled, and again old Andrew started to rise, clutching violently at the seat as he did so. His chin dropped, and he stared helplessly into the other's face.

"He recovered his memory. He re——"

The old woman's face had gone as white as her husband's now. She, too, endeavored to arise. Her fingers were working nervously.

"He remembered what?" she whispered hoarsely.

"He remembered all of his past life," said the stranger, simply. "He remembered who he was; who his parents were; where he lived, and at once he started for home, mother and father!"

As he uttered these last words, the man smiled again:

Concluded on Page 8

* For the Heart and the Home *

"Leaving you an Example, that ye should follow His Steps"

My Heavenly Home

BY ROBERT LEE CAMPBELL

When this weary life is ended
And from toil I am set free,
'Twill be sweet to meet with Jesus
In that home prepared for me.
For that home is a bright mansion
Facing streets of purest gold;
There I'll know no pain or sorrow,
While the endless ages roll.

Once away from God I wandered
In the wilderness of sin,
Lured on by sinful pleasures,
Never dreaming of the end.
But the blessed Saviour found me,
As I wandered in the cold,
In His loving arms He bore me
Back into the sheltering fold.

'Tis so sweet to trust in Jesus
And to take Him at His word,
As we climb life's rugged mountain
By the path that leads to God.
Tho this way is straight and narrow,
As when trod by saints of old,
Where it leads, death's stream is shallow
And the waters are not cold.

Still I'm climbing up the mountain,
And the summit seems so near,
To a home in that bright city
I can read my title clear.
Soon these mortal ties He'll sever
And will lead me to that fold,
Where I'll dwell in peace forever
While the endless ages roll.

The Drag on the Wheel

BY C. A. S. DWIGHT

A drayman was riding along slowly thru one of the streets of an Eastern city, when his attention was arrested by a shout from a passing teamster, who by a sign indicated that something was wrong with his dray. Checking his horses and leaping down, the drayman hastened to throw off from one of the hind wheels a stout chain that had been dragging upon it. Not long before he had been going down a steep incline, when he had clapped on the chain in order that it might act as a kind of brake, securing the heavy dray from a too rapid descent. But when he reached the level street he had forgotten to cast off the encumbering chain, meanwhile probably wondering why his horses, even tho stout and sturdy specimens of horse flesh, labored so hard and heavily at the traces, while the dray seemed only to creep along.

Many a young man in life is making slow progress because of a similar drag on the wheel. There are those, who, by reason of evil habits, clung to in spite of all remonstrances, are subjecting themselves to a serious handicap. There are some who by unfortunate mannerisms, eccentricities of dress, extravagances of speech, or by a slovenly appearance, or a slangy mode of conversation retard their advancement in society or business. There are others still who by carrying an undue load of worry, by harboring melancholy thoughts, or by cherishing envious and misanthropic feelings, place a drag upon their own spirits and those of others, making easy things hard, and hard things still harder. Sorrows that are not shared with God, and sins that are not confessed to Him, constitute the heaviest kind of a drag upon mind and heart. All these detriments and restraints are utterly unnecessary—as useless and unreasonable as the weights or "impedimenta" which an inspired writer urged the early Christians to cast aside, as a soldier entering the battle might divest himself of haversack and fly-tent, or a traveler cut his baggage down to the lowest minimum that he might make speedier progress. The machinery of life would revolve far more rapidly and smoothly, if only these needless strains and pulls upon it were removed. In that once famous book, "Helen's Babies," one of the lively small boys in it expressed an ardent wish to see "the wheels go round." The wheels of society are going round in a bewildering fashion, but many of them would perform far better service as they revolve, and run with far less expenditure of fuel and force, if only this or that drag, acting as a friction-clutch, and impeding motion, were taken off from the now jarring machinery.

But sometimes there are conditions when the drag must remain upon the wheel. A sickness that cannot be escaped, a money loss that must be sustained, a disappointment that is sure to come, a friendship that is sadly terminated, a co-operation looked for but not forthcoming, are examples of these inescapable drags and distractions. What then shall be done? Do not stop and idle, much less tarry and cry, because the way is rough and the vehicle heavy, and the wheels are clogged with hampering conditions. No charioteer, even a Jehu, can expect always to drive at breakneck speed, or even at a canter—sometimes the chariot wheels will drag in the mire—and the only thing then to do is to make five miles an hour if you cannot make ten, or two miles if a five-mile rate of advance is impracticable. Almost anything is better than standing still. Keep at it, even if you cannot at once, or for a long while, reach it. If it is not possible to be a winged Pegasus, be a toiling pack horse—for the success of armies has depended as much on pack-horses as upon fiery steeds, and a sutler who drives an army wagon may under certain conditions do as much for his country as Henry of Navarre with his waving plume.

Off with the drag on the wheel! Look well to your going, and do away with the unnecessary causes of friction, fret, worry and delay! Make the best possible speed toward the goals of a high imperious duty! But when circumstances over which you have no control make fast traveling impracticable, do not sorrow because you must slow up, and never allow opposition to force you to a standstill, knowing well that where there is a Divine Will there is a human way, and that whenever God commands you to go forward, He will not fail to supply the strength with which to move on and master circumstances.

Missionary Zeal

A Korean lady of great wealth, beautifully gowned in shining linen and soft silk, stopped her sedan chair outside a bookstore in An Dong. A friend stopped to speak with her, and she said:

"I have been buying books to take home with me to give away to my unbelieving neighbors."

"Where are they?" I asked.

"In the chair," was the reply, and one of the chair coolies, with a disgusted look upon his face, raised the chair curtain; and behold! the chair was packed full of Mark's Gospels, tracts, and hymn-books.

"But," I said, "the chair is full, you cannot get in."

"That's no matter," she laughed, "it's only thirty li (fifteen miles), and I can walk."

The chair coolies were bidden to take up the chair, and they did so rather gruntingly, and the lady followed, walking with her woman servant, her face beaming with pleasure, and smiling "good-by." Only those who know what riding in a chair stands for among Korean women can appreciate this story of sacrifice.

"To leave the city of An Dong on foot when she might ride!" exclaimed a bystander. The lady was past fifty years of age. This is the way the Gospel is preached in Korea.

She Saw Her Diamonds

A pretty story is told of Eugenie, a Lutheran princess of Sweden. She was very much interested in the building of a hospital, and when it was found that it would take a good deal more money to finish it than was expected, she sold her diamonds in order that she might give the money that was needed to complete the building.

One day after the hospital had been built, the princess went to visit the patients who were being treated in the different wards. As she stood beside the bedside of one of the patients, tears of gratitude filled the eyes of the sick man as he thought of the kindness of the princess who stood before him.

Suddenly the princess exclaimed, as she saw his tears, "Oh! now I see my diamonds again!"

Denominational

"Gather up the broken pieces which remain over"

The Jubilee Offering contributed by Evangelical churches during 1915 has, up to May 1, 1916 brought in the respectable sum of $93,697.60. If we had reached the goal of $150,000 during the year, as might have been done, we could have paid all the denominational indebtedness. Now, however, an indebtedness of $45,000 remains to be carried along until other means for paying it shall have been found. The $91,103.15 received up to February 1, 1916 were, after deducting the expenses of $4,923.87 for printing, postage, etc., distributed as follows:

Educational Institutions.....	40%	or	$34,471.71
Home Missions.....	25%	or	21,544.82
Foreign Missions.....	15%	or	15,512.27
Ministerial Pension and Relief.....	10%	or	8,617.92
General Terasury.....	5%	or	6,032.56

Total	$86,179.38
To Eden Publishing House, as above.....	4,923.87

Grand Total.....$91,103.15

At the meeting of the Board for Educational Institutions a few weeks ago it was suggested that an appeal be made to complete the sum of $100,000 which would require an additional $6,302.40. We are informed that another church body, with a far smaller membership, has raised $200,000 for its own needs without any difficulty. Why should our Evangelical Church not be able to do the same? Is our religious life less active? Have we less interest and appreciation for the needs of our Church than others? Do we want to stand back behind others who are less favored?

The Lord tells us, "Gather up the broken pieces." And we should now like to proceed according to His directions and gather up the broken pieces that remain over thruout the whole Synod. There are churches which have not raised the Jubilee Offering. In others local circumstances of one kind or another prevented the raising of the offering. Some members did not have the desired amount available at the time, but are in a position to give it now. Others may have wanted to do more, but had no opportunity. Still others discovered that their offering was not what it should have been, and would welcome an opportunity to do better. All sorts of broken fragments are thus lying around waiting to be gathered up. It would not be fair or right if we did not give all our people an opportunity to do their best. The $100,000 ought certainly to be brought together. Dear brethren in the ministry, beloved churches and church members: with this measure of $100,000 we should like to be measured in our Jubilee year. So let us dig down into our pockets once more. It is certainly not difficult to raise the $7,000 and fill the measure.

And why should it be necessary to begin a special propaganda for this sum? Should not the mere mention of the need constrain all who hear of it to give at once and generously? Let us get those $7,000 together without delay and make the Jubilee Offering $100,000.

Henry Bode, General Treasurer.

† Mrs. E. L. Mueller †

Once again the angel of death has entered one of our parsonages and called a cheerful and devoted wife, mother and church worker away to the heavenly home. Only two weeks before her death Mrs. E. L. Mueller of Alton, Ill., was apparently well and busily engaged in her home and church duties. On March 30 the first symptoms of a nervous disorder appeared, which soon necessitated her removal to a hospital. Her ailment became aggravated to such a degree that a stroke of apoplexy on April 12 resulted in her death on the evening of that day, far too soon to our human way of thinking.

Mrs. Mueller was born on August 12, 1872 in Jefferson City, Mo., the third child of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Faust, and was educated in the parochial and public schools of the city. On April 18, 1886 she was confirmed in Central Evangelical Church of that city by Pastor C. A. Richter, and later became an active worker in the Sunday-school and the societies of her church. On November 24, 1896 she was married to Pastor Ernst Mueller, with whom she labored faithfully at Union and Boonville, Mo., and Alton, Ill., her kindly and cheerful disposition winning new friends for her at every place. Their union was blessed with

Continued on Page 8

"Other Sheep I Have"

Encouraging Report of the Board for Foreign Missions in the face of a falling off of nearly twenty-five percent in income and the great need of Workers.

A compelling Call to all who stand idle in the Market-place

The Foreign Mission Board

Following the invitation of Mr. H. Manrodt, the members of the Foreign Mission Board met for their spring session in Brooklyn, N. Y., as the guests of Bethlehem Evangelical Church which Mr. Manrodt represents on the Board. Mr. Manrodt, as well as Rev. W. E. Bourquin, the pastor, and their ladies, assisted by other ladies of the congregation, made our brief stay in their midst very pleasant and enjoyable by their kind hospitality and splendid entertainment.

The sessions began on Tuesday, May 2nd, at 10:30 a. m. with devotional exercises conducted by the chairman, the Rev. P. A. Menzel. After the usual preliminaries of routine business, Rev. Tim. Lehmann, the treasurer, reported upon the finances. Thanks to the Jubilee Offering of last fall, our portion of which was $15,512.27, the treasury of the Board is in good condition just now. After all obligations are deducted from the present balance on hand of $4,909.14, we shall have in treasury $966.14. While this is not a very large working capital, and while the free-will contributions outside of the Jubilee offering were nearly ten thousand dollars less during 1915 than they had been during the previous year, we feel that we have great cause for gratitude towards God, who thus provided the daily bread for our extensive mission family, and also towards the many friends of our foreign work, who, we trust will continue to have its support and maintenance at heart.

The quarterly remittances to India will for the present continue to be made thru the Standard Oil Company, whose courtesy in this respect assures their safe arrival. Those for Europe, where we now have Pastor Jost and Nussmann in temporary retirement, will be arranged thru the Basel Mission agency.

Rev. E. Schmidt, the general secretary, presented an outline of the annual report for 1915, which is already in print and from which extracts will be published from time to time in our various periodicals. It showed that, altho hampered by the lack of workers and altho financially very much restricted, our brave and faithful men and women in the field have succeeded, under divine blessing, in making considerable progress. This was especially noticeable with regard to Christian schools, which show an increase of nearly five hundred scholars; also in the efficiency and steady growth of the high school at Raipur, of which it becomes more and more apparent that it is filling a long-felt want; and finally in the steadily increasing efforts toward self-maintenance that are being put forth at various stations, most noticeably at Bistrampur.

The Board voted its thanks to the general secretary for his comprehensive report, and to our workers in India for their annual reports, upon which that of the secretary was based, and which were written with much care and accuracy. We encourage them to continue their work without fear or distrust, fully relying upon the eternal promises of our Lord, that assure His daily presence and rich blessing.

Accompanying these reports of our missionaries were their financial statements for moneys received and expended during the past year. These were carefully audited and were found correct in every detail. They showed that our workers have not only kept strictly within the limits of their allowances, but that most of them even succeeded in retaining a surplus, which in nearly every case was ordered by the Board to be turned over to the "reserve fund," which is always being maintained in India for use in cases of emergency.

The Board extends hearty and sincere congratulations to the Rev. and Mrs. J. C. Koenig, at Chandkuri, who were recently united in marriage, wishing them much happiness and the experience of God's nearness and blessing day after day.

The general secretary was directed to represent the Board at the conferences of the Indiana, South Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin Districts, while Rev. Nottrott, who is supplying a church in St. Louis at present, will probably attend those of Nebraska and Iowa.

Much time and prayerful thought was given to the matter of finding and sending more workers into the foreign field. The Board has been in correspondence with a number of men, who at one time signified the intention of devoting their life to this cause. For various reasons this has so far not led to definite results. Of course, we realize that the Spirit of God must create in human hearts the willingness and desire to serve Him in heathen surroundings. We are far from urging anyone to enlist in the war against the darkness and evils of heathendom, by pleading with them to go. But surely, the voice of our Lord has spoken to some, who read these lines, or who thru other sources have been informed that our need for more men and women in the foreign field is obvious and most compelling. Who will say: Lord, here am I, send me? It is not we, but the Thrice Holy One, of whom the angels surrounding His throne proclaim, "The whole earth is full of His glory," who asks: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?"

The summer session of the Board is expected to take place in Cleveland, Ohio, on August 14th, in connection with the National Convention of the Evangelical League.

C. W. Locher, Rec. Sec.

The "Mela"

Pastor Stoll sends the following brief report of the missionaries' conference and Christian mela (convention) held February 15-21 near Chandkuri. "Monkey Island," where the convention was held, is seven miles by ox-cart from Chandkuri, now often called Baitalpur, i. e., Bethel-city. The road was poor, but the trip was made by day and we took our time. Many of the tents were already pitched when we arrived, and the two first days were devoted to a conference of the missionaries. About forty workers from the different mission fields had gathered—who would have thought this possible when Pastor Lohr first came to Chattisgarh, nearly fifty years ago!—and the chief speaker was the Rev. Burges, general secretary of the India Sunday-school Union. His addresses, largely biblical in character, were greatly enjoyed by the missionaries, who, welcomed the opportunity to receive, where they are usually called upon to give out. The most important resolution passed in regard to business matters was that authorizing a common Christian hymnal (the Methodist missionaries are not participating in these gatherings) to be used at all services of worship and in other meetings. The first edition is to be 5,000 copies, of which number our missionaries agreed to take 1,700.

"On the 18th the mela proper began. Many heathen were present to hear and see, but the great mass of the audience of several thousand consisted of Christians, who, especially thru occasions like these, are beginning to realize their importance and influence. The catechists were present in large numbers, and the attendance of many boys and girls from the schools and higher educational institutions had the effect of considerably increasing the Christian self-reliance of the young people of the whole region. The chief speaker of the mela was, as was no more than right, an Indian, officially connected with the Sunday-school work, and especially famous for his striking and vivid language. It was again noticeable that the mela was doing much to promote the singing of Christian hymns to native tunes.

"After the mela our missionaries remained together for another day to consider their own needs and problems. All present agreed that the days thus spent together were days of richest blessings."

According to last reports (March 28) Pastor and Mrs. Nussmann were still at Castagnola, Switzerland, where they will probably have to remain for some time, as traveling conditions seem hardly safe just now. Pastor Nussmann's throat trouble has been greatly relieved, altho not yet entirely cured.

The small Tree grown strong

PASTOR J. GASS, RAIPUR

Let me begin my report with a story the natives like to tell. A village owner, it is said, once called the people of his village, children and grown people, together, and when they had all gathered, planted a tender shoot in the soil. The people did not know what to make of the strange proceedings, and they were still more puzzled when their chief called one

Continued on Page 8

CLINCHING A CONTINENTAL CAMPAIGN

The Evangelical Brotherhood has a splendid Opportunity for awakening the Men of the Churches to their Christian Responsibility and showing them the Meaning of the Kingdom Task

II.

Afternoon Session

The general theme for Friday afternoon was "How May Christ More Largely Dominate All Contacts of American Life With the Non-Christian World?" The first speaker was Hon. A. J. Wallace, ex-lieutenant-governor of California, who spoke upon the commercial relation. He said in part:

"Commerce has not always helped the evangelizing of the world. There are frontiers and seaports in the Orient where it hinders. Far from home many dealers show a looseness in morals, a slackness in integrity, and all of this cuts painfully into the very heart of our missionary movement. The native does not discriminate and the samples seem to fall below the standard of our teaching.

The Traffic in Liquor

"Everywhere the traffic in liquor scorches and strangles. When the American or European trader adds firewater to firearms he blocks both Christianity and commerce.

"If this were a convention of bankers or manufacturers or shippers I would ask such men to open their eyes to their dependence on missions for the expansion of world trade. The missionary is the advance agent of big business. Where he blazes the way, commerce follows. The unshod and unclothed millions have no conscious need of shoes and clothing. Until the missionary gets to work they have no idea of gas and electric plants."

Mr. Wallace advocated a bureau of commerce in every missionary board. Its work would be to develop the inter-relation of commerce and missions.

What the Consular Service Does

Hon. Amos P. Wilder, of the Yale Chinese Mission, United States Consul General in Hongkong and Shanghai for many years, discussed the second phase of the general subject, "Thru Political Relations." Since the reorganization of the consular service in 1906, Mr. Wilder said, the representatives of the United States are, with only an occasional exception, men of sobriety, dignity and right life.

In the Orient the relation between the officials and missionaries are not only friendly but often intimate. It is not from consuls that flippant comment as to missionaries comes, for this one must look to tourists, to business men, and other permanents whose godless lives incur the rebuke of the missionaries.

While Jesus was himself an Asiatic, the Christian faith yet comes as part of the foreign man's outfit. For what Christianity is, you and I look to the Christian. The Oriental looks for his definition to the foreigner, especially to the foreigner in authority. Happily it is true that after many decades of dealings with all manner of foreigners, well-informed natives are learning to differentiate between foreigners—to understand that a nation may be at heart Christian, yet carry a burden of the unworthy.

The influence of the missionary in enabling China to throw off the opium burden was pointed out by the speaker, who referred also to the use made by makers of alcoholic drinks of the consular machinery of our Government in extending their foreign trade.

"The Chinese and Japanese who come to our shores learn of the Christian religion. When these Orientals return to the lands of their birth, to visit or to remain, they repeat the story. The dynamics in China of the 'returned Chinese' to that country is not realized by many. It largely affected the dethroning of the corrupt Manchus in 1911; it has regenerated whole communities in Southern China."

Thousands of Foreign Students

The third branch of the afternoon theme, "In Educational Circles," was presented by Charles D. Hurrey, of New York, general secretary of the Committee on Friendly Relations Among Foreign Students. Mr. Hurrey said that over five thousand students are studying in North American universities, most of them honor men representing forty nations, many races and a great variety of languages, ideals and religion. Within five years there will be fully ten thousand future leaders of the non-Christian world enrolled in the colleges and universities of the United States and Canada. He urged that these students should get a correct impression of our "Christian" civilization thru having kindly attention shown to them as strangers. They need friendly welcome and counsel and brotherly aid, both in their student life and in their social relations. These strangers will have no home life, said Mr. Hurrey, unless Christian homes are opened for receptions and informal fellowship.

Within ten years hundreds of those from abroad who now study in the United States and Canada will control in large degree the destiny of millions; the returned student today in Japan, China, India and Latin America is powerful in politics, education, industry, commerce and religion. Shall the men of the churches allow these leaders of the nations to become suspicious, hardened or embittered thru the neglect, inconsistency or highly sinful practice of our "Christian" citizens?

The Student's Point of View

Brief addresses by four young men from foreign countries, students at American universities, were a feature of the session. The students were introduced by Mr. Hurrey. Dr. K. Kato, of Japan, referred to the inefficiency of the old religions to meet Japanese needs, and of the help that had come thru missionaries. He passed a criticism upon some well-meaning missionaries who upon coming home wrote and spoke of the worst side of Japanese life. These reports are sure to reach Japan, he said, and prejudice the work there. He urged that an earnest effort be made to Christianize the Japanese students in this country.

Mr. Kuruvilla, of India, said that what India most needed was a reinterpretation of the ideals of tolerance and patience, characteristics of his race that had been handed down to them, and a greater hold upon truth which expends itself in love.

Luis Berenguer, of Cuba, spoke of the great service rendered his country by the United States in giving them an independent government. Then he pointed to the pride of the Latin people in their noble ancestry and said that we could never help them save as we approached them as brothers.

The last of the addresses was by S. J. Chuan, of China, now in Yale University. Referring to the wonderful resources of his country, Mr. Chuan drew the applause of the audience with the statement that "Material means may make a country brutally strong, but never really great."

A Challenge to America

The 1,600 young Chinese, future leaders in China, now students in our institutions of higher learning, are, Mr. Chuan said, a mighty challenge to every Christian, for the future of China depended much upon what we made of these young people.

The Singing

The singing at the Congress was led by Ernest W. Naftzger, who has sung in every English speaking country in the world except South Africa, having made two tours around the world with J. Wilbur Chapman in his evangelistic campaigns.

The singing of the International Association Quartet was a feature of the session of the Congress.

The quartette is composed of E. W. Peck, Paul J. Gilbert, C. M. Keeler, and P. H. Metcalf. These men have sung at more great religious gatherings in America than any other group of singers. In 1913 the quartette accompanied Fred B. Smith and Raymond Robbins on their tour around the world.

Evening Session

The first speaker was Harry F. Ward, of Boston. Mr. Ward is an authority on the relation of the Church to social service problems. He fills the chair of social service in the School of Theology of Boston University. His subject was "Facing the Social Results of War."

Mr. Ward graphically pictured the suffering and waste caused by the conflict in Europe. He spoke of the destruction of human compassion, the loss of faith in the triumph of Christian ideals, and the loss of desire to do justice, as among the most serious results. Following the war competition would be keener than ever before, as nations would be struggling to regain what had been lost in the struggle. This would inevitably increase industrial strife.

The world would also face a new demand for reconstruction of economic and social conditions to remove the conditions that have caused this war, and the great question for the Church to face is whether the reconstruction is to be done upon the basis of Christian principles.

The Task of the Church

"Making America Christian" was the topic discussed by Dr. Hubert C. Herring, General Secretary of the National Council of the Congregational Churches. He said, in part, the Laymen's Missionary Movement stands for three real ideals regarding the Christianizing of America, three ideals that should be "really" gotten into the minds of the laymen in the churches.

1. The Church must make America Christian, if it is to be made Christian at all, thru an adequate program and with adequate power. Our present program of evangelism, education and mission is totally inadequate.

2. We must get this ideal of what a Christian America would mean to itself. We complacently know about the tremendous increase in wealth and population that is coming. But what about the future in other respects? Dare we dream of an America that is really Christian, where, for instance, everybody shall have a chance to grow up to strong adult life?

Christianity's Last Stand

3. We must also get the ideal of what a Christian America would mean to the world. This is Christianity's last stand. This country must lead the world for its highest things, if the world is to have any leader at all. We must lead in democracy, in diplomacy, in education. But we cannot do it without a pure and potent Church, one that is really able to mold the nation's life.

This land ought to be Jesus Christ's by every sense of right and justice. This land, at the beginning, had the garnered wheat of the nations and its whole history since has evidenced the great thought of our Christ. On the day that His crown rights are denied will be sounded the death knell of hope for America. If the Washington Congress will get these ideals of America redeemed, then there can be new life, new hope, and a new realization of our dreams.

Evangelical Representatives Meet

On Friday and Saturday evenings the Evangelical representatives (Pastor M. P. Davis of Buffalo and Dr. E. A. R. Torsch of Louisville, Pastors Wm. Hackmann, Theo. Oberhellmann, Prof. S. D. Press and the editor from St. Louis) met in an informal manner at the hospitable home of Pastor Menzel, which had very kindly been placed at their disposal as a sort of general rendezvous during the Congress, and discussed with him and Messrs. Seidel, Gabsch and Montgomery, some of the leading laymen of Concordia Church, the practical benefit that could be derived from the Congress for the particular work of the Evangelical Church. It was the general impression that the Congress could be made most fruitful for Evangelical churches if, as a result of its inspiration, there could be formed a body of able and devoted Evangelical laymen from all parts of the country with the aim of interesting as many men as they can reach in the larger work to which our Church is called in this country, and of inspiring them to use the same intelligent, energetic and effective methods in promoting the work of their churches and of the Kingdom that they are so successfully using in their own business affairs. It was suggested that the Evangelical Brotherhood might be the proper agency for outlining and conducting such a movement and carrying its influence into all the churches of the Synod. All present were agreed that the Evangelical Church has the consecrated laymen as well as the spiritual and material resources that are needed to make such a movement effective, if only the needs and the opportunities of today could be presented to them in the convincing and compelling manner employed at the Congress. The proceedings of the Congress, with a verbatim report of all the addresses, can be had for only one dollar from the Laymen's Missionary Movement, No. 1 Madison Ave., New York City, and they deserve not only a thoughtful reading but real study by all who have the best interest of the Evangelical Church at heart.

Saturday Morning Session

The subject was "How to Increase Lay Initiative and the Sense of Responsibility for the Missionary Task of the Church."

Herbert S. Johnson, of Boston, spoke on "What Help the Pastor Can Render His Laymen." Mr. Johnson said he was going home to preach on the limitation of the grace of God. Many men are too smug in their assurance of going to heaven. They must understand that their own salvation is bound up with the salvation of the thousand millions across the seas who have never heard of Christ.

Surg. Gen. Gorgas Introduced

Surg. Gen. W. C. Gorgas, United States Army, was introduced and spoke briefly on his intimate relations with the Christian workers in Panama during the ten years he has been stationed there.

The chairman introduced Mr. E. W. Fritchley, an architect of India, who, he said, is a builder of palaces for the rulers of that country, and also a steward who had built a Northfield there. Mr. Fritchley spoke upon the thought that "God has a beautiful plan for every life." He said that having acquired a competence sufficient to support his family he decided to carry on his business entirely for God, the management of his property being turned over to his wife and sons, while he runs the office entirely separate for the Master's work.

Efficiency in the Church

W. E. Doughty, educational secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, gave five reasons why the Church had not reached its maximum of efficiency. An adequate educational policy; fear of an heroic policy; incomplete mobilization; imperfect co-operation among communions, and a lack of proper appreciation of the mighty dynamics of missions to call out lay activity. He emphasized four words that must characterize our efforts if we are to attain proper standards of efficiency: Intelligence, intensity, penance and contagion.

The Decennial Report

After prayer by General Secretary Millar the report of the Committee on the Decennial Report of the General Secretary was read by Chairman E. L. Shuey. After expressing, on behalf of the Congress, appreciation of the work of the Executive Committee of the Movement, and of the secretaries and the field secretaries during the past ten years, the report of the committee made the following recommendations:

It was urged that the general committee be made representative of all parts of the country, and that laymen be chosen who can give to it both time and service.

The committee recommended that divisional organization thruout the United States be extended, and that the work of promoting the every-member canvass for systematic and methodical giving in churches be enlarged and emphasized. Further, that increased emphasis be placed by the movement upon the standards of stewardship, that every man shall devote a portion of his life, time and money to the Lord's service, and that an educational and inspirational campaign for these standards be inaugurated.

The committee also proposed in this connection that the youth of the churches be instructed in standards of stewardship of life and property, and that the appeal of the Movement be urged upon the young men of the churches in general, and especially that the Movement's work be extended in rural communities, and that its co-operation be offered to the denominational committees on work in rural districts.

Attention was called to the need of holding conventions for colored men, and to the advantage of conventions of ministers.

It proposed that denominational committees of the Movement be formed in each communion where they are not now in existence, and that the Movement co-operate in the strongest possible way with each communion in holding denominational conventions.

As to finances, the committee recommended that the Congress appeal to laymen of means thruout the entire Church to provide promptly and abundantly the funds needed for the enlarged demands upon the Movement. Strong and abundant support is due as an expression of confidence, especially in view of the fact that the return in money to the churches as a result of the Movement's work has been so great.

The committee recommended that Christian men of all nations be invited to unite with the laymen of American churches in a strong movement in which they will all enlist for world service on behalf of the Kingdom of Christ, and that commissions of laymen visit all lands to secure this co-operation.

Emphasis was placed upon the absolute and urgent dependence of every man upon the agency of prayer.

Evening Session

Christian unity was the subject before the National Missionary Congress at the night session. An audience of delegates and visitors which filled the hall listened to two very significant addresses on the subject by Shailer Mathews, dean of the Theological School of the University of Chicago and president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and Robert E. Speer, of New York, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. Mr. Speer was chairman of the Congress on Christian Work in Latin America, held in Panama in February. He returned recently from a visitation of mission stations in China, Japan and Korea.

All the Ushers Are Volunteers

Announcement was made that the young men who had rendered helpful service as ushers are all student volunteers, and that ten of them are to go to the foreign field this year as missionaries.

The subject of Dr. Shailer Mathew's address was "Missions an Illustration and a Method of Realizing Christian Unity." He spoke of the trend of our time toward co-operation, and said that unity was compelled by the greatness of our common task. He emphasized some of the great problems confronting the Church which could never be settled denominationally but only by the co-operation of the entire Church.

Unity of the Americas

At the beginning of his address on "The Unity of the Two Americas" Robert E. Speer said there is no real unity between the peoples of Latin America, and no unity between North and South America, either geographically or otherwise.

But there is light in the situation. We have the common principle of democracy, common problems to face, such as the mastering of great areas of soil, the same cosmopolitan issues, the same love of peace among nations, the same convictions about education, the same spirit of hope. Many considerations there are that bind us together.

History shows there is but one force which will really and completely unite. Today only one tie binds across the chasm of war. This is the Christian tie. So a common religious faith and ministry must bind America.

How use the Christian tie? First by opening the book. There must be freedom. Witness the results to the Roman Church in Porto Rico since it has ceased to be a state church, as testified by a Catholic Porto Rican judge. There was a wonderful exhibition of unity at the Panama congress. Second, by the bond of love and prayer that crosses sectional ties. They are our brothers, our friends. For 150 years we have neglected them. Let us now recognize their brotherhood.

Sunday Afternoon Session

Enlistment, prayer and witness as "The Bases of Effective Lay Service", were discussed at the session in the afternoon.

"Quiet Talk" Gordon

S. D. Gordon, author of the "Quiet Talk" books which have been sold to the extent of a million copies in twenty languages, spoke of the basis of "prayer."

Bishop Lloyd on Witnessing

Bishop Arthur S. Lloyd, President of the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church, spoke on the basis of "Witness." Men should witness of Christ, he said, to the ends of the earth. He regretted the divisions among the churches and expressed the belief that the witnessing of men was made less effective by these divisions.

Evening and Final Session

Three forceful addresses on "The next steps in awakening the Latest Forces of the Churches," by William B. Millar, J. Campbell White and Robert E. Speer, brought the Congress to close at the night session. The registration of delegates with a total of 1,242 was announced.

William B. Millar, General Secretary of the Movement discussed the future program of work as one of the steps to be taken in awakening the latent forces of the Church.

Immeasurable Latent Resources

In a brilliant address, bristling with figures, J. Campbell White described the immeasurable latent human and material resources in the United States, which should be awakened in order that an adequate program may be carried out.

Mr. White said in part: The Church of Christ is incomparably the most powerful organization in the world, and yet no organization has so large a percentage of its resources undeveloped. Only ten or fifteen per cent of the membership are used.

What we are Spending

We are spending in this country $21.50 per capita per year on liquor, $10.91 on tobacco, and $10.00 on amusements and on churches. But of the $10.00 we are giving to churches, only $2.00 is for missions and benevolence, and of this only seventy cents go abroad.

The millionaires could easily finance this enterprise if they would. But the poor people can finance it. If 20,000,000 church members should give five cents a week per member in addition to what is now being given, we should have $50,000,000 a year. Can they do it? Let the crowd at the moving pictures answer. We could get this fifty millions a year if ten million people give ten cents a week or four million twenty-five cents a week, or one million one dollar a week. We shall have to give this money in order to save ourselves. Unless there be some such outlet for our prosperity our nation will be pagan some day.

But consider the latent resources of life. How many missionaries have we in the field today? Only 9,677 men and women. We surely ought to send 250,000 men and women to the mission field, which would cost two hundred and fifty millions of dollars. We should then be sending only one per cent of our church members. Would they be crowded over on the field? Each one would have a parish of 4,000.

Latent Spiritual Resources

Robert E. Speer delivered the closing address of the Congress. Mr. Speer's theme was "Our Latent Spiritual Resources." He said Christianity is facing afresh the perils and temptations to which she had sometimes succumbed, perils and temptations which Christ faced in the wilderness and overcame.

He spoke of the inefficiency of all human and material resources without God. He said our spiritual resources are not in ourselves but in God, who is our sufficient motive, our sufficient wisdom, our sufficient resource, our sufficient society and the sure confidence of our victory.

Mr. Speer made an earnest appeal for the getting back to the simple faith that Jesus Christ brought into the world, to a sense of the reality of God.

Following Mr. Speer's address all heads were bowed in silent prayer, as Ernest W. Naftzger, the soloist, sang. S. D. Gordon pronounced the benediction, and the chairman declared the Congress adjourned.

Registration

The total registration of delegates to the Congress revised to the opening of the closing session, April

Concluded on Page 8

"Examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so"

June 4, 1916. Exaudi Sunday

Evangelical Summer School of Principles and Methods
Elmhurst College, Elmhurst, Illinois
July 18 to 27

We want every Evangelical Church and Sunday-school to consider the sending of one or more of its Sunday-school workers or young people to this Evangelical Summer School. We list a number of the results of the session of 1915, which will also be a forecast of what the school will mean in 1916. More complete announcements will follow in succeeding numbers of the Herald.

Results of the 1915 Session

1. Two hundred and fifty persons were brought into touch and sympathy with the higher ideals and better work for Evangelical Sunday-schools and young people's societies, and who will aspire to better things for their school, society, church and the Kingdom.
2. One hundred and nine graduates who have set the pace for Evangelical workers.
3. A fostering of the spirit of fellowship and recognition among Evangelical people.
4. Encouragement of loyalty to the Evangelical Church.
5. A new interest in Elmhurst College and a yearning for additional educational facilities in our Church, especially for educational institutions, and a new vision of co-educational institutions.
6. A new vision of the mission and the possibilities of the Evangelical Church.

What the Elmhurst Summer School Meant to Buffalo

At the suggestion of a visitor and scholar of the Elmhurst Summer Training School, a self-appointed committee of ladies solicited the churches of Buffalo for donations for the purchase of silver-ware for Elmhurst. The efforts met with hearty response not only from the Buffalo churches, but the churches of Gowanda and Westfield hearing of the undertaking, also gladly contributed. The amount was liberal enough to purchase silver-plated knives, forks, table-spoons and tea-spoons, twenty dozen each of the first three articles and twenty-four dozen of the last named; also twenty-four linen table cloths. This lovely gift was sent in time to be used for the Easter holidays. The presentation was made in the chapel by the Buffalo students. Dr. Irion received the gift in the name of the institution and responded with warm words of praise and thanks. This beautiful gift reveals not only the interest our churches have in our schools, but also the blessing from visiting the schools themselves.

Helps for a Good Meeting

Rev. Henry Katterjohn

CONSECRATED MONEY

- M. May 29. Consecrated goods. Gen. 13: 1-4.
T. May 30. Unconsecrated cash. Luke 16: 19-31.
W. May 31. Giving to God. Exod. 35: 4, 5, 21-26.
T. June 1. Systematic giving. 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2.
F. June 2. Proportionate giving. Deut. 16: 17.
S. June 3. Giving the best. 2 Cor. 8: 5.

Sun., June 4. Topic—The Consecration of Money.
Job 28: 1—23. (Consecration meeting.)

Suggestions to the Leader

Select various Scripture passages that deal with the law of giving, and have them read by members of the society previously selected. Ask each member participating to comment on the passage, pointing out what special truth this certain passage illustrates.

1. Tithing in patriarchal times. Gen. 14: 20; 28: 22.
2. Mosaic laws instituting tithing. Lev. 27: 30—33; Num. 18: 21—24; Deut. 12: 6, 7, 17—19; 14: 22—29; 26: 12—15.
3. What does Jesus say about giving? Matt. 6: 1—4; Luke 18: 18—23; Mark 12: 41—44.
